dom of England, thro' all its parts well Inſtituted and ordained, wholly to ſubvert, and deſtroy, and War, within this Kingdom of England, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to levy: And to accompliſh, and fulfill their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons and Traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes; He the ſaid James Corker, together with the ſaid Thomas White, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, John Gavan, and Anthony Turner, and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, the ſaid Four and Twentieth Day of April, with Force and Arms, &c. in the Pariſh aforeſaid, and County aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, devilliſhly, and traiterouſly did aſſemble, unite and gather together, and then and there, falſly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, devilliſhly, and traiterouſly did conſult, conſent, and agree, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction, to bring and put, and the Religion of this Kingdom of England, rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Eſtabliſhed, to the Superſtition of the Romiſh Church, to change and alter, and the Government of this Kingdom of England, to Subvert; and that one Thomas Pickering, and one John Grove, ſhould Kill and Murder our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and that he the ſaid James Corker, together with the ſaid Thomas White, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, John Gavan, and Anthony Turner, and other Falſe Traitors, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, ſhould therefore ſay, celebrate, and perform, a certain Number of Maſſes, then and there amongſt themſelves agreed on, for the Soul of the ſaid Thomas Pickering, and for that Cauſe, ſhould pay to the ſaid John Grove, a certain ſum of Money, then and there amongſt themſelves agreed on; and that he the ſaid James Corker, together with the ſaid Thomas White, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, John Gavan, and Anthony Turner, and other Falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown, in further proſecution of the Treaſons and Traiterous Conſultations and Agreements aforeſaid; afterwards the ſaid Four and Twentieth Day of April, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, devilliſhly, and traiterouſly, did ſeverally each to the other engage themſelves, and upon the Sacrament Traiterouſly did ſwear and promiſe, to conceal, and not to divulge the ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and Traiterous Compaſſings, Conſultations, and Purpoſes aforeſaid amongſt themſelves, had Traiterouſly to kill and murder our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and to iutroduce the Romiſh Religion within this Kingdom of England, and the true reformed Religion within this Realm, rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Eſtabliſhed, to alter and change; and that he the ſaid James Corker, together with the ſaid Thomas White, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, John Gavan, and Anthony Turner, and other Falſe Traitors to the Jurors unkuown, in further proſecution of their ſaid Treaſons and Traiterous Intentions and Agreements aforeſaid, afterwards the ſaid Four and Twentieth Day of April, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, devilliſhly, and Traiterouſly, did prepare, perſwade, excite, abet, comfort, and counſel, four other Perſons to the Jurors unknown, Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, Traiterouſly our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to kill and murder, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the form of the Statute in that Caſe, made and provided.

Upon theſe ſeveral Indictments they have been Arraigned, and thereunto have ſeverally pleaded, Not Guilty, and for their Trial put themſelves on God and their Country, which Country are you. Your Charge is to enquire, whether they be Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof they ſtand Indicted, in Manner and Form as they ſtand Indicted, or not Guilty, &c.

Then Edward Ward, Eſq; of Council for the King in this Cauſe, opened the Indictment thus.

Mr. Ward. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury. Sir George Wakeman Bar. William Marſhal, and William Rumley, the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand Indicted; for that they as falſe Traitors againſt our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second, their Supream and Natural Lord, not having the Fear of God before their Eyes; did traiterouſly endeavour and intend with all their ſtrength, the Peace and Tranquility of this Kingdom of England, to diſturb, and the Worſhip of God in the ſame rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Eſtabliſhed, and the Government of the Kingdom in all its parts well inſtituted and ordered, to ſubvert and overthrow, and Sedition and Rebellion within the ſame, to move and procure, and to bring and put the King to Death and final Deſtruction; and to that Purpoſe the 30th of Auguſt, in the 30th Year of the King that now is, they did falſly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, and traiterouſly compaſs, imagine, intend, and deviſe, thoſe things that I have enumerated to you; that is Sedition and Rebellion in the Kingdom to move, the Peace and Tranquility of the ſame to diſturb, the Worſhip of God to overthrow, and the King from his Royal State, Title, Power, and Government, wholly to depoſe, and to put the King to Death and final Deſtruction, and the Religion at their Wills and Pleaſures to alter, and to Introduce the Romiſh Superſtition, and War within the Kingdom to Levy againſt our Sovereign Lord the King. And to accompliſh theſe Treaſons and Purpoſes, they the Priſoners at the Bar, with other falſe Traitors unknown, the Day and Year beforementioned, did aſſemble and meet together, and did then and there conſent and agree to put the King to Death and final Deſtruction. And to perſwade Marſhal, and Rumley, to theſe Treaſons, the ſaid Sir George Wakeman promiſed his Aſſiſtance; firſt, to ſubvert the Government, and then to alter the Religion to the Romiſh Superſtition, and Traiterouſly undertook to kill the King: and he did receive for that Purpoſe, from the pretended Provincial of the Jeſuits in England, (who claimed an Authority from the See of Rome, of granting out Commiſſions) a Commiſſion which conſtituted him Phyſician-General of the Army; which Army was to be raiſed for the levying of War againſt the King, and the Subverſion of the Government and Religion: That he read this Commiſſion, that he kept it in his poſſeſſion, that he conſented to it, accepted it, and intended to execute the Employment, when their Deſigns were accompliſhed. The Indictment further ſets forth, that Marſhal, and Rumley, and other falſe Traitors, agreed to pay the Summ of 6000*l.* for the carrying on and effecting of this Treaſon; and this is laid, to be againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, againſt the King's Peace, Crown, and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute. To this Indictment, they have pleaded, Not Guilty; if we make out theſe Crimes againſt them or any of them, you are to find them Guilty.

There

There is also another indicted, that is James Corker; For that he as a false Traitor against the King, and withdrawing his Allegiance, and due and natural Obedience, which he owed to him, as his Sovereign, together with other Persons there mention'd, White, Fenwick, Harcourt, Gavan, and Turner, did intend to overthrow the Religion, to subvert the Government, and to do all those Treasons that I have here enumerated, and that they did the 24th. of April, in the 30th Year of this King, at the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields in your County, compass, and imagine the King's Death, levying of War, and those other Things; and in order thereunto, they did contrive that Pickering and Grove should kill the King, and that Corker and the Others should say Masses for the Soul of Pickering, and should pay Grove a sum of Money. That to this they plighted their Faith and received the Sacrament upon it: And that Corker and the others the Day and Year aforesaid, traiterously perswaded, excited and abetted Four other Persons to Murder the King. To this he hath pleaded not Guilty, if we prove him Guilty of any of these things, we hope you will find it so.

Then Sir Robert Sawyer, one of the King's Learned Council in the Law, opened the Charge thus.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Prisoners at the Bar with whom you are charged, stand Indicted as principal Actors and Instruments of that late most Catholick and Bloody Plot sometime since discovered; and I hope, by the Blessing of Almighty God, in a great measure prevented. The Design, Gentlemen, was against the King and the Church; both Church and State were too little a Sacrifice to be offered up to the universal Supremacy of Rome. They well knew, Gentlemen, that so long as God should preserve the Life of our Prince, and as long as those Legal Pales, wherewith the Church of England is encompassed, did but continue firm, neither the Gates of Hell nor Rome could prevail against it. And I wish that all Protestants were of the same Mind.

I shall not enter now into any large Discourse of it, nor trace the several Steps of this Plot, which is so well known to all Men of this Nation at this Day, but only touch upon those Parts of it that do concern the Prisoners now at the Bar, unless they shall give me occasion to recurr to any former Passages. Gentlemen, we shall make Proof to you, that the 24th of April, 1678, there was a very great Consult of a numerous Company of Jesuits here in London; and there was the foundation laid, or at least the execution was then determined of bringing this Plot to its accomplishment. To this Consult we shall make it appear, that the Gentlemen at the Bar were privy and consenting to it. The King must die, that is resolved on, and you have heard formerly of the several Ways that it was to be acted; some Persons were designed to shoot him, these have received their Trial and condign Punishment; then there was another Sett, and they were to Stab him, and some of these have been brought to Justice too; but then there was a third Sort, (for they did invent all the imaginable ways of Death) and that was Poysoning; and that will come principally before you at this time. And they had chosen out a very proper Instrument for it, a Gentleman whose Experience rendred him able, and whose near relation to and dependance upon the Royal Family, gave him a great opportunity to commit that Horrid Crime. But, Gentlemen, tho' his Perswasion might go a great way, yet he would not do it Gratis, and thereupon he must be hired for a great Summ of Money, not under 15000 l. and then he undertook that great Employment.

We shall prove to you, that this was his Bargain, that part of his Wages he had received, for he would be sure of something in Hand before the Work were done. We shall make it appear, Gentlemen, that he was privy also to the Consult (for I apply my self at present peculiarly to him) and approved of it. And as a further Reward besides that of Money, he was to be preferred to be Physician-General of the Army that was then to be raised, that Employment was designed for him; nay, he accepted of the Commission, as we shall endeavour to prove to you.

We shall also prove, that the other Gentlemen at the Bar, the other Malefactors that stand there, were privy to the great Consult of the Death of the King. That there was 6000 l. which was to be furnished by the Benedictine Monks, for tho' the Jesuits were the great Engineers, yet all the other Orders were to contribute, and 6000 l. was to be furnished by them. And in the course of our Evidence we shall give you several Instances which will concern all these particular Prisoners now at the Bar; and One truly that there was such a Design of Poysoning, which is very remarkable, and that was from a very great Engineer that hath suffered already, and that was Mr. Ireland, and and wherein I must desire that you would observe another thing that falls out very materially, that tho' Mr. Ireland, at the time of his Death, and all along, disowned that he was here in London in August, and with great Asseverations did affirm it; it will appear by the course of our Evidence that he was here in London then, and had frequently Discourses that it was an easie matter to take off the King by Poyson: And for that purpose do I mention it to you as an Instance that Poyson was one of the great ways that they intended to murther the King by. And, Gentlemen, you will collect from that Evidence, what credit is fit to be given to the words of such dying Men, and whether living Witnesses that are upon their Oaths, are not rather to be believed, than those whose concern it is for more Reasons than one to perswade the People that they are innocent. And you will likewise collect, that those who have lived in the Sin of committing such horrid Crimes as these are, will not stick to protect that same Church (which they would propagate by those Crimes) by denying the plainest Truth.

We will not trouble you any farther with the opening of the Evidence, because the Witnesses are many and their Testimony various, but we shall call our Witnesses and let them tell it you themselves.

Mr. Ward. Call Dr. Oates, Mr. Bedlow, Mr. Dugdale, Mr. Jennison, and Mr. Prance, (who were all Sworn, and Mr. Dugdale set up.)

Sir Robert Sawyer. Gentlemen, we call first Mr. Dugdale to give you a general account of the Plot, not so much for the proof of the things here charged particularly on the Prisoners, as the general Design.

Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward. Pray, Sir, ſpeak your knowledge of what you know concerning the Plot in general.

Mr. Dugdale. I have for this ſeven Years known ſomething of it, but nothing particularly till within theſe two Years. About two Years ſince it was communicated to me by Mr. Ewers, Mr. Gavan, Mr. Peters, Mr. Lewſon, and ſome other Prieſts which I cannot now remember their Names, and they did perſwade me to be of the management of the Buſineſs, for the carrying on of the Deſign, for the introducing their Religion, and for the killing of the King and the Duke of Monmouth; both thoſe two things were communicated to me, upon my Oath, by Mr. Gavan, Mr. Ewers, Mr. Peters, Mr. Lewſon, and my Lord Stafford.

Mr. Juſtice Atkins. What, Mr. Gavan that was executed you mean?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he was the Man: I have had ſeveral Pacquets of Letters which concerned the Plot: All the Letters that came from Mr. Hartourt, or from any others concerning the Plot, were directed to me: I have had ſometimes eight, ſometimes nine, ſometimes more Letters at a time, but I never ſaw any, almoſt, but they all tended to the carrying on of this Deſign.

Lord Chief Juſtice, (Sir William Soroggs.) Did they ſhew you theſe Letters, or did you open them?

Mr. Dugdale. I did open ſeveral of them, a great many, and ſome of them that I could not handſomely ſeal up again, I kept.

L. C. J. They did not know you opened them?

Mr. Dugdale. No, they did not all the time.

L. C. J. To what Purpoſe did they write?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, they were to give Inſtructions to Mr. Ewers how he ſhould manage the Affairs for carrying on the Deſign, how he muſt go about for the Raiſing of Money, and for the ingaging the Gentlemen in the Country, as particularly Mr. Gerard of Hilderſon, and Mr. Howard of Horecroſs, and Sir James Simons and one Gentleman that is dead, one Captain Atherley and ſeveral other Gentlemen were engaged in it, to be Officers when they had accompliſhed their buſineſs of Killing the King.

Sir Robert Sawyer. You ſay they were to be Officers, what were they to be military Officers, or what?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, they were to be military Officers.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Was there an Army to be raiſed?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, there was an Army ſpoken of to be raiſed.

Sir Robert Sawyer. By whom?

Mr. Dugdale. There was Money ready in July laſt, for I ſaw Acquittances that came from St. Omers that the Money was paid. But then there was Caution given to be ſure not to make any Rumor of Arms or any thing, till the King was diſpatched.

L. C. J. Did they write that in a Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. They writ that in a Letter directed to me.

L. C. J. To you?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, to me.

L. C. J. Who writ that Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, truly I cannot be certain at preſent who it was, but upon recollection I can, may be, remember who it was: but it contained that there ſhould be Caution given to all, to be ſure that none ſhould mention Arms, or any thing till the King was diſpatched.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. From whence did that Letter come Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Dugdale. It came from Mr. Harcourt I am certain, and in Mr. Grove's Pacquet, but I am not certain of the Perſon that writ the Letter, but I can recollect hereafter perhaps who it was.

L. C. J. Did it come from beyond Sea or London?

Mr. Dugdale. It came from London, but I ſuppoſe it came thither from beyond Sea.

L. C. J. The Letter came to you, you ſay, was it dated from any place, and what?

Mr. Dugdale. I am not certain whether it was dated from any Place, there were ſeveral Letters that came from all Parts, ſome from St. Omers, ſome from Paris, ſome from Rome.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray what do you know of any Correſpondence that was between your principal Agents in Staffordſhire, and thoſe Conſpirators here at London.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, there was a Correſpondence between them.

L. C. J. Between whom? Name them.

Mr. Dugdale. Betwixt Mr. Ewers, Mr. Gavan, and Mr. Vavaſor, theſe were in Staffordſhire; and betwixt Mr. Ireland, Mr. Harcourt, Mr. Fenwick and Mr. Grove, theſe I know,

L. C. J. Where were theſe laſt?

Mr. Dugdale. In London theſe Perſons were, they did write conſtantly three times a Week Letters into Stafford-ſhire about this buſineſs.

L. C. J. But pray was there any thing mentioned in any of theſe Letters concerning killing the King.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, there was.

L. C. J. Was there any thing plain of that in thoſe Letters?

Mr. Dugdale. There was in one from Mr. Whitebread.

L. C. J. What did that Letter ſay?

Mr. Dugdale. There was one from him that did give a Caution to Mr. Ewers, that he ſhould be ſure to chooſe no Perſons but ſuch as were ſtout and hardy, or to that Effect.

L. C. J. To do what?

Mr. Dugdale. To kill the King.

L. C. J. Was that expreſſed in the Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. And did they write that they ſhould chooſe hardy Perſons to kill the King? Was that the Subject of it?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. Did it come by the common Poſt?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, it did, but they had deviſed it ſo, that there was care taken they ſhould not be diſcovered, they would ſet but two Letters of their Names to them, and they were directed all to me, ſo that I was to bear all the Danger.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. How was the Direction? Was it directed plainly to you on the out-ſide?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, it was, and if it were diſcovered, I was ſworn by Mr. Ewers to deny it, and then they could not be diſcovered.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Did they give you any Oath to that Purpoſe?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I was ſworn Ten times at leaſt to Secreſie, and promiſed it on the Sacrament.

Sir Rob.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Besides what came in those Letters, had you any Discourse with any touching killing the King?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. With whom?

Mr. Dugdale. With Mr. Gavan, Mr. Ewers, Mr. Lewson, and my Lord Stafford.

L. C. J. And would they have perswaded you to have done it?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I was to have been employed as an Actor in it, either to have taken his Life away, by Shooting, or by Stabbing, or some Way.

L. C. J. Did they propose it to you, and how, in what manner would they have you do it?

Mr. Dugdale. No, my Lord, I was not told absolutely in what manner; but I was directed to come to London, and I should have Instructions about it there.

L. C. J. Tell us again who they were that did solicit you?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Ewers, Mr. Gavan, Mr. Peters, Mr. Lewson, and my Lord Stafford.

Mr. Just. Atkins. My Lord Stafford you say?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I said so before, my Lord.

L. C. J. They ingaged you in the business in General you say, and you were to have Directions about it at London, that is that you say?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, Mr. Ireland was to take care of me there.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray Sir had you discourse of the several Ways, what Ways were to be taken.

Mr. Dugdale. I had no particular way mentioned, but I was told that it was easy to be done by shooting or stabbing.

L. C. J. Did you ever come to London upon that Errand?

Mr. Dugdale. No, never.

L. C. J. When they had engaged you to do the Thing, why did not they send you about it.

Mr. Dugdale. I was not to come till October.

L. C. J. When was it that you were engaged first?

Mr. Dugdale. I had particular intimation of the matter of the Plot about two Years before, but I was not to come up till October.

L. C. J. Which October.

Mr. Dugdale. Last October.

L. C. J. Why, you were engaged a great while before, how chanced you were not to come up till October.

Mr. Dugdale. I was engaged a Year and a half before, but it was not positively then said to me, that I was to be instrumental in killing the King, till that time, which was about July, when my Lord Stafford came down, and I was to come up in October.

L. C. J. I thought you had said that you were engaged in it a Year and half before.

Mr. Dugdale. That was only in the Plot in general.

L. C. J. Was there no time appointed for the killing the King then? When was it that you were first engaged to be an Instrument to take away the King's Life?

Mr. Dugdale. Two Years ago I was spoke to about the Plot, but I was not particularly assigned till the last Summer, and then I was appointed to come to London in October.

L. C. J. What said they then to you?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord Stafford did offer me 500 l. he told me I should have that for a Reward at present, and if Things did go on, I should have a better Reward when the Thing was accomplished, but this was for my present Encouragement.

L. C. J. When were you to have the Money?

Mr. Dugdale. When I came to London.

L. C. J. And why did not you come to London then?

Mr. Dugdale. I was to come to London, and the Plot was broke out and discovered first.

Mr. Ward. Pray, do you know of any Letters about the Death of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, there was a Letter came down to my Lord Aston's, it was directed to Mr. Ewers, and it contained in it, This very Night Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey is dispatched: those were the words of the Letter.

L. C. J. What Night was that?

Mr. Dugdale. I have well remembred it since, and it was Saturday Night, which was about the twelfth of October, or thereabouts, as I remember: it had those words, This very Night Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey is dispatched; and it went on with more things relating to the Plot, which I cannot particularly now remember; and I catched Mr. Ewers at the reading of it, and said I to him, Do you think this is the way to have the Design succeed, if this do not overthrow the Plot I will be hang'd. Not so, said he, be patient and do not mistrust it, he was a Man that was used to punish debauch'd Persons, and it will rather reflect upon them than us.

L. C. J. Did that Letter come to your Hands?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, it did, but it was writ to Mr. Ewers.

Mr. Justice Atkins. What Day did it come to you?

Mr. Dugdale. Upon Monday Morning.

Mr. Justice Atkins. When was it writ?

Mr. Dugdale. It was writ the Saturday Night before.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Ewers shew it you? or did you break open the Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Ewers shewed it me for an encouragement, that one of our Enemies was taken out of the way.

Mr. Justice Wyndham. Did you report it to any Body?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, to the Parson of the Town, and a Relation of my Lord Aston's.

L. C. J. What was his Name?

Mr. Dugdale. One Mr. Sandwich and Mr. Philips; said I, Do you not hear of a Knight, a Justice of VVestminster that is killed? No, said they, we hear nothing of it: but it seems Mr. Sandwich went to Dinner to —— —— —— and there he did report it.

L. C. J. Why did they look upon Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey as such an Enemy to them?

Mr. Dugdale. They had intrusted him before, but he began to be strict with Dr. Oates, searching and prying into all the whole Concern, as Mr. Ewers told me (for I knew no more than he informed me of) so they thought good to take him off.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Gentlemen, will you ask him any Questions?

Corker. I would have been glad to have heard what he said, but I could not hear the tenth part.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Gentlemen, there is nothing that does particularly reflect upon you at the Bar, but is only to prove the general design of the Plot.

Sir George Wakeman. 'Tis the worst made out that ever I think was Trial.

Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugdale. If there be any more Queſtions, that your Lordſhip or the Court will be pleaſed to ask me, I will be ſure to anſwer them.

L. C. J. I will tell you the Effect of what he ſays, and that is this; he ſpeaks in general, that there was a Plot to bring in Popery, and in order to that, the beſt way was to kill the King; and to that Purpoſe, there were ſeveral Letters ſent weekly into Staffordſhire, and very often directed by the Cover to him, wherein were Seven or Eight ſeveral Letters, as from Ireland, and Harcourt, and Grove, to People that were in Staffordſhire; that is, to Ewers, and Lewſon, and Vavaſor, and many times they did write concerning the going on with this Plot of Killing the King, that they muſt uſe great Secrecy in it, and makes mention what Officers they ſhould have for an Army to ſupport that Matter, when they had done; they engaged him particularly, firſt, about two Years ago, to be one in it, but more preciſely in June or July laſt was Twelvemonth, and he ſhould have gone, he ſays, in October after, up to London, in order to it; and there he ſhould have Directions from Ireland, how he ſhould manage himſelf. And he gives you an account, that my Lord Stafford promiſed him he ſhould have 500 l. as part of his Reward, and when the Work was done, he ſhould be better gratified; and he ſays, he did intend to have gone up in October to this Purpoſe, but the Plot broke out, and he was prevented.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, Mr. Dugdale, you have been formerly Examined, did you hear any thing of a Maſſacre? or of any particular Perſons to be Murthered, beſides the King and Duke of Monmouth?

Mr. Dugdale. I do not remember any in particular, but they two; but in general, all Proteſtants they intended to cut off.

Mr. Ward. All Proteſtants?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Pray, Sir, what did induce them to have ſo much Confidence in you? Had you any ſuch Zeal for their Religion?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, inſomuch that they thought I was a Prieſt in the Country.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Had you been free of your Purſe? did you give them any Money?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I gave them for this, and for the praying for my Soul, the Summ of 400 l. which was ſecured upon a Deed of Land; and I promiſed them another 100 l. when they made Moan for the Want of Money; and when Mr. Peters ſaid if they did not make more Haſte with their Contributions, they ſhould be at a great loſs: And Mr. Gavan promiſed me, I ſhould be Canonized for a Saint.

L. C. J. When had you given the 400 l.?

Mr. Dugdale. I had given it them in Money, it was upon a Deed of Land, which was conveyed to Mr. Gerrard, and was to be ſold for the raiſing of that Money.

Corker. Mr. Dugdale, you make mention of a certain Letter ſent from London here, from Mr. Harcourt, but not Mr. Harcourt's Letter, in which Letter you ſay it was mentioned that the King ſhould be killed, and that an Army ſhould be raiſed, and ſome ſuch Matters of grand Deſign. Sir, don't you know from whom that Letter came, I ask you?

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot directly at preſent call to mind the Perſon's Name, I may by and by, perhaps.

Corker. Then, my Lord, I appeal to the Court, and beg the Judgment of the Court, whether a Letter of that vaſt Concernment, about killing the King, the Deſtruction of the Nation, and the raiſing of an Army, ſhould be ſent from a Man that he himſelf does not, nor can tell his Name, nor the Place this Letter came from. That a Man ſhould be ſo mad to ſend by the common Poſt a Letter of ſuch vaſt Concern, and yet neither the Party to whom, nor the Party from whom it came, be remembred.

Mr. Dugdale. I can give you Satisfaction, as to ſome Letters I have received, and I can tell you in particular from whence they came. One came from Paris to St. Omers, and ſo from St. Omers to London, and from thence by a ſpecial Meſſenger to Tixall in Staffordſhire; and my Lord Aſton and Mr. Ewers read it one Night, in my ſight, in the Parlour.

Corker. Juſt now he ſaid it was by a ſpecial Meſſenger, before he ſaid, the Letters came by a common Poſt.

Mr. Dugdale. I ſpeak of another Letter now, than thoſe I ſpake of before.

L. C. J. He did, indeed, ſay before, that there was a Letter as you repeat it, that had the Importance of killing the King, but he could not particularly charge himſelf with the Perſon that writ it, but ſaith he, I can now remember another Letter, that was ſent by a ſpecial Meſſenger, and he will tell you who that Letter was writ by, and who it came from. From whom came it?

Corker. That was only to correct a former Lye.

Mr. Dugdale. There was J. W. writ to it, and I ſuppoſe it was from Sir John Warner.

L. C. J. Where was it dated? Whence did it come?

Mr. Dugdale. There was one from Paris, it was firſt begun at Paris, where Advice was firſt to be had, and Aſſiſtance was promiſed, how it ſhould be carried on, and they thought it was the beſt Way, after they had killed the King, for the Papiſts to give the firſt Alarm, that it was thoſe ſtill King-killing Presbyterians, that had done that Act, and that then the Church of England Men would be willinger to join with the Papiſts to cut them off.

L. C. J. This was the Subſtance of the Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, this was the Subſtance of the Letter. And the Letters from London ſaid, they thought it good Advice, and there were ſeveral Lords in England ſet their Hands to it, acknowledging it as good Advice: And in that very Letter there was an Army mentioned, that there ſhould be an Army ready to cut off thoſe that ſhould eſcape having their Throats cut.

L. C. J. Who brought that Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. I do not know who brought it from London to Boſcobel, but there was a ſpecial Meſſenger brought it thence to Tixal, and his Name was —— Carrington.

L. C. J. You ſay there were ſeveral Lords ſet their Hands to it, what Lords were they?

Mr. Dugdale, I have formerly mentioned them, there was my Lord Stafford, my Lord Bellaſis, and my Lord Arundel.

L. C. J. To what Purpoſe did they ſet their Hands to it?

Mr. Dugdale. That they approved it as good Advice.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen, this is that he ſays. Here is a Letter that was brought by one —— Carrington, to my Lord Aſton's, and the Subſtance of the Letter was to juſtify the Killing of the King, by the raiſing of an Army, and that this Letter came from St. Omers, and that it had the Letters J. W. Subſcribed to it, which was ſuppoſed to be Sir John Warner, and that this Letter was looked upon by ſome at London, and that they, as approving of it, ſet their Hands to it as good Advice, and then ſent it down into the Country.

Corker. Was the Letter dated from St. Omers? Was St. Omers writ in the Inſide, what ſay you? Speak.

Mr. Dugdale. There were three Letters, I ſay, that came in that Pacquet from St. Omers; one came from Paris, another from St. Omers, and another from London.

L. C. J. And all theſe in one Cover?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Sir George Wakeman. How could the ſame Cover cover all thoſe Letters?

Mr. Dugdale. All the Letters were cover'd in Grove's Pacquet.

L. C. J. Here is the Matter; he ſuppoſes there was a Letter writ, firſt at Paris, and that is then ſent to St. Omers; and then there was a Letter writ there, by Sir John Warner, or ſome of them, and ſent to London, and peruſed in England, by the Lords, and all ſent in one Cover into Staffordſhire.

Corker. Your Lordſhip makes Senſe of it, but he made none but Contradictions, and ſaid he did not know whence it came, nor who writ it. You ſay, Sir, you were one of thoſe to kill the King, pray when were you to kill the King?

Mr. Dugdale. In October, I was to have done it, when I came up.

Corker. My Lord, here is a Plot and a Deſign driven on ſeveral Ways, to murder the King. Dr. Oates in his Narrative, as I perceive, gives us a Deſcription of ſeveral Contrivances that were made uſe of to commit this Murther. He, in all his Deſcriptions, tells us only, as I take it, of three Ways of killing the King, the one by Grove and Pickering, another by the Ruffians, I know not whom, a third was by Poiſon, now Dr. Oates, in all his Relations, makes not any mention of a fourth Deſign to kill the King, or of any other Plot or Deſign at London to kill the King; but he ſays, if Grove and Pickering miſcarried, it was to be done by the four Ruffians, and they miſcarrying, it was to be done by Poyſon, now comes he with a Thing that never was thought of before, that Oates never gives any Relation of.

L. C. J. What then?

Corker. He, my Lord, tells us, that this was to be done in October, when all the other Things that were to be done were paſt; and what, ſhould they deſign to kill the King in October, when it was to be done before in July or Auguſt?

L. C. J. Look you, the firſt part of your Objection, wherein you ſay he names but three Ways of killing the King, what do you infer from that? that becauſe this Gentleman ſays there was a fourth, there was not. Dr. Oates told you as much as he knew of the matter, but he does not undertake to give you an account of all the Plot or Plotters in this Affair. If you make any reaſonable Objection againſt Mr. Dugdale's Teſtimony, I will allow it, but theſe Inferences I muſt not. That this is a ſtrange Story of Mr. Dugdale's, becauſe 'tis not part of Oates's Diſcovery, is that a reaſonable Objection? But then for the latter Part, that Dr. Oates ſays the King was to have been killed in July or Auguſt, therefore what ſhould they think of killing him in October, he tells you, that in June and July they did engage him in the general Plot, and firſt then to be inſtrumental in killing the King, but he was not to be gone till October to London to do it.

Corker. When the Thing was done.

Mr. Juſt. Wyndham. No, no, becauſe the Thing was not done, or becauſe it might miſcarry by others, therefore he was to come then.

L. C. J. They could not tell when it would be done, or by what Hand it would be done; therefore they were engaging as many as they could, provided the Thing were not done.

Marſhal. Amongſt other Things that ſeem to render his Teſtimony ſuſpected, there is one which is taken from the common Practice of all Men, in Caſes of like Nature, for where there is Danger in Matters of Concernment, Men uſe to be very circumſpect who they chooſe, and make choice of as few as poſſible; but now here is Perſon after Perſon, Conſpiring without End, and Letters to this Perſon, and to that Perſon, and nothing is proved to be done upon it, ſo that here is the greateſt Confuſion imaginable, an Hundred of Men, nay, almoſt a whole Nation are acquainted with it, when a few might ſerve the Turn.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Why do you ſay 'twas known to the whole Nation, when 'twas ſo cloſe a Conſpiracy?

L. C. J. North. You that are at the Bar; We do not object to what you ſay, as to the Way of it, but as to the Time that you deliver it in, it is the Courſe, that you deliver your Objections when the King's Evidence is done; indeed when the King's Council have done what Queſtions they have to ask of the Witneſſes, then you may ask them what Queſtions you will, but for the Obſervations that you would make by way of Objection to the Evidence, and as to their Credit, you ſhould reſerve that to the laſt, when the King's Evidence is done.

Priſoners. My Lord, we deſire we may be allowed Pen, Ink and Paper.

Mr. Recorder. Let them have it.

L. C. J. Indeed there is one Thing very conſiderable on your ſide, and 'tis fit there ſhould be an Account given of it. 'Tis very ſtrange, that a Thing of that Nature ſhould be writ ſo plain, I mean the Killing of the King, in a Letter that ſhould be ſent by the Common Poſt, what ſay you to that?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Ewers did it for no other End in the World, but that they intended, if it ſhould be diſcovered, all ſhould be flung upon me, and I was ſworn to deny it, and they were to go free.

L. C. J. What were the Words of the Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. In that of Mr. Whitebread's, it was contained downright plainly, he ſhould chooſe ſuch as were hardy, for the Killing of the King.

L. C. J. And how did that Letter come?

Mr. Dugdale. By the common Poſt.

Sir George Wakeman. No Man living can believe it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. There was no mention of Ewers, on the Out-ſide, nor no Name to it, was there?

Mr. Dugdale. No, none at all, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. No Name to the Letters?

Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugdale. Only the two firſt Letters of their Names.

Marſhal. Would they, in ſuch Caſes, can any Man think, be ſo mad as to venture their Lives, and all for they knew not what? Would the Lords, whoſe Names, he ſays, were ſubſcribed to one of the Letters, engage their Lives and Fortunes in the Signing of a Letter, wherein both were ſo much endangered, and commit it to ſuch an Hazard?

Rumley. Would they ſet their Hands to ſuch a Letter, as they could not be certain into whoſe Hands it might come? and he ſays, he does not know who it came from.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr. Dugdale, was that Letter by a common Poſt, that the Lords ſet their Hands to?

Mr. Dugdale. No, it was by a ſpecial Meſſenger.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, the Anſwer that he gives to your Objection is this; You ſay it is ſtrange, and indeed it is ſo, that ſuch a Deſign ſhould be writ ſo plain in Engliſh, in a Letter, but he ſays, there was no Body in Danger by it, but himſelf, for there was no Body could tell from whence it came, becauſe only two Letters of the Name were ſubſcribed; and, ſays he, it was directed to me only, and ſo I might have Suffered, but Ewers Name was not mentioned, to whom it was intended to go.

Rumley. Yet he ſays he does not certainly know who it came from.

Mr. Recorder. Gentlemen, you have your proper Time for that, if you will make any Remarks.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Will you ask him any more Queſtions? As for your Arguments, you muſt not uſe them now.

L. C. J. North. But they have deſired Pen, Ink, and Paper, is it given to them?

Mr. Recorder. You muſt allow the Priſoners Pen, Ink, and Paper, if they deſire it.

L. C. J. Ay, all of them, if they would have it. Which was done.

L. C. J. Mr. Dugdale, this Letter that came from Whitebread, it came with others, did it not?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, it did.

L. C. J. The Cover was directed to you, was it not?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. Had the other Letters particular Directions, to particular Perſons?

Mr. Dugdale. Every Letter was directed to me.

L. C. J. What, beſides the Cover?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, beſides the Cover.

L. C. J. Who were you to communicate them to?

Mr. Dugdale. They had a particular Mark that they were known by, there was always a black Croſs upon them, I was to give them to Mr. Ewers, and he was to communicate them to others concerned.

L. C. J. What was upon the other Letters?

Mr. Dugdale. I had no Letters but what I delivered to Ewers.

L. C. J. Was he the only Man that they were delivered to?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And he diſtributed them as he pleaſed, did he?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

L. C. J. Had you more Marks than one?

Mr. Dugdale. No, my Lord, no more Marks than one.

L. C. J. So you were only Agent between Mr. Ewers and them, and none elſe?

Mr. Juſt. Wyndham. They were all directed to you, how did he know who they were to go to?

Mr. Dugdale. I was to deliver them to him, and he diſperſed them to the ſeveral Perſons, and he rid conſtantly abroad about it.

L. C. J. Were there ſeveral Marks to know who they were to?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, he knew, by converſing with them, their ſeveral Hands, and ſo could tell, by what was written, what was intended, and what the Buſineſs was, and for whom.

Corker. There muſt have been ſeveral Tranſactions, and a Man muſt have received ſeveral Letters, before he knows another's Hand.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Will you ask him any Queſtions? you muſt not argue upon it yet.

Rumley. How many Letters came to you, pray, from beyond Sea?

Mr. Dugdale. An Hundred, I believe, in two Years Time.

Rumley. From how many ſeveral Perſons? Methinks you ſhould produce ſome of thoſe Letters.

Mr. Dugdale. There were Letters from Sir John Warner very often. I cannot remember all.

Rumley. Methinks you might be more ready in your Evidence, than upon every Turn to ſay, You can't remember. Have you none of thoſe Letters?

Mr. Dugdale. I burnt thoſe Letters which I kept, before I intended to diſcover the Plot; but in a multitude of Letters, 'tis hard to tell Particulars, I tell you what I remember of them.

Corker. You make mention of killing the King, and raiſing an Army, and theſe were ſpecified in two Letters. In thoſe Matters which concerned the raiſing of an Army, Were there only Letters, no Commiſſions ſent, for the raiſing of Forces? Did you never ſee any of the Officers? Did you never communicate with any of them?

L. C. J. Did you ſee any Commiſſions firſt?

Mr. Dugdale. No, I never did ſee any of them.

L. C. J. Did you ever talk with any that were intended to be Officers?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I have.

L. C. J. Name them.

Mr. Dugdale. There was Sir James Symons, and Mr. Howard, I have talked with them.

L. C. J. With them two?

Mr. Dugdale. And with one Captain Adderley, that is dead.

Corker. Why, there are three Officers towards the raiſing of ſeveral Thouſands of Men.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Look you, Mr. Corker, you muſt direct your ſelf to the Court, and propoſe your Queſtions here.

Corker. Mr. Dugdale tells us, that for the promoting of this Deſign, that he gave 400 l. and with the ſame Breath ſays, He was to receive 500 l. Methinks this is to do and undo.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Pray keep this arguing of yours till the laſt.

L. C. J. North. The Court hath told you already, this is not proper for you. 'Tis true, you muſt have Liberty to ask Queſtions, becauſe there are ſome Queſtions that elſe may be forgotten, and the Opportunity will be loſt: But when you have asked thoſe Queſtions, make your own Obſervations upon them in private to your ſelves, and afterwards it will be time for you to argue upon it to the Jury, when the King's Council ſhall have done their Evidence: But now to make these Inferences will do you little Service, and can't be permitted.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I desire to answer it now. It was my Lord Stafford that promised me the Money, and I went presently to know of Mr. Ewers what it meant, because I had given my Money before, and my Lord Stafford did not, I suppose, know any thing of it.

L. C. J. How long was it before that you gave the Money?

Mr. Dugdale. It was two or three Years before; at the Beginning, when the Plot was first discovered to me, for the introducing of their Religion.

Mr. Just. Atkins. He was a great Zealot, but my Lord Stafford did suppose the Money might quicken him.

Mr. Dugdale. It was for my Encouragement, and I should have a greater Reward after.

Corker. He received the Money, I suppose, when he was in Prison for Debt, rather than for any thing else.

L. C. J. North. You may observe that by and by.

L. C. J. Look you, this is what he hath said, it is all but in general, and he does not name any of you Four: But here was a general Contrivance, he says, to bring in Popery; I am afraid that is too true; and as the best way to effect that, they resolved to kill the King; and I am afraid that is too true too, for it was indeed the likeliest way.

Then stood up Mr. Prance.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Prance, pray will you give the Court an Account, only in general, of what you know of any Design that was at this time?

Mr. Prance. It was a Fortnight or Three Weeks before Michaelmas, I went to one Mr. Ireland's Chamber, in Russel-street, where was Mr. Fenwick and Mr. Grove, and there they were discoursing of 50000 Men that were to be raised, for the settling of the Roman Catholick Religion; and I asked Mr. Fenwick, How that could be done? And he said, Very easily, in a short time. Then I asked him, What poor Tradesmen should do? And he said, I need not fear, for I should have Church-Work enough, to make Crucifixes, Basons and Candlesticks.

Mr. Just. Atkins. You are a Working-Goldsmith.

Mr. Prance. Yes. Then I asked, Who should Govern them? And he said, My Lord Powis, my Lord Stafford, my Lord Arundel, my Lord Bellasis, and my Lord Petre. Two or three Days after that, Grove came to my Shop to buy some Spoons for a Christning; and then I did ask him, What Office he was to have? He said, He did not know, but he said, that my Lord Bellasis, my Lord Powis, and my Lord Petre, had Commissions to Govern the Army. And after that, there was one Mr. Paston in Duke-street, I went to him, to know how I could direct a Letter; and after a little Time, we fell into Discourse concerning the Affairs of the Times. He told me, The Lords had given out Commissions, one was to Sir Henry Bennyfield in Norfolk, another was to Mr. Stoner in Oxfordshire, and another was to Mr. Talbot of Longford. He said, that they had given Commissions for to raise an Army.

Mr. Ward. What was that Army to do?

Mr. Prance. It was to settle the Catholick Religion,

Mr. Ward. Did you hear any thing mentioned of killing the King?

Mr. Prance. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Who told you this that you speak of about the Commissions?

Mr. Prance. Mr. Paston, my Lord, in Duke-street.

L. C. J. Was he a Priest?

Mr. Prance. No, but he kept some in his House, and they said Mass every Morning.

L. C. J. Is he of any Profession?

Mr. Prance. He was a Counsellor, but doth not practice now, he hath an Estate of 5 or 600 a Year.

L. C. J. Now go on, and say what he told you.

Mr. Prance. He said, there were Commissions given out to Sir Henry Bennyfield, and one Talbot of Longford.

L. C. J. When was it he told you this?

Mr. Prance. It was in August last.

L. C. J. And did he say they had Commissions sent to them?

Mr. Prance. Yes, they had them in the Country, where they were to raise their Troops: I heard of more, but I only remembred those Three.

Mr. Ward. Do you know one Messenger?

Mr. Prance. Yes.

Mr. Ward. What Discourse had you with him?

Mr. Prance. My Lord's Butler told me ——

L. C. J. Who told you?

Mr. Prance. My Lord's Butler.

L. C. J. What Lord?

Mr. Prance. My Lord Arundel. He waited then on one Sheldon, that was Almoner to the Dutchess of York. He told me, That Mr. Messenger was to kill the King, and he was to have a good Reward for the same. Soon after, I was going over Lincolns-Inn-Fields, and met with Mr. Messenger, and asked him, Why he would kill the King? He seemed to be surprized, and starting back said, Who told you that? Said I, Your Butler told me. Oh, said he, we are quite off of that now: But then I was going away, and he called me back, and asked me, If I would go and drink with him? No, said I, I cannot stay at this Time. However, pray, said he, keep Counsel, for we are off of that now.

Mr. Ward. Will you ask the Witness any Questions?

Corker. Yes, my Lord. Those Commissions you speak of, when were they sent? in August?

Mr. Prance. No, I do not say so; but that Mr. Paston told me of them in August. I cannot tell the Day.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. If you observe it, Gentlemen, he only tells you what some of the Priests, and Persons of your Religion, acquainted him with; not any thing particularly against you.

Mr. Ward. Then next we call Mr. Fennison.

Who stood up.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Fennison, pray give the Court an Account of what you know of any Design in Hand, or what Discourse you had with any Person about such a Thing.

Mr. Fennison. Sir, in the Month of June 1678, I was at Mr. Ireland's Chamber.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Where, Sir?

Mr. Fennison. In Russel-street, next the White-Hart. And there arose a Discourse about Religion, gion, and ſome hopes there were, he ſaid, that the Romiſh Religion ſhould be publickly owned again in England; and when I came in, I remember Mr. Ireland did ſay, There was only One in the Way, that ſtop'd the Gap, and hindred the Catholick Religion from flouriſhiug in England again; and ſaid, It was an eaſie matter to poyſon the King.

L. C. J. Who was by pray when he ſaid ſo?

Mr. Jenniſon. His Siſter was by.

L. C. J. Name her, Sir.

Mr. Jenniſon. Mrs. Anne Ireland.

L. C. J. Who elſe?

Mr. Jenniſon. None elſe.

L. C. J. Then there was only you, and Ireland, and his Siſter. And you ſay, That they were diſcourſing concerning their Hopes of bringing in Religion, and Ireland ſaid, There was but one in the Way, and that it was not an hard Matter to poyſon the King.

Mr. Jenniſon. Yes, my Lord; and ſo I not knowing any thing at all of the Plot, or imagining the Deſign, did anſwer, Perhaps it may be done, but it would be a very horrid thing if it ſhould. Then Mrs. Ireland did rebuke her Brother, and asked him, Why he talk'd ſo? And then he anſwered with ſome Salvo or other, That he did not think it ought to be done. Then I purſued the Diſcourſe about Religion, and told him, I thought it would never come in by Violence, and that it was a great ſcandal to Religion for the Profeſſors of it to propagate and promote it by any ſuch Ways: And then I put him in mind of the Gunpowder Treaſon, of the ill Succeſs it had, and the great Injury it did to the Cauſe. He anſwered, That was only a State Trick, and an Invention of my Lord Cecil's.

L. C. J. Ay, they do ſay ſo, I know; Were you a Papiſt then?

Mr. Jenniſon. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Are you one ſtill?

Mr. Jenniſon. No, my Lord.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Jenniſon, Were you with him again at any time? And what time was it that you met him, as you remember?

Mr. Jenniſon. The 19th of Auguſt after I came from Windſor.

L. C. J. Where did you ſee him?

Mr. Jenniſon. At his own Chamber in Ruſſel-Street.

L. C. J. How do you ſo preciſely remember the Day, that it was the 19th of Auguſt?

Mr. Jenniſon. I remember it by this, the beginning of Auguſt I went to Tunbridge with Mr. Tonſtall and another Gentleman, and there I ſtaid till the 14th, when I came to Town, and ſtaid two or three Days, and on Saturday in the Afternoon I went to Windſor to take my leave of Mr. Bowes, being to go down into the North; and there I ſtaid all Sunday, and came back again on Monday Morning, and came to Town about Twelve a Clock the 19th Day, as I have conſidered it ſince it was, and a Monday.

L. C. J. And then you went to Ireland's Chamber, did you?

Mr. Jenniſon. Yes, then I went to Mr. Ireland's Chamber.

L. C. J. By the Oath you have taken, becauſe it is very material, not to your Cauſe, but it ſhews how fit it is that the World ſhould know with what Truth or Falſhood theſe Men dare die, and this Man did in particular. It was affirmed by him to the very laſt of his Breath, that he was never here in London after the third of Auguſt, till ſome time in September, but was all the while in Stafford-ſhire; and they did at the laſt Trial produce Sir John Southcot, and his Coach-Man, and his Lady, and I know not how many other Witneſſes, to give an Account where he was from the third of Auguſt, all along till the middle of September; and they teſtified that they kept Sixteen Days together in his Company; and then they produced People in Cheſhire to ſay, that they ſaw him there. Therefore I do now ask you upon your Oath, Are you ſure that you ſaw Ireland here the 19th of Auguſt?

Mr. Jenniſon. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you ſwear that poſitively?

Mr. Jenniſon. Yes, my Lord, I do.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. He will tell you the Diſcourſe he had with him then.

Mr. Jenniſon. After that I came to Mr. Ireland's Chamber, I underſtood he was newly come out of Staffordſhire. And he pull'd off his Boots while I was there upon the Frame of a Table, or elſe upon a Jack, I cannot poſitively tell which, but I believe it was on a Frame of a Table. I asked him, How all our Friends did in Staffordſhire? He told me, Very well, and that they would be glad to ſee me there. Then he asked me, Whence I came, and where I had been? I told him, I had been at Windſor. He asked me, What News? How the Court diverted themſelves? I told him, I underſtood his Majeſty took great Delight in Hawking, and Fiſhing, and chiefly in Fiſhing, and uſed to go out very early in the Morning, accompanied only with three or four Perſons of Quality.

L. C. J. Did he ask you what Company he had? Or did you tell him of your own accord?

Mr. Jenniſon. No, I think I told him of my own accord, that the King went out very early, and had but little Company with him. Lord, ſaid he, I wonder the King ſhould go ſo thinly Guarded, he were eaſily taken off, I wonder he ſhould go ſo open. Said I, God forbid, ſure no body would be ſo wicked; and then he qualified it by ſome Expreſſion; ſo that at that time I made no ill Reflection upon it, till after the Plot broke out, and then diſcourſing of it to my Father and my Siſters, I ſaid, I wiſh it be not true, pray God there be nothing in this Plot, becauſe of the Diſcourſe that happened between Mr. Ireland and me. 'Tis very ſuſpicious, ſaid I.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. At that time had you any Diſcourſe whence he came, and about his wearineſs?

Mr. Jenniſon. He ſaid, he came out of Staffordſhire, and came Poſt. I underſtood he came very early that Morning. I told him that Scholars, ſuch as he, would rather chooſe to come upon an Ambling Horſe, and that I was weary my ſelf.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Were you very well acquainted with Mr. Ireland that ſuffered?

Mr. Jenniſon. Yes, very well.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Are you ſure he was in London the Nineteenth of Auguſt?

Mr. Jenniſon. Yes, and I talked with him then.

L. C. J. How long had you known him before?

Mr. Jenniſon. A Year and a half.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray when did you go out of London to the North? What time did you go away?

Mr. Jenniſon. I went the fourth of September, as the Coach Book will make it appear.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. The Evidence they gave was, that he did not come to Town till the 13th of September, but he was gone the 4th it ſeems to the North, and that is before that time. Well, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Corker. Mr. Ireland had been in Staffordſhire? Had not he? for the 19th you ſay he came to Town, I do not well remember, but the Deſign of the Ruffians of killing the King, about which Oates ſpeaks, was before the 19th, at the Conſult of which Ireland was ſo grand an Inſtrument.

L. C. J. That was in May, was it not?

Corker. No, that of the Ruffians was in Auguſt, as he ſays.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Will you ask him any Queſtions? Look upon him; you ſee how creditable a Witneſs he is.

Corker. Did you, pray Sir, leave your Religion, and make this Diſcovery before the pretended Plot came out? When did you leave your Religion?

Mr. Jenniſon. About three Months ago.

L. C. J. He told you that as ſoon as the Plot broke out, ſaid he, I told my Siſters and my Father of it, and ſaid, I pray God this Plot have not more in it than we are aware of, for I had ſome Diſcourſe with Mr. Ireland, which I took no notice of then, becauſe he qualified it at that time, and ſaid it was not lawful, and I did make nothing of it then, but now it runs much in my Mind.

Corker. This, he ſays, but this Man did not leave his Religion, nor make this Diſcovery till it appeared advantageous to him ſo to do.

Mr. Recorder. It is an Obſervation you make, but it had been well if you, and all of that Perſwaſion would have left it when you ſaw what it led to.

L. C. J. I know not what Advantage you mean, nor do I ſee any colour you have to ſay ſo, for they ſay this Gentleman's Father is one of a 1000 a Year, and he is his eldeſt Son.

Corker. Are you your Father's Eldeſt Son?

Mr. Recorder. There is an Elder Brother, my Lord, but he is a Prieſt.

L. C. J. Is your Elder Brother a Prieſt?

Mr. Jenniſon. My Lord, I don't know that, he is in Newgate about it.

L. C. J. It is reported that he is ſo?

Mr. Jenniſon. My Lord, I don't know it of my own knowledge.

Corker. He does not know it, and therefore he is not the Heir, and therefore the Advantage of his Eſtate is not ſuch, but that he might lay hold of this Diſcovery.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I hope by and by, Gentlemen, you will make a better Defence than this.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What you ſay ſhould be by Way of Queſtion propoſed to the Court.

Mr. Recorder. But you take it upon your Oath that you ſaw Ireland the 19th of Auguſt? Was that after you met with Mr. Bowes?

Mr. Jenniſon. I did not meet with Mr. Bowes.

Mr. Recorder. How long after you had left him was it?

Mr. Jenniſon. I did not ſee him there, I went to ſee him, but he was not there.

L. C. J. But he ſays preciſely that the 19th of Auguſt he went to Mr. Ireland's Chamber, where he ſaw him pluck off his Boots, and talking, as if he had come out of Staffordſhire, Poſt, ſo that indeed he was in Staffordſhire, but not all that time he ſaid he was.

Mr. Ward. Then pray call Mr. Bowes. Who was ſworn.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, Sir, will you give the Court an Account, when you ſaw this Gentleman, and about what time he went out of Town.

Mr. Bowes. My Lord, I ſaw him in Auguſt, the beginning, or about the middle of Auguſt, in Tunbridge, before my coming to Town.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray when did he leave this Town? when did he go out of Town?

Mr. Bowes. I cannot point blank tell the time, but I could recollect my ſelf, I believe, in a little time.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Do you know of his going to Windſor?

Mr. Bowes. I did not ſee him there, but he writ a Letter to me that he went thither to meet me there, but I ſaw him not till he came to Town again.

L. C. J. Who is 't you ſpeak of?

Mr. Bowes. Mr. Jenniſon.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What did he write you in that Letter?

Mr. Bowes. Sir, the Letter is here in Court, I don't remember the particulars.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is it here in Court?

Mr. Bowes. Yes, it is, I think.

Mr. Recorder. Shew it him, for it may refreſh his Memory about the time. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. Is that the Letter?

Mr. Bowes. This is the Letter.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, when did you receive it?

Mr. Bowes. It was in December before Chriſtmas, here is a Gentleman that then ſaw it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, Sir, will you pleaſe to look upon it, and then acquaint the Court with ſome of the Contents.

L. C. J. North. You are ſure, Mr. Bowes, that Mr. Jenniſon was in Town in Auguſt?

Mr. Bowes. He came then from Tunbridge.

L. C. J. That is all, we can make no more of it: Did he meet you at Windſor?

Mr. Bowes. No, my Lord, I was gone to Windſor before, and when he came I was gone out of the Town.

L. C. J. What time went you to Windſor?

Mr. Bowes. The twelfth or thirteenth of Auguſt; it was on a Monday or a Tueſday after I came from Tunbridge.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Then we ſhall call one Witneſs more, and we ſhall prove by him (that is one Mr. Burnet) that the ſeventeenth of Auguſt he did meet Mr. Jenniſon going to Windſor. Pray call Mr. Burnet. [Who was ſworn.]

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, do you know Mr. Jenniſon?

Mr. Burnet. I met him as I was coming from Windſor that Day Dotchet's Horſe Race was.

L. C. J. What Day was that?

Mr. Burnet. I cannot exactly remember the Day.

L. C. J. What Month was it?

Mr. Burnet. In Auguſt.

L. C. J. Was it the middle of Auguſt, or the latter end?

Mr. Burnet. It was about the middle of Auguſt.

L. C. J. This does not ſo much relate to you, but it is to give ſatisfaction to all the World, that what was aſſerted by Mr. Ireland all along, and at his Death, and ſeems to be juſtified by ſo many Wit-

Witneſſes as were produced on that account, to prove that he was not here in Auguſt, is utterly untrue, for this Gentleman, Mr. Fenniſon, ſwears he ſaw him here in Town the 19th of Auguſt; and to prove that Mr. Fenniſon was here, here is Mr. Bowes, and this other Gentleman that come to fortifie his Teſtimony, who ſwears preciſely, that the 19th of Auguſt he was at Mr. Ireland's Chamber, where he ſaw him pluck off his Boots, and talk'd as if he came Poſt then from Staffordſhire.

Corker. I ſuppoſe it will not be permitted us to make any Argument upon this neither as yet.

L. C. J. No, no.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But, now, Gentlemen, it will behove you to take Notes, for we ſhall come home to you, and we begin with Dr. Oates. [Who ſtood up]

Mr. Ward. Pray, Sir, will you tell your whole knowledge of this matter, and apply your ſelf as near as you can to every one of the Priſoners at the Bar.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, in the Month of July Mr. Aſhby came to Town ſick, and being ſick, and one of the Society, the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir George Wakeman was his Phyſician, and being his Phyſician he did write him ſome Inſtructions how he ſhould order himſelf before he went, and at the Bath; That he ſhould, in the firſt place, take a Pint of Milk in the Morning, and a Pint of Milk at Night, and ſhould drink no Morning's Draughts but Milk, and that he ſhould have one hundred Strokes at the Bath, at the Pump; I do not ſo well underſtand what that means, but I ſuppoſe the Court doth; but theſe were the words of the Inſtructions: In this Letter Sir George Wakeman did write, that the Queen would aſſiſt him to poiſon the King, and this Letter was brought by a Meſſenger to Mr. Aſhby. Within a Day or two after I ſaw Mr. Aſhby and Sir George Wakeman, the Priſoner at the Bar (he was ſo called) but I had no acquaintance with him, but juſt the ſight of him) I ſaw him ſit in a writing Poſture, I ſaw him lay by his Pen, riſe up and go away, and the ſame Hand that he left behind him in a Paper where the Ink was not dry, was the ſame Hand that writ the Letter to Mr. Aſhby. And, my Lord, in that time of converſe, while he was writing, this Mr. Aſhby did give him ſome Inſtructions concerning the Commiſſion he had received of being Phyſician to the Army. Now, my Lord, in ſome few Days after there came a Gentleman for ſome of the Fathers from Wild-Houſe, that had the Title either of Sir Richard or Sir Robert, but he was a middle-ſtatured Man, and a briſk Man, about the Age of four or five and Forty, and he came with Commands from the Queen for the Fathers to wait upon her at Somerſet-Houſe, and I did wait upon theſe Fathers, there was Father Harconrt, Father Kaines, Father Langworth, and Father Fenwick, and another Father, I cannot remember his Name. And, may it pleaſe your Lordſhip, we did attend at Somerſet-Houſe, and the Fathers went in to the Queen, into a Chamber where ſhe was, and I waited in an Anti-Chamber, and I did hear a Woman's Voice which did ſay, that ſhe would aſſiſt them in the propagation of the Catholick Religion with her Eſtate, and that ſhe would not endure theſe Violations of her Bed any longer, and that ſhe would aſſiſt Sir Geo. Wakeman in the poiſoning of the King. Now, my Lord, when they came out I deſired that I might ſee the Queen, and ſo when I came in I had, as I believe, from her a gracious Smile. Now, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, while that I was within I heard the ſame Voice ſpeak thus to Father Harcourt, and asked him, whether he had received the laſt 1000*l.* and it was the ſame Tongue, as I can poſſibly gueſs, the ſame Voice which I heard when I was without; and I ſaw no other Woman there but the Queen, and there were theſe Fathers. My Lord, in that very Month of July Sir George Wakeman was propoſed 10000 l. in the preſence of Father Harcourt, and Father Fenwick, I think was there, and Father Ireland.

L. C. J. Were you there?

Dr. Oates. I was there.

L. C. J. Was this Propoſal made to Sir George Wakeman after this Diſcourſe you heard at Somerſet-Houſe?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I will not be poſitive whether it was before or after, but it was near that time, this 10000 l. he did refuſe.

L. C. J. But you ſay you heard the 10000 l. was proffered him; pray, who did propoſe it to him?

Dr. Oates. Aſhby was to do it.

L. C. J. But who did it?

Dr. Oates. It was Aſhby in the name of the Provincial, from whom he had received Inſtructions ſo to do.

L. C. J. But you ſay, in your hearing 10000 l. was offered him by Aſhby.

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What ſaid he?

Dr. Oates. He refuſed it.

L. C. J. What words did he uſe?

Dr. Oates. He ſaid it was too little.

L. C. J. What was the 10000 l. to be given for?

Dr. Oates. To poiſon the King.

L. C. J. Were thoſe the words?

Dr. Oates. Yes, they were.

L. C. J. How did the Diſcourſe begin?

Dr. Oates. I will tell your Lordſhip how: There was a Meeting of the Fathers for this very Purpoſe to treat with Sir Geo. Wakeman before Aſhby went to the Bath, and there being a Meeting they did break this buſineſs to him; but what preamble they made to it I cannot remember. My Lord, as for the other Priſoners at the Bar, Mr. Corker——

L. C. J. But before you go from this Matter, you ſay you know not how they brought it in, but they brought it in ſome Way, he was to meet them to that Purpoſe, and there Aſhby did tell him he ſhould have 10000 l. What Anſwer made he to it?

Dr. Oates. He ſaid it was too little for ſo great a Work.

L. C. J. Is that all?

Dr. Oates. That is all that I remember.

L. C. J. Did he ſay what he would have?

Dr. Oates. I can't remember that, but he ſaid that was too little.

L. C. J. Did he ſay he would have five more, or any other Sum?

Dr. Oates. No, that was not then mentioned; but there were Letters preſently diſpatched to Whitebread to tell him, that Sir Geo. Wakeman had refuſed 10000 l. and then this ſame Whitebread did order the Fathers in London to propoſe five more, which which propoſal was made to Sir Geo. Wakeman. This I ſpeak but by hear-ſay, and it was accepted, and 5000 l. of it received in Part, and Sir George Wakeman's Name was ſubſcribed to the Entry-Book.

L. C. J. Did you ſee his Name ſubſcribed?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Where?

Dr. Oates. To the Entry-Book.

L. C. J. Where was that Book kept?

Dr. Oates. It was the Book that the Jeſuits kept: it was then in our Cuſtody.

L. C. J. Whoſe Cuſtody?

Dr. Oates. The Fathers Cuſtody.

L. C. J. Whoſe particularly? And at whoſe Chamber was it kept?

Dr. Oates. At Wild-Houſe.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Do you know who was the Keeper of it?

Dr. Oates. I cannot poſitively ſay that, I ſuppoſe the Secretary and the Fathers.

Sir. Rob. Sawyer. And what did you ſee writ in that Book?

Dr. Oates. That ſuch a Day (which Day I cannot remember) but ſuch a Day in Auguſt ſo much was propoſed to Sir Geo. Wakeman and he accepted it, and received it: thoſe were the Words, or to that Purpoſe.

L. C. J. Were thoſe the words writ in the Book?

Dr. Oates. Yes, or to that Purpoſe.

L. C. J. Do you know whoſe Hand writ that?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I can tell whoſe Hand, it was Father Harcourt writ thoſe Words.

L. C. J. Sir Geo. Wakeman's Hand was not to it, was it?

Dr. Oates. Yes, it was juſt underneath: Received ſo much Money of Father Harcourt by the Order of Edward Coleman: now there was the Goldſmiths Name to it, I cannot undertake to ſay who it was, but in my Conſcience I think it was Staley.

L. C. J. How much was the Money?

Dr. Oates. Five Thouſand Pounds.

L. C. J. Was Sir Geo. Wakeman's Hand ſubſcribed to that Receipt?

Dr. Oates. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Once more, what were the Words in the Book?

Dr. Oates. Memorandum. Such a Day 15000 l. was propoſed to Sir Geo. Wakeman which he accepted. I tell you the Purport, and the Words as near as I can.

L. C. J. Was it ſaid for what the Money was propoſed?

Dr. Oates. I will not be poſitive in that, I ſuppoſe it was.

L. C. J. But you ſay it was written ſuch a Day 15000 l. was propoſed to Sir Geo. Wakeman, and by him accepted?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, and then underneath it the Receipt was written, and this Receipt was written thus, Received in Part of this 15000 l. 5000 l. of Father Harcourt by Order of Edward Coleman. Geo. Wakeman.

L. C. J. Was the Receipt, which is ſaid ſuch a Day, the ſame Day that the other?

Dr. Oates. There was no other date to it?

L. C. J. Had the firſt a date to it?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, it had.

L. C. J. What Day was it?

Dr. Oates. It was in Auguſt.

Corker. What Day in Auguſt?

Dr. Oates. I cannot tell.

Corker. About what time in Auguſt?

Dr. Oates. It might be betwixt the beginning and the middle.

L. C. J. But we will ſuppoſe for the preſent Queſtion a Day: ſuppoſe it was written the 10th of Auguſt, There was propoſed 15000 l. to Sir G. W. and by him accepted; and then comes afterwards this Note, Received then 5000 l. in Part of this 15000 l. with his Name to it. Was there any other date to that?

Dr. Oates. No, that was ſet down as the ſame Day, Received 5000 l. in Part by the Order of Edward Coleman.

L. C. J. And then Sir Geo. Wakeman's Name was ſet to it at length, was it?

Dr. Oates. Yes, it was.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Where was that Received? In whoſe Chamber?

Dr. Oates. I cannot ſay that.

L. C. J. Was there any Place mentioned in the Note where it ſhould be Received?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, I was then ſick of the Stone, and was not at the Payment of the Money.

L. C. J. But did the Note mention any Name? Received of any body?

Dr. Oates. It was by Order of Mr. Edward Coleman 5000 l. in Part of this 15000 l.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Does he ſay this was in the Entry-Book?

Dr. Oates. Yes, it was.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Where was that kept?

Dr. Oates. Sometimes at Wild-Houſe, ſometimes Mr. Langhorn had the Cuſtody of it.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. I humbly beg of the Court that Mr. Staley may be ſent for.

L. C. J. He only ſays he believes Mr. Staley paid it.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Does he mention no Place where it was Received?

L. C. J. No.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Nor no Perſon it was paid to?

L. C. J. No, he ſays, All I ſaw is this, that in the Entry-Book ſometimes kept at Wild-Houſe, ſometimes by Mr. Langhorn, there was written, This Day (which was ſome Day in Auguſt) was propoſed to Sir G. W. 15000 l. and by him accepted, and under that a line or two more which contained, Then Received 5000 l. by Order of Edward Coleman, being Part of this 15000 l. Geo. Wakeman.

Sir George Wakeman. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to give me leave to ſpeak ſomething now, I may forget it hereafter.

Mr. Ward. We have not done yet.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. Sir George, they have not yet done with this Witneſs for the King.

L. C. J. North. Take a Memorandum of it in your Paper.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, what do you know more of the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir George Wakeman?

Dr. Oates. This is all I can recollect at preſent.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Do you know any thing of any Commiſſion that he had?

Dr. Oates. I did urge that he received a Commiſſion to be Phyſician-General of the Army.

L. C. J. Did you ſee that Commiſſion?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I ſaw it in Sir George Wakeman's Hands.

L. C. J. Had you ſeen it before?

Dr. Oates.

Dr. Oates. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. Where did you ſee it in his Hand?

Dr. Oates. When he was writing at Mr. Aſhby's.

L. C. J. What Note was that he left behind him there?

Dr. Oates. It was an Apothecaries Bill, as I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. What Month was it that you ſaw the Commiſſion?

Dr. Oates. It was in July.

Mr. Ward. What do you know of his being privy to the Conſult in April?

Dr. Oates. I cannot ſpeak any thing to that.

L. C. J. Did he write his Name to that Bill?

Dr. Oates. I cannot ſay that, my Lord, it was finiſhed, but I cannot be poſitive about the Name.

L. C. J. But you ſay, that you believe that the Name of George Wakeman was the ſame Hand with that you ſaw when he writ the Apothecaries Bill?

Dr. Oates. It was, as near as I can gueſs, the ſame with that Letter that was writ to Aſhby, wherein he does direct him to take a Pint of Milk in the Morning, and a Pint of Milk in the Evening, and that he ſhould have an hundred Strokes at the Bath: And this Hand was the ſame with that of the Apothecaries Bill.

L. C. J. You never ſaw Sir George Wakeman write in your life, did you?

Dr. Oates. I ſaw him in a writing poſture, and I ſaw him lay by the Pen.

L. C. J. But you did not ſee him write?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, but the Gentleman that ſate by him was lame of both his Hands and could not write: And I ſaw him lay by the Pen, and when he was gone away the Ink was not dry.

L. C. J. You ſpeak of that only to ſhew the likeneſs of the Hand.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Have you not ſaid that you do not know my Hand?

Dr. Oates. I have told the Court before how far I have known your Hand. I ſaw a Letter, that I ſay was ſigned and ſubſcribed George Wakeman, and that was the ſame Hand that was to the Receipt, and to the Apothecaries Bill.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Have you not ſaid poſitively that you do not know it, and is not that matter on Record?

Dr. Oates. I did ſee a Letter ſubſcribed George Wakeman, 'tis a fine genteel Hand, and after I ſaw him in a writing Poſture, I ſaw him lay by the Pen, the Ink and Paper was wet; I did not indeed ſee him write, but there was no body in the Room that could write, or in a writing Poſture but he, for the other Gentleman was lame of both Hands.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. But I pray give a poſitive Anſwer to what I ask you; have you not ſaid you do not know my Hand?

Dr. Oates. I do not remember I have ſaid ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But he ſays now he believes that the Hand that writ the Letter to Aſhby, and the Bill that he ſaw green, when no Body was by that could write but you, were the ſame.

Sir George Wakeman. Have not you ſaid, before the King and Council, that you never ſaw me in all your life, and that you did not know me?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, you may be pleaſed to know, when I ſaw Sir George Wakeman at the Council I had been up two Nights together, and the King was willing once to excuſe me from ſtaying any further Examination, and being ſo ill and indiſpoſed for want of Reſt, in reſpect both of my Intellectuals, and every thing elſe, I might not charge him ſo home; but now I have a proper Light whereby I may ſee a Man's Face, I can ſay more to him.

Sir George Wakeman. This is juſt Coleman's Caſe, the Light was in your Eyes.

Dr. Oates. This is the ſame Gentleman: I deſire he may propoſe his Queſtions to the Court.

L. C. J. This is his Queſtion, whether you did ſay before the King and Council, you did not know Sir George Wakeman?

Dr. Oates. I do not remember whether I did or did not. I ſaw one called Sir George Wakeman, and this is that Man; but I will not ſay, this was the Man that was before the Council when I was there.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. Did you ſee the Commiſſion in this Man's Hand?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Did you know this Gentleman before he was at the Council?

Dr. Oates. I ſaw this Gentleman with Mr. Aſhby, and he can't deny it.

Sir George Wakeman. Can't deny it! Yes. I hope you will be able to prove it. You ſaid you never ſaw me in your life before you ſaw me at the Council.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee him more than once?

Dr. Oates. Yes, twice in Mr. Aſhby's Chamber.

L. C. J. What, two ſeveral Days?

Dr. Oates. Yes, two ſeveral Days.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. Where was it that you ſaw him when the Writing you ſay was green that he left behind him?

Dr. Oates. It was at Mr. Aſhby's Chamber.

L. C. J. You never ſaw him before that, did you?

Dr. Oates. No.

L. C. J. How often after?

Dr. Oates. But once after that.

L. C. J. Was that at the Council?

Dr Oates. No.

L. C. J. Look you what he ſays, he never ſaw you but twice before he ſaw you at the Council.

Dr. Oates. I ſaw you when the 10000 l. was propoſed to you.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Where was that?

Dr. Oates. At Wild-Houſe.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Did Mr. Aſhby lie there?

Dr. Oates. He did lie there, becauſe the Provincial was beyond Sea, and he came up to London in order to go to the Bath.

Sir George Wakeman. What Day was that Propoſal made to me?

Dr. Oates. It was before Mr. Aſhby went to the Bath.

Sir George Wakeman. In what Month?

Dr. Oates. In the Month of July.

Sir George Wakeman. By whom? By Mr. Aſhby?

Dr. Oates. Yes.

Sir George Wakeman. In the preſence of whom?

Dr. Oates. Father Harcourt, Father Ireland, and Father Fenwick.

Sir George Wakeman. You will be ſure to name thoſe that can be neither Witneſſes for me nor againſt me.

L. C. J. Who can help that?

Dr. Oates. I reckon up ſuch as you did keep Company with.

L. C. J. Do you know when Mr. Aſhby went to the Bath?

Dr. Oates. The latter end of July or the beginning of Auguſt, as I remember. And this was before he went: he ſtayed but fourteen or ſixteen Days, as I remember, in Town.

L. C. J. He ſays he ſaw you but twice, once when you writ that Note, and the ſecond time when the propoſal was made to you.

Sir George Wakeman. And you knew all theſe Things, at that Time when I was examined before the King and Council? Turn this way and anſwer me.

Dr. Oates. I am not bound to anſwer that Queſtion.

L. C. J. But you muſt anſwer his Queſtions, if they be lawful.

Sir George Wakeman. I ſay, I ask him, Whether he knew all theſe Things before that Time I was examined before the King and Council?

L. C. J. That muſt needs be, for all theſe Things were done before.

Sir George Wakeman. Then I ask him this Queſtion, Why did you ſay before the King and Council, that you knew nothing of me, but concerning one Letter that was writ from Mr. Aſhby to Mr. Fenwick? I ſhall prove this upon you; but, my Lord, let me obſerve this, Can any one believe, that if ſuch Evidence had been given in to the King and Council, againſt me, as he now ſpeaks of, that I ſhould not have been immediately taken into Cuſtody, but that I ſhould have my Liberty ſo long as I had?

L. C. J. I will tell you, Sir George, you will do very well and properly to call up your Witneſſes by and by, when you come to make your Defence, and to prove what he ſaid at the Council-Table. Pray, Dr. Oates, what was the reaſon you did not give the ſame Evidence then you do now?

Dr. Oates. I can, by and by, give an Anſwer to it, when it is proved by him what I did ſay. As to Mr. Corker, I ſay this, He had a Patent from the See of Rome, to be Biſhop of London, and Mr. Corker was privy and conſented to a Propoſal that was made by Langhorn to the Benedictine Monks, whereof he is one. And theſe Benedictine Monks did contribute 6000 l. to the Society of the Jeſuits, in order to the carrying on of this Deſign. And Mr. Corker, tho' he did deny before ſome Juſtices of the Peace, that he did go out of the Kingdom, yet he did go over to Lampſpring in Germany, and ſtaid there ſome ſhort Time, and he did write a Letter, but whether it was dated from Lampſpring in Germany, or no, I cannot tell, becauſe there was only the Date of the Month, but not of the Place from whence it came, but the latter end of Auguſt it was, and therein he wrote, that he did conſent to the Propoſal, for the raiſing of the ſaid 6000 l. for he is Preſident of the Benedictine Monks, and therefore it was neceſſary that he ſhould give the Suffrage, and he had been with Father Le Cheeſe and the Engliſh Monks in Paris, and had given an Account what Proſpect of Affairs he had in England, and how the Deſign went on.

L. C. J. Was this in a Letter?

Dr. Oates. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. To whom was that Letter directed?

Dr. Oates. It was directed either to Father Hitchcot, or to Father Howard, then in London.

L. C. J. You ſaw the Letter?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I ſaw the Letter.

L. C. J. Were you acquainted with his Hand-writing?

Dr. Oates. I will ſhew you how far I might be acquainted with his Hand. My Lord, this Gentleman, as I think, went away in July, as near as I can remember, I won't be poſitive in the Time he went over, but in the Month of June I ſaw this Gentleman with Mr. Fenwick, and he had given him an account either of ſome Friend or Kinſman of his, at St. Omers, that had not had his Penſion paid, and Mr. Corker did give a Note under his Hand, to Mr. Fenwick, where to take up ſo much Money, and the Money was to be received of Mr. Langhorn.

L. C. J. How much was that Money?

Dr. Oates. It was about 20 or 25 l. and he ſubſcribed his Name to it, James Corker; for that is his Name, tho' he is Indicted, I know not how, by the Name of Anthony: And I have a Summons to give Evidence againſt Anthony Corker.

L. C. J. He is Indicted by the Name of James.

Dr. Oates. And then I ſaw his Name to an Examination that was taken by Sir Charles Harbord, and ſome other Juſtices that were of the Houſe of Commons that took the Examination of this Corker, and it was the very ſame Hand he uſually writ, only it was not ſo fair, nor ſo well, in his Examination. This is that I ſay againſt Mr. Corker.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Shew him that Hand there: Pray, Sir, look upon it.

[Then a Paper was ſhewn to him.]

Dr. Oates. This is the ſame Hand.

Corker. Is that a Copy of my Examination before the Juſtices?

L. C. J. It is the Original.

Corker. I am glad it is there.

L. C. J. Shew it the Priſoner.

Dr. Oates. Mr. Corker did uſe to beſtow the Queen's Charity ——

L. C. J. Is that your Hand?

Corker. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Shew him the other.

Corker. Theſe are both my Hand, as far as I can ſee.

Dr. Oates. That Note he gave to Fenwick, for the receiving this Money, was the ſame Hand with this, and ſo was the Letter that came, as we ſuppoſe, from Lampſpring in Germany; but I cannot ſay it did ſo, wherein he did give Conſent to the raiſing and giving this 6000 l. for the carrying on of the Deſign.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What was that you had more recollected?

Dr. Oates. He did diſpoſe of the Queen's Charity (as it was ſo called) but Mr. Corker did ſay, it was to carry on the Deſign; and this he did ſay in the Month of June, when he was with Mr. Fenwick. Now, what he meant by that Deſign, I leave to the Jury to judge, only ſome Parcels he had diſtributed, Two or Three Shillings to ſome, and Forty Shillings to another, to ſome more, to others leſs: But a great Part of it he did uſe for the carrying on of this Deſign, and he ſaid the Queen had given him Orders ſo to do.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What do you know of his being privy to the Conſult of the 24th of April?

Dr. Oates. He did know of it, and I will tell your Lordſhip how I know he knew of it. He did except againſt Pickering being choſen.

L. C. J. To do what?

Dr. Oates. To do that wicked Thing to kill the King, for ſaid he, Pickering is commonly attendant upon the Altar, and he thought it not ſo convenient, that he ſhould be employed about that Buſineſs becauſe he might miſs an Opportunity, by being at High Maſs, whereas another, a Lay-man, might do it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Were you preſent when the Exception was made?

Dr. Oates. Yes, it was when the Order was given about the Money, to Fenwick.

L. C. J. At whoſe Houſe was it?

Dr. Oates. At the Benedictine Convent in the Savoy.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Was it expreſſed at that Time what Pickering was to do?

Dr. Oates. His being privy to the Conſult in April, I had it only from his own Mouth, for he wondered wondered that the Jeſuits ſhould employ Pickering in that Buſineſs, when they might have a Lay-man who was more fit; he being a Religious-man, and attending upon the Altar, it was not ſo convenient.

L. C. J. Where was that 6000 l. to be raiſed?

Dr. Oates. Out of the Benedictines Eſtates.

L. C. J. Was he their Preſident?

Dr. Oates. Yes, he was.

Mr. Juſt. Ellys. Dr. Oates, was he againſt the Thing, the doing of it at all, or againſt Pickering's doing of it only?

Dr. Oates. He was only againſt Pickering's doing of it. He would have had a Lay-man employed in it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. That is plain, for he did give Conſent that the 6000 l. ſhould be raiſed for the carrying on the whole Deſign.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Do you know any thing beſides that Letter you have mentioned, which he writ to give his Conſent?

Dr. Oates. Nothing, but that becauſe he had given his Conſent, the Money was paid.

L. C. J. Do you know it was afterwards paid?

Dr. Oates. I believe that the Money was paid, for our Fathers ſaid that they had received it.

Mr. Recorder. What ſay you to the reſt of the Priſoners?

Dr. Oates. Mr. Marſhal I do charge with the ſame, that is, that he was actually preſent at the Benedictine Convent, when the 6000 l. was agreed to be contributed, but it was not to be paid till they had an Anſwer from Mr. Corker.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That Letter you ſpeak of, was an Anſwer to it, I ſuppoſe?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, it was ſo.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What do you know of the Conſult, was he privy to that?

Dr. Oates. I will not be poſitive as to Mr. Marſhal's being privy to the Conſult, I know that he was privy to Pickering's undertaking to kill the King.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. How do you know that?

Dr. Oates. Becauſe he was of Corker's Opinion, that they had better take a Lay-man.

Mr. Recorder. What ſay you to Rumley?

Dr. Oates. He is a Benedictine Monk, or at leaſtwiſe a Lay-Brother. And he was privy to this Conſult, in which the 6000 l. was agreed to be paid and given, and I do judge he did conſent to it, for he did pray God that it might have good Succeſs, and that the Catholick Cauſe might once again flouriſh in England.

L. C. J. North. He was there then, was he not?

Dr. Oates. Yes, He was there, but only as a Servant, a Lay-Brother of that Order.

L. C. J. North. Why, is he profeſſed?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I think he is.

L. C. J. North. What Time was this, Mr. Oates?

Dr. Oates. In Auguſt.

L. C. J. North. Was it the former part of Auguſt?

Dr. Oates. I cannot be poſitive, but I think it was.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Can you ſay any thing more, againſt the reſt of the Priſoners?

Dr. Oates. I do not recollect any thing more, at preſent.

Mr. Ward. Now, Gentlemen, if you pleaſe to ask him any Queſtions, you may.

Rumley. Were you there preſent?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I was.

Rumley. Was it in the Month of Auguſt?

Dr. Oates. Yes, it was.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Will any of you ask him any more Queſtions?

Corker. He ſays I went in June to Lampſpring, now I would ask Mr. Oates where Lampſpring is?

Dr. Oates. We ſuppoſe it to be in Germany.

Corker. 'Tis almoſt at the furtheſt end of Weſtphalia, and he ſays, that being there, I had Diſcourſe with Le Cheeſe, and the Engliſh Monks at Paris, about this Deſign, I would fain make Senſe of this, if I could.

Dr. Oates. To ſatisfy Mr. Corker, I cannot ſay that he went to Lampſpring, but only as he ſaid himſelf; and they uſed to ſay they go to one Place, when they go to another: As Ireland ſaid he went to St. Omers, when he went into Staffordſhire.

Corker. Where, and when, did I give my Conſent to the Deſign about murdering of the King, for you named the 24th of April?

Dr. Oates. This is that I ſay to the Court, that the Privity that Mr. Corker had of the Conſult of the 24th of April, was that I had out of his own Mouth, in which he did declare, that he did think the Jeſuits had not done well to make Choice of one of their Order to do that Buſineſs, ſince he was to attend upon the Altar, but it would have been well if they had made Choice of ſome other Lay-man to match Grove.

Corker. You tell me, I had a Patent to be Biſhop of London.

Dr. Oates. I ſaw it in your own Hand.

Corker. Who gave me that Patent?

Dr. Oates. I did not enquire into that.

Corker. Did you hear me ſay, I accepted of it, and ſhould be Biſhop of London?

Dr. Oates. I heard you ſay this, you hoped it would not be long e're you ſhould exerciſe your Epiſcopal Function.

[At which the People laughed.]

Dr. Oates. I now recollect ſomething more. I remember Mr. Marſhal was preſent when Father Hitchcot and Father Howard, and Conyers the Benedictine Monk, were there preſent, about the laying of a Wager, whether, or no, the King ſhould eat any more Chriſtmas-Pies, and this Benedictine Monk, Conyers, did lay he ſhould not, and another Gentleman lay'd that he would, and this Gentleman, Marſhal, did go halves with Conyers, that he would not.

Marſhal. I deſire you would tell my Lords the Judges how long you have known me, and where you have ſeen me?

Dr. Oates. I have ſeen this Gentleman ſeveral times, but had never any Familiarity with him, but I have ſeen him officiate at the Altar.

Marſhal. How long have you known me?

Dr. Oates. Firſt and laſt, two Years, but the firſt time that I knew you, to hear you ſpeak, was when Father Hitchcot and the reſt were there.

Marſhal. He ſays he hath known me theſe two Years, and yet never ſpake to me.

Dr. Oates. I knew him by ſight.

Marſhal. He looked upon me as a Prieſt, it ſeems, he knew me to be engaged in this Buſineſs, as he ſays, I wonder he ſhould never converſe with me.

Dr. Oates. There are a great many that I know by ſight, whom I never did converſe with.

L. C. J. What do you infer from that? It may be, you know ſome of the Bench by ſight, that you never ſpake to before, nor they to you.

Marſhal. What Day of the Month was this Conſult?

Dr. Oates. It was in Auguſt.

Marſhal. But what Day of Auguſt?

Dr. Oates. 'Tis a great Privilege that I tell you the Month. It was between the firſt and the middle of Auguſt.

L. C. J. He tells you it was the former part, but it lies in his Breaſt, whether he will or no, to tell you the exact Day.

Marſhal. My Lord, 'tis impoſſible to make a Defence, if Circumſtances of Time and Place be not mentioned.

L. C. J. 'Tis fit he ſhould anſwer, if he can tell the Time, but if he cannot, we can't help it.

Marſhal. But if he does not name the very Day he may name the Place.

L. C. J. He does name the Place, it was at the Benedictine Convent.

Marſhal. Why can't he as well remember the Day?

Dr. Oates. If they will tell me when the Feaſt of the Aſſumption is, which is a Feaſt of their making, then I will give them a pretty near Account when it was.

Marſhal. The Feaſt of the Aſſumption is the 15th of Auguſt.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, it was either the Day before, or the Day after.

Marſhal. Now he hath avouched this poſitively.

Dr. Oates. Nay, I will not be poſitive.

Marſhal. But you were ſo, that it was the Day before, or the Day after.

Dr. Oates I appeal to the Judges of the Court.

L. C. J. If he will ſay it, let him, but People are not to be ſnap'd up thus. Mr. Oates, you are upon your Oath, and pray anſwer the Queſtion that is asked by the Priſoner as poſitively as you can. If you can, ſay ſo, if you cannot, ſay ſo.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I do believe verily it was either the Day before, or the Day after.

L. C. J. Are you ſure it was?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I do verily believe it.

Marſhal. But what Accuſation is it of a Thief or a Murderer upon the High-way, unleſs you tell the Time exactly?

L. C. J. You ſee he will not anſwer poſitively.

Marſhal. Mr. Oates, was I at any other Conſult beſides this one?

Dr. Oates. Yes, you were, upon the 21ſt day of Auguſt, if it fell upon a Wedneſday.

Marſhal. What matter is it what Day it fell on?

Dr. Oates. If it were a Wedneſday, then the 21ſt of Auguſt you were at a Conſult, when we had Letters from Archbiſhop Talbot, wherein we had an Account of the State of Ireland, how the Iriſh Affairs did ſtand, but it did not pay an Iriſh Letter's Price, and therefore I ſuppoſe it came from this ſide of the Water, tho' it was directed as if it came from Dublin. And this was read there, and there was in it a Prayer, that a Commiſſion might be ſent down, and there were ſome Jeſuits and ſome Benedictines, amongſt whom Marſhal was one, and he did give his Conſent that the Commiſſion ſhould be ſent down.

L. C. J. What Commiſſions were they?

Dr. Oates. For Officers in the Army that was to be raiſed there.

Marſhal. Where was that Letter read?

Dr. Oates. At the Benedictine Convent.

Marſhal. And this, you ſay, was the 21ſt of Auguſt?

L. C. J. And that was on a Wedneſday, as the Almanack ſays.

Dr. Oates. There he agreed to ſend the Commiſſions into Ireland for the appointing of Officers, and did conſent to the poiſoning of the Duke of Ormond.

Rumley. When was Pickering taken?

Dr. Oates. He was taken the Night before, or Michaelmas-day in the Morning.

Rumley. Were not you there, Mr. Oates?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. Were you at all the Conſults?

Dr. Oates. No, I was ſick, when Sir George Wakeman was offered the 15000 l. and receiv'd the Five.

L. C. J. What Conſults were you at?

Dr. Oates. I will anſwer to thoſe Conſults that theſe Perſons are affected in; there was one Conſult about the beginning or middle of Auguſt, there was another the 21ſt of Auguſt, and then there was another Conſult wherein the 5000 l. was paid, or ordered to be paid, to Wakeman, and I was not there.

Rumley. Who was the Meſſenger that took Pickering?

Dr. Oates. I do not know him.

L. C. J. Was the Conſult of Sir George Wakeman after the 21ſt of Auguſt?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord.

Mr. Ward. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I deſire I may have leave to retire, becauſe I am not well.

L. C. J. You muſt ſtay, Dr. Oates, till after their Defence be over.

Mr. Recorder. If you deſire to have any Refreſhment, you ſhall have it got for you.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then we call Mr. Bedlow next. (Who ſtood up.) Pray, Sir, ſpeak your Knowledge concerning the Priſoners at the Bar.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, before I ſpeak any thing to the Priſoners, I deſire there may be a Difference between the Clerks of the Council and me decided, they have miſtaken a Word in my Evidence, and put in New-market, for Windſor.

L. C. J. What does that ſignify to the preſent Buſineſs?

Mr. Bedlow. I deſire it may not be brought againſt me in my Evidence.

L. C. J. Then 'tis only for a Caution beforehand.

Mr. Bedlow. The latter part of the laſt Summer, it was, I think, about the beginning of Auguſt, Sir George Wakeman was at Harcourt's Chamber, I my ſelf was there firſt, and when he came in, he fetch'd a Turn or two about the Room, ſeeming angry and diſcontented, and asked Harcourt if he had any thing for him? Then Harcourt asked him, How he did proceed? Said he, I don't know whether I ſhall or no; for what Reaſon am I drill'd on in ſuch a Concern as this? Says Mr. Harcourt, Stay, Sir George, you need not be ſo haſty to blame us, for we are better provided for you than you think for. With that Harcourt went to his Cabinet, and took out five or six Papers, and brought a small Bill, and asked Sir George Wakeman; said he, Sir George, how are you provided? Said Sir George, I have been ready long since, but you have not been so punctual with me: But what have you there? Said Harcourt, I have a Bill of 2000*l.* From whom? said Sir George Wakeman. Then he named a Gentleman, but I don't know him, nor can't remember him. And said he, I came now from Whitehal, and receiv'd it from such an one, which he said was by the Queen's Order, and that he had it from Her. This Bill is charged upon such a Goldsmith, and named him, he dwelt some where about St. Dunstan's Church, but I can't remember his Name, I'll tell you by and by why I think he dwelt there. As soon as Sir George had read it, 'tis well, said he, if it be accepted, I find more Encouragement from my good Lady and Mistress, than from any of you all. They had some little more Discourse, and Sir George asked of Harcourt, who I was? Said he, 'tis a Friend that hath been long engaged in our Business, and is to do the next great Work to yours. Well, said Sir George, I will go and see if the Bill be accepted, and you shall hear of me to Night; and accordingly he did go. I did not stay but a very little time after him, and therefore I collect he could not go far to get the Bill accepted; for I did cross Lincolns-Inn-Fields, and came down a Lane by Temple-Bar, and between the Queen's-Head and Chancery-Lane end, I met with Sir George Wakeman: Said I, Have you been with your Bill already, and is it accepted? Yes, said he, 'tis accepted. And when is it to be paid? I am to go, said he, in the Afternoon, to receive it.

L. C. J. Who said so?

Mr. Bedlow. Sir George Wakeman.

L. C. J. To whom?

Mr. Bedlow. To me. And seeing of him return from the City-ward again, I concluded it was not far off, and spoke to him as I tell you. Sir George and I were not very well acquainted, but I had known him five Years, and upon that Character Mr. Harcourt had given of me, I thought I might make bold with him, and when I asked him and accosted him with that short Question, Is your Bill accepted? he made me Answer, it was, and he was to receive it in the Afternoon, and thought it not fit to dispute any thing with me.

L. C. J. You don't know what Goldsmith it was upon?

Mr. Bedlow. It must be one that lives about St. Dunstan's-Church, or Fleet-street, for he could not go far in that time.

L. C. J. Where was Harcourt's Chamber?

Mr. Bedlow. In Duke-street, next the Arch. Now I asked Harcourt afterwards, whether this was part of the 15000*l.*? Said he, We have not adjusted that Matter yet, but he receiv'd this only as a present Supply. And he did in a short Time after receive as much as made it up 5000*l.* But I asked, whether it were for the old Business? Yes, said he, 'tis for the same Design, if we should fail of it by other Means. (And so was the Discourse to Sir George Wakeman.) If we should fail of it at Windsor, then this Way is to be taken; and if this fail too, we will make sure of it at New-Market.

L. C. J. What do you know of the other Prisoners?

Mr. Bedlow. Mr. Corker I have seen with Kaines and Le Fevre, but never in their Company but once, where being in the great Court at Somerset-house, we walked out of the Court into the Piazza, and there we were speaking of our Business. Kaines was saying to me, You brought such a Letter, such a Time, for me, and I have lost it: I do not know what to do for it. Said I, Do you remember the Contents of it? Yes, said he, I do. Said I, You should take such Letters in such a Character as none could read but your self, and then burn the Letters themselves. Said he, I hope it will not come to Light, for none will meddle with my Papers, that can do me any Hurt. I heard nothing from Mr. Corker, that did relate positively to the Murder of the King, but Corker and Le Fevre were speaking in general, about the Business, what Letters they had receiv'd from beyond Sea how to manage their Affairs.

L. C. J. About what Matter?

Mr. Bedlow. About the Plot, what Letters they had receiv'd from beyond Sea, and how forward they were in their Proceedings here.

Corker. What did we talk about?

L. C. J. What was it about still?

Mr. Bedlow. It was about raising the Army, and what Interest he had with the People. It was in general, I come not to Particulars.

Corker. Did Kaines, or I, or any of us, name any such thing as Plot, Design, or the like?

Mr. Bedlow. We were discoursing of the Business in general, I don't take upon me to speak to Particulars.

L. C. J. What was it about, say you?

Mr. Bedlow. About raising an Army, what Interest he had in the People, who had been sent into the Country, what they had done, and the like.

Corker. Did you hear any Word of Killing, Army, or Design?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, every one of those Words were used. I don't take upon me to tell how the Words were placed.

Mr. Ward. What say you to the rest?

L. C. J. When was this Discourse?

Mr. Bedlow. July was Twelvemonth.

Mr. Ward. What say you to Mr. Marshal.

Mr. Bedlow. Mr. Marshal hath reason to know me, and I suppose will not pretend to the contrary, for he cannot but remember that I knew him when I went to the Gatehouse. He hath carried several Letters that have been brought from beyond Sea, and others that have been writ in England into the Country, and I have been with him in Latham's Chamber in the Savoy, and Somerset-house, so long since as Latham was one of the Queen's Monks. He hath carried the same Letters that I have brought from beyond the Sea, three or four, or more at a time, to communicate to the Country Gentlemen of the Catholick Party, that were Assistants to us, particularly to Sir Francis Radcliff and others, I am sure he hath carried, and he knew what was the effect of those Letters, and what were the Answers to them; he read them as well as any of them, for I think he is of the same Order, to the best of my knowledge, tho' I never saw him in his Habit.

L. C. J. What was the import of the Letters?

Mr. Bedlow. I never brought any one Letter to the Religious Fathers, and I have brought a great many, but what did import what I have now given in Evidence, and did relate to the full substance of what I say now.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Can you mention the particulars of any one Letter that he knew the Contents of?

Mr. Bedlow.

Mr. Bedlow. I do mention one which I very well remember, and that was to Sir Francis Radcliff, and I remember it tho' it be long ſince, becauſe I was well acquainted with Sir Francis Radcliff's Son, and I brought Commendations from his Son to England.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Well, Sir, What was the Contents of that Letter?

Mr. Bedlow. It was a Copy of the Letter from Le Cheeſe in Paris to the Monks and Jeſuits in England, in Anſwer to the firſt Letters that I brought over to them relating to the management of the Deſign.

L. C. J. Was it mentioned in that Letter what the Deſign was?

Mr. Bedlow. In that which I carried over to Le Cheeſe, it was, that all things were in readineſs and the time now drawing near, for they did hope in a Year or two, or in a little time they ſhould be in a Capacity to put this in Practiſe, and they did not queſtion but to ſubvert the Oppreſſion and Tyranny the Catholicks were under in England.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Was Mr. Marſhal acquainted with the Contents?

Mr. Bedlow. He was one of them that uſed to examine the Anſwers. It was written to him partly, for if he were not a Member of their Order, as I think he is, he was one of the Club and Conſult that ſaw the Contents of all Letters. I have not ſeen him ſo often as I have done the others, but I believe he hath been there as often, but he hath received to my remembrance twice Letters to communicate into the Country concerning the Subverſion of the Government, and the Introducing of Popery.

Mr. Ward. What ſay you to Mr. Rumley?

Mr. Bedlow. I cannot be poſitive as to my own knowledge, but what Mr. Harcourt has ſaid.

L. C. J. Do you know any thing of your own knowledge by him?

Mr. Bedlow. I have been told he hath communicated Letters of this buſineſs into the Country. And that he was one employed when any Secret Letters were ſent.

L. C. J. So you cannot declare upon your Oath, that you know that Mr. Rumley knew the Contents of any Letters relating to the Plot?

Mr. Bedlow. No, my Lord, I do not. I have a good remembrance of Faces, but I do not remember his.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. What Day was it that I had the Diſcourſe with Harcourt, and received the Bill from him as you ſay?

Mr. Bedlow. You ask me a Queſtion as if I were in the ſtate I was formerly in, when I might have an Indulgence for telling a Lye. No I have no Delight to Damn my Soul, to make you a Martyr; but to ſatisfie you as well as I can, I ſay, it was the beginning of Auguſt, or part of the beginning. I do not ſpeak to a Day.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. How do you know it was a Bill of Exchange for this Money?

Mr. Bedlow. You did read it aloud.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Had I any Acquaintance with you?

Mr. Bedlow. No, but Mr. Harcourt told you who I was.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. And would I upon the firſt ſight of a Man diſcover to him what would endanger my Life?

Mr. Bedlow. Ay, and a hundred times more, if Mr. Harcourt did but tell you I was his Confident.

L. C. J. What were the Contents of that Note?

Mr. Bedlow. It was directed to a Goldſmith, whoſe Name I tell you I cannot remember.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. You are good at remembring ſome Sir-Names, why can't you remember this Name as well?

Mr. Bedlow. I can remember Names that do relate to any buſineſs, but only hearing this Name by the by, I cannot remember it, for I did not then think it of ſuch Conſequence.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. You do not know me?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, I do.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. I call God to Witneſs I never ſaw you before in my Life that I know of. You have a very remarkable Face, and if a Man had once ſeen you he muſt know you again.

L. C. J. Who ſubſcribed that Note?

Mr. Bedlow. I don't know, it was one of the Queens Gentlemen that Harcourt had it from. And whereas Sir Geo. Wakeman ſays he does not know me, I did take Phyſick of him at the Bath?

Sir Geo. Wakeman. When was I at the Bath?

Mr. Bedlow. It was ſome Years ſince.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. I never was there but once, and that was a Year and a half ago.

Mr. Bedlow. No, Sir, it is more than that, for you were there when the Queen was there.

L. C. J. How long is it ago that you were there Sir George?

Sir Geo. Wakeman. It was about two Years ago.

Mr. Bedlow. It is three Years this Summer.

L. C. J. Then that is well enough; for that is ſome Years ſince.

Mr. Bedlow. I had acquaintance enough with him while he was there.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. I ſay this, my Lord, if I had been acquainted with Mr. Bedlow, I ſhould have known him to be a great Rogue, which is but what he hath ſaid of himſelf; and then I ſhould not have thought it fit to have truſted ſuch an one with ſuch a great Secret as this.

L. C. J. It may be he calls himſelf great Rogue for that which you would have applauded him for, and canonized him too. It may be he thinks he was a Rogue for going ſo far as he did; but perhaps you are of another Opinion.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I could not count my ſelf an Honeſt Man, that had conſented to the Death of the King and Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. But tho' he gives you an Account of ſuch a Bill delivered to me, yet neither he tells you the time, nor mentions the Man upon whom it was drawn: Here are all the marks of Falſhood that can poſſibly be.

L. C. J. No, he does not mention the Man upon whom it was drawn, nor from whom; nor can he ſay that ever you received it; but you were to receive it.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. How came he to omit that? but becauſe I ſhould have no Plea for my ſelf when I came to be accuſed of it.

Mr. Bedlow. Pray Sir George don't preſs me to ſay more than I know. I do tell you all that I can ſay of my ſelf.

Mr. Recorder. Have you any more Queſtions to ask him?

Marſhal. I ask you this Queſtion; Firſt, Why will you Damn your Soul to ſend me to Heaven? Lay your Hand upon your Heart, and in the Preſence ſence of God declare whether ever you ſaw me in your Life, before you came to the Gatehouſe? Whether ever you ſaw me in any Part of the World whatſoever? And whereas you ſay now that I owned that I knew you there; it was ſo far from it, that all the Company that were there, will ſay that you did not know me, and declared your ſelf a Sranger to me.

Mr. Bedlow. No, Sir, pardon me; you did not deny but that you had ſeen my Face.

Marſhal. No, all the Company that were there will ſay that you owned your ſelf a Stranger to me; you told me, Mr. Marſhal, be not afraid, I will do you no hurt. But Mr. Bedlow, Where have you ſeen me?

Mr. Bedlow. At the Benedictine Convent in the Savoy. And, my Lord, the firſt Word that I ſaid, when I ſaw him, was, that this Man's Name is Marſhal, and he carried ſuch and ſuch Letters into the Country, and Sir William Waller can teſtifie the ſame. [Who ſtanding upon the Bench, was ſworn.]

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Marſhal, you had beſt to hearken to what Sir William Waller ſays.

Sir William Waller. My Lord, I went to the Priſon to ſee Mr. Marſhal, and Mr. Bedlow was there with me, Mr. Bedlow asked him if he he did not know him, and called him by his Name; he declared he had ſeen him before, but ſaid he did not know him.

L. C. J. Did he call him by his Name as if he knew him?

Sir William Waller. Yes, my Lord, he did.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Marſhal, he ſays that you your ſelf owned that you had ſeen him before, tho' you were not of his Acquaintance.

Marſhal. What Sir William Waller ſays, I muſt oppoſe, tho' I am extreamly ſorry ſo to do. Sir William, you may pleaſe to remember that you came to me after Mr. Bedlow was gone.

Sir William Waller. No, I was there with you before he came in.

Marſhal. I believe thoſe of the Gatehouſe do remember that I ſpoke with Mr. Bedlow in private in an interior Room; what you ſpoke was in the open Hall there. You asked me whether Mr. Bedlow had not been there? I told you, Yes, that was in the publick place; whereas Mr. Bedlow talked with me only in a private Room.

Sir William Waller. My Lord, what I have ſaid is upon my Oath, and 'tis nothing but the Truth.

Marſhal. And I am upon my Life, therefore I am very ſorry I muſt for the Truth ſake, and Defence of my Life, contradict what you ſay. What your Worſhip and I ſpoke was in the publick Room; but what Diſcourſe Mr. Bedlow and I had, was in another private Room.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir William Waller, was you there when Mr. Bedlow was with him?

Sir William Waller. I was, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where?

Sir William Waller. In the common Room.

L. C. J. What did he ſay concerning Mr. Bedlow in the common Room?

Sir William Waller. Mr. Bedlow called him by his Name, and asked if he knew him? he ſaid he had ſeen his Face, but did not know him.

L. C. J. Do you hear that, Mr. Marſhal?

Marſhal. Truly, my Lord, it goes againſt my Heart to ſpeak any thing in oppoſition to what Sir William Waller ſays, for I would not for all the World reflect or ſay any thing that ſhould glance upon Sir William Waller, as if he had taken a falſe Oath; but all in the Gatehouſe, nay, Mr. Bedlow himſelf knows, that he had diſcourſe with me in a private Room before Sir William Waller came.

L. C. J. Mr. Bedlow, ſpeak your ſelf; was Sir William Waller there when you came to the Gatehouſe?

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I had an Order from the Council-Board to go and ſee the Priſoner, there was no Body that told me his Name, nor that I knew, knew it; but I would not do it, I was ſo cautious, but in the hearing and company of a Juſtice of the Peace, and therefore I went away before they had called him down, and I went to ſee if the Houſe of Commons were ſitting; and when I came back, Sir William Waller was juſt coming thither, and ſo I went in with him, for I met him at the bottom of the Stairs. We came into the common Room, and there was Mr. Marſhal with the Keeper, and I was in no other Room, but the common Room. And Sir William Waller withdrew to the end of the Room while I asked him ſome Queſtions; and pray, will you pleaſe to ask Sir William Waller whether I did not call him by his Name as ſoon as I ſaw him?

Sir William Waller. Yes, my Lord, he did: He asked him if his Name was not Marſhal: and whether he did not know him: And he ſaid he had ſeen his Face, but had no Acquaintance with him.

Marſhal. Were not you with me firſt in that Room which turns in on the right-hand from the common Room?

Mr. Bedlow. I do not know any ſuch Room in the Gatehouſe.

Marſhal. There were your Guards, Mr. Bedlow, and there were ſeveral others in the Gatehouſe; they cannot but remember what Room I was brought into: They cannot poſſibly but remember, that when Sir William Waller came to me, he asked me whether Mr. Bedlow had been with me.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, they have done, call what Witneſſes you will, and make your Defence as well as you can.

Marſhal. My Lord, I did not think or imagine any ſuch thing would be ſpoke of; or that there would need any Atteſtation for it.

L. C. J. Look you, they have done; we will hear what your Witneſſes will ſay as long as you will.

Marſhal. My Lord, Mr. Bedlow ſeem'd a perfect Stranger to me when he came to the Gatehouſe; and to encourage me, told me, Mr. Marſhal (ſays he) do not fear, I will do you no hurt at all: Did not you ſend (ſaid he) to ſuch an one, to have Mr. Bedlow queſtioned about ſuch and ſuch things? Which I denied, and he did not ſeem by any word that he ſpoke, to have ſeen me before in his life.

L. C. J. He told Sir William Waller your Name was Marſhal, tho' you went by a wrong Name, the Name of Marſh.

Marſhal. He might eaſily know my Name, by thoſe that took me.

L. C. J. But I tell you, you went by a wrong Name then, Marſh.

Marſhal. My Lord, I am called promiſcuouſly Marſh and Marſhal. But Marſhal is the Name I own.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. And that is the Name he knew you by.

Marſhal. I did not call my ſelf Marſh when I was taken, but told my true Name.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I did not hear of any Name at all, but I ſaid, This is Marſhal, one of the Benedictine Monks, as ſoon as I came in.

Marſhal. Mr. Bedlow ſeem'd to encourage me to hope, and bid me not fear; ſaid he, You will have an honourable Bench, and a good Jury. And this, they that were there can teſtify.

L. C. J. Call them: Call your Witneſſes.

Marſhal. But, my Lord, I did not know any thing of this. And Sir William Waller's Queſtion that he asked me was, if Mr. Bedlow was with me?

L. C. J. You hear what he ſays.

Marſhal. I am infinitely loth to ſay it, becauſe he ſwears it; and you well know, Mr. Bedlow, you talked with your Guards a while, and then turned at laſt to me.

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, I did talk with my Guards, but Sir William Waller was in the Room as well as I.

L. C. J. By what Name were you committed?

Marſhal. I had Letters about me, writ to me by that Name; and I thought it my Duty to anſwer to that Name that the Letters did call me by.

L. C. J. Well, have you any Witneſſes?

Marſhal. This is a Surprize, I did not know of any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Have you any Witneſſes, Sir George VVakeman?

Sir George VVakeman. Yes, my Lord, I have ſeveral.

Marſhal. But, Mr. Bedlow, can you ſay you have ſeen me any where before you ſaw me at the Gatehouſe.

Mr. Bedlow. Yes.

Marſhal. Where?

Mr. Bedlow. At the Savoy.

Marſhal. And any where elſe?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, and at other Places.

Marſhal. Name one other Place in the whole World, and I will be contented to die.

Mr. Bedlow. I will tell you why I cannot name any other Place poſitively. I did carry the Letters thither, there were the Conſults about them, and there I uſed to converſe with you moſt.

Marſhal. Can you prove that ever you were in the Savoy in your Life? and I will be hang'd without any more to do. If you can prove it either by Man, Woman, or Child, I will go to the Gallows, and will not ſay one Word more.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I have other Witneſſes, but at preſent I cannot produce them: there are ſome in Kent, they are ſome of them in one Country, and ſome in another, I reſerve them for another time, but there is Oath made of it before the ſecret Committees of the Lords and Commons.

L. C. J. How can he imagine that this ſhould be put upon him? therefore you may well believe that he hath never a Witneſs preſent. It may be he hath none can prove he ever was at Weſtminſter-Hall in his Life, for who could imagine ſuch a Queſtion ſhould be put to him?

Marſhal. Having been there ſeveral times, I ſuppoſe he did not uſe to go alone; 'tis impoſſible, but if they had been with him often there, he might prove it; if he ſay true, ſure ſome ſhould atteſt it.

L. C. J. 'Tis likely it ſhould be ſo, but he hath them not here.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Why, do you think he can bring Witneſſes for every Act that he did in his Life?

Marſhal. If he have them not here, let him have time to produce them.

L. C. J. He hath a Witneſs in Kent, would you have us keep up the Jury till he ſends for his Witneſs out of Kent?

Mr. Bedlow. There is my Landlord, at whoſe Houſe I lay ſo long, can teſtifie it.

Marſhal. Who is that?

Mr. Bedlow. Mr. Cott a Belt-maker in the New Exchange. He hath gone often with me when I have gone into the Convent, and he hath gone round about, and his Maid that uſed to carry the Portmantle, wherein I brought over the Letters from beyond Sea.

L. C. J. Can you name any one body that ever ſee you in the Savoy?

Mr. Bedlow. I do name one; and beſides, my Lord, I lay in the Savoy half a Year at one Woodroff's.

Marſhal. Was that the Place you ſaw me in?

Mr. Bedlow. No, no body came there but Monks and Meſſengers.

Marſhal. Was you there at the time when the Savoy was ſearched?

Mr. Bedlow. No, but I gave Sir William Waller directions to ſearch in the moſt material places of it.

Mr. Recorder. He ſays a material thing, if he be in the right, that he did give directions to Sir William Waller to ſearch in the moſt material Places of the Savoy. We will ask that Queſtion of Sir William whether he did or no?

Sir VVilliam VValler. Both Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow did give me Directions to ſearch in the Savoy; they told me of ſuch a particular Room where Pickering lay, and where ſuch a Cloſet was, and many other things; and it was by their Directions that I made the ſearch.

L. C. J. Look you what Sir William Waller ſays; he ſays that both Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow did deſcribe ſeveral Rooms to him in the Savoy, which it was impoſſible for them to make ſuch a deſcription, if they had not been there before.

Marſhal. I deſire to know when that deſcription was given?

Sir William Waller. Two or three Days before I took Mr. Marſhal.

Marſhal. Mr. Oates made ſearches there before.

L. C. J. But we ſpeak of Bedlow now.

Marſhal. But Mr. Bedlow might have knowledge from him and others that were there.

L. C. J. Do you think he muſt needs go officiouſly to inform Bedlow of what he found, upon an imagination that ſuch a Queſtion ſhould fall out hereon? And if he receiv'd no information, how then could he deſcribe the Rooms without he knew them?

Marſhal. May there not be ſeveral Houſes that I may give a deſcription of, upon the hearſay of others, tho' I were never in them my ſelf?

L. C. J. No, I know not very well how; and there is no reaſon you ſhould imagine he receiv'd information from Oates.

Marſhal. My Lord, there is reaſon enough, becauſe both do combine in the ſame Accuſation.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I gave Sir William Waller Directions to ſearch in ſuch a Place, under ſuch a Bench a Bench in Pickering's Apartment, where he found the Gun that was to kill the King.

L. C. J. Well, call your Witneſſes, Sir George.

Sir George Wakeman. Call Mr. Chapman.

L. C. J. But before they begin, Sir Robert Sawyer, we muſt do all the right to every one we can; I do not find, by the ſtricteſt Obſervation that I have made, that Mr. Bedlow, who is the ſecond Witneſs, does ſay any great thing, any material thing againſt any one of them; but as for Rumney he ſays nothing at all. He ſays, in effect, againſt Sir George Wakeman, no more than this, That he ſaw Harcourt give him a Note for 2000 l. which he ſaid was from the Queen; upon which Sir George ſaid he was more beholden to his good Lady and Miſtreſs, than to any of them all. The Note he does not know who drew it, nor upon whom it was drawn; nor does he ſay what it was for, more than what Harcourt told him, which was in doubtful words, That it was about the old buſineſs; but Harcourt did not tell him this in the preſence of Sir George Wakeman, but he ſpoke to Harcourt about it. It is no more, than Sir George Wakeman receiv'd from Harcourt the Bill of Exchange, he does not know upon whom, nor for what.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, he ſays more, with ſubmiſſion; for he ſays this further, That there was a diſcourſe about the buſineſs; and he did tell you, That Sir George Wakeman ſhould complain, that they had not done well with him, and asked why he was drill'd on; but when the Note was produced, he ſaid, My Matters are already prepared, but you are not ſo ready to perform your Promiſes. Then ſaid Harcourt, If you are ready for us, we are ready for you: and told him, If he did not do it, they would do it at New-market.

L. C. J. What is all this? Pray Mr. Bedlow ſtand up again: We are now in the Caſe of Mens Lives, and pray have a care that you ſay no more than what is true upon any Man whatever. I would be loth to keep out Popery by that way they would bring it in, that is by Blood or Violence: I would have all things go very fair; Pray what, upon your Oath, was the firſt part of Sir George Wakeman's Diſcourſe with Harcourt when they met?

L. C. J. North. Relate again your whole knowledge concerning Sir George Wakeman, and the Bill of Exchange, and the Diſcourſe after it, becauſe we are now upon the conſideration of it, what effect it will have upon him.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I was with Harcourt in the Chamber, and Sir George Wakeman came in, and walked a turn or two about the Room, and ſeem'd to be diſcontented. How do you, Sir George? ſaid Harcourt. Says Sir George, For what am I drill'd on thus in a concern of this Importance? What is the matter with you, Sir George? ſaid Harcourt. Why, is this a buſineſs to be ſlighted, ſaid Sir George, as I am? for I have no performance of your Promiſes. Why, ſaid Harcourt, what would you have? we are ready for you. Then, ſaid he, I am ready for you. And then Harcourt ſpoke merrily to him, Why are you ſo angry, Sir George? And upon that he goes to his Cabinet, and ſearching among his Bags he found a little Note among them, and gave it to Sir George; ſaith he, There is a Bill for you: I have been to day at Whitehall, and receiv'd it by the Queen's Order, from ſuch a Gentleman: [whoſe Name I cannot now remember]; and 'tis upon ſuch a Man for 2000 l. [but I cannot remember the Goldſmith's Name neither.] Well, ſaid Sir George, 'tis well ſomebody gives me encouragement; I have more encouragement from my good Lady and Miſtreſs, than from any of you. Nay, ſaid Harcourt, for Encouragement, that you ſhall not want; for the reſt ſhall be paid in due time.

Sir George Wakeman. If the Queen had given me 2000 l. for the Service I had done her, was that any harm? I have deſerved it, I am ſure, for nine Years Service.

Sir Robert Sawyer. What other Diſcourſe had they then?

Mr. Bedlow. Said Harcourt, But, Sir George, this muſt be well followed, and cloſely obſerved, becauſe ſo much depends upon it; For if we ſhould miſs to kill him at Windſor, or you miſs in your way, we will do it at New-Market.

L. C. J. Who ſaid ſo?

Mr. Bedlow. Harcourt.

L. C. J. Did Harcourt ſay, before Sir George's Face, If we miſs killing him at Windſor, and you miſs your way, we will do it at New-market?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, he did ſay, If we miſs killing him at Windſor, and you miſs in your way (which we hope you will not) we will do it at New-market.

L. C. J. He ſays now quite another thing than he ſaid before.

L. C. J. North. }
Mr. Recorder. } No, he ſaid the ſame before.
Sir Rob. Sawyer. }

L. C. J. What Anſwer made Sir George Wakeman?

Mr. Bedlow. Sir George Wakeman ſaid, If I find you ready, I will be ready in all things.

L. C. J. Was the Word ſpoke of Poyſoning?

Mr. Bedlow. I have ſpoken that already. If we miſs at Windſor, and you miſs in your Way; I do not remember whether the Word Poyſon was uſed; but I knew by what Mr. Harcourt and others had told me, that Poyſon was meant by it.

L. C. J. Was all this one intire Diſcourſe?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord.

Then Sir George ſaid privately to his fellow Priſoners,

There is my buſineſs done.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Here is a poſitive Proof of the Receipt of Money, which coupled with what Oates ſays, and the Diſcourſe that Mr. Bedlow tells you of, makes it out what it was for. This was paid in Part, was it not, Sir?

Mr. Bedlow. The Anſwer that Mr. Harcourt gave to Sir George, was, That he ſhould have the reſt in due time.

L. C. J. But what ſay you to Marſhal, but that he carried Letters?

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Was there no body preſent but you?

Mr. Bedlow. There was only Harcourt, You, and I.

L. C. J. But what ſay you to Corker?

Mr. Bedlow. Corker hath been in the Company with Le Faire, talking of News, what Encouragement they had by Letters from beyond Sea, as thoſe they had from France; ſuch and ſuch Letters ſpeak that they are in readineſs of Money, Men and Arms; and if we are ready here, they are ready for us. This was uſually the Diſcourſe, and all upon the ſame Deſign. Now when we talked of this buſineſs, we did not ſay the Word Plot, but we all know what was intended by it, that is the Plot.

L. C. J. And what ſaid Corker?

Mr. Bedlow. He ſaid it was well. He did know what readineſs ſuch and ſuch Perſons were in when the Deſign was likely to take Effect. I know not their Names; we were talking of ſeveral Perſons ſeveral Times, ſome in England, and ſome beyond Sea.

L. C. J. What can you ſay to Marſhal?

Mr. Bedlow. I do ſay, that he hath been to conſult of the return of Letters which were the Anſwers to thoſe I brought from beyond Sea.

L. C. J. Did he know the Contents of thoſe Letters?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, he hath been in Conſultation what Anſwer to make again.

L. C. J. And was all this about the Plot?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, for the ſubverting the Proteſtant Religion, and bringing in Popery, and raiſing of an Army.

Marſhal. Can you prove I knew any of thoſe Gentlemen the Letters were carried to?

Mr. Bedlow. I name one, that was to Sir Francis Radcliff.

Marſhal. How does he know that I know Sir Francis Radcliff?

L. C. J. Well, Sir George, will you call your Witneſſes?

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Call Mr. Chapman [Which was done.] My Lord, there was a Letter or Note of directions from me to Mr. Aſhby, and 'tis affirmed by Mr. Oates, that in that Letter I ſhould let Mr. Aſhby know I did approve well of the Propoſals that were made to me to poyſon the King, and that the Queen would aſſiſt me in it; and that in the ſame Letter there were directions given what he ſhould take, and how many Strokes of the Pump he ſhould make uſe of, and ſeveral other things fit for a Phyſician to direct his Patient in. Now, my Lord, I will prove by this Gentleman Mr. Chapman, who is Mayor of Bath, that he received this very Note from Mr. Aſhby, that he read it from the beginning to the end of it; that there was no Word in it, or mention of the King or Queen in the whole Letter, unleſs it be of the King or Queen's Bath. And, my Lord, I think he hath a piece of this Letter ſtill, that Part that was the Phyſical Part he tore off, and kept himſelf: Now 'tis none of my Hand, I never writ a Letter to Aſhby upon any occaſion whatſoever; and I will tell your Lordſhip how it came to paſs, I did not write that Letter, I hope by a providence, for I never but uſed to write my Phyſical Directions with my own Hand. It happened that I came home late, and I was very ill; Aſhby ſent to me for his Note, becauſe he was to go out of Town the next Morning, being weary and indiſpoſed, I laid me down on the Couch, and ſent for my Man, who is an Apothecary now, and is better able to write ſuch a Letter; I dictated the Letter to him, all my Family, and all that were by, can teſtifie the ſame; he knows very well my Hand, and hath Part of it to produce; for when the Queen was there, I made uſe of him for my Apothecary, and thoſe Phyſical Directions I ſent down for the Bath, I ſent always to him. He is a very good Witneſs as to my Hand.

L. C. J. But you may ſpeak of one Letter, and Mr. Oates of another.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Why, did I write two Letters of Directions? what need that? He ſays he ſaw a Letter with my Name ſubſcribed to it.

L. C. J. Yes, it was ſo, and that you ſhould be aſſiſted by the Queen to poyſon the King; and being asked how he did know that was your Hand? he ſaid, I did not ſee him write, but I ſaw him in the Poſture of writing; and when he went away, there was left on the Table, and the Ink was not dry, a Phyſical Bill, which was the ſame Hand with that the Letter was.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. Ay, my Lord, but he does not call that a Letter, but it was a Phyſical Bill, and not a Letter; ſo that there was but one Letter.

L. C. J. But there was a Note of Phyſical directions in the Letter.

Dr. Oates. That Letter was at leaſt half a Sheet of a ſide, cloſe written, wherein were thoſe paſſages that I mentioned; but I cannot give an account of all contained in it; but this, my Lord, I remember, that he ſhould take a Pint of Milk in the Morning, and a Pint of Milk in the Evening, and ſhould have ſo many Strokes at the Bath; but this was ſeveral Days before Aſhby went to the Bath, I believe at leaſt ten. Preſently after, he came to Town. And I ſay, that this Letter that the Court asks me how I prove it to be his Hand, I prove it thus: I ſaw him write a Bill to an Apothecary for Mr. Aſhby to take ſomething when he was in Town.

L. C. J. But was that buſineſs of being aſſiſted to kill the King in the ſame Letter that the Phyſical Directions were in?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord.

Sir George Wakeman. Then 'tis the ſame Letter.

L. C. J. How does that follow? might there not be two?

Sir George Wakeman. There is only that part of it which is the Phyſical Preſcriptions, he hath torn off the other part.

Then Mr. Chapman was Examined.

Mr. Chapman. My Lord, the 17th of July laſt Mr. Thimbleby came to the Bath.

L. C. J. Who?

Mr. Chapman. Mr. Thimbleby; a Man of about Fourſcore Years of Age, a very feeble and infirm Man. Aſſoon as he came to me, he told me that Sir George Wakeman recommended me to him, and deſired me that I would provide a Lodging for him as near the King and Queen's Bath as I could: I did ſo; and then he ſhewed me a Letter from Sir George, whereof this was the lower part of half a Sheet of Paper; there was full Directions how to take the Phyſick, and after the taking the Bolus to drink the Waters ſo many Days, and then to uſe the Bath, and after that the Pump, and after that he was to take a Doſe of Pills after his Bathing. I took off this Latin Bill that concerns me, my Lord, and gave him the Engliſh Part.

L. C. J. Did you read the Engliſh part?

Mr. Chapman. My Lord, my Son read it, as well as I, who ſhould have come up, and teſtified the ſame, but that it is impoſſible for both my Son and me to leave the Shop and come together, becauſe of my Employment.

L. C. J. But in that Letter there was nothing mentioned of killing the King, was there? nor of the Queen?

Mr. Chapman. No, my Lord, not upon the Word of a Chriſtian, except it were the King and Queen's Bath.

Then the Paper was ſhewn him.

L. C. J. Whoſe Hand is that? do you believe it is Sir George's Hand?

Mr. Chapman. No, my Lord: I have brought ſome of Sir George Wakeman's Bills here

L. C. J. Do you know whoſe Hand it is?

Mr. Chapman. No, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. What Name was ſubſcribed to that Letter?

Mr. Chapman. There is none ſubſcribed to this Paper.

L. C. J. Was there no Name to it?

Mr. Chapman. I did not take notice of that.

L. C. J. But look you, this cannot be that Letter, becauſe that Letter Mr. Oates ſpeaks of was of Sir George's own Hand, as he thinks by Compariſon, and his Name ſubſcribed to it.

Sir George Wakeman. I never writ any other Letter, but what was dictated to my Man, and ſent by Aſhby to the Bath. My Lord, he hath owned it himſelf before the Houſe of Lords, that I writ but one Letter, and I had my Liberty before. Now it was told him there, that if he had mentioned that Letter when I was Examined before the Council, I had been certainly taken into Cuſtody then, and ſhould never have had my Liberty ſo long. I had my Liberty from the laſt of September, and could have gone to Conſtantinople in the Time I had my Liberty, and certainly I ſhould have provided for my ſelf, if I had known my ſelf guilty, ſeeing ſo many caſt into Priſon upon that Account.

Mr. Recorder. 'Tis not probable that Mr. Aſhby would communicate ſuch a Letter to this Gentleman, that had ſuch a Deſign in it.

Sir George Wakeman. But if any one can, let him prove that I had any other Buſineſs with him, than meerly the Buſineſs of a Phyſician with his Patient. My Lord, I have a Phyſician in Town, that will teſtify, that I was to meet him in Conſultations about Aſhby.

L. C. J. The Anſwer is no more than this, That you did write a Letter, or there was a Letter writ by your Directions, to Aſhby, which hath not any ſuch Matter in it as Oates ſpeaks of; but this anſwers not Mr. Oates's Teſtimony; 'tis true, the Queſtion will be upon Mr. Oates's Credit, how far the Jury will believe him: If Mr. Oates ſwear true, then you did write another Letter, and this is not the Letter, and there is no Contradiction in your Anſwer, to what he ſays, but Mr. Oates ſtands with the Jury how far they will believe him.

Sir George Wakeman. Gentlemen of the Jury, take notice, I never writ any Letter but that.

L. C. J. How does that appear? if Mr. Oates ſwears true, you did write another Letter.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Mr. Chapman, was there any mention of Milk in that Letter?

Mr. Chapman. No, my Lord. It is ridiculous to to drink Milk with the Waters, it will make it curdle.

Dr. Oates. That is not the Hand the Letter I ſaw was in.

L. C. J. He ſays 'tis not the ſame Hand.

Dr. Oates. It was another, a genteel Hand.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And there was no mention made of Milk, in it, the Contents are not the ſame.

Sir George Wakeman. The Contents were the ſame: But as for the Milk, it is ſo ridiculous a Thing, that never a Phyſician in England, but will ſay 'tis perfect Poiſon. I appeal to Mr. Chapman, who hath ſo long known the Way there uſed, if any one preſcribed Milk, to any one that took the Waters.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, was there, in the Letter you ſaw, where mention is made of the Strokes that were to be received from the Pump, any mention of the Milk to be taken?

Dr. Oates. The Direction of the Milk was for the Time he ſtaid in Town.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. The Milk was to be uſed while he ſtayed here, was it?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, there were two Things that he ſhould do, the one of them was to be done while he was here, that was the Milk; the other was to be done when at the Bath, and that was the Strokes.

Sir George Wakeman. No, 'tis no ſuch Thing; for he went away two Days after that Letter was written.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr. Chapman, is this part of the Body of the Letter?

Mr. Chapman. Yes, my Lord, upon the Word of a Chriſtian; I tore it off my ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Ellys. If Dr. Oates ſwears true, it cannot be the ſame Letter.

L. C. J. Your Anſwer to it, which ſhould make it improbable, is, That it is ridiculous to preſcribe Milk. Now he ſays thoſe were Directions what he was to do before he went to the Bath.

Sir George Wakeman. Why ſhould I repeat the Number of the Strokes twice, and write two Letters, about one Thing?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Is there any Date upon that Letter?

Mr. Chapman. No.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Off of what part of the Letter did you tear it?

Mr. Chapman. Off the bottom of it.

L. C. J. North. What, it was writ croſs, was it?

Mr. Chapman. Yes, I believe ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. The Truth of it is, This is no Evidence, and ought not to be offered as ſuch, for 'tis but Part of a Thing, which we do not know what it was in the Whole.

Mr. Chapman. I can give it upon my Oath that there was nothing in it of the King or Queen, except the King or Queen's Bath.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, if I remember right, you ſay the Directions that you ſaw were at the beginning of the Letter.

Dr. Oates. He was very weak when he came to Town, and his Directions to him then were, That he ſhould take a Pint of Milk in the Morning, and that when he went to the Bath he ſhould have a Hundred Strokes, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Was this in the beginning of the Letter?

Dr. Oates. It was after a Line or two that was Complements.

L. C. J. Was there any Receipt for Phyſick, in Latin, in it?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, there was not: No, my Lord, it was half a Sheet of Paper; it was full of it ſelf to the Bottom; this is not the Letter, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He ſays, this is neither the Hand, nor the Name ſubſcribed, nor the Contents of the Letter, all theſe differ.

Sir George Wakeman. I'll tell you the reaſon why my Name was not ſubſcribed, I was ſick, my Man is here to witneſs, that he carried it himſelf, and delivered it to Aſhby.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But, Sir George, you do not obſerve, that to the Letter which he ſaw, your Name was ſubſcribed.

Sir George VVakeman. This then is that I deſire may be taken notice of; 'tis not probable that I ſhould write two Letters for the ſame Thing, and I never writ any other Letter in my Life.

L. C. J. This is that you ſay, and let it be taken notice of, That it is not probable that you ſhould write two Letters for the ſame Directions how he might uſe the Bath.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. This might be writ to ſerve a Turn very well.

Sir George VVakeman. Then I'll tell you the Reaſon why my Name is not to it, and ſo I ſatisfy you about it as much as I can; I was very ill after I had dictated that Letter to him, and went immediately to Bed. It was not writ very fair, or ſomething was left out, which he interlined, and ſo he tranſcribed it again in his own Chamber, and I was then aſleep, and ſo did not put my Name to it, and he went away two Hours in the Morning before I awoke.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Who wrote the Letter? Was the Letter you tore off in the Man's Name, or in Sir George's Name?

Mr. Chapman. I know not who wrote it.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Was it ſaid to be, By my Maſter's Directions? What were the Contents of the Letter?

Mr. Chapman. It was only thus, As ſoon as you come to the Bath, after reſting a Day, in the firſt place take your Bolus, and after drink the VVaters. Which he did, for ſix Days together.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I would anſwer to this: This was not the Letter, for therein he only told him what he ſhould do before he went to the Bath, and how many Strokes he ſhould receive: Beſides, my Lord, there was not one Syllable of the Bolus in the Letter, or what Bath he was to go into; but when he came there, he was to receive ſo many Strokes of the Pump.

Sir George VVakeman. Nor one Syllable of the Milk in it neither?

Dr. Oates. Yes, there was; he did take Milk, Night and Morning, for I attended upon him.

Sir George VVakeman. My Lord, you ſee this Witneſs is a Proteſtant.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr. Oates, you ſay that the Letter that you ſaw was written ten days before he went to the Bath?

Dr. Oates. Yes, if not more.

Sir George Wakeman. Why ſhould I tell him of an Hundred Strokes ſo long before he went to the Bath?

L. C. J. You might mention it to give him Satisfaction. Well, have you any more?

Sir George Wakeman. Yes, my Lord. Call Hunt. Who ſtood up.

L. C. J. What do you call him to, Sir George?

Sir George Wakeman. This is my Man. What do you know concerning a Letter of Directions, that was ſent to Mr. Aſhby? Give an Account of it.

Hunt. If it pleaſe your Honour, my Maſter was out late, and coming home, I told him, Mr. Aſhby had ſent for ſome Directions for the Bath; and being weary and indiſpoſed, (for it was late, and he was not well) ſaid he, I cannot write my ſelf, do you take my Pen and Ink and write. I did take the Pen and Ink and write; and when I had written, ſomething was falſe in it; Pray, ſaid he, correct that: I did ſo, and interlined it, and when my Maſter was in Bed I writ it over again, and the next Morning, before he was awake, I carried it to Mr. Aſhby my ſelf, and there were only Directions in it what to do at the Bath.

L. C. J. When was Mr. Aſhby to go to the Bath? How ſoon after?

Hunt. He was to go the next Morning.

L. C. J. If what Mr. Oates ſwears, be true, this Letter that he ſaw was ten Days before, ſo what he ſpeaks is quite another Thing.

Sir George VVakeman. I never writ any ſuch Letter in my Life, and I hope the Jury will take notice of it.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Do you know any thing of Mr. Aſhby's drinking Milk while he was here?

Hunt. No, but he was ſaying he was adviſed by a Friend of his to drink Milk.

L. C. J. When, at the Bath?

Hunt. No, when he was in Town.

L. C. J. When he was in Town? that is conſiſtent with Mr. Oates's Teſtimony.

Sir George VVakeman. My Lord, there is a Phyſician that was in Conſultation with me about Mr. Aſhby, I think it of great Conſequence to ſhew that I came to him about no Treaſonable Affair, I vow to Almighty God I did not.

L. C. J. If you have any more Witneſſes, call them.

Sir George VVakeman. Call Elizabeth Henningham. Who ſtood up.

L. C. J. Sir George, What do you ask her?

Henningham. I was preſent, my Lord, at the writing of the Letter. His Servant writ, and he dictated to him, every Word of the Letter I ſaw, but there was no ſuch Thing in it.

L. C. J. I am very confident that this is true that you ſay, but it is not to the thing that Mr. Oates ſpeaks of, and charges you withal: that you did write ſuch a Letter as theſe People mention, and there was nothing in it, but like a Phyſician's Directions to his Patient, I do believe, and this was juſt when he was going to the Bath, but Mr. Oates tells you (if he ſays true) that this Letter he ſpeaks of, to which Sir George Wakeman was ſubſcribed, was ten Days before he went to the Bath; and that there was no mention of any Bolus in that, but the Direction was in the firſt part how he was to uſe himſelf, while he ſtaid in Town to drink Milk, and when he came to the Bath, to uſe the Pump; ſo that this your Witneſſes ſay, and you urge, is true, but not pertinent.

Sir George VVakeman. I ſay, my Lord, it is not probable that I ſhould write Directions ſo long before he went.

Henningham. My Lord, he ſaid himſelf he wanted Directions to go to the Bath, in my own Hearing.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Yes, he might, and indeed he did ſo, for the firſt contained none, but how he ſhould behave himſelf while he was here.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes? Pray call them.

Sir George VVakeman. My Lord, I have this to ſay, as I told you before, that I had my Liberty for Twenty-four Days after my Examination before the Council. Mr. Oates call'd at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, and there gave an Account of this very Letter that he mentions now, I ſay it was at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons. And thereupon the Commons ſent an Addreſs to the Houſe of Lords, with Aſtoniſhment that I was not under Confinement; and thereupon Mr. Oates was called to the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, and was commanded to give an Account what it was he knew concerning me, that ſhould create ſuch an Aſtoniſhment in the Houſe of Commons: He told them of this Letter, and my Lord Chancellor ſaid to him, Do you know it was Sir George Wakeman's Hand? No, ſaid he: How do you know it was his Letter then? I know it only by this, ſaid he, it was ſubſcribed, George Wakeman. If he had ſuch Proof as he ſays he hath now, if he had ſeen me writing, and came into the Room where the Paper I writ was yet wet, whether he would not have mentioned it there when he was Examined about the Knowledge of my Hand.

L. C. J. Call your Witneſſes: But what ſay you, Mr. Oates, your ſelf to it?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, Sir George Wakeman had his Liberty becauſe I was ſo Weak, by reaſon of being up two Nights together, one whereof was ſo very wet, and being hot, wet, and cold, all in a few Hours time, ſo that I thought it would have coſt me my Life; not being uſed to ſuch hard Services, I did not charge Sir George ſo fully: Tho' it may be objected to this Court, that I was bound to ſpeak the whole Truth; and ſo I did, as Opportunity and Health would give me leave. And as to the Letter, and what I ſaid about it in the Lords Houſe, Sir George is miſtaken. He ſays here that I ſaid I knew his Hand no otherwiſe, but by ſeeing Sir George Wakeman ſubſcribed to it.

Sir George Wakeman. I will prove it by the Record.

Dr. Oates. Now, my Lord, I humbly deſire that he may propoſe his Queſtions to the Court: And I deſire to know, whether I did ſay, I did not know it any other ways but by its being ſigned George Wakeman.

Sir George Wakeman. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to give me leave———

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, did you mention in the Houſe of Lords, whether you knew his Hand or no?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I cannot call to mind what I then ſaid. I did ſay, I ſaw ſuch a Letter, ſigned George Wakeman; but if he will bring the Record, and one that ſhall ſwear thoſe were the Words, I will leave it to the Jury. But this, my Lord, I would add, if you will give me leave; the Words I did ſay, as near as I can remember, were theſe, when they asked me, how I knew Sir George Wakeman's Hand? I ſaid, I ſaw ſuch a Letter ſigned George Wakeman. Now, my Lord, upon this Information, they did think fit to take Sir George Wakeman up and ſecure him; and now I come Face to Face, and am not only to ſatisfy Judges, but a Jury, I ſhew you what Reaſons I have to believe it, and what they may have, that it was his Hand: For I ſay, I ſaw him in a Writing-Poſture, I ſaw him lay by the Pen, I ſaw him withdraw from the Paper, I ſaw none but another Gentleman there, that was lame of both his Hands, and the Ink was not dry, and it was the ſame Hand with the Letter.

Sir George Wakeman. Was my Name to that Note?

Dr. Oates. No, I will not ſwear that; but the Character of the Hand was the ſame, if I may judge of Writing.

L. C. J. North. Look you, Sir George, you ſpoke of Witneſſes you would call to prove what he ſwore in the Houſe of Lords; if you can call any Witneſſes for that, do.

Sir George Wakeman. Call Sir Philip Lloyd: I hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe to allow me, at leaſt, this Advantage (I know not whether it be an Advantage) that the Record of the Houſe of Lords may be made uſe of as a Record here. If I prove it by the Record, it will be a good Evidence.

L. C. J. Have you that Record here?

Sir George Wakeman. I have a Copy of that Record, and a Witneſs that will ſwear it.

Then Sir Philip Lloyd appeared, and ſtood up.

L. C. J. What do you ask Sir Philip Lloyd?

Sir George Wakeman. I deſire to know of Sir Philip Lloyd, what Mr. Oates ſaid of me before His Majeſty and the Council, the laſt Day of September; Sir, you were there preſent, and ſent by the King to me, and commanded to bring me in to the Council.

Sir Philip Lloyd. I will, my Lord, as well as I can, recollect and tell you, as near as I can, what Mr. Oates did then accuſe him of. It was upon the One and Thirtieth Day of September, Mr. Oates did then ſay he had ſeen a Letter, to the beſt of his Remembrance, from Mr. White to Mr. Fenwick at St. Omers, in which Letter he writ word, that Sir George Wakeman had undertaken the poyſoning of the King, and was to have 15000 l. for it; of which, 5000 l. had been paid him by the Hands of Coleman. Sir George Wakeman, upon this, was called in, and told of this Accuſation, he utterly denied all, and did indeed carry himſelf as if he were not concerned at the Accuſation, but did tell the King and Council, he hoped he ſhould have Reparation and Satisfaction, for the Injury done to his Honour. His Carriage was not well liked of by the King and Council, and being a Matter of ſuch Conſequence as this was, they were willing to know further of it; and becauſe they thought this Evidence was not Proof enough to give them occaſion to commit him, being only out of the Letter of a third Perſon, thereupon they called in Mr. Oates again, and my Lord Chancellor deſired Mr. Oates to tell him, if he knew nothing perſonally of Sir George Wakeman, becauſe they were in a Matter of Moment, and deſired ſufficient Proof, whereupon to ground a Commitment; Mr. Oates, when he did come in again, and was asked the Queſtion, did lift up his Hands (for I muſt tell the Truth, let it be what it will) and ſaid, No, God forbid that I ſhould ſay any thing againſt Sir George Wakeman, for I know nothing more againſt him. And I refer my ſelf to the whole Council, whether it was not ſo.

Dr. Oates. I remember not one Word of all this.

Sir George Wakeman. My Lord, this is a Proteſtant Witneſs too.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, give me leave to make an Anſwer: When I did report this Letter, the Council did ask me whether or no Sir George was any ways concerned in this Letter? I replied, I had it by Report, that Sir George had received 5000 l. of this Money. My Lord, the Council did not preſs me to my Knowledge; I will not be poſitive, but if the Council did preſs me, and I did make that Anſwer, I do appeal to the whole Board, whether or no I was in a Condition to make any Anſwer at all, when, by reaſon of my being hurried up and down, and ſitting up, I was ſcarce Compos mentis.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What, muſt we be amuſed with I know not what, for being up but two Nights? You were not able to give an Anſwer; that when they call and ſend for Mr. Oates again to give a poſitive Charge, and then you tell us a Story ſo remote: What was Mr. Oates juſt ſo ſpent, that he could not ſay, I have ſeen a Letter under Sir George Wakeman's own Hand.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I did to the beſt of my remembrance make mention of that Letter, that Sir George Wakeman writ, before the Board. I ſay, to the beſt of my Skill and Knowledge; but I will not be poſitive in it.

L. C. J. You have heard what Sir Philip Lloyd ſays.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. What ſay you, did Mr. Oates make any mention of this Letter?

Sir Philip Lloyd. Truly, my Lord, I can't remember that there was any ſuch Letter mentioned. I tell you what I do remember; and afterwards becauſe he came and gave this Depoſition before the Lords and Commons, that he found ſuch a Letter upon the Table from Sir George to Aſhby, indeed I did very much wonder at it, and it made me reflect upon that other Paſſage at the Council, of his denying to accuſe Sir George further, and it hath been in my Mind ever ſince.

L. C. J. And you do declare, that when the Lords of the Council asked him, whether he knew any thing more particularly againſt Sir George Wakeman, he did lift up his Hands and ſaid, No, God forbid I ſhould charge him any further, I know no more againſt him.

Sir Philip Lloyd. Yes, my Lord, ſo it was.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I believe Sir Philip Lloyd is miſtaken; but however I was ſo weak, and the King and Council were ſo ſenſible of it, that the King himſelf had like to have ſent me away once or twice before, becauſe he found I was ſo weak.

L. C. J. It did not require ſuch a deal of ſtrength to ſay, I ſaw a Letter under Sir George's own Hand.

L. C. J. North. Well, it muſt be left to the Jury: if you have any more Witneſſes call them.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, Sir George Wakeman urged it right, that he ſhould not have been permitted to have his liberty ſo long, if you had charged him home then.

Sir George Wakeman. Call Mr. Lydcot.

Dr. Oates. To ſpeak the truth, they were ſuch a Council as would commit no Body.

Mr. Recorder. That was not well ſaid.

Sir George Wakeman. He reflects on the King, and all the Council.

L. C. J. You have taken a great Confidence, I know not by what Authority, to ſay any thing of any Body. But this is naturally true, That when the Council were offended at the Carriage of Sir George Wakeman at the Board, and therefore ſent for Mr. Oates again, doubing in themſelves whether what they had would be ſufficient to commit him; for indeed it was not only a wild thing, of what was mentioned in a Letter of a third Perſon's, that Sir George had accepted of Fifteen-thouſand Pounds, and received the Five; therefore, ſaid they, we will know of Mr. Oates ſome more Particulars, and ſent for him in again, and asked him, Do you know any thing of your own knowledge? If he had come in then and ſaid, Yes, I have ſeen a Letter ſubſcribed under Sir George Wakeman's Hand, would not they have committed him? ſurely they would. And now the Council's not committing him, is an Argument that they had not ſufficient Evidence, and Oates did omit at that time to charge him with this Letter.

Then Mr. Lydcot ſtood up.

Sir George Wakeman. Mr. Lydcot, have you a Copy of the Lords Records?

Mr. Lydcot. Yes it is.

Sir George Wakeman. Pray, what did Mr. Oates ſay to my Lord Chancellor in the Houſe of Lords?

L. C. J. You muſt have that which is proper Evidence: You ſhall have all the fair dealing that can be, and all that can be admitted for your defence ſhall be.

Sir George Wakeman. My Lord, I humbly thank you, I find it.

L. C. J Ay, but this is now what the Clerk writes down a Minutes. 'Tis an hard Conſtruction to make this Evidence. Were you preſent when Mr. Oates was there and ſaid this?

Lydcot. No, my Lord, all I ſay, is this, This is a Copy of the Record in the Lord's Houſe.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Oates ſet his Hand to that Record?

Lydcot. Yes, in ſome Places. 'Tis Titus Oates ſet in diverſe Places as his Hand to Examinations.

L. C. J. But is Mr. Oates's own Hand ſet to the Record?

Lydcot. I know nothing of that?

L. C. J. This is the Objection, It will be hard, that if a Clerk takes the Depoſitions of Oates or any one elſe, and takes them as near as he can, but he never ſubſcribes it, and you prove only 'tis a Copy of what the Clerk wrote, That cannot be allowed as Evidence.

Lydcot. 'Tis a Copy in moſt Places of what is under Mr. Relf's own Hand.

L. C. J. But you can't Swear the Clerk writ true?

Lydcot. No, that I can't.

L. C. J. It may be an Entry of what the Houſe of Lords did upon the Examination; That is not Evidence here.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. If you can produce any one that heard Mr. Oates give in his Information, you ſay well.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. I believe there is a difference between the Entry-Book, and the Book of Records; and I hope you will look upon the Book of the Houſe of Lords as the higheſt Evidence, beyond any verbal Averment. My Life is in your Hands, I ask you whether it be not ſo, or no;

L. C. J. North. If there be a Record in any Court of Record, that ſuch a Man appear'd in Court, 'tis an Evidence that he was in Court, and a Record for it; but when there is an Examination in a Court of Reeord, theſe not paſſing the Examination of that Court, but being taken by the Clerks, we always in Evidence expect there ſhould be ſome body to prove, that ſuch an Examination was ſworn, and Subſcribed to.

L. C. J. Have you any Witneſſes here, that were by, and heard what Mr. Oates did then depoſe, and can teſtifie what Mr. Oates ſaid when he was called in, and particularly what Anſwer he made to that ſingle Queſtion of my Lord Chancellors, how he came to know it was your Hand?

Sir Geo. Wakeman. I can bring none but theſe Records, or the Lords themſelves, and I can't expect pect it from them. And that which they call a Record, I am not able to judge whether it be a Record or no.

L. C. J. Were there not others called with him into the Lords Houſe?

Sir Geo. Wakeman. No, there were none but the Lords themſelves.

L. C. J. You ſhould have had the Clerks here that made the Entry, or ſaw him ſet his Hand to the Examination.

L. C. J. North. This is nothing, but as he ſays, a Tranſcript out of the Journal.

Lydcot. I believe it is written moſt under Mr. Relf's own Hand. There is a great deal of it that contains the whole Narrative that Oates gave in.

L. C. J. North. You deſire to give in Evidence what Mr. Oates ſaid at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords to what my Lord Chancellor asked him, if you have any Witneſſes that can prove it, they ſhall be heard.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. My Lord, I have no Witneſſes only the Record.

L. C. J. That is only a Copy of a Narrative.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. If you will not allow it to be a Record, I can't help it.

Mr. Recorder. This is no Part of the Record of the Houſe of Lords, it can't be allow'd.

L. C. J. Well, have you any other Witneſſes to any thing elſe?

Sir Geo. Wakeman. I deſire you would Examine Sir Phylip Lloyd once more. Who was called, but Anſwered not.

Mr. Recorder. He is gone out of the Court.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay the reſt? Mr. Corker, have you any Witneſſes in the firſt Place?

Corker. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mr. Marſhal, have you any Witneſſes, Anſwer that firſt; before you enter upon your Defence, you ſhall be heard afterwards.

Then Sir Philip Lloyd came into Court again.

Mr. Recorder. Sir George, here is Sir Philip Lloyd, here now, what would you ask him?

Sir George Wakeman. Sir Philip Lloyd, I deſire to know concerning the laſt Examination of Mr. Oates, and Mr. Bedlow before the Council; (you were there preſent, as I am informed) pray will you tell what you know.

Sir Piblip Lloyd. To what Point Sir?

Sir George Wakeman. To their whole Evidence.

Sir Philip Lloyd. I ſuppoſe what they have given in lately, they have acquainted the Bench with already. It was ſome Day this very Month, but I would know what it is Sir George would have me ſpeak to?

L. C. J. What was there relating to Sir George Wakeman?

L. C. J. North. But pray conſider, whether it be a Queſtion fit to be asked of the Clerk of the Council, what was done in Council without leave of the Board. I don't think he is bound to Anſwer the Queſtion.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Sir George, if you would ask him to any one particular Queſtion, it were ſomething.

Sir George Wakeman. I have done with him; I hope he will excuſe me, I have put him to this Trouble.

L. C. J. Then Mr. Marſhal, have you any Witneſſes?

Marſhal. I cannot ſay I have any direct poſitive Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Think not that you ſhall be concluded, we are not in haſte, you ſhall have time to ſay what you will; but if you would uſe any Witneſſes, call them.

Marſhal. For the preſent I ſhall have no uſe of any.

L. C. J. Well Mr. Rumley, have you any Witneſſes?

Rumley. I think I have.

L. C. J. I can't tell of any need you have of any, for there is but one Witneſs againſt you.

Corker. But he deſires that his Witneſſes may be heard, 'tis but ſhort.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. There is no need of it Mr. Rumley we can't inſiſt on it, againſt you, you muſt be acquitted.

Mr. Recorder. Will he have his Witneſſes called? If he will, he ſhall, tho' there is no need of it.

Rumley. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then Sir Robert Sawyer, would you ſay any thing more for the King, before the Priſoners make their Defence?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, there is one thing which I would have anſwered, that is, the variance between what Mr. Oates ſaid before the Council and what he ſays now, upon the Teſtimony of Sir Philip Lloyd, who ſays, that he gave no Teſtimony of this Letter, under Sir George Wakeman's Hand; but being asked, whether he knew any thing of his own knowledge, he ſaid, he had only met with a Letter from White to Fenwick, wherein it was ſaid, So much was propoſed to, and accepted by Sir George Wakeman: And that he ſhould then declare that he could ſay no more; and lifting up his Hands, affirm with a Proteſtation he knew no more. Gentlemen, We hope to give you ſatisfaction in this matter, for it was after a long and tedious Examination; and we ſhall prove to you, that he was in great Confuſion, being almoſt tired out with Examination, which is not impoſſible to happen to any Man tho' of the Strongeſt Conſtitution and Memory, after two Nights waking, and continual hurrying up and down. We ſhall call Sir Thomas Doleman to prove, that he was under great Confuſion, and that the King and Council were ſo ſenſible of it, that ſome of them would have had him gon away a great while before he did go away. Swear Sir Thomas Doleman. [Which was done.]

Sir Rob. Sawyer. You hear what hath been objected and ſaid by Sir Philip Lloyd, will you tell your Knowledge of this matter?

Sir Tho. Doleman. My Lord, Mr. Oates did appear before the King and Council, I think on the Saturday, before which was Michaelmas Eve. The Council ſat long that Morning, the Council ſat again in the Afternoon, and Mr. Oates was employed that Night I think to ſearch after ſome Jeſuits who were then taken, and that was the Work of that Night. The Council I think ſat again Sunday in the Afternoon, Mr. Oates was then examined, the Council ſat long, and at Night he was ſent abroad again to ſearch the Lodgings of ſeveral Prieſts, and to find out their Papers, which he did Seize upon, and one of the Nights in that Seaſon was a very wet Night; he went either with a Meſſenger or with a Guard upon him. On Monday Morning the Council ſat again, and he was further Examined, and went abroad; and Monday Night Mr. Oates was in as feeble and weak a Condition as ever I ſaw Man in my Life. And was very willing to have been diſmiſſed for that time; for he

he ſeem'd to be in very great weakneſs, and diſorder; ſo that I believe he was ſcarce able to give a good Anſwer.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Was that the time Sir Philip Lloyd ſpeaks of?

Sir Tho. Doleman. I think he was call'd in on Monday Night.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. I receiv'd the Summons on Saturday by a Letter from Sir Rob. Southwell.

Sir Tho. Doleman. You were call'd in on Monday Night, the Night before the King went to New-Market.

Sir Geo Wakeman. I appeared upon Sunday, and was diſmiſſed by Sir Philip Lloyd, who came out and let me know that the King ſaid, he would have the hearing of it himſelf the next Day.

Sir Tho. Doleman. Then, Sir, you were call'd in and you gave your Anſwer; and the whole Council was amazed at the manner of it: for you did not, in my Opinion, or in the Opinion of ſeveral others, deny it ſo poſitively as one that was Innocent could, but uſed many great expreſſions of your own great Fidelity and Loyalty to the King, and or your Family, and the Services they had pay'd the Crown, and did require Satisfaction, and Reparation for the Injury done to your Honour.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. My Lord I will give you a brief Account of it; I leave it to you, whether I behaved my ſelf ill or no; I confeſs, I think I might have behav'd my ſelf more ſubmiſſively; there was nothing of Duty wanting in my Mind, but I will give you an Account of what I ſaid verbatim. My Lord Chancellor told me, that I was accuſed of the blackeſt of Crimes; that I had undertaken to Poiſon the King. I asked him who was my Accuſer, he pointed to Mr. Oates, and told me Mr. Oates was my Accuſer. Says I, Mr. Oates, do you know me? Did you ever ſee me before? Mr. Oates ſaid, No. Why then ſaid I, how come you to be my Accuſer. Said he, I will tell you, I was at St. Omers, where there was a Conſult of the Jeſuits, at which Mr. Aſhby the Rector of the College at St. Omers did preſide; And in that Conſult it was debated who was the fitteſt Perſon for that horrid undertaking of Poiſoning the King, and unanimouſly it was agreed upon at that Conſult, that you were; Sir George Wakeman by Name: and now he ſays it was debated here in England. Then, my Lord, ſaid I to my Lord Chancellor, here is no Proof, therefore I hope there is no need of any Defence. Said he, there is no Smoak but there is ſome Fire. My Lord, ſaid I, if you underſtand by that, there can be no Accuſation without ſome Guilt, I ſhould be ſorry I ſhould not underſtand both Sacred and Prophane Hiſtory, better than to think ſo. Then he preſſed me to know what I could ſay for my ſelf. Said I, My Lord, I come of a Loyal Family, my Father had ſuffer'd very much to the Value of Eighteen Thouſand Pounds and more for the Royal Family. My Brother raiſed a Troop of Horſe for the King, and ſerved him from the beginning of the War to the end. He was Major to the Marquis of Worceſter, at Worceſter Fight, and loſt his Life by the Wounds he received in the King's Service. As for my own Part, ſaid I, I Travelled very young, and came over when Ireton was Lord Mayor, and both by my Religion and my Name, was ſuſpected to be a Favourer of the Royal Party, and therefore was impriſoned, and did not come out till I had given great Security: and the ſecond time I was Committed, was, when I entred into a Plot, the only Plot I was Guilty of, I Conſpired with Captain Lucy, and ſeveral others to attempt ſomething for His Majeſty's Reſtauration, when few durſt appear for him. I was ſeized on in my Bed; there were ſeveral Arms found in my Apothecary's Cellar, and we were both Committed to Priſon; and we ſhould both have ſuffered Death certainly if his Majeſty's happy Reſtoration had not prevented it. When my Lord preſt me ſtill to ſay what I could ſay for my ſelf, as to what was charged on me; I told him, my Lord, I am under the moſt foul and falſe Accuſation that ever Innocent Gentleman was, and I expect Reparation; and upon that they were offended, and I was bid to withdraw. And I added this beſide, my Lord, that there was not a Family in England that was ſo much inſtrumental in his Majeſty's Reſtoration as that Family was; that Colonel Charles Gifford was my near Kinſman, ſo was Colonel Carlos; and that the Pendrels were Menial Servants to the Family; and I hope they deſerve ſome Favour.

L. C. J. What have you to ſay Sir George, in your preſent Defence here. Make what Obſervations you will now, upon the Teſtimony hath been given againſt you.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. My Lord, I ſay this, if it had been allowed me, to make uſe of the Records of the Houſe of Lords, it would have made all things ſo evident and clear, as nothing can be more; for then, when he was called to that Bar, to give an Account what he had declared to the Houſe of Commons concerning me, he gave an account of this Letter.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. Sir George, you muſt not make mention any more of theſe things, that could not be given in Evidence.

Sir George Wakeman. Then, my Lord, I have no more to ſay.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Corker?

Corker. My Lord, I hope the Court will not require that I ſhould bring any particular Evidence in Confutation of what is here alledged againſt me; for, before I came to this Bar, I did not know any particular Accuſation that was againſt me; and therefore I could not be ready to anſwer it, and make my Defence, or bring particular Witneſſes to evidence and ſhew my Innocency. Beſides, my Lord, it is a known general Maxim, That a poſitive Aſſertion is as eaſie to be made, as to prove a Negative, is oft-times hard, if not impoſſible. Men may eaſily deviſe Crimes, and frame Accuſations againſt innocent Men in ſuch a manner, that the contrary cannot poſſibly be demonſtrated. No mortal Man can tell where he was, and what he did and ſaid every Day and Hour of his whole Life. Therefore, I think, 'tis not only Poſitive bear Swearing, but 'tis Probable Swearing, that muſt render a Man guilty of a Crime. Otherwiſe, my Lord, it would be lawful, and in the power of Oates and his Companions here, to hang, by turns, upon bare Oath, all the Innocent Men in the whole Nation, tho' never ſo Innocent, and that for Crimes never ſo ridiculous and abſurd. And I ſay this further, he that Swears againſt another, firſt, ought to be himſelf a Credible Witneſs; and then, ſecondly, ſtrengthned by Probable Circumſtances; Circumſtances that bring along with them ſome Probable Evidence diſtinct from the Witneſſes themſelves: Otherwiſe,

I think

I think, that the Party accuſed, without any Proof of his ſide, ought to remain in the Poſſeſſion of his own Innocency. Now, I think, my Lord, there will be never an one of theſe two neceſſary Conditions to be found in the Evidence againſt me; for, Firſt, the Witneſſes againſt me, are Perſons that are, or at leaſt formerly have been, of ſcandalous Lives.

L. C. J. You ſhould Prove it, before you Say it. You ſhall have all things allow'd you that are fit; but you muſt not heap up Contumelies upon Men unproved, or call Men Names, when you have proved nothing againſt them. If you can prove any thing, of God's Name do it; prove them as fully as you can.

Corker. I do only ſay this, They have been reported, and owned by themſelves, as Men that have been of ſcandalous Lives.

L. C. J. If the Jury know it of their own Knowledge, I leave it to them; but you have proved nothing.

Corker. Well, my Lord, but then, in the next place, neither will the poſitive Oaths of Men formerly Infamous, be any convincing Arguments of our Guilt: And then next, as to the other Circumſtances that ſhould render me Guilty, Mr. Oates does not here make me guilty alone of this Grand Conſpiracy; but he involves the Nobility, Gentry, and the whole Body of the Catholicks, in this Treaſon. Now, my Lord, I refer it to the Judgment of the Court, whether ſo many Perſons as he names, and thoſe of ſuch eminent Quality, and of ſuch conſiderable Eſtates in their Countries, Perſons ſettled under ſo good a King, in ſo peaceable a Kingdom; ſo Quiet in Condition; Men of Good and Vertuous Lives, and Unblemiſhed Converſations, before this Hour, ſhould hazard their Honours, their Lives, their Families, their Bodies, their Souls, their All in ſuch a Deſign!

L. C. J. What is this to your Caſe?

Corker. My Lord, if this be not probable, I hope I am free of the Plot.

L. C. J. But what is this to your Caſe? Pray hear, you are now making a Speech againſt Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow, That they do accuſe People of great Honour and Quality; he hath given no Accuſation againſt any as yet, that you are to take notice of. You ought to make uſe of nothing as an Argument to the Jury, but of the Evidence that hath been given to the Jury. If you can make uſe of any thing, that Mr. Oates or Mr. Bedlow hath ſaid here to contradict them, or invalidate their Teſtimony, you have ſaid well. But to talk of ſuch a Story, of accuſing Noblemen, and ſuch like, when there is nothing of that before you; you muſt firſt prove what you will infer from.

Corker. My Lord, this I take to be of very great Concern to my ſelf, that ſince the Truth of this Evidence does depend upon the Certainty of the Plot, and this pretended Conſpiracy againſt His Sacred Majeſty; if there be no ſuch Plot and Conſpiracy, and if, by Circumſtances, I can render it improbable, I hope the Jury will take it into Conſideration.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, I am of that Opinion, if thou canſt but ſatisfy Us and the Jury, that there is no Plot, thou ſhalt be quitted by my Conſent.

Corker. I will, my Lord, ſhew you the Improbability of it.

L. C. J. Ay, do but give us one probable Argument, (you being a Learned Man, and a Prieſt) why we ſhould believe, there is no Plot.

Corker. My Lord, I would have endeavoured to have ſhewn you the Improbability of it, but yet I would not urge it, becauſe it may not be ſo grateful to your Lordſhip. But to me, 'tis not probable, that ſo many Honourable and Vertuous Perſons ſhould be involved in a Plot ſo Dangerous, ſo Horrid and Deteſtable in it ſelf; wherein, my Lord, as he ſays, ſo many Thouſands of People, and even a whole Nation, were to be overwhelmed: of which, if a Diſcovery had been made by any Perſon, it would have prevented the utter Ruin of ſo many Millions. 'Tis not Rational or Probable, that ſuch vaſt whole Armies ſhould be raiſed, and Foreign Nations concerned in the Plot. All which, notwithſtanding all the Evidence that can be made out of this Plot, is but only their poſitive Swearing.

L. C. J. Juſt now you made your Objection, that it was a ſtrange thing that ſuch a Deſign ſhould be communicated to ſo many; now you make it a Wonder why ſo few ſhould know it, only Oates and Bedlow. Your Argument before was, that it was a wonderful thing, that ſo great a Concern ſhould be communicated to any one; and now you wonder more, that none ſhould know it but they two.

Corker. Therefore, my Lord, I from thence argue thus, that ſince there is no other Evidence, nor further Proof of it, than from Mr. Oates, and Mr. Bedlow, I infer there is no ſuch thing at all.

L. C. J. Yes, as for your Army, there is more than ſo; Do you remember what Mr. Dugdale and what Mr. Prance ſay?

Corker. Yes, my Lord, conſidering theſe Perſons, what they are, their vile Oaths, and the Encouragement they have met with, by ſuch Endearments and Careſſes, as they have found, their Credit is not much to be weighed. Now, my Lord, I apply to the Accuſation that is againſt my ſelf.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, that is your beſt way, for it would have been an hard Task for you to prove, that there was no Plot. We were in great Expectation what Arguments you would bring us for it.

Sir George Wakeman. My Lord, will you give me leave to obſerve one Thing more to your Lordſhip and the Court? Mr. Oates does mention in his Narrative, of at leaſt Thirty or Forty Pages, and all this upon Oath, (ſo he ſaith in the end of his Narrative) but I would obſerve, that there is not a Letter dated in France, or in the Low-Countries, or received here, but he ſwears poſitively as to the Date of it, and Reception of it; but now, when he comes to mention any Thing wherein a Man's Life is concern'd, he will not tie up himſelf to a Month.

L. C. J. Yes, he does, and to part of a Month. He tells you, it was the beginning, or middle, or latter end; and he ſpeaks punctually as to the Twenty firſt of Auguſt.

Sir George Wakeman. But in all his whole Narrative, he ſpeaks to a Day.

Mr. Recorder. As my Lord ſays, he ſpeaks punctually to the Twenty firſt of Auguſt. And as to the Letters, he took the Date of them in his Memorial.

Corker. My Lord, I would only take notice, that at the firſt, Mr. Oates thought to take Advantage of ſome Words of mine, at my Examination; he told you, that I had gone into France, but that I denied it when I was Examined before the Juſtice of Peace. My Lord, I deny all this; for the Juſtice of Peace Examined me where I had lived——

L. C. J. We have nothing of this Matter here before us.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You are to anſwer what he ſays now.

Corker. 'Tis what Mr. Oates ſays now, for I knew nothing of it till now. Now my Lord, as to that, I ſay, I did not deny it before the Juſtice of Peace that Examined me; for I told him, I lived with a certain Lady Twelve Years, till ſhe died; and during that time, I never was beyond the Sea but once, which was five Years ſince, for the Cure of a Quartane Ague that I had, and I went over to France; otherwiſe, during all that Time that I was with my Lady, I did not go beyond Sea. Upon this, the Juſtice began to ask me other Queſtions; whereupon, my Lord, I recollected my ſelf, and ſaid, Sir, I told you I had not been beyond Sea during the Time I had been with my Lady, but that Time, five Years ſince; but my Lady being Dead, I went over laſt Summer in Auguſt to perfect the Cure of that Ague; for I had it ſeven Years, Spring and Fall. And this I told him of my ſelf, without asking. The laſt Summer I went over, and there I ſtaid till two Days before September; therefore I did commit no Miſtakes in what I ſaid, or uſed any Cloke to cover it. Now, my Lord, he ſays, I went to Lampſpring, which is in the farther End of Germany.

L. C. J. He ſays, you ſaid ſo.

Corker. Pray ask him how he knows it? he ſays, by my Letters: Sure if this Man were privy to thoſe great Conſpiracies which he charges me to be a Partner in, it is not probable but that I ſhould tell him where I went; and then, if I did tell him ſo, I muſt go thither and back again in ſix Weeks Time, which was morally impoſſible to do, to go thither, and to return; for I was but ſix Weeks out of Town.

L. C. J. How you Argue, Sir! He ſays, you told him, you went to Lampſpring: Say you, Certainly I would tell him true, becauſe he was engaged with me in Conſpiracies; but this can't be true, becauſe of the length of the Way. Is this a Way of Arguing? May not you tell him, you go to one Place, and indeed go to another?

Corker. What Reaſon or Motive had I to tell him a Lye?

L. C. J. It is a hard matter for us to give an Account of Jeſuits Anſwers, even one to another.

Corker. I am not a Jeſuit, I won't ſay the leaſt Untruth to ſave my Life. Then as to my being Preſident, as he calls it, of the Congregation; all the Congregation, and all that know us, know that Stapleton (formerly Chaplain to the Queen) is and hath been for Twelve Years, Preſident of that Order. And I am confident that all Catholicks, and moſt of the Court, do likewiſe know it to be true, and by Conſequence, it is likewiſe untrue, that there was an Agreement made by the Jeſuits and Benedictine Monks, when I was at Paris, to which I was not privy, but could not go on till I was acquainted with it, and conſented to it. Now, my Lord, if I be not Preſident of that Order, that muſt be a Flam and a Story.

L. C. J. You ſay that, Prove who is.

Corker. Mr. Stapleton was, as 'tis well known.

L. C. J. Call who you will to prove it, if you can.

Corker. Here is one of the Lay-Brothers of the Order.

L. C. J. Who is that?

Corker. Mr. Rumley here.

L. C. J. He cannot be a Witneſs for you, or againſt you, at this Trial.

Corker. My Lord, ſince I did not know of it before, I could not bring any Body.

L. C. J You put it upon your ſelves.

Corker. My Lord, I ſay then I never was at any Conſult where any ſuch Summ of Money was propoſed or agreed, nor was it requiſite or neceſſary that I ſhould be ſo much privy to it, for I was not Superior of the Order, nor Preſident of it, by reaſon of which my Conſent ſhould be neceſſary, or any ſuch Letter be writ to me, or any ſuch received from me. And then, my Lord, Secondly, I muſt take notice again, he accuſes me of being Biſhop of London, and that I did conſent to this Agreement of paying ſo many Thouſand Pounds; if I were guilty of this, and likewiſe of contriving the King's Death, and eſpecially conſenting to Pickering's Murther of the King, when that Pickering was taken, I ſhould have been taken too, or I knowing my ſelf Guilty, ſhould have fled.

L. C. J. You excepted againſt Pickering, and thought him not a convenient Man, becauſe he was one of your Order.

Corker. I hope he does not poſitively ſay I conſented to the King's Death; he ſays indeed I knew ſomething of it, now I was near him when he was taken. All the Officers that came to take Mr. Pickering, came to my Chamber. Mr. Oates ſays he was there at the taking of Pickering; if I were guilty of all theſe Things, being Superior and Maſter to this Pickering, 'tis a ſtrange Thing that he ſhould neither know me, nor own me, nor accuſe me, nor take me, nor apprehend me, until almoſt a Month after; all which Time I had my Liberty; but then taking notice of my going down there, and having further Information of me that I had lodged there, he took me into his Catalogue of Biſhops, and he came to take me. But if I had been guilty of theſe heinous Things, there is no Reaſon but they ſhould have apprehended and taken me when Pickering, and Grove, and Ireland, and Sir George Wakeman were taken.

L. C. J. I will tell you what for that: If you were now arraigned for being a Prieſt, you might well make uſe of that Argument, That when they took Pickering and Grove, if they knew you to have been a Prieſt, they ſhould have taken you too, and yet for all that you were a Prieſt, you could not have denied it. But would it have been an Argument, becauſe you were not then taken, you were not ſo? So you might be in the Plot, and not be taken, and 'tis no Argument from your not being taken, that you were not.

Corker. I ſay, my Lord, if he came to diſcover the Plotters, it had been his Duty to have taken me before, if I had been one in the Plot.

L. C. J. So it had been his Duty to have taken you as a Prieſt.

Corker. But I was, as he ſays, equal in the ſame Crime with Pickering, and therefore he ſhould have taken me, when he took him.

L. C. J. Have you any thing more?

Corker. Beſides, my Lord, I find he undertook to tell the Names of all thoſe that were engaged in this Conſpiracy, but among them all, my Name is not, therefore 'tis a new Invention of his.

L. C. J. That is not ſaid here, you go off from what is ſaid here.

L. C. J. North. Can you prove that? then firſt do it, and then make your Obſervations upon it, if you can prove what he ſaid before the Lords by Witneſſes; but otherwiſe you muſt not diſcourſe upon what you have not proved.

L. C. J. Here is nothing of that before this Jury.

Corker. I cannot prove it otherwiſe than by the Record. I deſire it may be looked upon, and I refer it to the Conſideration of the Jury, whether if he did ſay he did not know any thing elſe of any Man whatſoever, but what he had then declared, and I am not there accuſed; whether this Accuſation be now to be believed?

L. C. J. That hath been anſwered already.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But it is not proved by them.

Corker. I leave it to the Jury, whether they will believe it or no.

L. C. J. You ſay well, if you refer it to the Jury, let them conſider it.

Corker. I ſay, they ought to take it into their Conſideration, they are not raſhly to give a Verdict againſt me; and, Gentlemen, I believe I may refer it to your Conſciences, whether you do not know what I ſay to be true in this Buſineſs?

L. C. J. Mr. Marſhal, what ſay you to it?

Marſhal. Truly, my Lord, what I have to ſay for my ſelf is this. About a Month ago I was told the Time of my Trial was at Hand, and being then full of good Hope, I did endeavour to provide for it, and I had a great Confidence, my Lord, that it would ſucceed; but truly, upon the ill Succeſs of the late Trials, either my Hope or my Heart failed me, and I did reſolve to caſt my ſelf upon God and his Providence, and however my Silence might have been interpreted, I did reſolve, with Silence and Submiſſion, to reſign up my ſelf to whatſoever your Lordſhip and the worthy Jury ſhould be pleaſed to decree upon me. But, my Lord, ſince your Lordſhip is pleaſed to fling forth ſome Encouragement, and to hang out the White Flagg of Hope, for your Lordſhip hath been pleaſed to uſe many gracious Expreſſions, and ſo, my Lord, upon this, I ſhall, contrary to my former Determination, now endeavour to make Defence for my Life as well as I can: But, my Lord, not being ſo well able to do it, or of ſo quick Capacity as that Learned and Wiſe Council which we have here of Council for us, to wit, the Honourable Bench of Judges, for, upon Enquiry, why, by Law, we were allowed no Council? I was told, that the whole Bench of Judges were always of Council for the Priſoner; and indeed, they look upon it as an Obligation upon them, as far as Truth and Juſtice will permit them, to plead for us. Now, my Lord, with an humble Heart, I would ſuggeſt ſome Heads of Defence to this Learned, Wiſe, and Honourable Council, and leave it to them to manage my Cauſe for me, according to Truth and Juſtice, which they are better able to do for me than I for my ſelf. My Lord, I have, I thank God, no Spleen nor Hatred in my Heart againſt the worſt of my Enemies, nor ſhall be deſirous of Revenge, I leave them and their Proceedings to God; neither am I willing to charge Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow with worſe than the Neceſſity of my Defence will occaſion me to ſay of them. Now, my Lord, the beſt of Men may be miſtaken in a Perſon, and if I prove Mr. Oates is miſtaken in the Perſon in me, then I charge Mr. Oates with no great Crime, and yet make my own Defence. Now, my Lord, I offer theſe Things for that Defence, and I hope your Lordſhip will appear my great Advocate, and what I ſuggeſt in a few Heads, you will, I hope, put it into a Method, and manage it better than I can my ſelf. My Lord, when I was firſt brought before Mr. Oates (as truly all that were with me do know) I carried my ſelf with a great deal of Courage and Confidence, for I was certain that he did not know me, and I did believe it would be only my Trouble of going thither and coming back again.

L. C. J. To go whither?

Marſhal. To Weſtminſter. And pray take Notice of this: When I was firſt apprehended, I was never ſought for, nor named as a Traitor in this Buſineſs; but coming accidentally into an Houſe to ask for one, where they were actually Searching, tho' I ſaw the Conſtable at the Door, and Lights in the Houſe, yet I went in and asked, if ſuch an one was within? I think this Confidence will not rationally ſuppoſe me guilty, the Houſe being under Suſpicion.

L. C. J. Here is no Proof of all this.

Marſhal. All that were there know it: Sir William Waller, which took me, knows it.

L. C. J. Sir William Waller, is this ſo?

Sir William Waller. My Lord, when I came to ſearch the Houſe, I placed one at the Door, and him I ordered to let whoever would come in, but no Perſon whatſoever go out. When I was ſearching, this Perſon comes and knocks at the Door, but did not know, I ſuppoſe, of any Perſon ſearching in the Houſe; for when the Door was opened, and he let in, and underſtood it, he preſently endeavoured to get away again.

Marſhal. By your Favour, my Lord, I am very loth to contradict what Sir William Waller ſays in any thing, I would willingly believe him a juſt Perſon, that would ſay nothing but the Truth, but God Almighty is my Witneſs that I never knocked, the Door was open, and I came in of my own Accord, both in at the firſt and the ſecond Door. This the Conſtable will teſtify.

L. C. J. And you would not have gone away again if you could, would you?

Marſhal. I will give you better Proof of it: While they were ſearching in an interior Room (and this is well known by them all that were there) I was in an outward Room by my ſelf, this Sir William Waller knows, and when they came back and found me there, the Conſtable and the reſt wondered I was not gone. I was left alone by the Door, by my ſelf; the outward Door I found open, and there is another Door which leads out into an Alley, which any Man can open in three Minutes time, and I know how to do it. Now I could not learn it ſince I was taken, for I have not been permitted to go abroad, but been under cloſe Confinement. But if it be worth the while, and you will give me leave to go there, I can ſhew you how 'tis opened in leſs Time than I can ſpeak Three Words.

L. C. J. Would you have the Jury ſtay here while you go and ſhew us the Door? If you have any Witneſſes to prove it, call them. Come, to the Purpoſe, Man.

Marſhal. My Lord, I ſay, if it were worth the while, that it might be made appear, that if I would go away, I could, but I did not get away, but ſtayed with a great deal of Confidence, my Lord; therefore I urge this to the Point, that Mr. Oates is miſtaken. After I had been there a while before Mr. Oates, Sir William Waller wiſhed me to withdraw, and after I had been abſent a while and came back again, Sir William Waller wiſhed me to pluck off my Perriwig, and turn my Back to him and Mr. Oates; I did not then well understand the Meaning of it. But afterwards Sir William Waller, out of his great Civility, came to see me at the Gate-house, and brought with him two very worthy Persons, Sir Philip Matthews and Sir John Cutler. Sir Philip Matthews upon Discourse hearing me declare that Mr. Oates was a Perfect Stranger to me, said, That Mr. Oates, in Testimony that he knew me, had given such a certain Mark behind in my Head. I told Sir Philip Matthews, if he pleased to pluck off my Perriwig, he should see whether there was any such Mark or no; but he being an extraordinary civil Person, told me, he would not give me the Trouble. I desire Mr. Oates to declare now beforehand, what that Mark was behind my Head, and if there be such a Mark, 'tis some Evidence that his Testimony is true; but if there be no such, then it will appear to this honourable Court and the Jury, that he did not know me, but was mistaken in the Man.

L. C. J. I suppose he does not know you so much by the Mark behind your Head, as by that in your Forehead.

Marshal. But why did he then speak of the Mark behind my Head?

Mr. Recorder. How does that appear, that he did give such a Mark?

Sir William Waller. I shall give your Lordship a short Account what was done: When I brought him to Mr. Oates, I did desire indeed to see his Perriwig off, to see if there were any Appearance of a shaven Crown. After that I had done that, I caused him to withdraw till I had taken Mr. Oates's Examination upon Oath, and after I had taken that, I desired him to come in again, and I read it to him, and taxed him with it, to which he gave a general Denial to every Particular, and thereupon I committed him to the Gate-house.

L. C. J. What is this to the Business of the Mark?

Sir William Waller. I do not know of any Mark; but this I do know, that as soon as ever he came in, Mr. Oates called him by his Name.

Marshal. I desire Sir Philip Matthews may be called.

Mr. Recorder. He is not here: What would you have with him?

Marshal. To ask, if he did not know in particular, that the Mark was such a Spot behind my Head? Hath he not been here to Day?

Mr. Recorder. I can't tell that.

L. C. J. But he called you by your Name, before ever you plucked off your Perriwig; so saith Sir William Waller.

Marshal. That which I was to shew, if I could, and truly all my Defence lies upon it, is, that Mr. Oates is a perfect Stranger to me, and consequently hath nothing against me. Now if Mr. Oates did give a false Mark to know me by, and there is no such Mark, I think 'tis a Proof that he is mistaken.

L. C. J. Sir William Waller says the contrary, he called you by your Name, and there was no Mark mentioned; but if you will suppose what you please, you may conclude what you list.

Marshal. Sir William Waller plucked off my Perriwig, and bid me turn my Back to him.

L. C. J. That was to see whether you were shaven, or no.

Marshal. Sir William Waller had not so little Knowledge, as to think that the Priests go shaven here in England, where 'tis Death for them, if they be discovered. Besides, my Lord, it was put in the Common News-Books which were dispersed abroad in the Country, that it was a white Lock behind. Well, if there be any thing of Favour or Inclination to Mercy in the Court, I shall find it; but if there be none, it will not succeed, tho' I spoke ten thousand times over; nay, tho' it were spoken by the Tongue of Men or Angels it would do me no good; therefore I inforce it again to the Jury to take notice of, that there was a particular Mark given.

L. C. J. That you have not proved.

Marshal. My Lord, I would beseech you to take notice of what every Man knows, and 'tis against Reason to believe, that Sir William Waller, knowing the World so well as he is supposed to do, should think we went with shaven Crowns in England.

L. C. J. And therefore Dr. Oates must look for another Mark, must he, how does that appear?

Marshal. All England know, that those who go over to any Seminary or Cloister, never come over again to England till their Hair be grown out, that it may be no Mark or Testimony that they are such Persons.

L. C. J. Do you think all Mankind knows that?

Marshal. All that is rational does.

L. C. J. Well, you hear what Sir William Waller says.

Marshal. I always looked upon Sir William Waller as a very learned upright Person, and did rely upon what he should testify for my Defence, and he knows when Dr. Oates brought in his first Testimony against me, I did beg that what he said should be written down by him. Said Sir William Waller, it shall not be written down, but I will promise you to remember what he says. Now I hope Sir William Waller, as an honest and worthy Gentleman, will keep his Word, and I desire him to do it, as he will answer it before God at the Great Tribunal.

L. C. J. Ask him what you will. You adjure him, and yet you wont ask him.

Marshal. Now, my Lord, I'll tell you how Mr. Oates came to know my Name (which is another Proof that he is a Stranger to me.) When I came first in, I asked Mr. Oates if he knew me? and looking seriously upon me, he asked me what my Name was? Now we knowing no more of a Man's Thoughts but what his Words discover, it may seem by that very Question that Mr. Oates was a perfect Stranger to me. Now when I told him my Name was Marshal, he was pleased to answer, You are called Marsh. But my Lord, I should consider that which hath been before offered to your Lordship, but that I do not much insist upon, that if Mr. Oates had a Commission to search for Priests and Traitors, he was as well bound to tell you I was a Priest as a Traitor; that is an Argument for me, I say. If he had a Commission to apprehend Priests, I conceive, if he knew us to be Priests, he should by Force of such a Commission have seized upon us.

L. C. J. He needed no Commission to do that, he did search to find out Traitors.

Marshal. He heard us particularly named, looks upon us, goes away, denies that he knows us, gives us leave to sleep out our Sleep, and if we would to be gone. Therefore 'tis without any Likelihood or Probability that he had any thing to say against us.

L. C. J. You have not proved one Word of all this.

Marshal.

Marſhal. He owned it himſelf, that he had ſearched the Savoy for Traitors, and did not take us. I ſpeak this out of his own Mouth, therefore it is incredible, and I hope the Jury will take notice of it: He was ſearching for Traitors, and knowing me to be a Notorious Traitor, as he would have me to be, that he ſhould find me in Bed, have His Majeſty's Officers with me, and not ſeize upon me.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. It does not appear to us, you have not proved it.

L. C. J. Sir William Waller, did he ſay firſt, Do you know me? and then Oates ask his Name?

Sir William Waller. I ſpeak ſolemnly, as in the Preſence of God, there was not one Word of all this.

Corker. I beſeech you, may I ſpeak one Word?

L. C. J. Have you done, Mr. Marſhal?

Marſhal. Truly my Lord, I am aſtoniſhed, I proteſt and confeſs before God I am aſtoniſhed. There is Mr. Gill the Conſtable who owned this, and promiſed to be here to atteſt it, for there was a diſpute about it between Dr. Oates and me: for ſaid I preſently, if you took me in Bed and knew me to be a Traitor, why did you not ſeize me? he anſwered me again expreſly, before Sir William Waller, I had no Commiſſion then to ſeize you: but ſaid I, you acknowledge I was then a Conſpirator, and ſuch your Commiſſion was to ſeize. You might have declared to the Officers you knew me to be a Traitor, and have bid them take charge of me: 'tis impoſſible that you ſhould ſo well know it and not do it, ſure.

L. C. J. Was there any ſuch thing as this, Sir William Waller.

Sir William Waller. Really my Lord, I do not remember any thing of it.

L. C. J. Mr. Marſhal call your Witneſſes.

Marſhal. Is Mr. Gill the Conſtable here, he owned it. I think I had as good make an end, I may leave it here, for what I ſhall ſay I find will be to little Purpoſe.

L. C. J. You do not prove what you affirm.

Marſhal. My Lord, I do not go as Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow do, who bring no Circumſtance of Probability or Likelihood, they only ſay they were ſuch a time amongſt ſuch and ſuch Perſons, and ſuch and ſuch things were agreed, but ſhew no probability of it. But I inſtance in ſuch things as do carry a probability in themſelves, and I name thoſe that were by.

L. C. J. And have no Proof of it in the World. And what you call Sir William Waller for, he ſays the contrary, there was no ſuch thing.

Marſhal. I ſay, my Lord, what he ſays is to my great aſtoniſhment. Do you remember, Sir William Waller, this, that Mr. Oates ſaid there, when he was asked if he ſaw me laſt Summer. I ſaw you not only in Auguſt, but in June and July.

Sir W. Waller. I remember ſomething of that.

Marſhal. I humbly thank you, Sir, for acknowledging that.

L. C. J. What uſe do you make of that?

Marſhal. I ſhall make uſe of that. The Diſpute was ſo eminent betwixt us that it was impoſſible to forget it.

L. C. J. Well, have you done, Mr. Marſhal?

Marſhal. No, my Lord, tho' I had as good hold my Peace. I could not have Witneſſes to diſprove Mr. Oates in particulars of Time and Place, becauſe I could not forſee what Time or Place he would name. My Lord, I had Witneſſes here at the the time of my laſt Trial to prove and ſwear, if they might be admitted, that I was here neither in June, nor July, or Auguſt, but ſpent ſome Months at a Place called Farnborough in Warwick-ſhire.

L. C. J. Can you prove this?

Marſhal. I can prove that I had ſuch as would have proved it then. Now, my Lord, this is that I ſay, if the Court be inclined to any Favour or Mercy: Life being a thing of ſuch concern, I hope ſome little Stop may be allowed to have ſome time to bring ſuch People, but if there be no inclination to Mercy, it would be the ſame thing if the Proof were here.

L. C. J. The Court will do you all Juſtice here, and that is their Mercy.

Marſhal. I am confident I ſhall have great Juſtice done me, I would not have ſaid one Word in my Defence if I did not believe ſo, I took heart by what your Lordſhip had ſaid, and I have already done that which I thought moſt material for it. I have urged firſt the falſe Mark that he gave to know me by. And then his taking me in Bed and diſowning to know me, beſides Mr. Oates hath been poſitive in his Teſtimony about the 21th of Auguſt, I could not now have Witneſſes to diſprove that, becauſe I knew it not before, but I can have ſeveral Witneſſes to prove, that I had then Witneſſes to prove it, ſufficient Witneſſes from Farnborough, who were ſure and certain that I was that very Day there, and would inſtance in ſome particular Reaſons why I was there that Day. And then theſe Witneſſes will ſwear that I was never from thence for three Months at any diſtance, but twice at a Neighbours Houſe, and they can tell the Places where I was then.

L. C. J. You come and tell us what other Folks could tell, why have you not them here? Can the Jury take notice of this.

Marſhal. I hope you will not throw away my Life, when in three Days time I could bring Witneſſes to prove it.

L. C. J. Then we muſt throw away the Lives of the Jury, for they muſt be kept faſting all thoſe Days till they give in their Verdict; for they muſt be ſhut up till then.

Marſhal. My Lord, with your leave, there have been thoſe that have been upon their Trials, and ſent back to Priſon before the Jury have given a Verdict, and after tried again.

L. C. J. North. Ay, if they be diſcharged quite of you.

L. C. J. I tell you the Jury muſt be kept together cloſe, till they give their Verdict.

Marſhal. The Jury was not kept up when Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick were Tried, and they were afterwards Tried again.

L. C. J. The Jury were wholly diſcharged of them.

Marſhal. If you have any regard of my Life you may diſcharge them of me.

L. C. J. Truly this is as reaſonable as any thing you have offered.

Marſhal. If your Lordſhip believe what I ſay is true, you throw away my Life unleſs you grant me this time, I ſhould be a very infamous Man if I did not prove it then.

L. C. J. If the Jury believe it I am ſatisfied.

Marſhal. My Lord, I ſhould then come full of Shame, if I did not prove what I ſay, therefore I hope the Court will allow me time to prove what I affirm, that that particular Day, and the Day before, and the Day after I was in the Country, try, and ſtirr'd not. And then as to the Day before the Aſſumption which he Charges upon me, and the Day after, I can bring Witneſſes to prove I was thoſe three Days at another Houſe almoſt 50 Miles off London, ſo there is nothing in all that is ſaid againſt me by Mr. Oates which comes to be determinative and poſitive in his Teſtimony, but I can diſprove it if time be allowed me, but if that cannot, I can bring ſuch Proof as can teſtifie, that I had before, thoſe that could Evidence it.

Corker. I told your Lordſhip, I think, that the Conſtables and other Perſons that came there to take Pickering, ſaid they knew nothing of me, and had nothing to ſay to me. Your Lordſhip tells me this I ought to prove. I muſt confeſs I could not expect that, when there were ſo many, an hundred People at leaſt, that all thoſe People coming in I ſhould be put to prove it. But here is a Servant that was in the Houſe then, that will tell you the ſame, that will atteſt they ſaid they had nothing to ſay to me.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Call any of your Witneſſes that you have.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Mr. Corker, you remember that the laſt time you were here at the Bar, you deſired time becauſe you had not your Witneſſes, it is now above a Month ago, and therefore you have no Reaſon to ſay your Witneſſes are not ready. Let us ſee them, that we may ſee you did not abuſe us.

Mr. Recorder. Who were the Perſons that were then at Tunbridge?

Corker. I tell you ſincerely, my Lord, I did not know what they would ſay, but then I did take notice when my Accuſation was read againſt me, That there was a time mentioned of the 24th of April, that I conſpired the Killing of the King. Now I could prove the contrary of that I thought, for I did remember, and ſo my Friends know very well, that always in the Spring time I go once or twice, moſt commonly about Thirty Miles out of Town to take the Air. So my Lord, from that Obſervation I did really believe I was actually there at that time; and from this belief I did then tell your Lordſhip, that I thought I could bring Witneſſes that would prove I was at that Place then. According to your Lordſhip's Order I ſent for the Gentlewoman that kept the Houſe, and ſhe coming up I asked her, Miſtreſs, ſaid I, can you tell when I was at Tunbridge; ſaid ſhe, I believe you were there about or near April, but that is not the thing, ſaid I, I ask you, can you poſitively ſay that it was either before or after the 24th, can you give me any determinate Circumſtance of it. She could not ſwear, nor durſt, what Day I was there exactly; then, ſaid I, go back again, for I reſolved to die in my Innocency without Proof, rather then my Witneſſes ſhould ſpeak what was falſe or doubtful.

Marſhal. I deſire that one Thomas Sumner may be called. He was the Man that went down to fetch up the Witneſſes from Farnborough.

Mr. Recorder. What is your Witneſs, Mr. Corker.

Corker. My Witneſs's Name is Ellen Rigby [Who ſtood up.]

L. C. J. What is it you ask her?

Corker. I deſire ſhe may be asked, whether ſhe knows that I was in the Houſe when the Search was in the Savoy, when Mr. Pickering was taken? and whether then they charged me, or ſaid I was a Perſon that they had nothing at all to do with.

Marſhal. And me the ſame.

L. C. J. Do you hear the Queſtion?

Corker. Was not I in the Savoy when Pickering was taken?

Marſhal. And I?

Rigby. Yes, you were both in Bed then.

Corker. Are you ready to ſwear it, if my Lord will permit you?

Rigby. Yes. And the Company that came in never asked for you, but when they ſaw you, ſaid they had nothing to do with you.

L. C. J. Who ſaid ſo?

Rigby. The Company that came and ſearched the Houſe for Pickering.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Oates there?

Rigby. Yes, my Lord, Mr. Oates was there.

L. C. J. Did he ſay that he had nothing to ſay to them?

Rigby. Several of them did ſay ſo, and he among them. They asked me who were in the Houſe, I told them ſeveral. They ſaid they had nothing to do with any but with Mr. Pickering.

L. C. J. North. Who did you tell were in the Houſe?

Rigby. I told them there was Pickering, Marſh, Heskett, Corker, Smaydon the Porter and his Wife, two Children, &c.

Corker. Now 'tis incredible he ſhould ſearch for Traitors, and, as he ſays, knew us to be ſuch, and ſhould not ask for us: Nay, when he ſaw us, leave us there, and never bid the Officer ſecure us.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. Who did ask you the Queſtion?

Rigby. There were five or ſix, Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow.

Corker. I deſire to know this of you, Have you not heard all along that Mr. Stapleton is Preſident of the Benedictines, and how long he hath been ſo, for ſhe was Houſekeeper?

Marſhal. Who is Preſident of the Benedictines?

Rigby. Mr. Stapleton.

Corker. How long hath he been ſo?

Rigby. Four Years and a quarter, for any thing I know to the contrary.

L. C. J. In his abſence, who was?

Rigby. I know not who,

L. C. J. Did not Corker officiate?

Rigby. Never in his life.

L. C. J. Do you know who did?

Rigby. I can tell he did not.

Corker. Pray ask her if ſhe knows of any Conſult of the Jeſuits in the Benedictine Convent?

L. C. J. How ſhould ſhe know that? was ſhe one?

Corker. Becauſe there can none come to the Houſe but ſhe muſt entertain them; there was no other Servant at all but ſhe.

Marſhal. Now, my Lord, ſince ſhe is here, let her ſee Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow; ask her whether ever ſhe ſaw them in the Houſe in her life.

Rigby. I ſaw Mr. Oates in the Houſe; he came a begging to Mr. Pickering for Charity.

L. C. J. What was the time?

Rigby. This Summer was Twelvemonth: And Mr. Pickering bid me ſhut the Door, and never let that Man come in again.

Marſhal. That was in the very heat of the Plot, the very nick of time when he was employed to carry on the Conſpiracy, as he ſays; and that then we ſhould ſuffer him to be in ſuch Neceſſity; and ſent away with a Flea in his Ear, when he could gain ſuch Advantages by diſcovering us: Is it likely that we would truſt him with the whole whole Plot, and yet ſuffer him to want? I appeal to your Lordſhip and the Jury whether that be probable?

Then Sumner appeared and ſtood up.

L. C. J. What ſay you to him?

Marſhal. I deſire he may be asked, whether he does not know that here were Witneſſes to teſtifie I was then at Farnborough.

L. C. J. That is not a Queſtion to be asked, what another Body can Swear.

Marſhal. He was ſent down, my Lord, to fetch the Witneſſes up.

L. C. J. Well, to ſatisfie you we will ask the Queſtion, tho' it be improper: Were you ſent down for Witneſſes?

Sumner. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why did not they come?

Sumner. They did come.

L. C. J. Why are they not here? The laſt Seſſions was adjourned particularly to a certain Day, and you knew when you were to be tried.

Mr. Recorder. For this very Reaſon, That all might take notice of it, it was adjourn'd to the 16th. Day at this place.

Marſhal. Your Lordſhip does ſuppoſe we have a better Purſe than we have: Would you have them leave their Employments, and come up, and be at great Charges? 'tis not in the Capacity of every one to endure it?

L. C. J. What would you have us do in this caſe?

Marſhal. What is but Reaſonable, Give me but three or four Days time, and I can have my Witneſſes up.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. I pray ask them whether they were not told of the time of their Tryal?

L. C. J. Why did not you ſend for them before, when you knew what Day it was to be?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You knew as much before as you do now. If you did not, what did you ſend for them up for then, more than now?

Corker. There was no certainty at all of the time when we ſhould be Tried. We were told it was near, but not the very Day; ſome ſaid the 12th, ſome the 14th, ſome the 16th, ſome not at all.

Mr. Recorder. You muſt not ſay ſo; for notice was publickly given here that it ſhould not be till the 16th, and the Seſſions was adjourned till then.

Marſhal. I was told it would be two or three Days after laſt Term. I confeſs God Almighty hath been pleaſed to give me a long Impriſonment to prepare for my laſt Cloſe. I do not fear Death tho' it ſhould appear in far more frightful Shapes, than that we may be like to ſuffer. So, my Lord, it is not ſo much a Concernedneſs for my own Life, as for the Honour and Juſtice of the Court, that I plead for a Reſpite to have Witneſſes that may poſitively and particularly diſprove the Teſtimony of Mr. Oates. And all the World will think it an hard Caſe when I do atteſt and call to Witneſs ſuch as have a great Probability to prove what I ſay to be true; when I can have ſuch a numerous Train of Witneſſes to prove that I was that particular Day threeſcore Miles out of London, and would poſitively ſwear it, if permitted. It will be hard, and will, I fear, draw an heavy cenſure upon this Honourable Court, if ſome time be not allowed.

L. C. J. It cannot be allow'd you, for then we muſt tie up the Jury, and make them faſt all the time.

Marſhal. You may diſcharge them of me.

L. C. J. We cannot do it now.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. There is no reaſon for it now, for you had time for your Witneſſes before. What, do you come here to make a great Harangue about Witneſſes which you had, and did not bring them?

L. C. J. Did you know they would come to prove, to any Day?

Marſhal. I know they could prove ſuch a Day.

L. C. J. Why then were they not here?

Marſhal. Pray, my Lord, give me leave. I hope I ſhall not ſpeak more than is reaſonable and juſt, and then I care not how it ſucceeds. Every Judge is as much obliged to follow his Conſcience, as any Formality in Law.

L. C. J. Pray teach your own Diſciples, don't teach us: You come and talk here what regard we are to have to our own Conſciences, as if we did not know that better than any Papiſt or Prieſt in the World.

Marſhal. I ſuppoſe that, and 'tis rational too. And I do ſuppoſe that this Bench is infinitely juſt and merciful, and upon that ſuppoſition I plead. Then if there be great reaſon to believe that I can diſprove Mr. Oates in his poſitive Teſtimony, then there is great reaſon to believe that I can ſave my Life. And if there be reaſon to believe that I can ſave my Life, I ſuppoſe there will be more regard to this than to any Formality of Law Be pleaſed to ask him, whether he were not to fetch Witneſſes that could atteſt this.

L. C. J. What can you ſay?

Sumner. I went down into the Country for Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Why did you not bring them up againſt this time?

Sumner. I had no Order for this time.

Marſhal. We did not know when we ſhould be tried.

Cl. of the Peace. My Lord, I did tell the Meſſenger when the Seſſions was.

L. C. J. Did the Officers here acquaint you when the Seſſions was.

Sumner. I had order from Captain Richardſon at firſt, I did ask leave to go down to fetch his Witneſſes; ſays Captain Richardſon, you have order to do what he ſhall direct, to provide him his Witneſſes; that was for the laſt, not for this.

L. C. J. How far were the Witneſſes off?

Sumner. Threeſcore Miles.

L. C. J. Why, you have had notice long enough of your Trials, to get up Witneſſes threeſcore Miles.

Mr. Recorder. Capt. Richardſon, Did not you tell the Priſoners when their Trials would be?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. They had all notice of the Seſſions by the Adjournment, and ſhould have provided for it.

Capt. Richardſon. Ever ſince the laſt Seſſions they have all of them had the Permiſſion of any People to come to them in order to the preparing for their Trials.

L. C. J. As when?

Capt. Richardſon. As for this Seſſions.

L. C. J. Firſt you did know that the Seſſions did begin on Wedneſday; if you had prepared your ſelves againſt Wedneſday, you had been delayed but for two Days.

Marſhal. But how could I prepare Witneſſes for that which I did not know would be teſtified againſt me?

L. C. J. Why did you prepare them for the laſt Trial? why had you not the ſame Witneſſes you had then?

Marſhal. Becauſe it was upon ſomewhat he had ſaid upon my taking, that he ſaw me in June and July, I did provide Witneſſes for it.

Mr. J. Pemb. He holds to the very Day he ſaid firſt, and this is but plain trifling.

L. C. J. Truly, if the merit of your Cauſe be no better than ſuch weak Aſſertions, your Defence is but very poor.

Marſhal. But that I humbly offer, is this, whether you will believe I can have ſuch Witneſſes, and therefore ſtay till they be ſent for.

Mr J. Dolb. We have no Reaſon to believe you.

Mr. J. Wyndham. We have no Reaſon to believe you, when you have had time to prove it, and have not got them.

L. C. J. Why were they not here now?

Marſhal. My Lord, I do give you a double Reaſon. Then, my Lord, I offer this, that my Name is in no Liſt, Paper, nor Narrative that ever was put forth; and if I had been Guilty, as he ſays, would not he have named me amongſt the other Conſpirators?

L. C. J. No, I think he ſhould not, it would have given you Notice, and too much Opportunity to have gone away.

Marſhal. He gave me leave, when he left me in my Bed.

L. C. J. But yet for all that it does not prove your Innocency. All People that are Guilty, don't run away for it, for you have abundance of Prieſt-holes, and hiding-holes. Well, have you any more Witneſſes? if you have, Call them.

Corker. Call Alice Broadhead [but She did not preſently appear;] then I deſire Mrs. Eliz. Sheldon may be called; [Who being in the Gallery, anſwered and came down.]

Marſhal. I do deſire to know whether ſhe knows who is Preſident of the Benedictine Monks?

L. C. J. Who is Preſident of the Benedictines, Miſtreſs? Sheldon. Mr. Stapleton.

L. C. J. How many Years hath he been?

Sheldon. A great many Years, my Lord, to my Knowledge. L. C. J. How many?

Sheldon. Four or five Years.

Mr. Recorder. Where is Dr. Oates? call him.

L. C. J. But if he were abſent did not Mr. Corker officiate in his place?

Sheldon. Never, my Lord.

Corker. Mr. Stapleton was actually at Paris when I was there, and therefore I could not officiate in his ſtead; there is another that can teſtifie the ſame, that is, Alice Broadhead, [Who appeared then.] Pray ask her the ſame Queſtion.

L. C. J. Who is Preſident of the Benedictines?

Broadhead. Mr. Stapleton, I have known him for many Years, and there hath not been for a great many Years any other.

Corker. Then I do deſire that I may obſerve this, That Mr. Oates doth ſeem to accuſe me poſitively of nothing, but only of conſenting to the Benedictines Contribution of 6000 l. which he ſays they could not do without my leave, becauſe I was their Preſident; but I have brought three Witneſſes which ſay, and are ready to ſwear, that Mr. Stapleton is Preſident, was ſo theſe many Years, and I never was ſo in my Life.

Mr. Recorder. Here is Dr. Oates again now.

[But he was not Examined.]

L. C. J. Have you done now, all Three?

Sir Geo. Wakeman. I ſay, my Lord, I find that it was imputed to me, at leaſt as a ſin of omiſſion, that when I was before the Council, I did not ſufficiently deteſt, and abominate, and abhor this Crime that is laid to my Charge. I now deteſt, abhor, and abominate the Fact charged on me. I call God to Witneſs, I never was in any Conſultation about it in my Life, I never received any Bill for any Money upon this account, nor did ever receive any Money.

L. C. J. Had not you Two Thouſand Pounds.

Sir Geo. Wakeman. No, my Lord, I wiſh I may never enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, if I received one Farthing for any ſuch thing.

Corker. He ſays, that I was employed in diſtributing Moneys; and I profeſs before God, I never diſtributed any Money upon ſuch Account; all that I had was an Annual Annuity which I gave amongſt the Poor. I proteſt before God, I never in my my Life did deliver or hold it as a matter of Faith or commendable Doctrine, That it was lawful for the promoting of the Catholick Religion, to Murder the King, or deſtroy my Country. And I renounce and deteſt it from the bottom of my Soul. And this is all can be expected from a good Chriſtian upon that account; and I hope the Jury will have no prejudice againſt me for that; and neither Pope or any breathing upon Earth can diſpence with me from that Obligation.

Marſhal. And if no Door can be opened for a merciful Sentence upon any Conſideration offered by the Living; at the loud Cries of the dying, I hope there may; and all the earneſt Vows, and all thoſe ſolemn Proteſtations of Innocency by ſuch as were lately Executed for the Crimes we ſtand here charg'd with, left behind them as ſacred Teſtimonies of their Loyalty and unviolated Faith to the King. And I beg leave to put before the Eyes of this Honourable Court, and this whole Aſſembly, this Landskip of Horror, wherein may be ſeen thoſe Caves of Darkneſs, thoſe Baths of glowing Sulphur, ſuch Men muſt be eternally judged to be condemned unto, if what they then ſpoke had not the Characters of the faireſt Truth found inſtamped upon it. Now if a right Survey be taken of this Landskip, and it be well obſerved what theſe Men ſo ſolemnly ſigned and ſealed to with their laſt Breath, it muſt be confeſſed they either conſpired finally to damn their own Souls, or were not Conſpirators againſt the King, nor were they Guilty of what was charged upon them. Preſent Content, where the Enjoyment is like to continue, works with a ſtrong Influence upon humane Nature, and chains it faſt to the preſent World. But, my Lord, with the approach of Death, Reformation of Conſcience does offer to advance, and we do obſerve thoſe who have lived a very ill Life, frequently to make a good end; but, my Lord, it is a thing ſcarce ever heard of or known, that thoſe who have Lived all their Lives well, ſhould die ill. Nor can ſuch as were looked upon while they Lived as Perſons of much Integrity, great candor of of Spirit, and unqueſtionable truth in all their Atteſtations, Dying, ſhould become Prophane to Blaſphemy, become Irreligious even to Sacriledge, and falſe even to the worſt of Atheiſm. My Lord, this cannot readily be believed, or eaſily imagined; nor will be, tho' it be poſſible, and yet all that will not believe this, muſt own an Innocency where guilt is ſo ſtrongly ſuppoſed. And if there be great Cauſe to doubt whether thoſe that were lately executed, and were ſuppoſed to be Leaders in this Conſpiracy, were Guilty upon the Conſideration of thoſe ſolemn dying Proteſtations they have made to the contrary; I humbly conceive it may be much more rationally doubted, whether others brought in only by the by, as I am, as a Letter Carrier, and only as Marginal-Notes to the great Conſpirators, may not be wholly innocent. Now, my Lord, if no credit be to be given to the Proteſtaons of Men dying, that have ever been judged ſober and juſt; how can Faith be repoſed in the Teſtimony of ſuch Living Perſons as know no God nor Goodneſs? And if the reputed juſt Man at the very point of Death can be judged rationally falſe in his Proteſtations, tho' Death be in his Eyes, and Hell threatning to ingulph him; may not he, my Lord, who hath owned himſelf a Villain in print, be thought falſe in his Teſtimony, while Preferment tickles him, Rewards march before him, and Ambition beckons to him, which he greedily follows, tho' God and Conſcience tell him 'tis unjuſt.

England is become now a Mournful Theater, upon which ſuch a Tragedy is acted, as turns the Eyes of all Europe toward it; and the Blood which hath been already ſpilt, hath found a Channel to convey it even to the remoteſt Parts of the World. And tho' it inſpires different Breaſts with different Reſentments, yet it may ſpeak a Language that none who are Friends of England will be willing to underſtand. Our preſent Tranſactions here, are the preſent Diſcourſe and Entertainment of foreign Nations; and without all doubt will be chronicled and ſubjected to the cenſure of enſuing Ages. Now my Lord, I have great Reaſon to believe, That not any one of thoſe Honourable Perſons that now ſit Judges over us, would be willing to have their Names writ in any Characters, but thoſe of a juſt Moderation, of a profound Integrity, of an impartial Juſtice, and of a gracious Clemency. And tho' we would not be all thought to be well-wiſhers to the Roman Catholick Religion, yet we would be all thought Friends to Religion; and tho' we exclaim againſt Idolatry and new Principles of Faith, yet we all ſtand up for old Chriſtianity; whereas if the Teſtimony of Living Impiety be applauded and admitted of, and the Cries of Dying-honeſty ſcoffed at and rejected, what will become of old Chriſtianity? And if any Voice, Cry, or Proteſtation of Dying Men may paſs for Truth, and obtain belief, where is now our new Conſpiracy? The Queſtion now ſeems to come to this, the belief of Chriſtianity now in Roman Catholicks, and the Appearance of their Innocency, are ſo faſt linked together by thoſe ſolemn Vows and Proteſtations of their Innocency, made by the late Executed Perſons, that no Man can take up Arms againſt the Latter, but muſt proclaim War againſt the Former. Nor can our Innocency bleed, but our Chriſtianity muſt needs by the ſame Dart be wounded. Nor can any Tutelar Hand ſtretch it ſelf forth——

L. C. J. North. You ſpeak ad faciendum populum, and ſhould not be interrupted, but only I think you laſh out a little too much.

Marſhal. I ſpeak this to add the Teſtimony and ſolemn Vows of the Dying, to what we ſay Living for our own Defence. And I deſired they may be put in both together, and weighed in the Scales of an impartial Judgment. Now, my Lord, I ſay, the Queſtion ſeems not ſo much whether Roman Catholicks are Conſpirators, as whether indeed they be Chriſtians. Nor is it the great Doubt now whether they deſigned to kill the King, but whether they believe there is a God. For whoever grants this laſt, the belief of a God, of a Heaven, and an Hell, and conſiders what Aſſeverations they made at their Death, what ſolemn Proteſtations they inſiſted upon, does with the ſelf ſame breath proclaim them Innocent.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But Mr. Marſhal, will you go on to affront the Court in this Manner, to vouch for the Truth of their Speeches, which they made at the Gallows, and affirm them Innocent after they have been found Guilty, and executed according to Law?

Marſhal. My Lord, I do not avouch them Innocent, I only deſire there may be conſideration had, and that the Words of ſuch Dying Men may be thought of. If they did believe a God and a Judgment-Seat that they were going to, could they be Innocent and Chriſtians too?

L. C. J. I was loth to interrupt you becauſe you are upon your Lives, and becauſe 'tis fit you ſhould have as much Indulgence as can be allowed. Your Defence hath been very mean I tell you beforehand; your Cauſe looked much better before you ſpoke a Word in your own Defence, ſo wiſely have you managed it.

Mr. Recorder. But really for your particular Part Mr. Marſhal, you abound too much in your Flowers of Rhetorick which are all to no Puapoſe.

Marſh. I hop'd it would be no Offence to inſiſt——

L. C. J. But I will tell you, and I'll be heard as well as you, Sir; Becauſe of the Proteſtations of theſe Men, which you make ſo much a ſtir about. If you had a Religion that deſerved the Name of a Religion, if you were not made up of Equivocation and Lying, if you had not Indulgences and Diſpenſations for it, if to kill Kings might not be meritorious, if this were not printed and owned, if your Popes and all your Great Men had not avowed this, you had ſaid ſomething; but if you can have Abſolutions either for Money, or becauſe you have advanced the Catholick Cauſe as you call it, and can be made Saints as Coleman is ſuppoſed to be, there is an end of all your Arguments. There is a God, you ſay, and you think we ſhall go to that God becauſe he hath given us the Power, we can let our ſelves in and turn the Key upon Hereticks. So that if they kill a King, and do all the Wickedneſs they can deviſe, they ſhall go to Heaven at laſt: for you have a Trick, either you can directly pardon the killing of a King, or if you excommunicate him he is no King, and ſo you may kill him if it be for the Advancement of Religion. But it will be in vain for you or any Prieſt in England to deny this, becauſe we know you Print it and publickly own it, and no body was ever yet puniſhed for any ſuch Doctrine as this. Therefore all your doings being accompanied with ſuch Equivocations and Arts as your Religion is made up of, 'tis not any of your Rhetorick can make you be believed, I do believe it is poſſible for an Atheiſt to be a Papiſt, but 'tis hardly poſſible for a knowing Chriſtian to be a Chriſtian and a Papiſt. 'Tis hardly poſſible for any Man of underſtanding, ſetting aſide the Prejudices of Education, to be a Papiſt and a true Chriſtian, becauſe your Doctrines do contradict the Foundations of Chriſtianity. Your Doctrine is a Doctrine of Blood and Cruelty, Chriſt's Doctrine is a Law of Mercy, Simplicity, Gentleneſs, Meekneſs and Obedience; but you have nothing but all the Pride that ever a Pope can uſurp over Princes: and you are fill'd with Pride, and mad till you come again into the Poſſeſſion of the Tyranny which you once exerciſed here: in ſo much that 'tis ſtrange to me, but that Princes abroad think you more conducing to their Politick Intereſt, elſe ſure they could not endure ſuch Spiritual Tyranny to Lord it over their Souls and their Dominions. Therefore never bragg of your Religion, for it is a foul one, and ſo contrary to Chriſt; that 'tis eaſier to believe any thing, than to believe an underſtanding Man may be a Papiſt. Well, Sir, if you have any more to ſay, ſpeak it. You have provoked me to this: and indeed I ought to do it, becauſe you have ſo much reflected on the Juſtice of the Court: but if you have any thing to ſay in your your Defence, ſpeak it, or to your own particular Caſe. As for your Religion, we know what it is, and what merciful Men you are: and if we look into the bottom of you, we know what you were ever ſince Queen Mary's Days: and if we look into the Gunpowder-Treaſon, we know how honeſt you are in your Oaths, and what Truth there is in your Words, and that to blow up King, Lords and Commons, is with you a merciful Act, and a ſign of a candid Religion; but that is all a Story with you: for it is eaſier for you to believe, that a Saint, after her Head is cut off, did go three Miles with her Head in her Hand, to the Place where ſhe would be buried, than that there was a Gunpowder-Treaſon. [At which the People gave a Shout.]

L. C. J. North. You muſt not meddle any more with the Speeches of thoſe that died.

Marſhal. I did not intend, my Lord, to call any thing of Juſtice in queſtion.

L. C. J. What, do you think we will be impoſed upon in this manner? Perhaps you have Tricks enough to gull your own Party, but you have not to deceive Proteſtants; they can look thro' all your Arts; nay, I never ſaw ſuch Men of weak Parts as your Prieſts generally are; ſo that I wonder you ſhould have any Diſciples, but ſilly Women, or Men without Learning.

Marſhal. If we were guilty of this Conſpiracy, we ſhould gull only our ſelves.

L. C. J. Go you on with one Harangue, I warrant you I will give you another; you ſhall not be hindred to ſay any thing that is pertinent; but this is not at all ſo. We have a Bench of Aldermen have more Wit than your Conclave, and a Lord Mayor, that is as infallible as your Pope. Have you any thing more to ſay for your ſelves?

Marſhal. 'Tis not proper to contradict your Lordſhip, but 'is a wonder you ſhould know our Religion better than our ſelves; for I know not of any ſuch Doctrines owned amongſt us.

L. C. J. No! then I believe you have not read your own Books; I ſuppoſe that your Buſineſs is not now to read, but to ſeduce ſilly Women, or weaker Men. What, don't you publiſh them all over the World? Is there any Index expurgatorius, into which you have put theſe Doctrines? Surely you know not any thing, if you know not this.

L. C. J. North. If you have any thing more to ſay, in the proper Defence of your Trial, pray ſpeak it now.

Corker. As to thoſe damnable Doctrines, we profeſs our ſelves innocent of them. I deſire that the Jury may not go upon ſuch a Prejudice, that I entertain ſuch Principles of Religion, as Matters of my Faith. They are horrid Crimes, I proteſt againſt them, and own them not. I deſire the Jury to take Notice of it.

Marſhal. I have this further to offer to your Lordſhip, that Mr. Bedlow owned before the Lords that he knew no more to be guilty than he had declared, and among all thoſe I am not named; and this was a Month or ſix Weeks before I was taken.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. There is no ſuch thing at all proved here, or given in Evidence, and therefore why do you inſiſt upon it?

Marſhal. In this I appeal to the Knowledge of your Lordſhip: and if you know it, I hope you will be pleaſed to acquaint the Jury with it.

L. C. J. I do not know for my own particular, what Anſwer was made; I was not in the Houſe, nor do I know it.

Judges. None of us know it.

Marſhal. I deſire the worthy Jury to take Notice, that among all the Perſons named, there is no ſuch Name mentioned as mine.

Mr. J. Pembert. There is no ſuch Thing prov'd here.

Marſhal. They deny all the Lords Records.

L. C. J. Well, have you done? Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury——

Marſhal. I deſire but one Word: Theſe Things I have inſiſted upon as far as I can for my ſelf; but the main Matter I rely'd upon was, that Mr. Oates did not know me, neither as to my Calling, Converſation, Words nor Actions. He can bring no Perſon, Man nor Woman, that ever ſaw him in my Company, nor took notice of our meeting together, nor Bedlow neither; he can name no place where he ſaw me, none but the Savoy, againſt which no Proof can be found. And then at the ſearching of the Houſe, I deſire the Jury to take notice, that at that Time he diſowned us, and ſaid he did not know us. A ſufficient rational Cauſe cannot be given, why he ſhould ſay now he knows me, and did not then take me.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You have ſaid all this before.

Marſhal. Then, my Lord, for a Concluſion, I have been told, and I will only deſire the Jury to take notice of it, that every Jury that finds a Man guilty of Death, upon the Teſtimony of Witneſſes that come in againſt him, do take it ſolemnly upon their Conſciences, that what ſuch Witneſſes ſwear is true.

L. C. J. That they believe they ſwear true: For we have no Infallibility with us: 'Tis one thing to ſay 'tis true, and another thing to ſay we believe it is true. Look you, the Jury may give a Verdict that is falſe, and yet go according to their Conſciences. Do you underſtand that, Prieſt?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You need not teach the Jury what they are to do.

Marſhal. But conſidering in caſe an Oath be falſe, and the Jury have reaſon to doubt what the Priſoners ſay in their own Defence, upon what they hear or have learnt of their own Knowledge, if they find ſuch Doubt grounded upon that double Matter, then they are in great Danger to bring the Fault to their own Doors, and make the Crime of Perjury their own.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What, do you go over Things again and again?

L. C. J. All this ſignifies but little, if you had Popery here, you would get but little by it. We ſhould hardly part with our Peter Pence for all your Speeches. We all know what Things are, 'tis not a parcel of Words patch'd thus together, will do your Buſineſs.

Marſhal. I wiſh all Thoughts were as open-fac'd as ours are.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, here are four Priſoners; as to one of them, that is Rumley, the Truth of it is, there is but one Witneſs againſt him, and by the Law there ought to be two; ſo I cannot ſay, but you ought to diſcharge him: We do not find, that there is Teſtimony ſufficient, according to the Law, to condemn him, and therefore you ought to acquit him. As to the reſt, here is Sir George Wakeman, Mr. Corker, and Mr. Marſhal; there hath been two ſorts of Evidence given, I will repeat them as well as I can, and as ſhort as I can. There hath been a general Evidence, and a particular Evidence: There was a general Evidence given by Mr. Dugdale, of the Plot in general, and by Mr. Prance, and ſomething of Intimation by Mr. Jenniſon. Theſe of Dugdale, Prance, and Jenniſon do not mention ſo much as the Names of the three Gentlemen that are upon their Lives; but I'll tell you why it was neceſſary, and anſwers a great Objection that they ſeem to make: for you are to believe Men, ſay they, and to believe Men upon probable Circumſtances, ſomething to guide you you beſides the Poſitiveneſs of an Oath, and that is well enough ſaid. Now here is ſomething beſides, and that is the Plot; that there was a Conſpiracy to introduce Popery, by the likelieſt Means, which was to kill the King; and that ſuch People as theſe Men were to do it. Now that there was ſuch a general Deſign to do it, is a Circumſtantial Evidence, (as to theſe Men I call it ſo.) And theſe are Circumſtances which may anſwer the Objection they make, when they ſay, You are not to give Credit to poſitive Oaths, without any thing to govern you by; for you have this to govern you by, beſides the Oath, that there was a Plot.

The Teſtimony of Mr. Jenniſon does go more particularly to the Buſineſs of Ireland, which I would obſerve, by the way, for the ſake of that Gentleman that ſtands ſo much upon the Innocency of thoſe Men, and would have them to be believed upon their own Aſſertions, becauſe he ſays they dare not die with a Lye in their Mouths. I believe it is notorious enough, Mr. Jenniſon that comes here is a Man of Quality, and one againſt whom there is no Objection, and he is juſtified by one or two more. He ſays, he ſaw Mr. Ireland the 19th of Auguſt, when he, to his Death, took upon him to averr he was then in Staffordſhire, and brought ſeveral of his own Religion, who would outface it to the Court, that he kept them Company ſo many Days, and was in the Country all the while. There was a Maid, before this, that came and teſtified that ſhe ſaw Ireland, and ſaw him at his own Door, in Auguſt, but this Gentleman comes and proves it upon him more particularly, and tells you when, the Day of the Week, and of the Month, that he was with him at his own Lodging, that Night he came from Windſor, that he was pulling off his Boots, and pretended to come Poſt from Staffordſhire, and ſo that he was in Staffordſhire is true, becauſe he came thence Poſt, but he hath always conſtantly deny'd that he was here, and that may ſerve for the Integrity even of their dying Oaths. And you are not going, according to your own Doctrine, ſo immediately to Hell, I hope you ſuppoſe a Purgatory, where you may be purged from ſuch Peccadillo's as this of dying with a Lye in your Mouths.

As for the Teſtimony of the particular Evidence, firſt, againſt Sir George Wakeman, Mr. Oates ſays, he ſaw a Letter ſubſcribed, George Wakeman; and it was writ to Mr. Aſhby, and therein, among other Expreſſions, was this particular, That the Queen would aſſiſt him to kill the King. He was asked, How he knew it was his Hand? He ſaid, He had never ſeen his Hand before, but afterwards he ſaw him writing, (as he thinks, writing,) in a writing Poſture, and there he looked upon that Paper when he was gone from it, while it was wet, and that Character, to his thinking, was juſt the Character of the Letter. Now I muſt obſerve this to you: Firſt, ſuppoſing it to be true, yet it is ſomewhat hard, for a Man that had never known a Man's Hand in his Life, to ſee a Hand to Day, and ſometime after to come and ſee his Hand to a Bill of Phyſick, and to recollect the Character ſo much backward, as to know, this is that, or that, Man's Hand, that I ſaw before. 'Tis one thing to know Hands we are uſed to, but 'tis another thing, if we ſee a Hand that we never ſaw before in our Lives, and then by Reflection at another time, and by Compariſon of Hands, to ſay this is the ſame, that is hard; but that is ſuppoſing it to be true. Sir George Wakeman, as all People will that are accuſed, does deny the Fact, and ſays there was no ſuch thing. Againſt him beſides, he ſays he ſaw, in a Book that the Jeſuit Prieſts kept among them of their Tranſactions and Affairs, he ſaw, in Harcourt's Chamber, a Book, wherein was written, This Day, (and there was a certain Day in Auguſt named, but he cannot tell what Day,) This Day agreed with Sir G. W. for 15000 l. to which he conſented. And under was written, Receiv'd 5000 l. part of 15000 l. by Order of Mr. Coleman, George Wakeman. This he ſays he ſaw, and he believes that to be the very ſame Hand that he ſaw before, ſo it is by a Compariſon of Hands. He does not charge Sir George Wakeman, to the beſt of my Memory, with any poſitive Thing of his own Knowledge, more than as I tell you of this Matter.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes, my Lord, he ſays he ſaw his Commiſſion.

L. C. J. Indeed he does ſay, he ſaw a Commiſſion in his Hands, to be Phyſician General of the Army that was to be raiſed. And that he denied 10000 l. and would have 15. The Truth I leave with you, Gentlemen. Look you, Gentlemen, we will ſhew ourſelves what we ought to do, let them be as they will; we would not, to prevent all their Plots, (let them be as big as they can make them) ſhed one Drop of innocent Blood. Therefore I would have you, in all theſe Gentlemens Caſes conſider ſeriouſly, and weigh truly the Circumſtances, and the Probability of Things charged upon them. There is an additional Evidence againſt Sir George Wakeman, by Bedlow: He ſays he ſaw him have a Note for 2000 l. which was ſaid came from the Queen, there were Diſcourſes of doubtful Words, but whether they be plain enough to ſatisfy your Conſciences, when Men are upon their Lives, I leave to you. That Sir George Wakeman ſhould ſay, Are you ready for me? why am I drill'd on thus in a Matter of this Concern? This he would have to imply the poiſoning of the King; but there is but one Thing that ſounds any thing plain to the Matter, and that was this; ſaid he, If they miſs (ſpeaking of killing the King) if they miſs at Windſor, and you miſs your Way, then it ſhall be done at New-Market. This he did ſwear directly, and then Sir George Wakeman reply'd, He would be ready. Now if you believe this, then there are two Witneſſes againſt Sir George Wakeman, for the Matter of the Bill alone would do nothing, but when he ſays he ſaw ſuch a Bill, it muſt be for ſomething, and if he did ſay ſo, if they miſs killing him at Windſor, and you miſs your Way, we will do it at New-Market; and he reply'd, I will be ready, the Thing is made plain; I leave it to you; and this is all the Evidence againſt Sir George Wakeman, as I remember: I hope my Brothers, if they remember more, will repeat it to you. I cannot undertake to repeat every Word, I remember ſo much as is material, and my Brothers, I hope, will help me out, in what they have better obſerved.

As to Mr. Corker, Oates ſays, that he ſaw a Letter under his Hand, that is, his Name, I ſuppoſe, was to it, wherein he conſented to the raiſing the 6000 l. which was to be raiſed out of the Benedictines Eſtates, and was in order to the carrying on of this Plot. I do not find that he does prove that he did know Mr. Corker's Hand. And he ſays of him further, he was their Preſident, and ſo it was neceſſary to have his Conſent for the raiſing the 6000 l. and particularly he ſays, that he did except againſt Pickering's being deſigned for the Murdering of the King; for ſaid he, He is a Man that waits at the Altar, and methinks you ſhould chooſe ſome fitter Perſon. For that, ſays Mr. Corker, which he ſays, That I was Preſident; I was not Preſident; and he makes it neceſſary for me to ſet my Hand, becauſe I being Preſident, it was ſuppoſed it could not be done without me; and Dr. Oates does intend ſuch a Thing by his inforcing of it too: But he does produce to you two or three Witneſſes, that do ſay, Mr. Stapleton hath been Preſident for 4 or 5 Years; and, ſaid he, If I were not Preſident, what needs all this ado about my Conſent? So he contradicts him in that Particular, ticular, that he was not Preſident, and it is not only a bare immaterial Thing, becauſe his being Preſident made his Hand more neceſſary to the raiſing the 6000 l. And for that Matter of his ſaying, that he did except againſt Pickering, and they might have choſe another, he does not charge him to be actually at the Conſultation, but he ſays he knew of it, becauſe he ſaid Pickering was not a fit Man to do it. And he ſaid, they had better chooſe a Layman. He proves no Fact, but only theſe Words. And Mr. Bedlow he ſpeaks againſt him, and what he ſays is rather leſs than what Oates ſays. For 'tis, that he talked with Le Fevre the Prieſt about the Plot in general Words. It may be, he was talking with ſome body elſe, and yet he could hear that they talked together in general about it. That is all againſt him.

Againſt Mr. Marſhal, 'tis rather leſs than againſt Corker, that is, that he did conſent to the 6000 l. that ſhould be raiſed among the Benedictines, he being a Benedictine too, and that he took Exceptions againſt Pickering, as Corker did, that it was not convenient to employ him in killing the King. And this is that Oates ſays, and that he was a Carrier of Letters up and down, and a Factor that Way. And Bedlow ſays, that he knew that he carried Letters, and was at the Conſult where they were read and anſwered, and when they asked him, Where? He ſaid, At the Benedictine Convent in the Savoy. And names in particular, a Letter to Sir Francis Radcliff, and that there was a Diſcourſe concerning the Plot, in his hearing.

They ſay for themſelves, they cannot anſwer any more than by Circumſtances, 'Tis a very ſtrange thing, if Dr. Oates knew this of us, why did not he take us before? And ſays Sir Geo. Wakeman, Why did not he accuſe me of this Letter that he talks of, before the King and Council? He makes an Anſwer, which to me indeed is a very faint one, as if he were ſo weak and tired, that he could not ſpeak any Word farther. When the Council asked Sir Geo. Wakeman what he had to ſay for himſelf, and he behaved himſelf ruggedly, they call for Oates again, What, ſaid they, do you know any thing of your own Knowledge? No, ſaid he, God forbid, I know nothing more; as Sir Philip Lloyd ſays, and as the Matter ſpeaks: For if he had charged him that he had ſeen that Letter, the Lords would infallibly have committed him. If he had but ſaid, I ſaw a Letter with his Name to it, which by the Character I believe was his, becauſe I ſaw his Writing elſewhere. And 'tis wonderful to me; I don't know, if a Man be never ſo faint, could not he ſay, I ſaw a Letter under his hand, as well as, I knew nothing more of him? there are as few Words in one, as in the other. If he had ſaid, I beg your Lordſhips or His Majeſty's Pardon, I am ſo weak I cannot recollect my ſelf, it had been ſomething, but to make a great Proteſtation that he knew nothing of him. This is that that is ſaid by Sir Philip Lloyd, on his Behalf.

Theſe other Gentlemen ſay, that Oates did not know them, and the Woman does ſay, that ſhe did tell them, when they came to ſearch, that Corker and Marſhal were there, and Dr. Oates and they ſaid, they had nothing to do with any but Pickering. They make Anſwer now and ſay, that they had no Commiſſion to take any but him. But 'tis ſtrange indeed, if they were there, and they did ſee them, that they did not apprehend them. For what Defence they make about what Talk was had at the Gate-houſe, 'tis all contradicted by Sir William Waller. And indeed, if it were poſſible, they have almoſt undone themſelves in their own Defences, by making weak Obſervations, and inſiſting upon trivial Things; improper for the Court to hear, and impertinent for them to urge. But I deal faithfully with you, I will diſcharge my own Conſcience to you. It lies upon the Oaths of theſe two Men. Tho' there was a Plot in general proved, yet that does not affect theſe Men in particular, but was only uſed to anſwer that Objection, that it ſhould not be believed upon poſitive Swearing, Hand over Head, without ſomething elſe. Here was ſomething elſe, the Plot in general, and their being Prieſts, is another Circumſtance to me, who are mad to bring in Popery, and would do any thing to get their Tyranny again eſtabliſhed amongſt us. And there is more than probable Evidence of that I aſſure you.

Sir Tho. Doleman did indeed ſay Mr. Oates was very weak, ſo that he was in great Confuſion, and ſcarce able to ſtand, weigh it with you how it will, but to me 'tis no Anſwer. I tell you plainly, I think a Man could not be ſo weak, but he could have ſaid, he ſaw a Letter under his Hand. It was as ſhort as he could make an Anſwer, and 'tis ſtrange that he ſhould go and make Proteſtation that he knew nothing. And ſo I pray you weigh it well, let us not be ſo amazed and frighted with the noiſe of Plots, as to take away any Man's Life without any reaſonable Evidence. If you are ſatisfied with the Oaths of theſe two Men ſo, I have obſerved to you what Objections they make for themſelves, and thoſe Objections are material: what Sir George Wakeman ſays about his not accuſing him before the Council, and what theſe Men ſay that he did not apprehend them. And 'tis very ſtrange, they ſhould have ſo little Knowledge and ſo little Acquaintance with Oates and Bedlow, and ſo great a Matter as they ſpeak ſhould be true. And 'tis well enough obſerved, that he was a begging there; 'tis very much that ſuch a Man ſhould know of ſuch a great Deſign on Foot, and they ſhould uſe him in that manner. Theſe are the Things that I remember, worthy of your Conſideration. Theſe Mens Bloods are at ſtake, and your Souls and mine, and our Oaths and Conſciences are at ſtake; and therefore never care what the World ſays, follow your Conſciences; if you are ſatisfied theſe Men ſwear true, you will do well to find them Guilty, and they deſerve to die for it: If you are unſatisfied, upon theſe Things put together, and they do weigh with you, that they have not ſaid true, you will do well to acquit them.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, my Evidence is not right ſumm'd up.

L. C. J. I know not by what Authority this Man ſpeaks.

Cl. of Cr. Make way for the Jury there; who keeps the Jury?

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury: the Judges went off the Bench, leaving Mr. Recorder and ſome Juſtices to take the Verdict. And after about an Hour's Space the Jury returned, and the Foreman coming up to the Table, ſpoke thus to Mr. Recorder.

Foreman. Sir, the Gentlemen of the Jury deſire to know, whether they may not find the Priſoners guilty of Miſpriſion of Treaſon?

Mr. Recorder. No, you muſt either convict them of High Treaſon, or acquit them.

Foreman. Then take a Verdict.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names, Ralph Hawtrey. Mr. Hawtrey. Here, &c.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict? Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you. Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. Sir George Wakeman, hold up thy Hand, (which he did,) Look upon the Priſoner, how ſay you, is he Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Capt. Richardſon. Down on your Knees.

Sir George Wakeman. God bleſs the King and the Honourable Bench.

And in like manner were the other Three acquitted. After the Verdict Recorded, the Court adjourn'd till 5 Afternoon.

The

THE TRYAL OF CHARLES KERNE,

At Hereford Aſſizes, for being a Romiſh Prieſt.

On* Monday the Fourth Day of Auguſt, at Hereford; Charles Kerne *was brought to the Bar, and being Arraigned, he pleaded Not Guilty to the Indictment: Then the Court (after the uſual Formalities performed) proceeded to the Tryal of him, as followeth.

Cl of Ar. GEntlemen of the Jury, Look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Cauſe. You ſhall underſtand that he ſtands Indicted by the Name of Charles Kerne, late of the Pariſh of Weobly in the County of Hereford, Gent. For that he being born within the Kingdom of England, the twenty ninth day of April in the thirty firſt Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Then being a Seminary Prieſt, made, profeſſed, and ordained by the Authority and Juriſdiction challenged, pretended, and derived from the See of Rome, the ſaid twenty ninth day of April in the year aforeſaid, within this Kingdom of England (viz.) at Weobly aforeſaid in the County aforeſaid, Traiterouſly did come, was, and did remain againſt the Form of the Statute in that caſe made and provided; and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not Guilty: If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Lands, Goods or Tenements he had at the time of the Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince; if you find him not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he did flee for the ſame: If you find he did flee for the ſame, you are to enquire what Lands, Tenements or Goods he had at the time of ſuch flight, or at any time ſince; if you find him not Guilty, nor that he did flee for the ſame, you are to ſay ſo and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Arr. Call Edward Biddolph. [Who was Sworn.

L. C. J. Give the Jury Pen, Ink and Paper. Sir William Scroggs.

L. C. J. Biddolph, do you know Mr. Kerne?

Biddolph. I do not know him now: I did know ſuch a Man about ſix years ago; I have ſeen him once or twice at Mr. Somerſet's at Bollinghams about ſix Years ago.

L. C. J. How long is it ago ſince you ſaw him laſt?

Biddolph. About a Year.

L. C. J. Had you any Diſcourſe with him?

Biddolph. No, I never had any.

L. C. J. Look on the Priſoner, can you ſay that is the Man?

Biddolph. No my Lord, I cannot.

L. C. J. Can you ſay you ever ſaw or knew him?

Biddolph. I cannot.

L. C. J. Set him down. Call another Witneſs.

Cl. of Arr. Swear Margaret Edwards, [Which was done.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Kerne?

Edwards. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Edwards. Five or ſix Years.

L. C. J. Where did you know him?

Edwards. At Sarnsfield, at Mrs. Monington's.

L. C. J. Were you a Servant there?

Edwards. No, I went thither about Buſineſs.

L. C. J. Where did you firſt ſee him?

Edwards. At Mr. Wigmore's of Lucton.

L. C. J. Had you any Diſcourſe with him there?

Edwards. No.

L. C. J. How came you to ſee him at Mrs. Monington's?

Edwards. My Lord, one James Harris's Wife being very ſick, I was deſired by him to go to Mrs. Anne Monington to ſeek ſome Remedy for her: He deſired me the rather, for that ſhe being a Papiſt, and I of the ſame Religion; he believed for that Reaſon ſhe would be the more kind to her.

L. C. J. Were you a Papiſt then?

Edwards. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, what ſaid Mrs. Monington to you?

Edwards. My Lord, ſhe told me ſhe was glad that they had ſent me, for that ſhe did not care to diſcourſe the Diſtempers of a Woman to a Man.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Edwards. My Lord, after ſhe had diſcourſed to me concerning the ſick Woman, ſhe deſired me to go with her, which I did; and ſhe brought me into the Chapel, where I ſaw Mr. Kerne in his Robes.

L. C. J. Were there any more in the Room beſides him?

Edwards. Yes, my Lord, four or five: He was in his Robes and Surplice, and was at the Altar, and gave the Sacrament to the reſt, but I did not receive it.

L. C. J. What did you ſee him do?

Edwards. I ſaw him give the Sacrament.

L. C. J. What did he ſay?

Edwards. He ſaid Corpus Chriſti, or ſome ſuch Words.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him deliver the Wafers?

Edwards. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. To how many?

Edwards. To four.

L. C. J. You ſwear poſitively to four: Did they confeſs to him?

Edwards. Yes, I believe they did.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee him ſince?

Edwards. No my Lord, I never ſaw him between that and this.

L. C. J. Did you ever receive the Sacrament before, and of whom?

Edwards. Yes I received ſeveral times: The firſt time was of Mr. Duffres, next of Mr. Kemble, then of Mr. Rowenhill, Mr. Standiſh, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Trindal; I have received from Mr. Draycot at Mr. Berrington's; I have received at Mr. Blount's; but the laſt time was from Mr. Jennings at Mr. Wigmore's Houſe.

Priſ. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may be ask'd whether ſhe came to Mrs. Monington's of her own accord, or was ſent for Phyſick?

Edwards. I was ſent.

Priſ. Did the Man ſend you or his Wife?

Edwards. The Man.

Priſ. Have a care what you ſay, Harris's Wife is here to trepan you.

L. C. J. Give good words, you begin to Triumph too ſoon. Woman, was it Harris or his Wife ſent you?

Edwards. It was Harris himſelf that deſired me to go, becauſe I might have more favour, being a Papiſt.

Priſ. Where did that Harris live?

Edwards. At Lempſter.

Priſ. I am ſatisfied, 'twas a miſtake, I thought it had been Harris of Lawton ſhe had meant.

L. C. J. Will you ask her any thing elſe?

Priſ. I deſire to know the time when ſhe ſaw me at Mrs. Monington's?

Edwards. It was in laſt May was Twelvemonth, the twenty ninth day to the beſt of my Memory.

L. C. J. Do you take it to be certain, or do you believe it only that it was that day?

Edwards. My Lord, I am certain it was that very day; for the Woman died that day, and that day is writ on the Graveſtone.

Priſ. I deſire to know of her whether ſhe was ever ask'd upon her Oath, whether ſhe was ever at Mrs. Monington's ſince that time?

Edwards. I was not there ſince, nor ever ask'd the Queſtion to the beſt of my Knowledge.

L. C. J. What a Queſtion is that?

Priſ. 'Tis very remarkable, for ſhe was ask'd by a Juryman laſt Aſſizes, it was not upon the Tryal, but before the Grand Jury, and ſhe denied then that ſhe was ever at Mrs. Monington's in her life.

Edwards. I have been there above twenty times.

Priſ. Call Roger Hyet.

L. C. J. By and by your Defence will be proper, in the mean time, what will you ask her more?

Priſ. I deſire to ask her what Diſcourſe ſhe had with Mary Jones the other Witneſs, for ſhe has been inſtructing her what to ſay; and that they may be examined aſunder (which was granted.)

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had you with the other Woman?

Edwards. My Lord, ſhe told me that ſhe had never in all her life been before a Judge or Juſtice of Peace; and that ſhe was afraid of coming before one, for ſhe did not know how to behave her ſelf.

L. C. J. Did you tell her what ſhe ſhould ſay?

Edwards. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What did you ſay to her?

Edwards. I told her that ſhe would hear her Name call'd, and then ſhe muſt anſwer: And I bid her have a care that ſhe ſpoke what ſhe knew, and no more or leſs than the Truth.

L. C. J. Did ſhe tell you what ſhe could ſay?

Edwards. She did.

L. C. J. What?

Edwards. That ſhe liv'd at Mr. Somerſet's where Mr. Kerne uſually was, and that ſeveral People uſed to come thither and go up ſtairs into the Chamber; and ſhe went once to hearken, and ſhe heard Mr. Kerne ſay ſomething in Latin, which ſhe ſaid was Maſs.

Priſ. Here is a material Queſtion to ask this Witneſs. I deſire to know where this Woman ſaw me firſt?

Edwards. At Mr. Wigmore's of Luckton, as they told me it was him, for I did not know his Name.

Priſ. I would know if the Man ſhe ſaw at Mrs. Monington's, was the ſame Perſon ſhe ſaw at Luckton?

Edwards. To the beſt of my Knowledge it was.

Priſ. I never was at Luckton in all my life.

L. C. J. Call the other Woman: You ſhall now ſee how theſe Women agree.

Cl. of Arr. Call Mary Jones. Cryer, ſwear her.

[Which was done.]

Priſ. I deſire they may be examined apart.

L. C. J. Let the other Woman go out.

L. C. J. When was the firſt time you ſaw Margaret Edwards?

Jones. Yeſterday, and again to day.

L. C. J. Did ſhe tell you and inſtruct you what you ſhould ſay againſt the Priſoner?

Jones.

Jones. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you tell her what you could ſay againſt him?

Jones. No.

L. C. J. Did not you tell her that you liv'd at Mr. Somerſet's, and that ſeveral People uſed to come thither and go up ſtairs into the Chamber, and that once you went up to hearken, and heard Mr. Kerne ſay Maſs?

Jones. She did ſay ſo to me, but I did not anſwer her any thing.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ask where you ſaw Mr. Kerne?

Jones. Yes.

L. C. J. Where, at Bollingham?

Jones. I did tell her that I ſaw him at Bollingham, and that I heard him ſay ſomewhat aloud, I think it was Latin.

L. C. J. How you anſwer: I ask'd you but juſt now, whether you told her that you ſaw Mr. Kerne at Mr. Somerſet's Houſe, and that you went up to hearken, and heard him ſay ſomewhat in Latin? And you then ſaid you did not, and now you ſay you did.

Jones. She ſpoke to me firſt about it, and I did but anſwer.

L. C. J. What, did ſhe ask you what you could ſay againſt Mr. Kerne?

Jones. Yes.

L. C. J. And what did you tell her you could ſay?

Jones. I told her, that one Sunday Morning ſeveral People came to Bollingham, out of the Town and out of the Country, and went up after him, and he ſaid ſomewhat aloud that I did not underſtand.

L. C. J. Did you not tell Margaret Edwards that you heard him ſay Maſs?

Jones. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Call Margaret Edwards again. Margaret Edwards, Did Mary Jones tell you that ſhe heard Mr. Kerne ſay Maſs?

Edwards. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now, Mary Jones, what ſay you? Did not you tell her that you heard the Priſoner ſay Maſs?

Jones. No, I am ſure I did not; for I never heard the word before, nor do not know what it means.

L. C. J. The one Witneſs ſays ſhe did not name Maſs, for ſhe did not underſtand what it was; the other ſays ſhe did; ſo they contradict one another in that.

L. C. J. Mary Jones, when did you ſee Mr. Kerne?

Jones. Seven or eight Years ago.

L. C. J. Where?

Jones. At Mr. Somerſet's at Bollingham, he lived there half a Year.

L. C. J. What did you ſee him do?

Jones. One Sunday Morning I was buſie a waſhing the Rooms, and I ſaw ſeveral People follow him into the Chamber.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him do any thing?

Jones. No, I heard him ſay ſomewhat aloud which I did not underſtand.

L. C. J. How near were you to him?

Jones. There was only a Wall between.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee him give a Wafer, Marry, or Chriſten?

Jones. No, my Lord: There was a Child Chriſtened in the Houſe.

L. C. J. Who Chriſtened it?

Jones. I cannot tell: There was no one there but my Maſter and Miſtreſs, Mr. Lachet and his Wife, and Mr. Kerne: I was in the next Room, and I heard words ſpoken by the Voice of Mr. Kerne.

L. C. J. What can you ſay more?

Jones. I waſh'd a Surplice.

L. C. J. Whoſe was it, the Priſoner's?

Jones. I cannot tell, becauſe I did not ſee it on his Back.

Priſ. How could you know a Voice?

Jones. Very eaſily, there was but a Wall between.

Priſ. Was there no Room between?

Jones. No, there was not.

L. C. J. The Woman ſpeaks ſenſibly: If you have done asking Queſtions, you had beſt call your Witneſſes.

Priſ. Call Mr. Hyet.

L. C. J. Mr. Hyet, you cannot be ſworn, but you muſt ſpeak the Truth as much as if you were: Well, what can you ſay?

Hyet. I ask'd Margaret Edwards if ſhe had been at Mrs. Monington's; ſhe ſaid ſhe had: I ask'd her if ſhe knew Mr. Kerne? She ſaid ſhe did not.

L. C. J. Was ſhe upon her Oath when you ask'd her this?

Hyet. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes?

Priſ. Call Mr. Weſton's Maid.

L. C. J. What can you ſay?

Weſt. M. I ſaw thoſe two Women talking together, and that Woman inſtructed the other what ſhe ſhould ſay.

L. C. J. What ſay you to this?

Edwards and Jones. My Lord, we did not.

L. C. J. Look you, they both deny it on their Oaths.

L. C. J. How often between the firſt time and the twenty ninth of May was Twelvemonth, did you ſee Mr. Kerne?

Edwards. Twice or thrice in Weobly.

L. C. J. What can you ſay for your ſelf?

Priſ. My Lord, I am very happy that I receive my Tryal before your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Come, ſetting aſide your Apologies, tell what you have to ſay; if you have any more Witneſſes, call them.

Priſ. My Lord, here are ſeveral Witneſſes who will prove that that Woman was never at Mrs. Monington's.

L. C. J. That's very improbable; but call whom you will.

Priſ. My Lord, here's Mrs. Monington, the Perſon ſhe pretends ſhew'd her up, will ſwear ſhe never ſaw the Woman in her life; and upon my Salvation I never ſaw either of them before.

L. C. J. Mrs. Monington, the Law will not allow you to be ſworn, but I preſume that a Perſon of your Quality will ſpeak the Truth, as much as if you were upon your Oath. Do you know Margaret Edwards?

Mrs. Mon. My Lord, I do not.

L. C. J. Woman, tell Mrs. Monington from whom you came.

Edwards. I came from James Harris of Lempſter.

L. C. J. Mrs. Monington, do you know James Harris of Lempſter?

Mrs. Mon. My Lord, I do not.

L. C. J. Do you remember that about May was Twelvemonth this Woman came to you for Phyſick for a Woman that was ſick?

Mrs. Mon. A great many People come to me on that Errand, ſo that it is impoſſible for me to remember any particular Perſon.

L. C. J. Did you ever take up that Woman to hear Maſs?

Mrs. Mon. That I am ſure I did not, for I never took up any Stranger in my Life.

L. C. J. Did Mrs. Monington know you by Face or by Name?

Edwards. I had been at the Houſe ſeveral times, but this time I was carried up to Mrs. Monington by Mary Lewis her Maid: Mrs. Monington told me that ſhe was very glad that I was ſent, for ſhe ſaid ſhe would not give the Man ſo juſt an Account, becauſe he was a Man.

L. C. J. Mrs. Monington, do you remember this?

Mrs. Mon. This is frequent.

Edwards. Then ſhe told me that I muſt put a Plaiſter of Diapalma to the Woman's Back, and give her a Drink of Malt with Raiſins, &c.

Mrs. Mon. As for the Plaiſter, 'tis poſſible I may preſcribe it, but the Drink is no Receipt of mine.

Edwards. My Lord, the Maid when I came in was making a Cheeſe in the Dairy, and I ask'd for Mrs. Monington, and ſhe told me ſhe was within, and ſtraightway brought me up to her: Mrs. Monington in a little time fell into diſcourſe with me about Religion; and underſtanding what I was, deſired me to go into the Chamber with her.

L. C. J. What kind of Chapel was it?

Edwards. I will give an Account of it as well as I can remember. When we came up ſtairs, we turn'd in at a Door on the right hand; the Altar ſtood juſt before the Door; it was richly adorned, the Altar-Cloth was white, and a fine Crucifix on the Altar.

Mrs. Mon. What were the Cuſhions of?

Edwards. As I remember they were Needlework.

L. C. J. What was the Chapel adorn'd with?

Edwards. With abundance of Pictures: I think the Window was on the left hand of the Altar.

Mrs. Mon. She has fail'd in the firſt deſcription, for we go not off the Stairs into the Chapel, as ſhe ſays; neither is it adorn'd in the manner as ſhe ſays it is, nor is there any Needlework. Here is a Maid that I deliver all my Medicines to, that perhaps can give a better Account whether this Woman were at my Houſe, than I can.

L. C. J. Call the Maid. You wait on Mrs. Monington: Did you ever ſee that Woman?

Maid. No.

L. C. J. I'll ſhew you how you ſhall remember her; ſhe came to Mrs. Monington on the behalf of one Harris's Wife, and ask'd if ſhe were within, and you carried her to your Miſtreſs.

Edwards. My Lord, I was there ſeveral times beſides this, for I carried the Child, Mr. Thomas Monington, thither ſeveral times.

L. C. J. Do you remember this?

Mrs. Mon. I do not remember that ſhe ever brought the Child to me, but another.

Edwards. My Lord, I always lay with him, and tended him, and carried him Abroad.

L. C. J. If you have any thing more to ſay, ſpeak. What ſay you for your ſelf?

Priſ. I hope your Lordſhip will ſum up the Evidence.

L. C. J. That I will: I will tell the Jury all I can remember on both ſides; I will not ſhed innocent Blood, neither will I help the Guilty; for I, by the Duty of my Place, am Counſel for the Priſoner in all things fit and legal.

Priſ. I deſire the Statute may be read.

L. C. J. Let it be read. What Statute do you mean, that of 27 Eliz.?

Priſ. Yes my Lord. [Then the Statute was read.

Priſ. Now Gentlemen, I deſire you to take into conſideration, whether my Blood ſhall be drawn by the Evidence of a Woman that ſays ſhe ſaw me give a Wafer; or on that Evidence of the other, who ſays ſhe heard me read ſhe knows not what through a Wall: My Lord it is an Oppreſſion that Statutes ſhould be conſtrued otherwiſe than they are intended. I hope, my Lord, that the Statute will not take hold of a Man for ſaying Maſs, for many ſay Maſſes that are not in Order.

L. C. J. It is one of the greateſt Evidences to prove a Man to be a Prieſt that can be; for we cannot think of bringing Witneſſes who ſaw you take Orders; Do any ſay Maſs but Prieſts? Is it lawful for any one but a Prieſt to ſay Maſs?

Priſ. That of Bread and Wine they do not, but the other they do.

L. C. J. Do any Bury or Chriſten but Prieſts?

Priſ. Yes they do in extremis; and, my Lord, I do acknowledge that I read Prayers ſometimes, and ſometimes others did it. And I deſire your Lordſhip and the Jury will take notice, that I have taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy.

L. C. J. Is that all you have to ſay?

Priſ. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then Gentlemen of the Jury, The Matter you are to try is, whether Charles Kerne the Priſoner at the Bar, be a Popiſh Prieſt: An Engliſhman I ſuppoſe he does not deny himſelf to be; the Queſtion is then if he be a Romiſh Prieſt? If ſo, he is guilty of High Treaſon by the Statute of 27 Eliz. This was a Law made for the preſervation of the Queen, for the preſervation of our Religion, and for the preſervation of all Proteſtants. The Witneſſes are Margaret Edwards and Mary Jones. Margaret ſays, the firſt time that ſhe ſaw the Priſoner was at Mr. Wigmore's, who told her it was Mr. Kerne; and ſhe ſays that ſhe hath ſeen him ſeveral times ſince; twice or thrice at Weobly, and the laſt time was the twenty ninth of May was Twelvemonth, at Mrs. Monington's, where ſhe ſaw him deliver the Wafer, which is the Sacrament, to four Perſons that were there, but ſhe her ſelf did not receive it; and then ſhe gives you an account of the reaſon of her coming then to Mrs. Monington's, which was at the requeſt of one Harris, whoſe Wife was ſick, to ſeek ſome Remedy from Mrs. Monington for the ſick Woman: She tells you how the Maid brought her up to her Miſtreſs, how ſhe acquainted her with her Errand, what Advice Mrs. Monington gave her for the ſick Woman, and how that Mrs. Monington underſtanding what Religion ſhe was of, took her into the Chapel, whereof ſhe gives you a Deſcription. 'Tis very probable ſhe may go on ſuch an Errand, and yet Mrs. Monington not know her; but Mrs. Monington cannot poſitively ſay, but believes ſhe was never there: Mr. Kerne, I ſuppoſe, will not deny but that he who gives the Wafer is a Prieſt.

Priſ. There is bleſſed Bread which others may give.

L. C. J. When you give ſuch Bread, do you not ſay, Accipe Corpus Chriſti?

Priſ. We uſe no ſuch words. [But it appeared, upon upon his own repeating of the Latin words they uſed upon the giving the Sacrament, that thoſe were part of the Words.

L. C. J. The Priſoner made an offer to prove ſome diſagreement between the Witneſſes; 'tis true, they did differ in ſome ſmall things, as the ſaying the word Maſs, but from hence can no great matter be inferr'd againſt the Evidence; ſo here is one poſitive Evidence.

There muſt indeed be two Witneſſes; now the Queſtion will be about the ſecond Woman's Teſtimony: She ſays ſhe knew Mr. Kerne about eight Years ago, when ſhe lived at Mr. Somerſet's, and that Mr. Kerne lived in the Houſe about half a Year: She tells you that ſhe hath ſeen ſeveral Perſons come thither; and amongſt the reſt ſhe ſays, that one Sunday morning ſeveral Perſons came thither and went up with Mr. Kerne, and that ſhe was ſo curious as to hearken, and did hear Mr. Kerne ſay ſomething in an unknown Tongue: Kerne objects that ſhe could not know it was his Voice, but for that, I think Men are eaſily diſtinguiſhed by their Voices, but that I muſt leave to your conſideration.

But now the main Queſtion will be, what it was ſhe heard him ſay? Mr. Kerne ſays, that in Times of ſtraitneſs, Perſons that are not Prieſts may read Prayers, and ſo perhaps he may be then reading the Collects.

But then again: She ſays there was a Child Chriſtened in the Houſe, and no one there but Mr. Somerſet and his Wife, Mr. Latchet and his Wife, and Mr. Kerne, to do it: She did not ſee him Chriſten it, and 'tis true likewiſe what he ſays, that in their Church they allow others, as Midwives, to Chriſten in extremis; not that he confeſſes he did Chriſten.

L. C. J. Call Mary Jones again. Mary Jones, was it a ſickly Child?

Jones. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then that is anſwered: So that if you believe that he did Chriſten the Child, there are two Witneſſes againſt him: I muſt leave it with you as a tender Point on both ſides; I would not ſhed innocent Blood, neither would I willingly let a Popiſh Prieſt eſcape. There is one poſitive Witneſs, and if you believe upon the Woman's hearing his Voice, that he did ſay Maſs, or did Chriſten, for I muſt confeſs ſhe ſays ſhe did not ſee him Chriſten, then you muſt find him Guilty: So I leave it to you upon the whole matter.

The Jury return'd, and were call'd over.
William Barret, &c.

Cl. Arr. Jaylor, ſet up Charles Kerne.
Gentlemen, Are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Cl. Look upon the Priſoner: What ſay you, Is Charles Kerne Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

The TRYALS of Andrew Brommich, and William Atkins.

Upon Wedneſday the 13*th of* Auguſt, 1679. at the Aſſizes held at Stafford for the ſaid County, Andrew Brommich and William Atkins, being both Seminary Prieſts, were brought to their Tryal and Convicted before the Right Hon. Sir William Scroggs, Knt. Lord Chief Juſtice of England, and one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of Aſſize there.

The Court being ſat, they proceeded to their Tryal thus.

THE Lord Chief Juſtice having the Night before charged the Sheriff to Return a good Jury, and the Court being ſat, he enquired of him if he had obſerved his Directions; The Sheriff acquainted his Lordſhip, that ſince he had impanell'd the ſaid Jury, he had heard that one Allen, of in the ſaid County, being then returned to ſerve on the ſaid Jury, had ſaid in Diſcourſe with ſome of his Fellows, that nothing was done againſt the Popiſh Prieſts above, and therefore he would do nothing againſt them here, nor find them guilty; whereupon his Lordſhip called for the ſaid Allen, and one Randal Calclough, one of his Fellow Jurymen, and another Witneſs upon Oath, who proving the words againſt him, his Lordſhip diſcharged him of the Jury, and committed him to Priſon till he found Sureties for his good Behaviour; and likewiſe three more of the Jury were diſcharged upon ſuſpicion of being Popiſhly affected, his Lordſhip commanding the Sheriff to return good Men in their places; which was accordingly done, and the Jury Sworn, viz.

Thomas Higgin, John Webb, Edward Ward, Thomas Marſhall, John Beech, Randal Calclough, Richard Trindall, James Beckett, William Smyth, William Pinſon, Daniel Buxton, and Richard Cartwright, Jur'

Cl. of Arr. Jaylor ſet up Andrew Brommich to the Bar: Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes! If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney or this Inqueſt now to be taken, of any Treaſons, Murders, Felonies, or other Miſdemeanors, committed or done by the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard.

Cl. of Arr.

Cl. of Arr. Andrew Brommich hold up thy Hand. Theſe good Men that were lately called, and have now appeared, are thoſe which muſt paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you upon your Life or Death: If you will challenge any of them you muſt ſpeak as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

The Priſoner challenging none, the Jury was ſworn, ut ante.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Cauſe. You ſhall underſtand that he ſtands Indicted by the Name of Andrew Brommich, late of Perry Barr in the County of Stafford, Gent. for that he being born within the Kingdom of England, the Thirteenth Day of January, in the Thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Charles IId, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. then being a Seminary Prieſt made, profeſſed and ordained by the Authority and Juriſdiction challenged, pretended and derived from the See of Rome, the ſaid Thirteenth Day of January in the Year aforeſaid, within this Kingdom of England, viz. at Perry Barr aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Traiterouſly did come, was and did remain againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided, and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and hath pleaded thereunto Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty: If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Lands, Goods or Tenements he had at the Time of the Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he did fly for the ſame, and what Lands, Goods or Tenements he had at the ſame time of ſuch flight, or at any time ſince; if you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for the ſame, you are to ſay ſo and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, call Ann Robinſon. [Who was ſworn.

Sir William Scroggs. L. C. J. Ann Robinſon, what can you ſay againſt Andrew Brommich?

A. Rob. My Lord, I can ſay that I received the Sacrament of him according to the Church of Rome in a Wafer.

L. C. J. When? How long ago?

A. Rob. About Chriſtmas laſt.

L. C. J. What Company was there? How many were there in Company?

A. Rob. My Lord, I cannot poſitively tell how many, but I believe there were about ſeven or eight.

L. C. J. Did they all receive at the ſame time?

A. Rob. Yes, my Lord, they did all receive at that time.

L. C. J. Are you a Papiſt?

A. Rob. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long were you a Papiſt?

A. Rob. Several Years.

L. C. J. Who firſt ſeduced you?

A. Rob. My Lord, I cannot tell his Name.

L. C. J. Did you ever receive the Sacrament, according to their way, of Mr. Brommich before the time you ſpeak of?

A. Rob. Yes.

L. C. J. How often?

A. Rob. Four times, my Lord; twice at Mr. Birch's, and twice at Mr. Purſal's.

L. C. J. How came you to give her the Sacrament? [To the Priſoner.

Priſ. My Lord, I never did.

L. C. J. Why, ſhe has ſworn you gave it her ſeveral times, once in particular at Chriſtmas laſt, and four times more, twice at Mr. Birch's, and twice at Mr. Purſal's.

Priſ. My Lord, I cannot help it. I deſire your Lordſhip will take notice of one thing, that I have taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and have not refuſed any thing which might teſtifie my Loyalty.

L. C. J. That will not ſerve your turn, you Prieſts have Tricks to evade that.

Priſ. Beſides, my Lord, I never abſconded.

L. C. J. You never abſconded, what is that to giving the Woman the Sacrament ſeveral times?

Priſ. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may prove it.

L. C. J. She does ſo.

Priſ. My Lord, I humbly conceive it was no Sacrament unleſs I were a Prieſt.

L. C. J. What an Argument is that? You expect we ſhould prove you a Prieſt by Witneſſes which ſaw you take Orders; but we know ſo much of your Religion, that none undertake to give the Sacrament in a Wafer, or ſay Maſs, but a Prieſt; and you gave the Sacrament to that Woman in a Wafer, therefore you are a Prieſt.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, call another Witneſs, ſwear Jeoffery Robinſon.

L. C. J. What can you ſay to Mr. Brommich?

Jeof. Rob. I can ſay nothing againſt him.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him ſay Maſs?

Jeof. Rob. I cannot tell, I have heard him ſay ſomething in an unknown Tongue, but I know not what it was.

L. C. J. Was it Latin that he ſaid?

Jeof. Rob. I cannot tell, I am no Scholar.

L. C. J. Had he a Surplice on?

Jeof. Rob Yes, my Lord, he had.

L. C. J. Robinſon, are you a Papiſt?

Jeof. Rob. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. I thought ſo, it is ſo hard to get the Truth out of you.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, ſwear Jane Robinſon.

L. C. J. Come, what can you ſay? Did you ever ſee Brommich give the Sacrament?

Jane Rob. Not to my Knowledge.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him ſay Maſs?

Jane Rob. I never ſaw him do any thing; for I only went up and ſaid my Prayers, I took no notice of any thing.

L. C. J. Did you not ſee Brommich there?

Jane Rob. I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Why, don't you know him?

Jane Rob. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Your Husband knows him. You Jeoffery Robinſon, do not you know Mr. Brommich?

Jeof. Rob. Not I, my Lord.

L. C. J. That's right like a Papiſt, did you not but juſt now ſay you heard him ſay ſomething in an unknown Tongue, and ſaw him in a Surplice, and yet now you do not know him? You have no more Conſcience than what your Prieſts allow you. But though your Prieſts can perſuade you to take falſe Oaths, I would not have you think they can protect you from the Puniſhment due to them here or hereafter.

An.

An. Rob. My Lord, they both took the Sacrament with me at the ſame time from him.

L. C. J. Look you there, was ever the like impudence ſeen? Come Friend, conſider you are upon your Oath, and do not bring your ſelf into the Snare of a Pillory. Come Robinſon, I ask you by the Oath you have taken, did you receive the Sacrament with Ann Robinſon at the time ſhe ſpeaks of at Mr. Purſal's?

Jeof. Rob. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. How hard is the Truth to be gotten out of you! But within this Country, which abounds ſo with Prieſts and ſwarms with Papiſts, that you get Popery here like the Itch; if they but rub upon you, you catch it.

Jane Rob. My Lord, he's a weak Man.

L. C. J. Who gave it you?

Jeof. Rob. I do not know.

L. C. J. He'll ſay no more than his Wife and Prieſt will give him leave.

L. C. J. Look you Gentlemen of the Jury, here are two Papiſts that are Witneſſes; you are to conſider how far they tell the Truth, and how far they conceal it, how they tell their Tale ſo as to ſerve a Turn: For here you ſee the Man ſaid at firſt he heard him ſay ſomewhat in an unknown Tongue, and that he ſaw him in a Surplice; after that he denies he knows him; but now you ſee by this Woman the Truth is come out; he hath confeſs'd and own'd he received the Sacrament at Purſal's with her. We cannot expect more poſitive Evidence from ſuch People. Come read the Statute.

Anno 27 Eliz. cap. 2.

Whereas divers Perſons, called or profeſſed Jeſuit, Seminary Prieſts, and other Prieſts, which have been, and from time to time are made in the parts beyond the Seas, by or according to the Order and Rites of the Romiſh Church, have of late comen and been ſent, and daily do come and are ſent into this Realm of England, and other the Queens Majeſties Dominions, of purpoſe (as it hath appeared) as well by ſundry of their own Examinations and Confeſſions, as divers other manifeſt means and proofs, not only to withdraw her Highneſſes Subjects from their due obedience to her Majeſtie, but alſo to ſtir up and move ſedition, rebellion and open hoſtility within the ſame her Highneſs Realms and Dominions to the great indangering of the ſafety of her moſt Royal Perſon, and to the utter ruine, deſolation and overthrow of the whole Realm, if the ſame be not the ſooner by ſome good means foreſeen and prevented.

For reformation whereof be it ordained, eſtabliſhed and enacted by the Queens moſt excellent Majeſtie, and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame Parliament, That all and every Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and other Prieſts whatſoever, made or Ordained out of the Realm of England, or other her Highneſs Dominions, or within any of her Majeſties Realms or Dominions, by any Authority, Power or Juriſdiction, derived, challenged, or pretended from the See of Rome ſince the feaſt of the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, in the firſt year of her Highneſs Reign, ſhall within forty days next after the end of this preſent Seſſion of Parliament depart out of this Realm of England, and out of all other her Highneſs Realms and Dominions, if the wind, weather, and paſſage ſhall ſerve for the ſame, or elſe ſo ſoon after the end of the ſaid forty days as the wind, weather and paſſage ſhall ſo ſerve.

And be it further enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, That it ſhall not be lawful to, or for any Jeſuit, Seminary Prieſt, or other ſuch Prieſt, Deacon, or Religious, or Eccleſiaſtical Perſon whatſoever, being born within this Realm, or any other her Highneſs Dominions, and heretofore ſince the ſaid feaſt of the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt in the firſt year of her Majeſties Reign made, ordained or profeſſed or hereafter to be made, ordained or profeſſed by any Authority or Juriſdiction derived, challenged or pretended from the See of Rome, by, or of what name, title or degree ſoever the ſame ſhall be called or known, to come into, be, or remain in any part of this Realm or any other her Highneſs Dominions, after the end of the ſame forty days other than in ſuch ſpecial caſes, and upon ſuch ſpecial occaſions only, and for ſuch time only as is expreſſed in this Act. And if he do, that then every ſuch offence ſhall be taken and adjudged to be High Treaſon, and every perſon ſo offending ſhall for his offence be adjudged a Traytor and ſhall ſuffer loſſe, and forfeit as in caſe of High Treaſon.

And every perſon which after the end of the ſame forty days, and after ſuch time of departure as is before limited and appointed, ſhall wittingly and willingly receive, relieve, comfort, aid or maintain any ſuch Jeſuit, Seminary Prieſt, or other Prieſt, Deacon or Religious, or Eccleſiaſticall perſon as is aforeſaid, being at liberty, or out of hold, knowing him to be a Jeſuit, Seminary Prieſt, or other ſuch Prieſt, Deacon or Religious, or Eccleſiaſtical perſon as is aforeſaid, ſhall alſo for ſuch offence be adjudged a Felon without benefit of Clergy, and ſuffer death, loſſe, and forfeit, as in caſe of one attainted of Felony.

L. C. J. Come, what have you more to ſay?

Priſ. I deſire that there may be notice taken what Robinſon and his Wife ſaid upon their Examinations before the Juſtice of Peace.

L. C. J. We are to take notice only of what they ſay here.

Priſ. My Lord, they ſaid here they did not know me.

L.

L. C. J. No, Did not Robinſon ſay he heard you ſay ſomething in an unknown Tongue; that he then ſaw you in a Surplice? Did we talk of any one but you? Come Jeſuit, with your Learning, you ſhall not think to baffle us: I have of late had occaſion to converſe with your moſt learned Prieſts, and never yet ſaw one that had either Learning or Honeſty.

L. C J. Have you any Witneſſes? Have you any more to ſay?

Priſ. No.

L. C J. Then Gentlemen of the Jury, the Queſtion you are to try, is, Whether Andrew Brommich be a Popiſh Prieſt or not: To prove that he is, here is a Woman, one Ann Robinſon, that ſwears ſhe received the Sacrament of him in a Wafer once at Chriſtmas laſt, and twice at Mr. Birch's, and twice at Mr. Purſal's, and that he gave it to ſeveral others at the ſame time. There needs not much to perſuade you that he who gives the Sacrament is a Prieſt, for in their Church they allow no one but a Prieſt to give the Sacrament, ſo there is one expreſs Evidence againſt him: And now I muſt ſatisfie you in one thing, that you are to give a Verdict not that he is a Prieſt, but that you believe him in your Conſcience upon the whole Evidence, to be a Prieſt. To make you do this, here is one poſitive Evidence.

The other Man, when I came to examine him whether he ever heard the Priſoner ſay Maſs; he anſwered, that he heard him ſay ſomething in an unknown Tongue, and that he was in a Surplice. This is as much as we could expect from one of their own Religion, who dare ſay no more than their Prieſts will give them leave to do. So Gentlemen I muſt leave it to you, whether or no you will not believe the Teſtimony of this real poſitive Witneſs, and the circumſtantial Evidence of the other Man: For you ſee in what Dangers we are; I leave it upon your Conſciences, whether you will let Prieſts eſcape, who are the very Peſts and Dangers of Church and State; You had better be rid of one Prieſt than three Felons; ſo Gentlemen, I leave it to you.

The Jury having ſtaid ſome time, returned to the the Court to give their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, have you agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay it for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Jaylor, ſet up Andrew Brommich to the Bar.

Gentlemen, do you find Andrew Brommich Guilty of the High Treaſon he hath been Arraigned of, or Not Guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, you have found a good Verdict, and if I had been one of you, I ſhould have found the ſame my ſelf.

The TRYAL of William Atkins.

The Court proceeded to his Tryal in like manner as in the former, there being the ſame Jury.

Cl. of Arr. JAYLOR, ſet up William Atkins to the Bar: Cryer, Make Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, Look on the Priſoner and hearken to his Cauſe. You ſhall underſtand that he ſtands indicted by the Name of William Atkins, late of Wolverhampton in the County of Stafford, Gent. for that he being born within the Kingdom of England, the Fifth Day of December, in the Thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Then being a Seminary Prieſt, made, profeſſed, and ordained by the Authority and Juriſdiction challenged, pretended, and derived from the See of Rome; the ſaid Fifth day of December in the Year aforeſaid, within this Kingdom of England, viz. at Wolverhampton aforeſaid in the County aforeſaid, Traiterouſly did come, was, and did remain againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided; and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto pleaded not Guilty; and for his Tryal he hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted or not Guilty: If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Lands, Goods or Tenements he had at the time of the High Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince; if you find him not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he did flee for the ſame; if you find he did flee for the ſame, you are to enquire what Lands, Goods or Tenements he had at the time of ſuch flight, or at any time ſince; if you find him not Guilty, nor that he did flee for the ſame, you are to ſay ſo and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, call the Witneſſes; call William Jackſon, Francis Wilden, Jo. Jarvis, &c. Swear Jackſon. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Come Friend, what can you ſay concerning Atkins the Priſoner being a Prieſt?

Jack-

Jackſon. My Lord, I can ſay nothing at all, I was there when he was apprehended, and bound over to proſecute him.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, Swear Francis Wilden. [Which was done.

L. C. J. What can you ſay concerning Atkins being a Prieſt?

Wilden. My Lord, I have ſeen him at Prayers.

L. C. J. Was he in a Surplice then?

Wilden. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee him ſay Maſs?

Wilden. I cannot tell.

L. C. J. In what Language were his Prayers?

Wilden. In an unknown Tongue.

L. C. J. Were they in Latin?

Wilden. I cannot tell, my Lord, I am not a Scholar good enough to know.

L. C. J. Are you a Papiſt?

Wilden. I have been a Proteſtant ſince Chriſtmas.

L. C. J. 'Tis the Principle of a Proteſtant to tell downright Truth, and the Principle of a Papiſt is to equivocate; come ſpeak Truth and your Conſcience will be lighter: Did you ever ſee Atkins deliver the Sacrament in a Wafer, according to the manner and way of the Church of Rome?

Wilden. My Lord, I never received it of him my ſelf, but I have ſeen him give it to others.

L. C. J. Where?

Wilden. At Mrs. Stanford's, at Wolverhampton.

L. C. J. To how many?

Wilden. To ſeven or eight at a time.

L. C. J. Was he in a Surplice then?

Wilden. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. I do not know whether the Priſoner can hear what the Witneſs ſays, 'tis fit he ſhould know. [The Priſoner being told, he reply'd, he knew not the Witneſs.

Cl. of Arr. Swear John Jarvis.

Cryer. My Lord, he refuſeth to be ſworn.

L. C. J. Jarvis, why will you not be ſworn?

Jarvis. My Lord, I was troubled with a Viſion the laſt night.

L. C. J. You miſtake Friend, old Men dream Dreams, 'tis young Men ſee Viſions, and you are an old Man: Speak the Truth, and I'll warrant you you will not be troubled with Viſions any more; this is a Trick of the Prieſts. Swear him Cryer. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Come, Jarvis, what can you ſay?

Jarvis. My Lord, he is a Man that hath relieved me and my Children oftentimes when I was in want.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him ſay Maſs?

Jarvis. My Lord, I am an ignorant Man; I cannot tell; I have heard him ſay ſomewhat in an unknown Tongue.

L. C. J. Did you ever confeſs to him?

Jarvis. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Did you ever receive the Sacrament of him according to the manner of the Church of Rome?

Jarvis. Yes, my Lord, I have, I muſt ſpeak the Truth.

L. C. J. How often?

Jarvis. A great many times.

L. C. J. And had he not his Prieſt's Habit on when he gave it you?

Jarvis. Yes, my Lord, he had.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, call Joan Wright. [Who was called but did not appear.

Call Henry Brown. [Who appeared and was ſworn.]

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Brown, what can you ſay againſt the Priſoner? Did you ever receive the Sacrament of him, or hear him ſay Maſs?

Brown. My Lord, I was almoſt turned from the Proteſtant Religion to that of the Church of Rome; but I never went further than Confeſſion, and that was to this Man, and then I left them.

L. C. J. Indeed you were the wiſer.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, call Tho. Dudley. [who was ſworn.

L. C. J. What can you ſay againſt the Priſoner?

Dudley. I was a little given that way, and have been at Confeſſion with one Atkins, and have ſeen him perform ſeveral Rites of the Church of Rome, at Well-head, at Ham.

L. C. J. Do you believe this to be the Man?

Dudley. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay?

Dudley. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Read the Statute. [Which was done.] Have you Witneſſes, Atkins, or any thing to ſay for your ſelf?

Priſ. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you Gentlemen of the Jury, Here is as full and as poſitive an Evidence as can be againſt the Priſoner: The two firſt Witneſſes, Wilden and Jarvis, are poſitive. Wilden ſwears he heard him ſay his Prayers in an unknown Tongue; and further ſays, that he gave the Sacrament to ſeven or eight according to the manner of the Church of Rome in a Wafer, at Mrs. Stamford's Houſe in Wolverhampton. Jarvis, the other Witneſs, ſwears that he hath been at Confeſſion with him, and hath oftentimes received the Sacrament of him. Here are two other honeſt Men, that ſpeak very full as to Circumſtances; ſo that in the whole you cannot have a more clear Evidence: And Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, it is to theſe ſorts of Men we owe all the Troubles and Hazards we are in, the Fear of the King's Life, the Subverſion of our Government, and the Loſs of our Religion. It is notorious by what they have done, that they are departed from the Meekneſs and Simplicity of Chriſt's Doctrine, and would bring in a Religion of Blood and Tyranny amongſt us. As if God Almighty were ſome Omnipotent Miſchief, that delighted and would be ſerved with the Sacrifices of human Blood. I need not ſay more to you, the Matter's plain; I think you need not ſtir from the Bar, but do as you will.

The Jury having conſidered of the Evidence ſome time, gave in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Jaylor, ſet up William Atkins, [Which was done.] Gentlemen of the Jury look on the Priſoner. What ſay you, Is he Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Lands, Goods or Tenements had he?

Jury. None to our knowledge.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him Jaylor, he is found guilty of High Treaſon.

Note, Their Sentence was the ſame as in Caſes of of High Treaſon.

THE TRYAL OF THOMAS KNOX and JOHN LANE.

ON Tuesday the Twenty fifth Day of November, 1679. at the King's-Bench Bar at Weſtminſter, Thomas Knox and John Lane were tryed for the Miſdemeanour and Offence herein-after in the Indictment expreſſed, and which Tryal was in manner following.

Proclamation being made in uſual manner for Information, and the Defendants call'd to their Challenges, the Jury were ſworn, whoſe Names follow,

Sir John Kirke, Thomas Harriot, Henry Johnſon, Simon Middleton, Hugh Squire, Francis Dorrington, John Roberts, Rainsford Waterhouſe, Thomas Earsby, Joſeph Radcliffe, James Supple, Richard Cooper. } Jur'

Who being numbred, the Clerk of the Crown charged them with the Indictment thus,

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, You of the Jury that are ſworn, hearken to your Charge; you ſhall underſtand that the Defendants ſtand Indicted by the Oaths of Twelve honeſt and lawful Men of the County of Middleſex, by the Names of Thomas Knox of the Pariſh of St. Margaret's Weſtminſter in the County of Middleſex Labourer, and John Lane of the ſame Pariſh and County Labourer, for that whereas Edward Coleman, William Ireland, and John Grove, and other falſe Traitors againſt our Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, the 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, at the Pariſh of St. Margaret's Weſtminſter in the County of Middleſex, traiterouſly amongſt themſelves had conſpired, conſulted, and agreed, to bring, and put to Death and Deſtruction our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and war againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to ſtir up, and the Religion in the ſaid Kingdom of England rightly, and by the Laws of the ſaid Kingdom eſtabliſhed, to the Superſtition of the Romiſh Church to change and alter, and the Government of the ſaid Kingdom of England to ſubvert; for which their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and traiterous Conſpiracies, Conſultations, and Agreements, the ſaid Edward Coleman, William Ireland, and John Grove, in due Manner, and according to the Laws of this Kingdom of England were afterwards attainted, and underwent the Pain of Death for the ſame. And whereas William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, John Lord Bellaſis, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardor, William Lord Petre, and Sir Henry Tichbourn Bar. the 30th Day of November, in the 30th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King aforeſaid at the Pariſh of St. Margaret's Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, of the Treaſons aforeſaid were lawfully accuſed, and thereupon, according to due Form of Law, were committed to the Tower of London, being the Priſon of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, there ſafely to be kept to anſwer for the Treaſons aforeſaid, whereupon they the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, John Lord Bellaſis, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardor, and William Lord Petre, were in Parliament impeached by the Commons in the ſame Parliament aſſembled. And whereas Thomas Earl of Danby, afterwards to wit the ſaid Thirtieth Day of November, in the Thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, of certain Treaſons and other Miſdemeanours, was lawfully accuſed, and thereupon, according to due Form of Law, was committed to the ſaid Tower of London, there to be ſafely kept to anſwer for the Treaſons and Miſdemeanours aforeſaid, of which ſaid Treaſons and Miſdemeanours, he the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby is impeached in Parliament, by the Commons in the ſame Parliament aſſembled, that they the ſaid Thomas Knox and John Lane well knowing the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, John Lord Bellaſis, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardor, William Lord Petre, and Thomas Earl of Danby, to be accuſed of the Treaſons and Miſdemeanours aforeſaid, and they the ſaid Thomas Knox and John Lane, being deviliſhly affected towards our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King their Supream and Natural Lord, and deviſing, and with all their Strength intending the Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and to hinder and ſtifle the Diſcovery of the ſaid Treaſons, by the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, John Lord Bellaſis, Henry Lord Arundel, and William Lord Petre, as aforeſaid ſuppoſed to be committed, and as much as in them lay to elude the due Courſe of Law,

Law, and the Proſecution of Juſtice againſt the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, William Lord Petre, John Lord Bellaſis, Sir Henry Tichbourn, and Thomas Earl of Danby, to retard, they the ſaid Thomas Knox and John Lane afterwards, to wit the Thirtieth Day of April, in the Thirty-firſt Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly and unlawfully did conſult and agree among themſelves, Titus Otes Clerk, and William Bedloe Gentleman, who Informations of the Treaſons aforeſaid had given, and whom they the ſaid Thomas Knox and John Lane the Day and Year aforeſaid, well knew to have given Information of the Treaſons aforeſaid againſt them, the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, John Lord Bellaſis, Henry Lord Arundel, and William Lord Petre, to ſcandalize, and upon the Tryal of the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, John Lord Bellaſis, Henry Lord Arundel, and William Lord Petre, to repreſent them to be Perſons of evil Converſation, and Witneſſes not deſerving Credit. And that he the ſaid Thomas Knox afterwards, to wit the ſaid Thirtieth Day of April, in the Thirty firſt Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, in the Names, and with the Conſent and Agreement of the ſaid John Lane, and one William Osborn, to diſgrace the Information of the ſaid Titus Otes and William Bedloe, againſt them the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, William Lord Petre, John Lord Bellaſis, and Henry Lord Arundel, for our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to be given falſly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, and adviſedly, did write and cauſe to be written three Letters, and thoſe Letters, ſo written falſly, craftily, unlawfully, and adviſedly, did direct and cauſe to be delivered to himſelf the ſaid Thomas Knox, by which ſaid Letters falſly, craftily, and deceitfully, it was declared that they the ſaid John Lane and William Osborn were greatly troubled in their Conſciences by reaſon of certain things which they well knew, and had concealed concerning the unjuſt Contrivances of the ſaid Titus Otes and William Bedloe, in accuſing the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, to be guilty of the Treaſons and other Miſdemeanours aforeſaid, and that the ſaid Titus Otes was a Perſon of a wicked and vitious Life, and made an Aſſault upon the ſaid John Lane, and with the ſaid John Lane to commit that deteſtable Sin called Sodomy before that time had endeavoured. And that he the ſaid Thomas Knox, the ſooner and more effectually to perſwade the John Lane and William Osbourn falſly to accuſe the ſaid Titus Otes and William Bedloe, that they the ſaid Titus Otes and William Bedloe unjuſtly, and againſt all Truth had accuſed the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, of the Treaſons and other Miſdemeanours aforeſaid, and ſo to affirm againſt the Evidence of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, upon the Tryal of the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, for the Treaſons and other Miſdemeanours aforeſaid, to be had afterwards, to wit the ſaid Thirtieth Day of April, in the Eleventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, adviſedly, corruptly, and againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, unlawfully gave to the ſaid John Lane, and William Osborn divers great Sums of Money, and alſo further falſly, adviſedly, corruptly, and againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, the Day and Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, did promiſe unto the ſaid John Lane and William Osbourn, that they ſaid John Lane and William Osbourn, within a certain time by the ſaid Thomas Knox, to the ſaid John Lane and William Osbourn, propounded divers other great Sums of Money, and other great Rewards therefore ſhould have and receive, againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, to the great retarding, obſtructing and ſuppreſſing of Juſtice, in manifeſt Contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, to this Indictment, the ſaid Thomas Knox and John Lane, by their Attorney pleaded that they are not guilty, nor either of them is guilty of the Offence aforeſaid, and further withal put themſelves upon the Country, and the King's Attorney likewiſe. And your Charge is to enquire if they are guilty or not guilty, &c.

Cl. of Cr. Make an, O yes.

Cryer. O yes, if any one will give Evidence, on the Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt Thomas Knox and John Lane, of the Miſdemeanours and Offence whereof they ſtand indicted, let them come forth and give their Evidence.

Then Trenchard Eſq; of Counſel for the King in this Cauſe, opened the Indictment thus.

Mr. Trenchard. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Thomas Knox and John Lane, ſtand indicted for a great and high Miſdemeanour, and the Indictment ſets forth, that whereas Coleman, Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, and other falſe Traitors did conſpire to deſtroy the King, and change the Religion eſtabliſhed by Law, to levy War againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, and to introduce Popery, and for theſe Treaſons were convicted, attainted, and executed, and further ſets forth, that the Lord Powis, Lord Arundel of Warder, and others, were accuſed of the ſaid Treaſons, and were committed to the Tower, and afterwards were impeached for the ſame by the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, as alſo that Thomas Earl of Danby, was impeached of High Treaſon and other Miſdemeanours, that the Defendants knowing Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe had given Information of theſe Treaſons, to ſtifle the Evidence, and to ſcandalize them, did falſly conſpire to repreſent them as wicked Perſons, and Men of no Credit. And the Indictment further ſets forth that the Defendant Knox, with the Agreement of Lane, and one Osbourn, did cauſe ſeveral Letters to be writ, in which it was contrived to accuſe the ſaid Otes and Bedloe, that they had conſpired falſly to accuſe the ſaid Earl of Danby, and that Otes was a Perſon of a vitious Converſation, and had a Deſign to attempt an Aſſault upon the Perſon of the ſaid Lane, with an Intention to commit that deteſtable Sin of Sodomy; the better to effect which wicked Deſigns, the ſaid Knox gave ſeveral Sums of Money to Osbourn and Lane, and had offered great Rewards unto them. To this Indictment they have pleaded not guilty, and you are to try whether they are guilty or not, of this Misdemeanour.

Then Sir John Maynard the King's eldeſt Serjeant at Law purſued the Charge thus.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; this Cauſe is of great Conſequence, and my Lord I deſire the Jury to obſerve that their Queſtion this Day is not to enquire whether the Lords or the other Perſons accuſed and impeached in Parliament are guilty or not, but the Queſtion before them, is, whether the Perſons that ſtand here indicted are guilty of wicked and vile Endeavours, to diſcountenance and ſuppreſs the Evidence, and ſcandalize their Perſons, who were to give Evidence againſt theſe Lords, we are not to give Evidence againſt the Lords, but againſt theſe Perſons.

Sir William Scroggs.

L. C. J. You are right, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Gentlemen, ſomething I muſt obſerve to you, that is an Inducement to this Matter, that there hath been an horrid and abominable Conſpiracy againſt the King, the Nation, the Religion, and the Law, appears (my Lord) by the Proceedings in Parliament, wherein the Lords and the Commons, have ſeveral times jointly declared, and, I think, 'tis ſo publick that no body will doubt there is ſuch a thing; who is guilty that is another Matter.

L. C. J. This Court muſt take notice of that, becauſe ſome have been tried, convicted, and condemned for it by this Court.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Your Lordſhip ſays right. But, my Lord, the firſt Diſcovery of this Conſpiracy came from a ſingle Perſon, one that ſtood ſingle and diſcouraged a long time, and that there were Endeavours to diſcourage his further Diſcovery, that will appear. My Lord, when it ſtood ſo, it happen'd that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey had taken his Examination, and theſe things will be material in the End of the Cauſe. Sir Edmondbury Godfrey having taken the Examination of Otes, then the Endeavour was to ſuppreſs this Examination that he had taken, and that by no leſs a Wickedneſs than the barbarous Murder of that honeſt Gentleman, whom you all knew, and they not only took away his Life; but they did ſtrive to baffle and defame him when he was dead, and that will appear too, and is publick and known. My Lord, all this while ſtood Otes ſingle, it fell out by the Mercy of God, that a further Diſcovery was made by Bedloe, he was examined, and it is publickly known, and publick Juſtice hath gone upon it.

The next Attempt was to corrupt the Teſtimony of Bedloe with Bribes and Rewards, and by other Ways, and the Perſon that tranſacted it, Reading, is attainted of it, Scelere tutandum eſt ſcelus, when Men have invented and deſigned any great Wickedneſs, they are forced to enter upon others to cover and conceal the former. My Lord, it proceeded now, and comes to that which will be the Queſtion this Day. Having gone all theſe ways, now they return again, to ſee if they can diſgrace and baffle the Evidence Otes and Bedloe had given, and the way to that is by diſparaging and ſcandalizing them with foul Offences, eſpecially Dr. Otes; and that was thus, (as we ſhall prove to your Lordſhip) Lane had been a Servant with Otes, and the other was one of the like Condition, and he was tampered with to accuſe Dr. Otes of that horrid Sin of Sodomy, and I think if he were ſuch an one, little Credit were to given to ſuch a Man. This was the Deſign they were to accompliſh. And we ſhall prove to you, in order to it there were Letters (written and contrived by Knox indeed) written by Osbourn who is not now before you, but a Contrivance of them all. And, my Lord, there muſt be a Pretence, for in truth theſe Perſons had been examined, and had charged him with this Offence, but upon further Examination they had renounced their Diſcovery.

L. C. J. Had they all given Evidence? Or who did?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. No, my Lord, pardon me, I am not ſpeaking of their Evidence, but only of their Examination before the Lords.

L. C. J. What was it that was there witneſſed?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Then they pretended this Matter, that they were touch'd in Conſcience, and now they repent, and muſt diſcover the Truth for the Truth's ſake, that themſelves were falſe in making of the Charge, and this, my Lord, muſt be furthered with Bribes and Rewards, as we ſhall prove to you. We ſhall make out the Particulars by Witneſſes, and then we think we may leave it to your Lordſhip and the Jury to determine. In truth, my Lord, it happens in this Caſe as it did long ago, when the firſt Diſcovery was of a like Deſign, and as is told by the Hiſtorian; Multi ob ſtultitiam non putabant, multi ob Ignorantiam non videbant, multi ob pravitatem non credebant, & non credendo conjurationem adjuvabant.

Then Sir Creſwel Levins, His Majeſty's Attorney General, further opened the Evidence thus.

Sir Creſwel Levins.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: I am of Counſel for the King in this Cauſe whoſe Suit it is. The Evidence hath been opened fully by Mr. Serjeant. I ſhall only ſay this, that this is a Counter-part of Mr Reading's Caſe, only it ſeems in this to differ, that the Counter-part exceeds the Original, for, I think, that it is of a further Extent than his was. It hath been told you by Mr. Serjeant, and, I know, the Court will tell you, that it matters not whether thoſe Perſons that are accuſed of the Plot, and impeached for it, were guilty or not, it is ſufficient that they are accuſed, and that by theſe Perſons. For any body to endeavour to ſuppreſs and withdraw the King's Evidence, or to diſgrace the King's Evidence, that is not lawful, be the Crime what it will, but it is a much greater Crime in a Caſe of this Nature of High Treaſon, where the Life of the King, the Government of the Kingdom, the Religion, and the true Worſhip of God eſtabliſhed in it, and the Laws of the Nation are in danger: Some of theſe Perſons are guilty, for Mr. Coleman and ſeveral others, have been found guilty, and have been executed for it.

The Deſign in this Caſe that lies before you, Gentlemen, to try, was to throw a Diſparagement upon the Teſtimony of thoſe Perſons by whoſe Evidence thoſe Traitors were principally attainted and executed. This is, Gentlemen, to affront the Juſtice of the Nation, and indeed to caſt caſt a Diſparagement upon it; and that ſure is as great an Offence as can be; the Matter of the Evidence hath been open'd to you, I ſhall only acquaint your Lordſhip and the Jury, that it hath been deſign'd a great while, and ſo long deſign'd, that one of the Perſons here accuſed, Mr. Lane, one of Otes's Servants, had the Opportunity to get into his Maſter's Secrets, thereby the more effectually to betray him, and as it will appear by Witneſſes, did carry on the Deſign till it was diſcovered, and by that Diſcovery prevented as to any Succeſs,

Mr. Recorder. Your Lordſhip is pleaſed to obſerve in the Indictment that is now to be tried, there are but two Perſons that ſtand Indicted, that is, Lane and Knox. I preſume the Gentlemen that are on the other ſide for each of the Priſoners (for I perceive thoſe that are for the one are not for the other) may expect that there ſhould be Proof made of what is laid as Inducementin the Indictment, and will not tend immediately to that which will be the Queſtion in this Caſe: for there is recited in the Indictment the Conviction of Coleman in this Place, and others in other Places, for the High Treaſon the Evidence whereof theſe Perſons are Indicted for ſcandalizing, we have here the Records ready to prove it.

L. C. J. I ſuppoſe they will admit that.

Mr. Recorder. If they will not, we have that which will prove it.

Mr. Withins. My Lord, we ſhall not ſtand upon that.

Solliciter General. Sir Francis Winnington. We are ready if you did.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. And you will admit that Doctor Otes and Mr. Bedloe were Witneſſes upon thoſe Tryals?

Mr. Withins. Yes, and gave Evidence very conſiderable.

Mr. Recorder. Then my Lord, we muſt hint to you, that Lane, who is one of the Perſons taken notice of in the Indictment, was a Servant to Dr. Otes, Knox was not in his Service; but Knox is a Man that made uſe of Lane as a Handle to the Matter he had deſign'd; therefore Letters are prepared, but by whom? That we ſhall give you an Account of was by the Direction of Knox, tho' the Letters that will be produc'd are directed to Knox himſelf.

L. C. J. Your Indictment ſays ſo.

Mr. Recorder. But we ſhall give you an Account, that he was Director of thoſe Letters himſelf; but as your Lordſhip may obſerve, there are not only Letters, but ſome Accuſations or Informations. We ſhall prove to your Lordſhip whoſe Hand-writing they were, and who dictated thoſe Informations: For I think that Mr. Knox is pretended to have the moſt Brains; and I believe Mr. Knox in the Conſequence will appear to have the moſt malice. And we ſhall prove in the next Place, that inaſmuch as it would be natural in the Courſe of Juſtice to ask, whether theſe Perſons ſhould not have Money for the Reward of ſuch a Buſineſs; we ſhall prove that there were Treaties with Mr. Lane and one Mr. Osborne who is not indicted, (but was likewiſe a Servant to Dr. Otes, and had thereby an Opportunity of deceiving him) that they had Meetings; how Guineas have been cunningly dropt down, which was to prevent, as I was acquainting your Lordſhip, any ſuch Queſtion that ſhould be ask'd, what Monies and Rewards they were to have for this great Diſcovery of any Wickedneſs that Mr. Otes ſhould be guilty of. Mr. Knox he prepares them in this Manner. At every Meeting, when they were diſcourſing and purſuing this Buſineſs, then by ſome unlucky Accident or other Mr. Knox he is to drop a Guinea or two, according as Mr. Lane and the other Perſon had occaſion or a deſire to have it; but none were to be given, but as by accident, as if Knox holding his Guineas in his Hand, or in ſome other accidental way ſhould drop them, and then Osborne and Lane were to pick them up in a kind of a Jeſt only, as if Knox had accidentally let them fall, and they had as accidentally taken them up. How this came to be diſcover'd we muſt give you an Account. Matters being thus prepar'd by the Inſtigation of Knox, and tranſacted ſo far by Lane and Osborne, they thought it then fit to put their Deſign in execution. Accordingly their Informations are produced before a Juſtice of Peace, who finding the Matters were improbable; (for I think they had ſome Scrutiny before the Juſtice of Peace, and before the Lords Committees of the Lords Houſe) one of them Gentlemen, tho' now he is pleaſed to ſay he is Not Guilty, yet at that time had a little more Ingenuity, and did confeſs the whole Matter, and how he was drawn in, and how far he was concern'd, and how Mr. Knox had directed him, and the Money and Rewards he had received, and that beſides divers other Sums of Money had been promiſed, and great Rewards offered in caſe this Deſign had taken effect. We ſhall call our Witneſſes before your Lordſhip, and give in Evidence the Informations that they had intended to offer; and if we ſhall prove the Matters that have been open'd to you, I believe the Conſequence of this Caſe will appear as much to concern the Government as any that hath come to this Bar.

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, we ſhall now go to prove our Caſe; the Queſtion was ask'd whether they would admit the ſeveral Attainders of thoſe Perſons that have been executed for this Plot. I now ask them whether they will admit the ſeveral Impeachments that are alſo mentioned in the Indictment, both of the five Lords in the Tower, and alſo of the Lord Danby.

Mr. Withins and Mr. Scroggs. Yes, we do.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. All that they will allow.

Mr Recorder. Then we begin with Mr. Radford. [Who was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. What is your Name, Sir?

Mr. Radford. Robert Radford.

Mr. At. Gen. Come on, Mr. Radford, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know concerning this Buſineſs, about Lane and Knox.

Mr. Radford. Sir, if it pleaſe your Honour, R. Lane, Father of John Lane was a Yeoman of the Guard extraordinary, and I am one of his Majeſty's Yeomen of the Guard. As he was in waiting he was telling me a Story——

L. C. J. Richard was?

Radford. Yes, Richard the Father was telling me that Dr. Otes did attempt his Son many times to do ſuch and ſuch things to him that was in the way of Buggery; ſaid I, Richard, I am aſhamed of you, that you ſhould cheriſh your Son in ſuch things as theſe are, ſo I went away in Anger, and told him, that if he were my Son, I would correct him ſeverely for it, and ſaid no more, knowing him to be a lying Fellow, and all

all the whole Guard know him to be a lying Fellow, and that there is no Truth in him.

L. C. J. All who?

Radford. All the Guard, and that is all I can say.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. When was this?

Radford. Above a Twelvemonth ago. And I knew that he was a lying Man, and I durſt not ſpeak of it, becauſe I knew he was ſo, and was afraid he would have put it upon me.

L. C. J. What, he told you that his Son told him ſo?

Radford. No, he told me only that his Son was weary of Dr. Otes's Service; and I told him that he was come away once before, and why did he go again? He ſaid his Son could not be quiet.

L. C. J. Did he ſay his Son told him? The Queſtion is plain: Did he ſpeak it of himſelf, and not that his Son told him?

Radford. He ſaid only that he had attempted his Son.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will call Thomas Allen. [Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. What is this Man's Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Allen, my Lord. What do you know of any application to bring this Lane into Otes's Service? Tell your whole Knowledge of the matter.

Mr. Allen. My Lord, about the Month of December laſt, when he was gone out of Dr. Otes's Service——

L. C. J. Who was gone out of Dr. Otes's Service?

Allen. Lane; he deſired me to intercede for him again and again, and accordingly he was admitted into his Service again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear any Diſcourſe before this of any Attempt upon him?

Allen. How Attempt?

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear of any Complaints made by Lane againſt Dr. Otes?

L. C. J. Did you ever hear Lane complain that his Maſter would be uncivil with him?

Allen. No, I remember nothing of that.

Mr. Recorder. Now, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, we ſhall give your Lordſhip an account, that when he was admitted again, he bragg'd he ſhould get a great Sum of Money; and for that we call Mr. Samuel Otes. [Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. Are you Brother to Mr. Otes?

Mr. S. Otes. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of any Sum that this Mr. Lane did pretend to get, and on what Account?

Mr. S. Otes. My Lord, about a matter of a Fortnight before he went away from my Brother, I was in the Withdrawing-Room——

L. C. J. How long is it ago ſince he went away?

Mr. S. Otes. It was in April laſt, as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Mr. S. Otes. So there were ſeveral Servants in the Room, and they were talking and laughing together, and he was wiſhing; ſaid he, I wiſh I had a Thouſand Pounds; ſaid ſome of them to him, what would you do with it? Said he, I would take it and fling it upon the Ground and tumble in it; ſays one of them, you may wiſh long enough before you have it; I queſtion not, ſays he, but 'ere long to find a way to get a Thouſand Pounds.

Mr. Recorder. Do you hear him, Gentlemen? This was a Fortnight before he went away.

Mr. S. Otes. I can only ſpeak as to Osborne, as to the thing it ſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear him ſay which way he did intend to get this Thouſand Pounds?

Mr. S. Otes. No, I do not remember that, but upon theſe ſcandalous things coming out, I was conſidering what he had ſaid, and how he behaved himſelf in his Service, and upon recollection I did think of this Saying of his.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ay, he recollected it afterwards.

Mr. Williams. Speak thoſe Words over again, as near as you can remember.

Then Mr. S. Otes repeated his Evidence to the ſame Effect.

Sir F. Winnington. What is that of Osborne that you can ſay?

L. C. J. What does that ſignifie to theſe Defendants?

Sir F. Winnington. Although he is not a Party that does defend this matter; yet it is all one intire Act that they three were in combination to corrupt the King's Evidence, and to ſtifle it; and tho' ſo far as it does relate to Osborne, it will not convict him being abſent; yet it will enlighten the King's Evidence about the Conſpiracy, for he is mentioned in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Well, if you think it material, you may ask what Queſtions you will about it.

Mr. S. Otes. I was asking Osborne, a little after he was let out of the Gatehouſe, how he came to repent himſelf——

L. C. J. Who had repented himſelf?

Mr. S. Otes. Osborne.

L. C. J. Had Osborne repented himſelf, of what?

Mr. S. Otes. Of what he had given an account of before the Committee.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Do you know any thing of that?

Mr. S. Otes. I know nothing but what they did ſay upon their Examination.

L. C. J. Were you by and preſent at their Examination?

Mr. S. Otes. I heard nothing but what they ſaid for themſelves; I was at ſome part of their Examination.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What did Knox and Lane ſay?

Mr. S. Otes. Osborne was a ſaying, that as we walked, ſaid he, in the Cloyſters of the Abbey, where he did dictate what we were to do.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence. Shall what Osborne ſays at one time, and apart from the reſt be any Evidence here?

Mr. Recorder. No, my Lord, we offer it only as an Evidence of the general Conſpiracy.

L. C. J. Osborne is a telling how Knox and Lane and he did conſpire and contrive this Buſineſs; is this Evidence againſt theſe Defendants? I ask my Brother Maynard.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, if this were ſingle clearly, it were no Evidence; but if it fall out in the Evidence, that we ſhall prove Osborne, Knox and Lane were all in the Conſpiracy, tho' it is not direct Evidence to Convict the other; yet it will enlighten that Evidence we give againſt them.

L. C. J. Why did you not make Osborne a Party?

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. He is laid in the Indictment to join with them, but he is run away.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. My Brother intends it thus, that the Buſineſs is ſo interwoven between them all, that to make it be underſtood, it is neceſſary to bring in ſomething about Osborne.

Mr. Sanders. I pray they may bring ſomething againſt them firſt.

L. C. J. Ay, the Counſel ſay very well on the other ſide; firſt prove ſome Fact againſt Knox and Lane, and then prove what you will afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. It is an inducement to it: But I beſeech you, in all Caſes that are Capital, are not the King's Counſel at liberty to prove Circumſtances as well as the Subſtance?

L. C. J. The Court will direct it is no Evidence againſt the now Defendants, unleſs you prove the Fact upon them.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Unleſs we do bring it down to Knox and Lane afterwards, that they were guilty, it will not be any Evidence I know.

Mr. Holt. If it be not Evidence, we conceive with ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip, it ought not to be heard.

L. C. J. Prove ſomething firſt, Brother, againſt the Defendants, and then urge this.

Mr. Recorder. They need not labour it on the other ſide. We agree it is no Evidence againſt the Defendants, but only circumſtantial as of the general Conſpiracy.

L. C. J. But pray how can it be circumſtantial Evidence and yet no Evidence? Prove the Conſpiracy, or it ſignifies nothing.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If it be circumſtantial to make good the Evidence of the Fact, it will be material for us to urge it.

L. C. J. But firſt prove the Fact.

Mr. Recorder. We ſhall now prove, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, that Knox, who is one of the Perſons indicted, hath made his Applications to others that had relation to Dr. Otes, to endeavour to perſuade them to pick out ſomething or other againſt Dr. Otes. Call Thurſton and Ray.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, we ſhall firſt go to the ſubſtance of the Evidence, and then the circumſtantial thing will be material, which before were not material.

L. C. J. Now you go right, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. We ſhall go this way, to ſhew that Lane and Osborne did accuſe Dr. Otes; and after they had accuſed him, they were convicted in their own Conſciences, and did confeſs they had falſly accuſed him, and afterward did repent of that Repentance; and that Knox had an Hand in all this.

L. C. J. I think you have not opened that clear enough; before whom was that Accuſation?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Before the Lords, and before Sir William Waller.

Mr. Recorder. For they were in the Gatehouſe, and there they ſent for Sir W. Waller to come to them, and there did confeſs the matter to him; whom we deſire may be ſworn. [Which was done accordingly.

Sir W. Waller. My Lord, upon the Twenty ninth of April, during the Seſſions of Parliament, there was a Committee of Lords appointed for the taking Inſtructions about this Plot: Being there attending upon the Lords, this Complaint of Mr. Otes was brought before them of the horrid Abuſe of two of his Servants. And the Lords were pleaſed to order Mr. Warcup and my ſelf to take their Examinations.

L. C. J. What two Servants were they?

Sir W. Waller. They did belong to Dr. Otes.

L. C. J. What were their Names?

Sir W. Waller. Osborne and Lane.

L. C. J. What found you upon their Examination?

Sir W. Waller. Upon the Examination of Osborne and Lane, I did find they did agree together to a Tittle.

L. C. J. Then tell us Lane's Evidence firſt. If they agreed in a Tittle, tell it us what it was.

Sir W. Waller. My Lord, Mr. Lane did confeſs this.

L. C. J. What, upon his Oath?

Sir W. Waller. Yes, upon his Oath, my Lord.

L. C. J. To you?

Sir W. Waller. Yes, my Lord, that he had been induced by Mr. Knox to betray his Maſter, and for to ſwear ſeveral things againſt him which Knox had drawn up and dictated to him. He did not write them himſelf, but Osborne writ them, and he did ſign them. There were four Letters that were brought before us; there were three or four Memorials, as they called them, three or four Informations, which were thoſe Papers that they carried to Mr. Cheyney to Chelſey.

L. C. J. Who carried them?

Sir W. Waller. Knox took Osborne and Lane with him, and carried them thither, as Lane ſwore. And when they came thither, and he was acquainted with the Buſineſs, he looked upon it as ſo foul and notorious a thing, that he would not meddle with it; but he adviſed them that they ſhould go (becauſe Knox pretended the Lord of Danby was much concerned in it) to ſome other Juſtice of Peace, or ſome of the Privy Council that were Friends of my Lord of Danby.

L. C. J. Knox adviſed this, did he?

Sir W. Waller. No, they ſaid Mr. Cheyney did. They went afterwards (and they did all confeſs it) to Mr. Dewy, and Mr. Dewy gave them the ſame Anſwer, that he could not meddle with it, And after this, Mr. Knox went and took ſeveral Lodgings for them, fearing that Dr. Otes would hunt after them; and one Lodging, amongſt others, was, I think, the Three Flower de luces in White Fryars. And afterwards they removed to a place in the paved Alley betwixt Lincolns-Inn Fields and Chancery Lane. During which time, Knox did bid them ſtand firm to what they were to do, and they ſhould not want for a conſiderable Reward, and have wherewithal to maintain them with their Footmen, and live very well. And, my Lord, Lane did confeſs this, that he brought Mr. Osborne to Knox firſt into the Painted Chamber, and made them acquainted there. And, my Lord, there is one thing that I omitted; Mr. Lane did confeſs to me, that Mr. Knox did, at the One Tun Tavern I think it was, drop a Guinea upon the Table, and ſaid, I will not give it you, becauſe now I can ſafely ſwear that I never gave you any Money; but be ſure you ſtand faſt to theſe Informations, and to what I have dictated to you, and you may be ſure you ſhall be well rewarded for your pains. And he told them this more, My Lord Treaſurer would never have ſurrendered himſelf to the Black Rod, unleſs you had promiſed to ſtand faſt to this Evidence; that was, to ſwear to what Evidence he had dictated to them.

L. C. J. Did Lane produce the Informations, and thoſe things that Knox tempted him to ſwear?

Sir

Sir W. Waller. My Lord, they were produced before us.

L. C. J. What were they? What was the ſubſtance of them?

Sir W. Waller. One part was to ſwear, that Mr. Bedloe ſhould come to Mr. Otes, and ſay to him, That my Lord of Danby ſhould offer him a conſiderable Sum of Money to go beyond Sea.

L. C. J. To whom?

Sir W. Waller. To Bedloe. And that was only conſiderable as relating to Mr. Bedloe in any part of the Examination: But as to Mr. Otes, they were to accuſe him of having a deſign of abuſing his Body; for he ſent to me——

L. C. J. Who did?

Sir W. Waller. Lane ſent twice. Upon his firſt Examination he did ſeem to be very ſhy; but upon the ſecond, he ſent one Rix to me, one of the Yeomen of the Guard, to let me know, that he was troubled in his Conſcience at what he had unjuſtly done in charging Mr. Otes; and that he was deſirous to diſcharge his Conſcience of the burden that lay on it, and to wave his own Reputation, that he might acquit the Innocent.

L. C. J. Why, where was the Villany done that he repented of?

Sir W. Waller. My Lord, it was in reference to his ſwearing againſt Dr. Otes.

L. C. J. Where, before the Lords?

Sir W. Waller. He was brought that very morning before the Lords; but notice being come that the King was come in, and the Houſe was ſitting, he was remanded, and afterwards ſent Rix to me, to tell me, he was ſenſible of the Injury he had done to Dr. Otes, and would make a Confeſſion of all.

L. C. J. Where had he done him Injury?

Sir W. Waller. In reference to thoſe Abuſes that he had offered to ſwear, and I think had ſworn, but before whom I don't know; I ſuppoſe you will have an Account of that by and by.

L. C. J. So then this is the Subſtance of what you ſay as to Mr. Otes: That Lane ſent to you, and ſhewed you ſeveral Papers and Informations againſt the Credit of Otes and Bedloe, and told you that Knox did tempt him to juſtifie this, and ſwear it; and that he went with them to a Juſtice of Peace in order to do it, but he did not care to meddle with it, and bid them apply themſelves elſewhere, and afterwards they came to you; and whether it was ſworn or no, you cannot tell, but you ſay he did confeſs he had wrong'd Mr. Otes in thoſe Scandals that he would have put upon him; and that this was by Knox's Advice and Direction.

Sir W. Waller. But there is this thing further: He ſaid truly that Mr. Otes would be ſomething haſty and paſſionate, but that he was very religious, and was very conſtant in ſending his Servants to Prayers; and that what he had accuſed him of, it was an abominable Falſhood, and was done by the Inſtigation of Knox, who had encouraged him to it by the Promiſes of a great Reward.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And it was he that told you of the dropping of the Guinea, was it not?

Sir W. Waller. My Lord, he did confeſs that himſelf, but he ſaid he lent it.

Sir F. Winnington. Pray did Lane confeſs to you from whom this Money and Reward was to be had? For he was not a Perſon that was likely to beſtow ſo much Money of his own. Was it from any of the Conſpirators? Or from whom, that the Rewards, and this Money ſhould come, upon your Oath?

Sir W. Waller. I have examined them many times as to that, but could never learn any thing.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Sir W. Waller, was Knox ever before you?

Sir W. Waller. Yes, my Lord, I took his Examination, and it was only to excuſe himſelf, that he received the Letters from them, which they ſaid they writ out of trouble of Conſcience, and would have him to take their Examinations, and to go along with them before a Juſtice of Peace.

L. C. J. That was Knox's Defence? Said he, they came to me, and I did not go to them, but they deſired me to go along with them to a Juſtice of Peace.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Did you let him know what they had ſaid to you?

Sir W. Waller. No, my Lord, I kept that private: But there is one thing very material. That Morning we took Knox's Examination, we were ſo long about it, that we could not diſpatch it in the Forenoon, and therefore ordered Lane to be brought before us in the Afternoon; and then did Knox write a Note, and ſent it up by a Woman that was a Nurſe there in the Priſon, and there was a Paper convey'd thro' the Door to him to this purpoſe, We paid our——

L. C. J. Who writ that Note?

Sir W. Waller. Knox did, and confeſſed it to me.

L. C. J. To whom was it convey'd?

Sir W. Waller. To Mr. Osborne from Knox; and it was, We always paid our Club——

Mr. Sanders. How do you know it was from Knox?

Sir W. Waller. He confeſſed it.

Mr. Sanders. Did he ſhew it you?

Sir W. Waller. No, I did not ſee the Note, but he confeſſed it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Pray Mr. Sanders don't interrupt them, they are in their Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. They muſt do that; for that is the beſt part of their Defence, for ought I know.

Sir W. Waller. The Words, my Lord, were theſe, We always Clubb'd, and you paid two Shillings at the Sugar-loaf. Tear this.

L. C. J. Why, what could this be?

Sir W. Waller. Why, I will tell you, my Lord, it was upon this Account, that he ſhould not gainſay what he had confeſſed and agreed to, that ſo they might not be in two Stories.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, Osborne and Lane had formerly accuſed, and given ſome Informations againſt Dr. Otes; afterwards you ſee what happened before Sir W. Waller, they renounce what they had done, and then, my Lord, was Knox impriſoned, and thereupon he writes this Note, We always club'd together, and you paid two Shillings at ſuch a Place: The Circumſtances will come out by and by, They met at ſeveral Places, and we ſhall prove that Knox bore their Charges, and paid for them, though by this Note he would make it, that they bore their own Charges.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. The ſucceeding Evidence will open it.

Sir W. Waller. My Lord, here is one thing more that I had forgot: Lane did confeſs, that for the preventing of any Diſcovery of this horrid Fact, it was agreed amongſt them, that if any any one ſhould make a Diſcovery of it, the other two ſhould murder him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We deſire that the Jury may obſerve that.

Sir W. Waller. He did likewiſe declare, that the Lords in the Tower would not be wanting to acknowledge the Kindneſs in diſparaging the King's Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. That was Lane and Osborne did confeſs that?

Sir W. Waller. Yes, both Lane and Osborne ſwore it poſitively.

Sir F. Winnington. If you have done as to Lane, pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury what you know of the Confeſſion of Knox upon his Examination.

Sir W. Waller. Knox confeſſed not any thing, but ſtood ſtiff to it, that the Papers and Letters were written by them, and contrived by them.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And that what he did was at their Requeſt?

Sir W. Waller. Yes, but the reſt did both confeſs, that what was done was wholly by the contrivance of Knox.

L. C. J. Did you ask Knox if he had drop'd a Guinea?

Sir W. Waller. My Lord, he confeſs'd he had drop'd a Guinea, but it was only to lend them, and they promiſed to repay him; and that one morning he drop'd ten Shillings upon the Bed, and they took it up.

L. C. J. Knox ſaid he only lent it?

Sir W. Waller. Yes, but they poſitively ſwore both the one and the other.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What ſaid Knox to that?

Sir W. Waller. He lent them only.

L. C. J. Well, go on Sir.

Sir W. Waller. And Lane did poſitively confeſs, that at all the Places, and the ſeveral Lodgings, and the Treats and Entertainments they had been at, they were all at Knox's Charge, except twice, which might amount to about eighteen Pence, and that he paid.

L. C. J. What ſaid Knox to it?

Sir W. Waller. He deny'd all.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. As to the Manner of it, what ſaid Knox to the dropping of it?

Sir W. Waller. He confeſs'd he dropp'd it, but only lent it them.

Sir Fr. Winnington. You ſay Lane was a Servant to Dr. Otes, pray whoſe Servant was Knox?

Sir W. Waller. He did belong to my Lord Dunblane. And moreover, Mr. Knox did confeſs to me, that the Papers ſo drawn up and deliver'd into his Hands, had been in the Cuſtody of my Lord Latimer for a long time.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Did he ſo, I hope the Jury will believe him then.

L. C. J. Sir W. Waller does ſwear, that Knox confeſſed that all thoſe Scandals raiſed againſt Dr. Otes, had been by his Hands delivered into the Hands of my Lord Latimer, and were there for ſome time.

Sir W. Waller. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Fr. Winnington. I did not well hear you Sir one thing you were ſaying in the beginning of your Evidence, that theſe Gentlemen ſpoke of my Lord of Danby's not ſurrendering himſelf, pray let us hear that over again.

Sir W. Waller. Mr. Lane ſaid this, that my Lord of Danby would not have ſurrendred himſelf to the Black Rod, but that he did depend upon their ſtanding to what Informations they had given in.

L. C. J. Upon your Oath Lane did ſay this?

Sir W. Waller. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, now we will call another Juſtice of Peace, that took their Examinations, and we ſhall then particularly apply our ſelves to Mr. Knox, that ſeems to make theſe Excuſes for himſelf. Call Mr. Juſtice Warcup. [Who was ſworn.

Mr. Warcup. I muſt beg the Favour of the Court, becauſe my Memory is bad, that I may refer to the Informations that were taken before me.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You may look upon them for the Refreſhment of your Memory.

Mr. Warcup. I anſwer to every Part of this that hath my Hand to it, I deſire it may be read.

Mr. Recorder. No, that can't be, you muſt not read them, but only refreſh your Memory by them.

Mr. Warcup. This John Lane did confeſs he liv'd with Dr. Otes, and about the Seventh of April he left him, and while he liv'd with him, he ſaid, he ſent his Servants daily to Prayer in the Morning to the Chapel, and left but one at home to dreſs him, and whilſt he was with Dr. Otes, he was never charg'd by his Maſter with the opening of any Letters, and that the Informations marked 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5.——

Mr. Williams. Pray Sir acquaint the Court as far as you can by your Memory.

Mr. Warcup. Lane, my Lord, before me deny'd all that he had ſaid, that is, that what he had ſaid before the Lords was true, but that particular Examination before Sir W. Waller was by him alone.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Was he upon Oath before you?

Mr. Warcup. Yes, I find he was.

L. C. J. Did you examine him after Sir William Waller, or before?

Mr. Warcup. To the beſt of my Remembrance it was before.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. He was upon his Oath there too?

Mr. Warcup. Yes, and I muſt acquaint you I find it at the bottom to be (Jurat.) He was brought before the Lords of the Committee for Examinations, and did there likewiſe at firſt ſwear the things in theſe Notes contained, and did afterwards come to the ſaid Committee, and beg their Pardon, and God's Pardon for what he had ſworn, for it was falſe.

L. C. J. Who did?

Mr. Warcup. Lane did.

L. C. J. Did you hear him?

Mr. Warcup. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Was he upon his Oath the laſt time, when he ſaid this to the Committee?

Sir W. Waller. Yes my Lord, I was by too, I heard him.

L. C. J. So he ſwears backwards and forwards.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Such People us'd to do ſo.

Mr. Warcup. That particular of the Note, that Mr. Knox ſent up by the Nurſe, I was by and did hear him confeſs it.

Sir W. Waller. But he did declare there to the Commitee, that it was his Voluntary Repentance, and that he was exceeding ſenſible of the Abuſes he had offered to Dr. Otes, in this Deſign of accuſing him in ſuch a manner.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What, before the Lords?

Sir W. Waller. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Warcup. Mr. Knox did ſay he ſent ſuch a Note up to Osborne, and the Words were, as I remember, We always club'd, and you paid two Shillings at the Sugar-Loaf, Tear this.

L. C. J. Look you, the uſe I ſee that would be made of this, is, that Knox in a ſecret way, ſhould give Intimation to this Osborne, that he ſhould not own that he had been treated by him, or any Money ſpent upon him, and this Note is the cunning way of inſinuating that Matter, as I underſtand it.

Mr. Warcup. I ſhall humbly acquaint your Lordſhip with one thing further; Knox did confeſs that he had lain with theſe People in ſeveral private Places, for there were Warrants out for the apprehending them, upon the Information given by Dr. Otes of this Contrivance, that he had lain with them at White Fryars, and Charing Croſs, and at other Places.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. That he had obſcured them when they were in danger.

Mr. Warcup. That he had lain with them at that time.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Pray, upon your Oath, when he had told you he had lain with them in any private Lodging——

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Did he ſay he had adviſed them where to lie?

Mr. Warcup. He ſaid he had been with them, and adviſed them where to lie.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Did he ſay he had taken Lodgings for them?

Mr. Warcup. Yes, he did.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Your Queſtion, Sir, hath prevented mine; but I would ask him a Queſtion further. Did he confeſs to you he paid for thoſe Lodgings?

Mr. Warcup. Truly, My Lord, unleſs I read the Information, I cannot tell.

Sir W. Waller. My Lord, I perfectly remember this, That Knox did confeſs he had paid for their Lodgings, but they were to pay him again; but both Osborne and Lane did poſitively ſwear he did pay for all, and ſeveral times at ſeveral Taverns where he treated them, he bid them call for what they would, and they ſhould have it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know of being at the Sugar-Loaf at any time?

Mr. Warcup. I tell you what I find here he confeſs'd, that they complaining they knew not where conveniently to lodge, this Examinant told them he would endeavour to find them a Lodging, and the very ſelf ſame Day, he went by the Direction of one of my Lord Dunblane's Servants, a Coach-man, to the Sugar-Loaf in White-Fryars, and took Lodgings as for himſelf and two of his Friends, and lay there with them to the time of his going from the ſame Lodging, which was five or ſix Days.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And he did it by the Direction of my Lord Dunblane's Coach-man?

Mr. Warcup. Yes, my Lord, it is ſo in the Information.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Is that Information true?

Mr. Warcup. Yes, My Lord, I am ſure he ſaid it, or I ſhould not have writ it down.

L. C. J. Mr. Warcup, Had Lane recanted what he had ſaid againſt Mr. Otes at that time when the Lodgings were taken?

Mr. Warcup. My Lord, it was before they came to the Lords that they took theſe Lodgings.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ay, that's clear, it was before all came out.

Mr. Warcup. I was commanded by the Houſe of Peers to give my Warrant for the apprehending of them.

L. C. J. The Lords ſent to apprehend them upon the Slander of Mr. Otes, and then he concealed them.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, Sir W. Waller ſpeaks of one Rix that was ſent by Lane to him to make a Diſcovery, this is the Gentleman. [Who was ſworn.

Rix. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, There was one Osborne that was concern'd with this Lane, who is ſince run away: Osborne came firſt upon the Guard to me, and deſir'd me to get him into Service. He deſir'd to come into my Lord Treaſurer's Service, and what he deſir'd of me was to frame him a Petition to my Lord Treaſurer. We had no Anſwer till two Days after, and I being upon the Guard with Dr. Otes, I did ſuppoſe I might get him into his Service, I ſpoke to Dr. Otes, and he entertain'd him; and after he had entertain'd him a while, this Lane then being a Servant with him, they both told me they were going off now from Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. Who told you?

Rix. Lane and Osborne, and that they ſhould get Preferment; they were ſworn Brothers together, if one did go, the other would go. I ask'd them why they would go away? Oh, ſaid he, I ſhall keep my Man my ſelf. Say you ſo, ſaid I, I have been in Town ſo long, and I could get no ſuch Preferment. Then they told me they ſhould have 100 l. a Year, and 500 l. in Money.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Who told you ſo?

Rix. Osborne and Lane both.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What, 100 l. a Year, and 500 l. a-piece?

Rix. Yes: So I ask'd them how, but they would not tell me, but, ſaid Osborne to me, for your preferring me to Mr. Otes, you ſhall be no loſer. I met him another time, for Osborne came to deſire me to lend him a Cravat. Said he, I muſt come down to your Houſe to morrow morning to get a Cravat, I deſire I may have a good one, for I am to go before one of the greateſt Peers of the Realm, to dine with him: Where, ſaid I, to which end of the Town? The other end of the Town, ſaid he to me: But, ſaid I, why do you leave Mr. Otes? Oh, ſaid he, let Mr. Otes look to himſelf, for I have enough againſt him. Then I ſmelt ſomething of ſome Deſign againſt Dr. Otes, and brought it before Juſtice Warcup, and gave in my Teſtimony, and upon further Inquiry into it, the Lords ordered him to ſend out his Warrant for the taking of thoſe Fellows, Knox, Lane, and Osborne, which he aſſign'd over to me; in a ſhort time after they were taken, firſt Lane was taken, and in a day or two Osborne and Knox, and were examined and taxed with it. Osborne he made a Confeſſion before Juſtice Warcup, and they deſir'd me to ſee Knox and Lane in Priſon, and I did ſee them in Priſon, and when they did come there, Knox ſaid, where is Osborne, why don't he come to Priſon as well as I? I am a better Gentleman than he. Oh, ſaid I, he hath confeſſed; ſo he was turn'd up into the Priſon. Said I to Mr. Lane, will you drink a Pot of Beer? Said ſaid he, I don't much care if I do: and ſaid he, Mr. Rix, if I have not gone too far againſt my ſelf, if you will ſtand my Friend, I will make an honeſt Confeſſion. Said I, I am glad there is ſo much Grace in you, I will then do you all the good I can. Pray, ſaid he, will you pleaſe to go and call Sir William Waller: Why not Juſtice Warcup, ſaid I, who was firſt concern'd in this Diſcovery? No, he would have only Sir William Waller. I came and found him in the Court of Requeſts, ſo I went with him to Smith's the Tobacconiſt near the Gate, and ſent for Lane; the Keeper brought him: I think this was about nine or ten in the Morning, and from that time till about ſix at Night he was in Examination. I went then to Mr. Otes, and told him Lane had made an honeſt Confeſſion. I waited on Sir William Waller till the Afternoon, and then he made an Order, that he having made an honeſt Confeſſion, ſhould have the Enlargement of the Priſon, and not be confin'd, as others were, which he had. Lane ſent for me the next Day, I came down in a Day or two after, and his Siſter was there with him, they were eating Butter and Radiſhes, and when I would have paid for the Drink, Lane cry'd No, by no means; for Knox hath ſent me in Three and twenty Shillings the other Day, and that will ſerve me, I hope, till I come out: But now, ſaid he, I have made a Confeſſion, I believe I ſhall have no more Money from him; and I deſire you would ſpeak for my Enlargement. I came down to him another time, and he told me he had receiv'd a Note, which Note was put up from a Gentlewoman in the Street,

That if he would ſtand firm to his Text, he ſhould have Five hundred Pounds; nay, he ſhould not want One thouſand Pounds; but in caſe they would not ſtand firm to their Text, the Lord Treaſurer would never have come in; and if yet they did not ſtand firm, he would loſe his Head.

L. C. J. Who came that Note from?

Sir W. Waller. He told me this, That there was ſuch Word brought to him by the Nurſe, and ſhe told him, That a Gentlewoman very well clad came to her, and deſir'd her to ſpeak to him to ſtand faſt, and that Osborne and Knox would be ſure to ſtand faſt, and that they two ſhould be too ſtrong for the other, he being but a ſingle Evidence; and more than that, he ſhould not want a Thouſand Pounds, if he had occaſion for it. I ask'd the Nurſe what the Gentlewoman's Name was, ſhe told me, ſhe had ask'd, but ſhe would not tell her.

L. C. J. Where is this Woman, this Nurſe?

Sir W. Waller. She was Nurſe to the Goal, and was turned out upon this Diſcovery by the Goaler.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You had this from Lane, Sir William Waller?

Sir W. Waller. Yes.

Rix. My Lord, after this was done, Lane's Father and Mother told me this at my own Houſe, That had it not been upon their Son's Account, my Lord Treaſurer would never have come in; and they told me that one Heſt ſhould come and tell them ſo: And Lane himſelf told me, he thanked God that now he had made an honeſt Confeſſion, that now his Heart was very light; he had a Burden upon him before, but now he had confeſſed, and his Heart was light.

L. C. J. What did he confeſs?

Rix. He did confeſs, That my Lord Treaſurer would never have ſurrendred himſelf, if he had thought they would not have ſtood firm, and if they did not ſtand firm, he ſhould loſe his Head.

Mr. Williams. You ſay Lane confeſſed this as of himſelf?

Rix. Yes, and afterwards his Father and Mother told me ſo, and he did ſay as of himſelf, that he had a Note put under the Door.

L. C. J. But from whom had he that Note?

Rix. From a Gentlewoman in the Street, he told me ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What did he ſay as to Knox?

Rix. He told me he was ſet on by Knox, and he drew up all the Writings for him; and Knox told him, if you come to be examined at ſuch or ſuch a thing, make a ſtop, and turn this way and that way.

Mr. Williams. Pray acquaint the Court and the Jury, did Lane tell you how he was drawn into this, and who drew him in?

Rix. Knox was the Man that drew up the Writings, and promiſed him thoſe Rewards, he ſaid.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You ſay he told you that Knox promiſed them? How far Knox will be concerned in this Evidence, will be conſider'd afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Now we come to Knox's own particular Actings. What hath been ſaid already, hath been out of other People's Mouths, now we come to him himſelf, and we call Richard Slightam. [Who was ſworn:

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Mr. Slightam will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of this Knox, what Offers have been made you, by whom, and when, and for what?

Slightam. I was offered Money to carry Notes from the one to the other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, what Office had you there?

Slightam I was a Priſoner there my ſelf, and Under-goaler too, and I was offered Money to carry Notes between the one and the other, that they might not betray one another.

Mr. Recorder. By whom?

Slightam. By Knox.

L. C. J. What did they offer you?

Slightam. I had Three half Crowns given me at one time by Knox, and he promiſed me he would give me a conſiderable Sum.

L. C. J. But he not name the Sum?

Slightam. No.

L. C. J. What did he deſire you to do for that Money?

Slightam. He deſired me to carry Notes from the one to the other, that they might not betray one another.

Mr. At. Gen. Between whom? Name them.

Slightam. Knox, Lane, and Osborne.

L. C. J. What did you ſay, that they might not betray one another? Why?

Slightam. Yes, that they might not betray one another, for they were fearful that they ſhould, becauſe they could not ſpeak together, to lay their Stories together.

Mr. At. Gen. And hark you, Sir. What Meſſages did you carry between them?

Slightam. None, I never carry'd any.

L. C. J. No, what had you your Money for?

Slightam. I told them of it below, and they would not let me carry any.

L. C. J. But you got your Money?

Slightam. Yes, I got ſome Money?

Mr. At. Gen. Knox you ſay gave you the Three half Crowns. Did you ſpeak with Lane and Osborne?

Slightam. Lane I ſpoke with every day, and Lane ſaid, he hoped that the Lords would not put him in the Pillory, for all he had ſworn falſely.

L. C. J. What Lords?

Slightam. My Lord Shaftesbury, and my Lord Privy Seal.

Mr. Smith. What did Knox ſay to you after Osborne had confeſſed?

Slightam. That is nothing, ſaid he, if we do but ſtand firm together, what Osborne hath given in Evidence will ſignifie nothing.

Mr. Smith. Why?

Slightam. For two, he ſaid, were better than one.

Sir. Fr. Winnington. I think you ſay you had Three half Crowns given you by Knox, pray who was the firſt that offered you Money to carry the Notes?

Slightam. It was Knox.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Ay, he carried the Purſe.

Slightam. Yes, I ſuppoſe he did.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. They were both in the Gatehouſe Priſoners at that time.

Slightam. Yes, ſo was I. But they were lock'd in ſeveral Rooms, and none could come at them.

L. C. J. But you carried no Note nor Meſſages, upon your Oath?

Slightam. No.

Mr. Williams. Pray call Mr. Dewy. [Who was ſworn.

Pray Mr. Dewy will you acquaint the Court and the Jury, what Diſcourſe you had with Knox, who he came from, what he came about, and what Recommendations he brought with him, and from whom?

Mr. Dewy. My Lord, ſometime in the ſitting of the laſt Parliament that began in March, about ten a-Clock at Night a Meſſage was ſent in to me that one would ſpeak with me from my Lord Latimer: I was either in bed or going to bed; and I did not think there was really any ſuch Meſſage, becauſe my Lord Latimer did not know me, nor I him. They were very preſſing to come in, inſomuch as my Man could hardly keep them out. I told them there was nothing ſure of ſo much haſte, but what might be done to morrow, or ſome other time: So I ſpoke not with them that Night. Either the next Day, or ſome ſhort Time after, as I remember, Mr. Knox came to me with another Gentleman, and he brought Papers in his Hands ready written; he told me that they were Informations of one Lane and Osborne (as I remember thoſe were the Names he mention'd then) and they were againſt Mr. Otes. Then I began to look upon it as ſomething extraordinary, the Parliament being then ſitting, and the Committee of each Houſe having the Examination of this Buſineſs. Said I, Mr. Knox, you have been a Juſtice of Peace's Clerk (for I knew him ſo) and you know 'tis very unuſual to take Informations againſt a Perſon without the Party's being preſent, if he may be had to croſs-examine the Witneſſes upon Interrogatories, as the Caſe may be: And beſides, this looks as if it were to take Informations againſt the King; which we never do upon Oath. So I diſmiſſed them, and directed them to the Committee of Secrecy of the Houſe of Commons, for whom it was moſt proper. This is all I know of this Buſineſs.

Mr. Williams. Did Mr. Knox tell you any thing what was contained in thoſe Examinations?

Mr. Dewy. Yes, he did give me ſome Information, that Osborne and Lane did repent of ſomething, but I can't give you Information particularly.

Mr. Williams. Pray tell the Subſtance of it.

Mr. Dewy. I can't remember what the particulars were, but Lane and Osborne were the Parties to be examined, and I ſhifted them off as well as I could.

L. C. J. Did they come along with Knox?

Mr. Dewy. They were not in my Room, but they were without, I believe.

L. C. J. And did he tell you at the ſame time that they had recanted?

Mr. Dewy. Truly, my Lord, I can't well remember; but he ſaid they repented of what they had falſely accuſed my Lord Treaſurer of.

L. C. J. Did they ſay they had falſely accuſed Mr. Otes?

Mr. Dewy. No, they did charge Mr. Otes with ſome Crime; and they did ſpeak ſomething of falſe accuſing, I can't remember what.

L. C J. Did not they ſay, Mr. Otes?

Mr. Dewy. I remember it now; it was as if Mr. Bedloe and Mr. Otes had made a Conſpiracy againſt my Lord of Danby.

Sir. Fr. Winnington. I think you ſay, you knew Mr. Knox a Juſtice of Peace's Clerk: Pray Sir, you are an ingenuous Man, from whom did he pretend to come to you?

Mr. Dewy. He came to me from my Lord Latimer, as he ſaid.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Did he ſay ſo, that the Lord Latimer wiſhed him to go to you?

Mr. Dewy. Yes; and I wondered at it, becauſe I did not know my Lord, nor my Lord me.

Mr. Withins. When was this?

Mr. Dewy. It was the latter end of April, or the beginning of May, as I take it; I do not very well remember: But the Subſtance of it I remember was, that they had over-heard Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe conſpiring againſt my Lord of Danby.

L. C. J. Mr. Dewy, can you remember whether they did come to give you Information againſt Mr. Otes for abuſing their Bodies, or Otes and Bedloe's Conſpiracy againſt the Earl of Danby?

Mr. Dewy. Truly, my Lord, I can't be poſitive in it; for the Parliament was then ſitting, and I ſhifted them off.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You never looked into the Information at all?

Mr. Dewy. No, I did not, I thought it not proper for me.

Mr. Recorder. Call Henry Wiggins and his Mother. [Who were both ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Come on Mr. Wiggins, what do you know of any Endeavours of Knox or Lane, or any of theſe Perſons, to take off or ſcandalize Mr. Otes's, or Mr. Bedloe's Teſtimony?

L. C. J. What is this Man's Name?

Mr. At. Gen. Henry Wiggins.

Wiggins. About the latter end of February laſt, Mr. Knox and I met at Charing-Croſs, and we went in in and drank together; and he propoſed ſeveral things to me; firſt he deſired that I would get for him a Copy of the Papers my Maſter had.

L. C. J. Who is your Maſter?

Wiggins. Mr. Bedloe. And eſpecially what concerned my Lord Treaſurer; as alſo to take a Journal of all my Maſter's Actions, and the Names of the Perſons that came to him; for, ſaid he, my Lord hears that my Lord of Shaftesbury, and the Duke of Buckingham do cabal with him againſt my Lord. But if my Lord could but find out his Enemies, he would oppoſe them, and ſtrive to baffle them. My Lord, to encourage me to this, he told me he would carry me to his Lord, though it were at Midnight, to diſcourſe with him.

L. C. J. What Lord?

Wiggins. My Lord Treaſurer: And he ſaid he ſhould give me Incouragement to go on. Said I, Does my Lord know of this? Yes, ſaid he, I told my Lord I had a Friend lived with Mr. Bedloe, and he gave me Encouragement to go on and treat with him. And he ſaid moreover, my Lord, Mr. Otes and Bedloe were two great Rogues; that the King believed not a word they ſaid; and as ſoon as he had heard all they could ſay, they ſhould be hanged.

Mr. Williams. Pray did he propoſe any Reward to you?

Wiggins. He told me his Lord ſhould give me Encouragement.

L. C. J. What ſhould you do?

Wiggins. He deſired me to give my Lord the Papers, and then my Lord ſhould tell me what I ſhould do about my Maſter.

Sir Fr. Winnington. What did he ſay of Otes and Bedloe, Sir?

Wiggins. He ſaid, That Otes and Bedloe were great Rogues, and that the King knew them to be ſo; and when he had heard what they could ſay, he would hang them.

Mr. Williams. Pray upon your Oath, did he offer you any Money, or any Reward?

Wiggins. He offered me not any particular Sum, but he told me I ſhould have Satisfaction and Reward, or any Place in my Lord's Diſpoſal I ſhould be entertained into, if I went away upon this Buſineſs.

Mr. Williams. Did he ſay any thing to you, to invite you, or encourage you to ſwear againſt your Maſter?

Wiggins. No, But he told me my Lord ſhould give me Directions how to go on.

Mr. Recorder. What ſay you as to Lane and Osborne?

Wiggins. I did not know them at that time.

Mr. Recorder. What time after was it that you did know them?

Wiggins. I met with them a little while after, and they were diſcourſing all together, but I had no Diſcourſe with them.

Mr. Recorder. Did Knox at any time ſpeak to you, to bring him into the Company of Lane and Osborne?

Wiggins. No, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. This was the firſt time you met with him about this Matter?

Wiggins. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. What did you promiſe Knox you would do?

Wiggins. I told him I would do him any Service that lay in my power, but nothing that would be to my Maſter's Prejudice; and I was appointed by him to meet him at my Lord Treaſurer's.

L. C. J. And what other Meetings had you beſides?

Wiggins. I was but twice with him.

L. C. J. You never agreed to any thing?

Wiggins. I told it my Maſter, and it was diſcovered ſoon after, ſo that the Lords came to hear it.

Mr. At. Gen. Where is Mrs. Wiggins? What do you know of any Endeavours to corrupt this Evidence?

Mrs. Wiggins. I know no more than what my Son knows; he firſt came to my Houſe.

L. C. J. Who?

Mrs. Wiggins. Mr Knox; and asking me where my Son was, I told him he lived with Mr. Bedloe: And he ſaid, he very much rejoyced at it, and deſired to ſpeak with him. I told him, No, he could not, for his Maſter had ſo much Employment for him, that it was very ſeldom I my ſelf could get a ſight of him. Said he, I have a little Concern with him; and he living with Mr. Bedloe, may do my Lord Treaſurer great Service, and doing my Lord Treaſurer Service, he does his Majeſty Service; for his Majeſty loves my Lord Treaſurer above all things in the World. And he would not be contradicted, but he would ſee him. Then the next day I told him he ſhould come, and we appointed to go to him, but he ſhould not ſee him alone without me, I told him; he told me he deſired it not. He came according to the Appointment, and I carried him to Charing croſs to an Ale-houſe, and there ſent a Porter for my Son, and he came: And the firſt thing he ſaid to him was, I am mighty joyful to know you live with Mr. Bedloe; you may do my Lord great Service: In what, ſays my Son? In letting my Lord know what Company your Maſter keeps, and what Lords they are that daily and hourly keep company with your Maſter, and cabal againſt my Lord. Said I, Mr. Knox, that is the way to bring my Son's Neck to the Stake; that he ſhall never do. But, ſays he, I will tell him a way how he ſhall do himſelf no harm at all: And then he up and told him, he deſired him to write him Letters when he found any thing of Secrecy, and ſet no Name to it; and if he came at Twelve a-Clock at Night, he would let him into my Lord Treaſurer's, and no body ſhould take notice of it: And he would have had him taken a Coach to have gone to my Lady Danby preſently, to have an Aſſurance from her Mouth of Encouragement, and that he ſhould have any Place in her Lord's Diſpoſal.

L. C. J. Were you ever with my Lady Danby?

Mrs. Wiggins. No, we deny'd it; and it was diſcover'd. And beſides, my Lord, I told him, if he would lay down my Son a Thouſand Pounds he ſhould not do it; he ſhould not betray his Truſt. And then he ſaid, that the King knew Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe to be two great Rogues; and when he had got what he could out of them, he would hang them.

Mr. Williams. Have you had any Offers of late not to come here as a Witneſs in this Caſe?

Mrs. Wiggins. No, my Lord; but there have been Perſons three times at my Houſe to know whether I were Subpœna'd, yea or no, as from Mr. Knox.

Mr.

Mr. Williams. Did ever any body perſwade you not to come to give Evidence?

Mrs. Wiggins. No.

L. C. J. When was this you ſpeak of?

Mrs. Wiggins. In February, the latter end.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Mr. Dewy, who came in company with Mr. Knox to you?

Mr. Dewy. One Mr. Blayden.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Who is that?

Mr. Dewy. Steward to my Lord of Danby, I think.

Mr. Serj Maynard. Here is Slightam again, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. What have you to ſay more?

Slightam. Mr. Lane told me they had many Treats, and had ſo much Money, a Guinea, as I think he told me, to ſwear againſt Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. Who gave it him?

Slightam. Mr. Osborne, or Mr. Knox, I can't tell which.

L. C. J. Where did Lane tell you ſo?

Slightam. In Priſon.

L. C. J. In what Priſon?

Slightam. In the Gate-houſe.

Mr. Williams. Call Mr. Palmer. [Who was ſworn.

We call him to corroborate what that young Man Wiggins hath ſaid.

Mr. Palmer. What he hath told here, he diſcovered firſt to me, and I diſcovered to his Maſter, that Mr. Knox would have had him to take a Journal of his Maſter's Actions, and to give it him every Day. My Lord, I am one of the Yeomen of the Guard, and I waited upon Mr. Bedloe, and he deſired me to help him to a Clerk: and I helped him to Wiggins, this young Man. He had not been there three Weeks, or a very little time, when Knox came to him to tempt him; and being a Stranger to his Maſter, he knew not how to diſcover it to him, and told me, Such a thing is offered to me, but I am a Stranger to my Maſter, and I know not how to break it to him.

L. C. J. The uſe you make of this, is no more, but only to corroborate what he hath ſaid, that he told it him while it was freſh, and that it is no new Matter of his Invention now.

Mr. Recorder. It is very right, my Lord, that is the uſe we make of it. Call Thomas Dangerfield. [Who was ſworn.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, give an Account what you know concerning Mr. Knox and Mr. Lane, and what Deſigns they have had againſt Mr. Otes, and who ſupported them and maintained them in it?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, all that I have to ſay in this Caſe, is this: I do think it was in the Month of June I was at my Lord Caſtlemain's, and he asked me, if I had been imployed in a Buſineſs of Knox and Lane, that were Priſoners at the Gate-houſe: I told him, Not. His Lordſhip then wrote a Letter to my Lady Powis, and deſired I might be imployed in it: And ſhe did tell me that it was a thing of material Conſequence, and that I ſhould be furniſhed with Money for the getting of Knox and Lane out. I took all Opportunities for the doing of it that were neceſſary. I went to the Gate-houſe, made Enquiry after Lane, and took Care with his Mother to relieve him, for I heard he was in an indigent Condition at that time.

L. C. J. Did you give his Mother the Money?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, my Lord, Twenty Shillings, and I had that Money from Mrs. Cellier by my Lady Powis's Order. After that time there was one Mrs. Airy, who uſed to carry Money to the Catholicks in Priſon, ſhe ſaid that it was poſſible, as ſhe had been informed from ſome of the Prieſts in the Gate houſe, that ſome things might be had under the Hands of Knox and Lane that would be very material againſt Mr. Otes: She ſaid, ſhe had been informed ſo. I then deſired that Mrs. Airy, that Pen and Ink might be conveyed to them, that they might have the Convenience of giving it under their Hands, which ſhe promiſed, and they did convey Pen and Ink under the Door to this Mr. Lane.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Dangerfield. As Mrs. Airy told me. Then ſhe came again, and withal told me, that it was Mr. Knox's Deſire that Lane ſhould do ſomething to ſignifie to him, or ſatisfie him that he did ſtand faſt; then Lane wrote a little Note, and that Note was to this effect. I will die before I will comply with that Villain Otes, and if any good People will do me the Kindneſs to get me my Liberty, I will do the Catholicks the greateſt Service imaginable in diſcovering what I know about Mr. Otes. This I write from the bottom of my heart, and ſhall die in it. So help me God.

L. C. J. How came you by the Note?

Mr. Dangerfield. This Note was written by Lane's own Hand, and given from under the Door to one Mr. Parſons a Prieſt in the Gate-houſe. This Parſons gave the Note to Mrs. Airy, and ſhe gave it to me.

L. C. J. Do you know Lane's Hand?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, very well, as I ſhall ſhew you anon.

L. C. J. What became of the Note?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, I don't know what became of the Note, for the Counteſs of Powis had it afterwards.

L. C. J. Do you believe it was of Lane's own writing?

Mr. Dangerfield. I am very well ſatisfied of it, my Lord, according to the Judgment I am capable to give of Hands; indeed I was not acquainted with his Hand then, but that was the firſt, to my Knowledge, that ever I ſaw of it; but after I having parted with the Note, and ſeeing ſome of his Hand-writing, upon Recollection I can ſay I believe it was his own Hand.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee the Note again?

Mr. Dangerfield. Never afterwards. And then my Lord, my Lady Powis was exceeding glad upon the hearing of it, and, as I was informed of it afterwards, ſhe was the greateſt part of the following Day upon her Knees, giving God Thanks for the great Advantage and Strength that was come to their Cauſe.

L. C. J. What! for having a Villain to come over to her ſide, that ſwore backwards and forwards?

Mr. Dangerfield. Afterwards I received Money ſeveral times, and gave his Mother more to furniſh and relieve him. And ſeveral times afterwards I received Money from Mrs. Cellier by Order of my Lady Powis, for the doing of Lane's Buſineſs, that is, for his Liberty; and I had the Papers from one Lawſon an Attorney that had been employ'd in the ſame Buſineſs before; and, as I was informed by him, a Motion or two was made at this Bar for their Liberty, but however he began to deſpair of it, and I was to undertake it;

it; but withal he ſaid, he was glad he was rid of it, for he had been often employ'd in the Buſineſs of the Catholicks, and it had impair'd his Credit very much, and very freely deliver'd the Papers to me, which indeed were not many. After that, my Lord, I retained Mr. Sanders, as I think it was he, but there was a Motion about it, and with great Difficulty I did get Lane out upon Common Bail; and when I had done ſo, according to my Lady Powis's Order, I brought him to Powis Houſe; and then my Lady Powis ordered, that he ſhould go by the Name of Johnſon; becauſe if any of the Servants ſhould talk of one Lane being in the Houſe, it might come to Otes's Ear, the Houſe might be ſearcht, and if he were found there, it might be prejudicial to the Lords, and all their Buſineſs. And then, my Lord, Mr. Wood came a little after with the ſame Command from his Lord, and he had ſome Order——

L. C. J. Who is Wood?

Mr. Dangerfield. That Wood is my Lady Powis's Gentleman: And he came and ordered that my Lady Powis gave particular Command to the Porter of the Houſe, in my hearing, that he ſhould give order to all the Servants, to have a particular Eye and Care that he did not go from the Houſe, for they were very dubious of him, having made ſo many Equivocations before; for they feared Mr. Otes might find him, or he might go voluntarily and make a Diſcovery of himſelf, and ſo contradict all he had given an Account of there. For, my Lord, before this, as ſoon as ever Lane was gone out, they were very deſirous to have what he had to ſay put in Writing; but they had not opportunity then, but we let it alone to ſome other time. Then, my Lord, ſoon after, about three Weeks or a Month after; I cannot be poſitive in the time, becauſe I had a great deal of Buſineſs upon my Hands; but I ſuppoſe it was about three Weeks or a Month after, my Lord Powis ſent for me to the Tower, and told me, he was informed that Mr. Otes was then making ſearch after Lane, and if he found him at his Houſe, it would be very prejudicial to their Buſineſs; and he deſired me to take care, and to ſend him out of the way, that Mr. Otes might not find him; which I did; and thinking of ſeveral Places, I could not find any ſo convenient as Grays in Eſſex, by the Water-ſide. I came to Lane, and told him that he ſhould be furniſhed with Money and Neceſſaries for his Journey, and, in order to it, that very day I took him and gave him a Pair of Shooes and Ten Shillings in his Pocket, and ſent him to Grays. I received two Letters afterwards from this Lane, by which Letters I am very well ſatisfied, that that Note that he wrote before that was given under the Door, was his Hand. So then I received a third Letter (I think) my Lord, and in the Letter he told me that ſome Perſon of Mr. Otes's Acquaintance had been in that Town and ſeen him, and he thought it was not material that he ſtaid any longer there, and deſired to be removed. So then I ſhewed my Lady Powis the Letter, and I ſuppoſe my Lord Powis had an Account of it alſo; but I cannot be poſitive in that, but I had order to remove Lane, and by my Lady Powis's means I ſent down one on Horſeback, and he diſcharged ſome Debts Lane had contracted in the Houſe, and ſent him away to London; and after his return to London he continued three days more at my Lord Powis's Houſe; at which time, he ſays, he was forced to lie upon the Chairs, for at that time were the St. Omer's Witneſſes removed from Mrs. Celier's, becauſe they were afraid of being taken up by Sir William Waller, who was in ſearch for them. So having ſome other Buſineſs, I did not ſend him away preſently, but I had particular order to ſend Lane into ſome other place; and I did adviſe with Mrs. Celier where to ſend him, and ſhe ſaid, I think it will be neceſſary to ſend him to Peterley, at one Mr. Waites's Houſe in Buckinghamſhire; for, ſaid ſhe, they are Catholicks, and will be ſure to take a particular care of him: But I told her it would be too far, and I would think of ſome place nearer; and then I thought it would be neceſſary to ſend him to Tottenham, to the White Hart; and there he ſtaid, I ſuppoſe, four or five Days, or a Week. This was after the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, as I remember. My Lord Powis ſent to me, and told me; ſays he, I am in ſeveral Doubts about this Lane, and if it ſhould be known that he is countenanced by me, or any of our People, it would not be well; ſo I leave him wholly to you, do what you will with him; but I adviſe you to ſend for him up to Town, and give him Ten Shillings a Week to live upon. So when I was at leiſure I ſent for him again from Tottenham, and I told him; Mr. Lane, it will be very neceſſary that you do take ſome care for a Livelihood about Town; it is not ſafe nor adviſeable for you to be about Powis Houſe; and at that time I took care he ſhould come there no more, and that if my Lord Powis's Servants ſhould meet him, they ſhould take no Notice of him; which they did perform, I ſuppoſe, and as I was told. But before this, and before I ſent Lane into the Countrey the ſecond time, as near as I can remember, Knox was at Liberty; I had been endeavouring, as ſoon as I had got Lane out of the Gatehouſe, to get Knox out alſo; but I found I could not, and I left that. But I have been informed by Mr. Knox himſelf, that one Mr. Nevil, alias Paine, was furniſhed with Money from the Lords in the Tower, for the getting of Knox's Liberty; and this Nevil himſelf did ſay, as Mr. Knox told me, that he did it by their Order; and from this Knox, by Mrs. Celier's perſuaſion, I received ſeveral Papers, which were Informations againſt Otes; or at leaſt, thoſe Papers that they had drawn up before they were in Cuſtody. Theſe Papers were ſent by me to the Tower, and from thence to Mr. Nevil to inlarge upon, I ſuppoſe, as he thought fit; and after to my Lord Caſtlemain, and afterwards they were re-ſent to me by Mrs. Celier, who order'd me to draw up an Affidavit according to thoſe Directions, and get Lane ſworn to the ſame; which I did, and took Lane, and asked him, ſaid I, Mr. Lane, here is an Affidavit, can you ſwear it? Yes, ſaid he, I can ſwear it, before I read it to him.

L. C. J. I believe ſo.

Mr. Dangerfield. Nay, ſaid I, you know not what it is; ſo I read it to him; ſaid I, do you know this to be a Truth? Yes, ſaid he, I do know it to be all true: Said I, I will read it again to you, becauſe you are to make Oath of it, and I would not have you do any thing, but what is ſafe, and then we went to Sir James Butler, but he was not at home, then to have it ſworn.

L. C. J. What was the purport of that Affidavit?

Mr. Dan-

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, I cannot well remember the Words, but it was about accuſing Mr. Otes of Sodomy.

L. C. J. On whom?

Mr. Dangerfield. It was for attempting Buggery on the Body of this Lane.

L. C. J. That was the Subſtance of it?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes my Lord: And I did take this Lane to Sir James Butler, and he did make Affidavit that it was true: And it was left there before Sir James Butler. I ſuppoſe the Affidavit may be in Court, or a Copy of it. So, my Lord, after that Lane being gone from Powis-Houſe, and I having no manner of Converſe with him more; but only that every Saturday I took care he ſhould have his Money, ſometimes I went to his Mother's Lodgings, and left it there for him; ſometimes he would come to me for it: After this we were removed from Powis Houſe to Mrs. Celier's; but he was always certain of Ten Shillings a Week. Sometimes he would pretend, that it was too little for him to live upon; and ſometimes I would give him Two, or Three, or Four Shillings more of my ſelf; but I had no Order to do that from any Body. This is all, my Lord, I do know of Lane, as I remember.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What do you know of Knox?

Mr. Dangerfield. Knox firſt delivered to me thoſe Papers, that were ſent firſt to the Tower, and afterwards to Nevil, and afterwards to my Lord Caſtlemain, and re-delivered to me; and I did deliver them again to Knox, after they were inlarged upon: And I believe, after that, Knox had prevailed with Lane to write them in his own Hand.

L. C. J. Why do you believe ſo?

Mr. Dangerfield. Becauſe being writ in a fair Hand, Knox told me when the Papers were delivered, theſe are the main things that I am to work by, and theſe muſt be produced againſt Otes, and be writ over in a fairer Hand, and by that I believe he prevailed with Lane to write it in his own Hand.

L. C. J. Whoſe Hand were they in?

Mr. Dangerfield. It was a ſtrange Hand I knew not, and I do not believe it was Knox's Hand, tho' indeed I can't tell, I know it not.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did Knox ask you who had the peruſal of thoſe Papers? And who had made Additions to them?

Mr. Dangerfield. No, he took the Papers, and took no notice of any Addition or Enlargement.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Pray Sir, tell the manner of the delivering of thoſe Papers.

Mr. Dangerfield. Firſt, by Mrs. Celier's perſuaſion, Knox delivered to me the Papers, which imported the whole Matter of the Charge againſt Mr. Otes: Theſe I ſent to the Tower by Mrs. Celier's Hands, from thence they were ſent to Nevil to be inlarged upon, from thence to my Lord Caſtlemain, who was alſo to inlarge upon them, and from thence they were ſent to Mrs. Celier again, and from her delivered to me, and I delivered them to Knox again. I found by his Diſcourſe, and every thing elſe, that Mr. Knox was deſirous of my Correſpondence, but yet ſeemed as if he were ſhy of any body's taking notice of it. Said I to Mr. Knox, there is one Mrs. Downing, that lives at Lambeth over the Water, where Mr. Otes and Dr. Tongue, and ſeveral other Perſons uſed to meet, where I had been informed by ſome of the Catholicks; by Parſons, my Lady Powis, and ſeveral others, that Mr. Otes, Dr. Tongue, my Lord of Danby, and others, did meet at the Alms-houſes there, where the Plot was contrived and formed, for they pretended to me there was no ſuch thing really. So, ſaid I, if you will go with me, we will diſcourſe with her about the Matter, for I heard ſhe talked very freely in ſeveral Matters nearly concerning Mr. Otes, and my Lord of Danby, and other Perſons. So, as I ſaid, I told him, if you will go along with me, I have not been there yet, I will go and diſcourſe with her, and put down what ſhe ſays in Writing. Then Mr. Knox, my Brother, and my ſelf, did go over to this Mrs. Downing, and had much Diſcourſe with her, where ſhe did repeat many Tranſactions that were very agreeable to the Story that I had received from my Lady Powis, and ſeveral other Perſons before. Knox did ſeem to be very well ſatisfied about it, and promiſed to take cognizance of it, and ſaid, it was very material, but we did not put it down in Writing. I did not, I know not what he did afterwards. We promiſed to come again another time, but I do not remember we did ever go afterwards. But Mr. Knox ſollicited me to go with him, and ſome Buſineſs or other did ſtill intervene; that is all that is remarkable of Mr. Knox, which I do remember at that time; but I do remember that after we were removed from Powis Houſe, when I was at Mrs. Celier's, nay I think both before and after he was often treating with Mrs. Celier, but I know not what was their Diſcourſe, nor was I deſirous to know. But Mr. Knox came then to me, and began to renew his Correſpondence, and withal told me, that he had ſome likelihood of bringing Osborne over to their Party. Said he, I find he is gone again to his Maſter, but he ſhall do his Buſineſs (meaning, as I ſuppoſe, Mr. Otes) for he had, as I underſtood by him at that time, been tampering with Osborne, but he did tell me it was Osborne's voluntary Act, that he did own it, and that he did go to Mr. Otes again only to do Mr. Knox Service. My Lord, ſome time after this, Knox came to me at Mrs. Celier's, and told me he had done the Buſineſs, expreſſing the greateſt Joy that could be. What Buſineſs, ſaid I? Osborne is come over, ſaid he, and I have had an Account from the beginning to the end of all the Tranſactions of his Maſter Otes, and I have not only an Account of it, but it is put into Writing, and I took Osborne before a Juſtice of Peace, and he hath made Affidavit of it. When I heard this, I thought it would give great Satisfaction to the Lords in the Tower, and deſired Mr. Knox to let me have a Copy of that Affidavit. He told me, no, he thought it would not be material to let me have a Copy, for by that means it might become publick and be diſcovered; and, ſaid he, I have ſome further Deſign in this, Mr. Otes is going down to my Lord Lovelace's in Oxfordſhire, and Osborne is going with him, and he hath promiſed me to be a Spy upon his Maſter's Actions, and to give me an account of all. And this will be material, but I do not think fit to let you have a Copy of the Affidavit at preſent. Some time after this, I told Mrs. Celier the Story, who I ſuppoſe went to the Tower and gave the Lords an Account of it. And the next time I had the Honour to ſee my Lady Powis, ſhe was pleaſed to ſay, ſhe liked it very well, but did not as I remember ſay any thing of the Copy; but being deſirous to ſee what

Os-

Osborne had ſworn, and whether it were agreeable to Lane's Affidavit that I ſpake of before, I did deſire Knox to let me ſee it, but he had it not about him at that time. Sometime after that, as near as I can remember I was at Proctor's Coffee-houſe at Charing croſs, and Mr. Knox came thither, whether by my Appointment, or his, I can't well tell, but there we met, and one Bedford was with me; at that ſame time Mr. Knox deſired we would go into a Back-room, and now, ſaid he, I will give you Satisfaction, and drew out of his Pocket an Affidavit, it was a Sheet of Paper, if not written of every ſide, I believe of three ſides; it was very long, and he read it, my Lord, and I did find by the Contents of it, that it did imply the ſame thing that Lane had ſworn before Sir James Butler; that is, that Mr. Otes ſhould attempt upon Lane's Body to commit Sodomy, or ſomething very agreeable to it. I told him, Mr. Knox ſaid I, this is very material, this will do you a great deal of Service, the Term is coming on, you would do well to get an Indictment drawn up againſt Mr. Otes. Said he, I will do his Buſineſs, and will adviſe with Perſons able to inſtruct me in it, and I don't doubt but to carry on the Buſineſs effectually. And to that purpoſe I deſired him to let me have a Copy of the Affidavit; he promiſed me I ſhould, and ſaid he would bring it ſeveral times, and he came ſeveral times to my Lodging, but did not bring it; but I having it read to me, and remembring the Contents of it, the next time I ſaw my Lady Powis, I gave her an Account of it. Said ſhe, this Man is very diligent, and deſerves to be encouraged, and as I believe, gave the Lords in the Tower an Account of it too, for then ſhe was lodg'd at the Tower with her Lord, and ſo her Ladiſhip told me: And, ſaid ſhe, do you know whether this Man be in a Condition to proſecute this Buſineſs againſt Mr. Otes? Said ſhe, I believe he is put upon this by my Lord of Danby, and he I believe takes Care of him to furniſh him with Money. Said I, I have endeavour'd to trace him out in that thing, and by all his Correſpondents I could never find, but only by one, that Mr. Knox was ever acquainted, or held Correſpondence with my Lord of Danby, and that Perſon is Mr. Nettervile, who is a worthy Gentleman of my Acquaintance in the Pall-mall: And being in his Chamber, Knox came in, and ſpeaking merrily after his Manner to him, ſaid he, Knox, when were you at the Tower with my Lord of Danby? Said he, I hold no Correſpondence with him. Yes, ſaid Mr. Nettervile, 'tis plain you do, and I believe a Friend of mine ſaw you go in the other Day: But Knox did poſitively deny it; that was all that ever I heard of his Correſpondence with my Lord of Danby. After this, when her Ladiſhip came to me to ask me what Condition he was in to proſecute the Tryal; I told her, I believed his Condition was very mean, and it would be very acceptable, if he might or could be furniſhed with Money. Well, ſaid ſhe, I will take care of it, and give an Account of it to my Lord, and he ſhall be furniſhed. And in the mean time, if Mr. Knox wants Money, be ſure you take care and furniſh him; but you need not let it be very conſiderable, till you ſee what is raiſed. Sometime after this, Mr. Knox came to Mrs. Celier's Houſe to ask for me, I was then in my Chamber, but not ready; he came up to me, and told me, ſaid he, really I am very poor, I am going to pawn my Sword, or ſomething to that purpoſe, can you lend me five Pounds? Really Mr. Knox, ſaid I, I will tell you, the Affidavit that you read to me I have given an Account of it to my Lady Powis, and I ſuppoſe ſome other Perſons of Honour have had an Account of it alſo; I am ſatisfied they are, and that the Lords in the Tower will take care that Money ſhall be raiſed for your proſecuting of Mr. Otes. He ſeem'd to ſmile at this; but ſaid he, if this ſhould be known, it would be very prejudicial to the Buſineſs, and ſpoil it; but yet however if you can furniſh me with Money at this time, you will do me a great Kindneſs, for I have very great Occaſion. I told him, ſaid I, I have not ſo much Money by me, you come at an unſeaſonable time, though indeed I told him a Lye, but I thought it not ſafe to part with Money without further Order. Mr. Knox went away, and I gave an Account of it to Mrs. Celier, who went either every Day, or every other Day to the Tower; I told her what Mr. Knox ſaid, and I do believe (as ſhe told me afterwards) ſhe told my Lady Powis of it, and Mrs. Celier ſeem'd to be angry that I did not let him have the Money, and order'd me that at what time ſoever after that Mr. Knox ſhould come to me, I ſhould let him have what Money he wanted. Some time after this, Mr. Knox did come to me, and ſaid his Condition was very mean, and you told me, ſaid he, that Care ſhould be taken by the Lords in the Tower to furniſh me with Money. Said I, Mr. Knox, I can let you have 30 or 40 s. if that will do you any Kindneſs; I have no Order for any Sum at preſent, but as ſoon as it comes, it muſt come to you through my Hands, and it muſt paſs as if I lent it you, and you ſhall give me a Note for it to repay it, leſt any thing ſhould come to be diſcovered, and coming to Mr. Otes's hearing, ſhould prejudice the Buſineſs; though I had been too forward before in giving Mr. Knox an Account that the Lords in the Tower would contribute to this Buſineſs. At that time I went up Stairs and fetch'd down 40 s. and gave it him: He came afterwards, and would have borrow'd more of me at other times, once or twice after that, but I did not furniſh him, for I had received no Order to furniſh him any further. And this, my Lord, is all the Correſpondence I had with him, and, as near as I can remember, I have given nothing in but what is a very true Account of the Tranſaction.

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, I crave one Queſtion of him, if he have done: After the Papers were corrected and written fair, and enlarged upon by the ſeveral Perſons, did you read them? and what were the Contents of them?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, I did not read them, nor did I draw them, but I do believe that the Contents were the ſame for Subſtance with the Affidavit that Lane made before Sir James Butler.

Mr. Williams. Sir, you mention ſeveral Sums of Money that you paid to Knox, and paid to Lane, pray where had you this Money?

Mr. Dangerfield. The 40 s. that I gave to Knox, it was my own Money, but if I muſt give an Account where I had it, I believe it came originally from the Tower.

Mr. Williams. The Ten Shillings a Week, whence came that?

Mr. Dangerfield. Sometimes from the Hands of my Lady Powis, at other times from Mrs. Gellier; ſometimes from Mr. Wood, and ſometimes from my ſelf. and I placed it to Accompt.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we will now proceed to another Part of our Evidence.

Mr. Williams. About what time were they to indict Mr. Otes? Was not this Project on foot when the Presbyterian Plot was on foot?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, I don't know what time; but it was by my Advice to be done this Term, and ſo did Nevil adviſe too.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, I would read ſome of the Memorials or Informations, that they were to ſwear againſt Dr. Otes concerning the Buſineſs that you have heard.

L. C. J. Wou'd you have them read, Brother?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who proves them?

Then the Juſtices of Peace ſwore them.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Sir William Waller, Did he confeſs he left them with my Lord Latimer?

Sir W. Waller. Theſe are the Papers that were confeſſed to be carry'd to my Lord Latimer.

Mr. Warcup. Osborne did ſwear, That the Informations marked 1. 2, 3, 4, and 5. were all of his own Hand-writing, and were dictated by the ſaid Knox.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And he did confeſs, That theſe were the Informations that he had deliver'd to my Lord Latimer.

Mr. Warcup. Yes, he did ſo.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. It will lie on his part, to prove that they were true.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Which will you have read, one, or all of them?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. One, or Two; take Knox's firſt.

Which was delivered to the Clerk of the Crown, who read it in hæc verba.

[Numb. 1.] The Information of Thomas Knox, ſworn before me this day of 1679.

THis Informant doth upon his Oath declare, That on the Firſt of this preſent April, there came one William Oſborne to the Informant in the Painted-Chamber in Weſtminſter, and told to him the ſaid Informant, that he had ſomething of Moment to reveal to him; and did alſo deſire the Informant to go with him into the Abby, and he would reveal it to him; upon which the ſaid Osborne, and the Informant being together, the ſaid Osborne did tell the Informant, that his Conſcience was mightily troubled for that he found the Lord Treaſurer was maliciouſly proſecuted by Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe; for that he having been a Servant to Mr. Otes, and had often heard Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe conſult together, in Mr. Otes's Chamber in White-hall, and reſolve how they might contrive a Way whereby to deſtroy my Lord Treaſurer: And that he had choſen to reveal this Secret, and eaſe his Conſcience to the Informant, rather than to any one elſe, becauſe he thought he would keep it ſecret, for his own ſake, becauſe he had already ſuffered by endeavouring to ſerve the ſaid Lord Treaſurer, and thereupon the ſaid Osborne ſhewed to the Informant ſome Papers written, as he told the Informant, all in his own Hand, and which were relating to the ſaid Lord Treaſurer; upon which the ſaid Informant told the ſaid Osborne, that he was no Servant of the ſaid Lord Treaſurer's, and did not therefore deſire to meddle in it; and that particularly, becauſe he had never ſpoke with the ſaid Osborne before, and deſired to be excuſed; upon which the ſaid Osborne did preſs the Informant, and withal did tell him, that if he did not aſſiſt him in this Affair, it was reſolved both by him, and one Mr. Lane, that they would come in on the Day of the ſaid Lord Treaſurer's Tryal, and declare the Truth concerning what they knew, concerning the malicious Deſign of the ſaid Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe, againſt the ſaid Lord Treaſurer; for that they could not reſt for fear he ſhould ſuffer innocently, whilſt they could, with ſo good a Conſcience, as they thought, ſave him: And the ſaid Osborne did withal declare, that the aforeſaid Mr. Lane was reſolv'd to ſpeak to the Informant, upon the foreſaid Matter: And the ſaid Lane did accordingly, upon the ſaid firſt of April in the Evening, meet the Informant, and ſhewed him ſome Papers, wherein he had taken ſeveral Memorials, relating to His Majeſty, the Queen, my Lord Treaſurer, and ſeveral other Perſons: And did withal declare to the Informant, that his Conſcience was ſo troubled, to ſee the malicious Proceedings of the ſaid Mr. Otes and Bedloe againſt the ſaid Lord Treaſurer, that he could not reſt in his Bed, until he had disburdened it, by telling the Truth; and if he had not met with this Informant, he was reſolv'd to declare it ſpeedily to ſome one elſe; or come himſelf at the Day of the ſaid Lord Treaſurer's Tryal, and there declare all that he knew relating to that Affair. And did withal conjure the Informant, as alſo the ſaid Osborne, to keep all they had told him ſecret: For if it ſhould come to the Ears of the ſaid Mr. Otes and Bedloe, they would endeavour to poiſon, or murder them, the ſaid Osborne and Lane, the firſt time they ſhould ſee them.

Tho. Knox.

Then a Second was offered to be read; but there appearing ſcandalous Matter to be in it, reflecting on the King, the Court thought not fit to ſuffer the ſame to be read through.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, I think it appears by the Evidence ſufficiently, how they did deſign to accuſe Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. Ay, Brother, come let us hear what they can ſay to it on the other ſide.

Mr. Withins May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Counſel for the Defendant Knox, and for Knox only.

Mr. Williams. Pray Sir, hold; my Lord, we have here Two Witneſſes more, that will fortifie Mr. Dangerfield in what he hath ſaid. Call Suſan Edwards, and Mrs. Blake.

Then Mrs. Blake appeared, and was ſworn.

Mr. Williams. Pray Mrs. Blake, what can you ſay of any Reward Lane was to have, for accuſing Mr. Otes? Or any Promiſes were made to him?

Mrs. Blake. All that I can ſay of Lane, is this; That Lane did ſay once to me, I am here; and I was Dr. Otes's Man, and he would have buggered me: And he did make Complaint for want of Linnen; and ſpoke to me to waſh him ſome Linnen. Said he, Here I have no Linnen, neither will they let me have any; and his Boy here will not ſtir to look for any, unleſs Willoughby ſpeak to him. Then the Boy was ſpoke to.

L. C. J. What is all this? What ſays the other Woman?

Mr. Williams. He is call'd Willoughby ſometimes, and ſometimes Dangerfield; for he went by both Names: But I ask you what Money you know was given to him?

Blake. He told me, he was to be allow'd Ten Shillings a Week?

L. C. J. This is only to ſtrengthen his Evidence.

Blake.

Blake. He never ſaid to me, from whom it was.

Then Mrs. Edwards was Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. What do you ſay, Miſtreſs?

Edwards. May it pleaſe you, I don't know Lane; I never ſaw him in my Life, but only when he was ſent for by Mrs. Celier, to get an Habeas Corpus for Willoughby, who was then in Newgate; and he did come the next Day, and gave his Anſwer to me.

L. C. J. She ſays nothing, but only he was deſired to get an Habeas Corpus for Willoughby.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, my Lord, ſhe is called to ſhew you, whether Lane had not Money from Mrs. Celier.

Edwards. That was the firſt time I ſaw him, and the next Morning I ſaw him again: And when he came to the Door, he told his Errand to me. He ſaid, he could get no Habeas Corpus; for he was ſuch a Rogue, no body would meddle nor make with him.

Mr. Dangerfield. I would fain have her ask'd this Queſtion, my Lord, if you pleaſe: Did you ever ſee Mr. Knox at Mrs. Celier's Houſe?

Edwards. If I ſee him, I can tell.

Then the Defendant, Knox, was ſhewn to her.

Edwards. I cannot ſay, this is the Man: I have heard much talk of Mr. Knox, and that he hath been there; but I cannot ſwear this is he.

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, when Lane was firſt brought to me to the Counteſs of Powis's Houſe, he was very meanly Equipag'd, and the Counteſs of Powis was informed of it, and did deſire me to take ſome particular care to cloath him, and that I ſhould put him into a Diſguiſe; but at that time I had a Suit of Cloaths that were lin'd with blue, which I gave to him; and I alſo adviſed him to cut off his Hair, and to put on a Peruke, which he did, and hath worn it ever ſince, as I believe.

L. C. J. Well, let us hear what they ſay to it.

Mr. Withins. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am of Counſel in this Caſe for Mr. Knox; there are two Perſons here made Defendants: As for Mr. Lane, I have nothing to do with him, nor to ſay for him; and his Caſe hath made him appear to be a very evil Man. But, my Lord, I do obſerve that the Indictment conſiſts of two Parts: The firſt is, That theſe two Defendants did conſpire together; and this was the Thirtieth of April (and the Proof comes to that time, for it will be material in our Caſe) that they did maliciouſly and deceitfully combine and conſpire againſt Titus Otes, Clerk, and William Bedloe, Gentleman, who had diſcovered this horrid Popiſh Plot, and whom they knew to have given Informations of it, to take away their Reputation, and make them Witneſſes of no Belief, or Credit; that is one part of the Indictment: The other part is, That to further the ſame, Mr. Knox did cauſe two or three Letters to be written, as from Osborne and Lane to him, purporting thoſe Aſperſions to be laid upon Otes and Bedloe: For the laſt part of the Indictment, the Counſel for the King have not thought fit to proceed upon it, and they have not given an account of the Letters: But for the firſt part, their conſpiring to take off the Reputation of Otes and Bedloe, is the only thing they have proceeded upon as I conceive. I muſt needs ſay, my Lord, that Mr. Knox, as well as Dr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe, have had a very great Misfortune to meet with theſe Men.

L. C. J. To meet with whom?

Mr. Withins. To meet with Osborne and Lane, for I do not here pretend to lay any Aſperſion, or make any Reflections upon the Credit or Reputation of Dr. Otes or Mr. Bedloe. I think they have ſerv'd the Nation too well to be vilify'd here. But I ſhall ſay this, that as Osborne and Lane had a great Deſign to Diſgrace and Diſcredit Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe; ſo they had a Deſign to draw my Client Mr. Knox in, to purſue their Malice. I did ſhew you, that they did begin their Evidence, as to time, in April, and they have laid it ſo in the Indictment: We ſhall prove to your Lordſhip, and ſhew you, that before this, and before that Mr. Knox knew either Osborne or Lane, that they had drawn up this Accuſation againſt Mr. Otes, and read it to ſeveral Witneſſes which we ſhall produce. And afterwards, when they came to adviſe how they ſhould proſecute the ſame, they were adviſed firſt to go to Mr. Thewer: He told them, that it was a dangerous thing to meddle about, and he would not involve himſelf, but bid them take care what they did in it. Upon this they apply themſelves to my Client Mr. Knox, he told them the ſame thing; it is a matter of great Conſequence, I deſire not to meddle with it. Said they, will you not aſſiſt us in this Buſineſs, when we only diſcover this to acquit our own Conſciences, who knew theſe things to be treating and contriving againſt the King and my Lord of Danby? For my part, ſays one of them, I cannot leave the Town till I have diſcovered it. Notwithſtanding this, Mr. Knox would not undertake to meddle with it, but left them. They come to him the ſecond time, and Mr. Knox being a young Man, and it ſeems being a Servant in the Family, enter'd into a Correſpondence with them,, to proſecute what they had deſign'd to do. There is nothing appears (and this I would obſerve, if your Lordſhip pleaſe) in the whole Evidence, that Mr. Knox was to ſwear any thing againſt Dr. Otes or Mr. Bedloe (as I remember) but he was indeed engaged to carry on the Proſecution, theſe Witneſſes informing him of it; and that it was a Truth, I muſt obſerve to your Lordſhip upon their Evidence, they did inſinuate, as if Mr. Knox had been at the charge of maintaining Lane: But I think, that Mr. Dangerfield hath pretty well cleared whence that Maintenance came that he gave to Mr. Lane; that it came thro' none of the Hands of my Client Mr. Knox.

L. C. J. No, Mr. Withins, he is not accuſed for giving him a conſtant Maintenance, but for the Money, the Guineas and Ten Shillings. 'Tis true, it was ſaid, it was to be paid again; but from him they had the Money: And it appears, that he provided Lodgings for them, and paid for their Lodgings.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And pray obſerve this, That what Mr. Dangerfield ſpeaks of, is of a time afterwards, after they had been taken and impriſoned, and confeſſed the matter.

Mr. Withins. But this you obſerve, I hope, my Lord, from Mr. Dangerfield's Evidence; That Knox was very poor, had not any thing to maintain himſelf with.

L. C. J. The Sums indeed don't ſeem to be very great; a Guinea, and Ten Shillings in Silver: But whatever it was, he gave it them, and took Lodgings for them, and paid for them.

Mr. Withins. I did intend to obſerve to your Lordſhip, That 'tis a pretty ſtrange thing, that there ſhould be a Deſign to corrupt Perſons to commit this foul and horrid Offence; and nothing of a Reward or Corruption prov'd, but two Guineas and ten Shillings.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What ſay you to the Promiſes of 500 l. and 100 l. a Year apiece?

Mr. Withins. That was Lane's own Evidence. Lane and Osborne might brag what they would of what they were to have, and from whom; but I believe not one in the Court believed a Word they ſaid. For it does appear, that Lane did forſwear himſelf backwards and forwards, as the Wind blew. So that, as for what Lane hath ſaid, it weighs not: But we ſhall call two Witneſſes, to whom Lane declared this matter in February and March, before the time that Knox was concerned: So that if we make it appear, that the Contrivance was theirs, and there was only a great deal of Weakneſs and Indiſcretion in Mr. Knox to believe ſuch idle Perſons, againſt Perſons that had ſhew'd themſelves ſo conſiderable in this Diſcovery: I hope it will not be thought ſuch a Crime in us, ſeeing there is nothing in it, but that a young Man was led away; and only his Folly and his Indiſcretion drew him in, not any Malice or ill Deſign.

Sir W. Waller. My Lord, Mr. Knox did confeſs to me, that he did throw down a Guinea, and then Lane and Osborne took it up; but they both poſitively ſwore, that he threw it down for this Reaſon, that he might ſafely ſwear he never gave them it.

Mr. Saunders. All that they ſwear is not agreed to be true: My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I am of Counſel for the Defendant Knox, and as to that part of the Indictment that charges him with writing the Letters, they do not proceed upon.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Yes, we do, we proceed upon the whole———

L. C. J. They proceed upon the whole, but you may ſay, if you will, they give no Proof of it.

Mr. Saunders. Then, as to that, with ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip's Judgment, the Defendant is to be found Not Guilty.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt obſerve, theſe are not ſeveral Crimes, but one continued Crime, and therefore the Evidence muſt go to the whole.

L. C. J. You do well to obſerve it for your Client, but if you require it of the Counſel on the other ſide, it may be they will give you an Anſwer, if you will undertake to affirm, that they have given no Evidence as to that part of the Indictment wherein it ſays, Mr. Knox contrived three Letters to ſcandalize Mr. Otes.

Mr. Saunders. We ſubmit it to the Court whether they have or no. For the other part of the Indictment, wherein it is charged, that he ſhould maliciouſly contrive with Lane to lay a Calumny and Scandal upon Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe, the very Point we are to anſwer to is this, Whether this were a malicious Contrivance or no, and for that we ſhall give your Lordſhip this Evidence: That Knox was a young ignorant Man, and drawn in by Lane and Osborne to patronize their Miſchief they intended againſt Otes and Bedloe; for, my Lord, Mr. Knox was not acquainted with them, or had any thing to do with them, till that they had contrived this matter among themſelves: For, my Lord, we ſhall call you Witneſſes to prove, that before Knox had to do with them, they would have had another Perſon to proſecute this Buſineſs for them. And if we ſatisfie you that he was drawn in, I hope it will acquit us; notwithſtanding I will obſerve to your Lordſhip and the Jury, whether Lane be guilty or not guilty does not affect us, if we were only drawn into the Contrivance.

L. C. J. Wherever Lane's Teſtimony ſtands ſingly againſt Knox, it is no Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But if he was not in the Plot at the beginning, but was drawn in, and did after proceed with them, as Dangerfield proves, I doubt it will not acquit him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Conſider a little your Caſe; you ſay here was a Contrivance of two, that Knox was not in the beginning, but they offered it to others with whom it would not take. Why, let Knox come in when he will, if he does come into the Contrivance, and takes the Papers, and manages the buſineſs to fix theſe Scandals and encourage them to carry them on, Knox is as guilty as all the reſt.

Mr. Saunders. But if theſe Men come and tell him theſe things are true, and we can ſwear them, and ſo is drawn in, it takes away the Malice of the Contrivance.

L. C. J. This is the Uſe the Defendant Knox his Counſel make of it: At firſt Knox was not acquainted with the matter; and when he did come to underſtand it, he thought it to be true, as they affirmed it was true, and, ſaid they, we will go before a Juſtice of Peace and ſwear it: He was willing, there being a Diſcovery of ſeveral Conſpiracies againſt his Lord's Life, as they ſaid, he being his Servant, he was willing to proſecute the Buſineſs; and this is the Uſe they make of it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Come let us hear your Witneſſes.

Mr. Scroggs. Call Frances Lane and Mary Lane.

L. C. J. But I'll tell you what; it will be neceſſary to clear your ſelves, as well as you can, of thoſe Papers that were delivered by Knox to Dangerfield, and went about to the Lords in the Tower, and afterward to Nevil, and by him amended, and after delivered to Knox again by Dangerfield: This does ſhew as if you were concerned in the whole Affair, and in all the matter of the Information, before it was cook'd and after it was dreſt. You muſt give ſome Account of that, for that ſticks ſtrongly upon you.

[Then Mrs. Frances Lane, and her Daughter Mary Lane, were Sworn.]

Mr. Scroggs. Mrs. Lane, are not you Mother to Lane the Defendant?

Frances Lane. Yes.

Mr. Withins. Pray will you give an Account what your Son ſaid to you in February laſt?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. We pray they may ask their Queſtions in general.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Don't you point her to a Time.

L. C. J. Anſwer me: What hath your Son ſaid to you at any time concerning Otes?

Frances Lane. He ſpoke it about March.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What did he ſay?

Frances Lane. He uſed him uncivilly, he had no mind to ſtay with him.

L. C. J. What ſaid you?

Frances Lane. I deſired him to ſtay longer.

L. C. J. How often did he tell you this?

Frances Lane. Several times.

L. C. J. He had left his Service once, had he not?

Frances Lane. Yes.

L. C. J. Was it before or after he left his Service?

Frances Lane. Before and after too.

L. C. J. If he complained he had ſo uſed him before, why would he go to him again?

Frances Lane. Becauſe the Times were hard and I perſuaded him.

L. C. J. Ay, but would you perſuade him after ſuch an Abuſe of your Son as that?

Frances Lane. I thought then he would not do ſo again.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. When was the firſt time he complained to you?

Frances Lane. It was about Chriſtmas.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Was it before Chriſtmas?

Frances Lane. It was after.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Conſider here you bring Lane's Mother to accuſe him to excuſe your ſelf.

L. C. J. But is this material?

Mr. Scroggs. It is material to our Client Mr. Knox, who was drawn in here by a couple of Raſcals. We prove, that before this time which Juſtice Warcup and Sir William Waller have in their Informations, they offered the ſame Diſcovery to others.

L. C. J. Call them and prove it, but you will never have the better Name for calling them ill ones.

Mr. Scroggs. We lay all upon Lane and Osborne, who inveigled Knox.

Mr. Saunders. Pray, Mrs. Lane, tell the Court and Jury how and when your Son came acquainted with Mr. Knox.

Frances Lane. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, Osborne brings a Paper to our Houſe, and would have had my Son have read it, but he could not, ſo he read it himſelf; and there were ſome deſperate things in it.

L. C. J. What were they?

Frances Lane. I can't tell, they were concerning the King and the Queen and my Lord Treaſurer.

L. C. J. When was this?

Frances Lane. In March laſt, at our Houſe, and I deſired them they would not meddle with ſuch things, for I ſaid they were things beyond them. My Son promiſed me he would not meddle with it, but let Osborne alone with it; but ſaid I, pray go to one Captain Thewer, he is a good civil Man, and a Man of Underſtanding. So they did go as I directed them.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Who went?

Frances Lane. Osborne did.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Who went with him? for you ſay They.

Frances Lane. John Lane, my Son.

L. C. J. Was there any thing particular in thoſe Papers concerning Mr. Otes being guilty of Sodomy?

Frances Lane. I cannot ſay in particular, it is a great while ago, but he went to Captain Thewer, and he wiſh'd him, after he had read it, ſaid he, don't meddle with any of theſe things, for it will be the worſe for you.

L. C. J. As your Son told you, you were not by.

Frances Lane. Yes, they both told me ſo. With that ſays Mr. Osborne, I'll find out one Mr. Knox, who had been ſome Acquaintance of Mr. Wiggins, Mr. Bedloe's Clerk; and ſo, ſaid he, I will ask Mr. Wiggins if he be acquainted with Mr. Knox.

L. C. J. Did your Son at that time know Knox?

Frances Lane. No, my Lord, he had never ſeen him at that time; ſo my Son went, and they found Mr. Wiggins and Mr. Knox walking in the Abby.

L. C. J. Was Lane with him then?

Frances Lane. He went with Osborne, and came and told me, Knox would not meddle with them.

L. C. J. Who came and told you ſo?

Frances Lane. Osborne came and told me ſo and my Son.

L. C. J. You were not by?

Frances Lane. No, not I; but, ſaid he, as he told me, I will go to him again; and afterwards he did meet him again, as he ſaid, and delivered them to him.

Mr. Withins. Did you ever ſee Knox in your life?

Frances Lane. I had never ſeen him then.

Mr. Withins. Did you ever hear your Son ſay, he did know Knox before that time?

Frances Lane. Never in my life.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But you do not prove that they were not acquainted.

L. C. J. Do you believe Osborne ſaid true, Mr. Saunders?

Mr. Saunders. Not when he ſpoke to Sir William Waller to accuſe my Client of the Contrivance.

L. C. J. In that caſe, when 'tis againſt your Client he did not, but in other caſes he might, well, go on.

Mr. Withins. Which is Mary Lane?

Mary Lane. I am ſhe, Sir. I can ſay no more than my Mother hath ſaid, I was by at the ſame time.

Mr. Saunders. Do you know when John Lane came acquainted with Knox? Was it before April laſt, or after?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. How is it poſſible that any one can ſwear a Negative?

Mr. Saunders. If we can't prove the Negative, nor they the Affirmative, it will be preſumed they were not, becauſe it is not known.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Nor do you prove any Informations before given to any one.

Mr. Saunders. Yes, To Thewer.

Mr. Withins. We will ask the Daughter about that.

Frances Lane. She can only prove it by hearing it, for ſhe was ſick.

Mr. Withins. Young Mrs. Lane, what was there in that Paper that Osborne brought to your Houſe?

Mary Lane. There was concerning the King, and the Queen, and my Lord Treaſurer.

L. C. J. Was there any thing in it concerning Mr. Otes?

Mary Lane. Yes, there was concerning his Beaſtlineſs.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Who read it?

Mary Lane. Osborne I did hear read it.

Mr. Saun-

Mr. Saunders. Your Brother was not acquainted with Knox then?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. How can they tell that? 'tis impoſſible.

L. C. J. The Nature of the thing is ſuch, that it can be proved no otherwiſe. But it ſeemed to them that they were of no Acquaintance; it is hard to prove when an Acquaintance begins.

Mr. Saunders. And further than this we cannot go in ſuch a Caſe; for that thing of the great Sums of Money, certainly it was as little a thing as could be; there was no more in the caſe than a Guinea, and ten Shillings, and three half Crowns, as proved, and he was cheated of them, it ſeems, for they would not do the Work.

Mr. Scroggs. 'Tis an improbable thing that he ſhould be ſo poor as to ſell the Handle of his Sword, and yet be engaged in the Management of ſuch a Plot, and not have Money for it.

L. C. J. There is no great ſtore of Money appears to be given to Lane, but he was kept upon a mean Maintenance.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But it was not without expectation of a Reward.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He tells you the Wages was to be paid when the Work was done.

L. C. J. And when the Roguery was diſcovered, they had no more Money then.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. When the Buſineſs came to be controverted thus they had no reaſon to give it.

Mr. Saunders. Though Lane had Maintenance, yet our Client Knox was not taken ſuch care of; ſtill there was Proviſion made for him, but none for us, becauſe we were drawn in and did not contrive it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But remember, Mr. Saunders, by the ſame Hand there were forty Shillings given at one time.

Mr. Withins. Well, my Lord, we have done: We ſay, that we had no part in the Malice of the Contrivance, and therefore ought not to be puniſhed with them.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Holt, what ſay you for Lane?

Mr. Holt. My Lord, I am aſſign'd of Counſel for the Defendant Lane. I have no Witneſſes at all to examine, but only ſhall make ſome little Obſervations upon the Evidence that is given for the King. As for the Indictment it ſelf, though it is not ſeveral Crimes, but one complicated Crime; yet the Evidence that is given is only to one part thereof; and therefore I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, if the Proof be proportionable to the Charge, and whether the Defendant ought not to be found Not Guilty. There hath been great mention made of the writing Letters, yet it would be hard that the Defendant ſhould be found Guilty of ſuch an Offence, when the Proof does not come up ſo high; that would introduce a ſeverer Puniſhment than the Crime proved would juſtifie.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Pray, Mr. Holt, don't go away with that; I muſt ſet you right a little there: The Crime that is laid is, To diſcountenance the King's Evidence, and to make them that they ſhould not be believed. The Means are ſeveral, partly by caſting of Crimes upon them, partly by writing Letters; that Crime is another thing, and therefore if they do not find them Guilty of every one of the particular means, yet the Crime muſt be found.

L. C. J. You are in the right thus far, Mr. Holt, they have laid the in Indictment, That they endeavouring to diſparage the Credit of Otes and Bedloe, have, for Money's ſake, and by Promiſes and Contrivances, and writing of Letters, wherein was ſcandalous matter againſt Otes and Bedloe; they thereby did attempt to diſcredit 'em. Now ſay you, if this matter be not proved, that there was any ſcandalous matter concerning Otes and Bedloe, then the Contrivance is not proved: But what though all the Facts in the Indictment are not proved, yet if there be enough to prove your Contrivance to Diſcredit them; and if you ſuppoſe the Evidence true that is given, it reſts, I think, plainly upon your Client, and you cannot get off from it: But if there be not ſufficient Proof to maintain the Indictment for the Crime of endeavouring to diſcredit Otes and Bedloe, unleſs they prove the Letters alſo, you ſay ſomething; but there is the Buſineſs that ſticks on you, they have proved enough without that.

Mr. Holt. If the Jury do not find them Not Guilty generally, may they not find them Not Guilty of writing the Letters?

L. C. J. No: For if the other part of the Evidence did not amount to a Proof of a Deſign of Diſparaging their Teſtimony, you had a very ſtrong Objection of it: But if they lay five things, and they prove but one of them upon you; if that one ſerves to the Diſparaging of Otes and Bedloe, which is the Subſtance of the Indictment, that maintains the Indictment.

Mr. Holt. It does ſo, my Lord, but not the Aggravations.

L. C. J. All that you ſay then is in mitigation of a Fine; but if all be true that is proved upon your Client, as I ſee no reaſon to doubt it, you will ſave but little by this Defence.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, as to the Matter, it all depends upon the Credit of the Witneſſes, and Credibility of the Circumſtances in themſelves, and one with another. Some of the Evidence is but very ſlight, and ſure were but produced to ſpend time.

L. C. J. Indeed there was a great deal of it to little purpoſe: for ought I ſee, this Trial needed not to have been above an Hour.

Mr. Holt. As for his ſaying he ſhould have a 100 l. a Year, and the bettering of his Fortune, it was but his Vanity and Extravagance.

L. C. J. Mr. Holt does argue as much for his Client as the Caſe will bear.

Mr. Holt. They have endeavoured to lay all upon us; now if ſo be we are affected with any ſevere Evidence, I think the ſame Evidence (to requite them) does affect them.

L. C. J. This is a kind of Battle-Royal, where every one hath two Enemies to oppoſe.

Mr. Holt. Here is Mr. Dangerfield, he comes and in his Evidence tells you, That my Lady Powis was ſo long upon her Knees to thank God that her Party was ſo much ſtrengthen'd by the Acceſſion of Lane: My Lord, I deſire the Quality of Mr. Lane may be taken notice of; a Footman and a young raſh Fellow, one that both for Age and Quality could not be very conſiderable.

L. C. J. But two Witneſſes are better than one, Mr. Holt, do you remember that? Knox uſed that Expreſſion, If Lane do but keep firm, we ſhall be too hard for Osborne alone, for two Witneſſes are better than one; but by that he counted Lane worth ſomething.

Mr. Holt.

Mr. Holt. You muſt conſider, what he was to ſwear, they could ſcarce get an Evidence ſo proper for what they would have him ſwear.

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, what Anſwer can you give to all the Tranſactions that Mr. Dangerfield tells you of about Knox? Beſides, take notice of this; you would have this to be a Contrivance by Lane and Osborne, to be between themſelves, and that your Client muſt be a Stranger to it; and when he comes to know it, he knows it only as a Remorſe of Conſcience that they tell him they have, and deſire him to go with him before a Juſtice of Peace to ſwear it, and he hearing ſomething that might affect his Maſter the Earl of Danby, and believing that always true, did encourage that matter only for his Maſter's Service, and thought he did a good Act in it: But your ſubſequent Behaviour ſhews it was a Conſpiracy rather; for, firſt, your ſecret ways of ſending your cunning Notes, We all club'd together, and you paid two Shillings at the Sugar-loaf, tear this; which ſhews, and does to my apprehenſion ſignifie, as if he would never own that he ſpent any thing upon them, and that he was bountiful to them. And then the giving of Money to the Man to convey Notes, that they might not betray one another; do not all theſe ſubſequent Actions, eſpecially thoſe Dangerfield tells you of, and receiving the Papers after they were enlarged upon, ſpeak it a Conſpiracy? What can you ſay to all this?

Mr. Williams. My Lord——

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Stay a little, and anſwer all together. Do but conſider with your ſelf, thoſe Informations your Client Mr. Knox did own he took, and before they were ſworn, and carried them to my Lord Latimer's Lodgings, and he himſelf owns, that he took Lodgings for them, and lay with them, and when the Lords were in purſuit of them.

L. C. J. And then does he ſteal them from place to place, and takes Lodgings for them, and pays for them.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. He brings one of them to make Affidavit, and will keep it by him, is ſhy of ſhewing it: afterwards does ſhew it, this makes him a Contriver too, as well as an Executor.

Mr. Saunders. If your Lordſhip pleaſe——

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Conſider too the Papers that were put in too of Caution, that Knox and they ſhould not be found in ſeveral Tales; for Knox had been examined before they were, what was the meaning of thoſe Inſtructions?

L. C. J. If you have any Witneſſes to wipe your ſelves clean from the matter of receiving the Papers from Dangerfield, and taking Lodgings for them when they were under that Accuſation, do.

Mr. Saunders. I have a word to anſwer upon the Teſtimony of Mr. Dangerfield.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Conſider this, that he attempted another Man upon the ſame Account; your Client did tempt Wiggins to do the ſame thing to his Maſter.

Mr. Saunders. That was in February before, and all that he ſaid was, that he would have had out of Mr. Bedloe's Servant, what Company his Maſter kept, and what he did.

L. C. J. You do obſerve right.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And to have betray'd his Papers to him.

L. C. J. That does not reach this Indictment indeed; but that thing that he would have tempted him to, was to have diſcovered, and to have a Tranſcript of all the Papers that concern'd my Lord of Danby; that he ſhould watch his Company, and know what Lords were with him, that he might make his oppoſition as well as he could, and that he ſhould have what Place he did deſire under my Lord. It does not affect the Caſe of the Indictment, but it ſhews you are a Tempter of Men, and that you are a Cautioner, that you would hire a Man to betray his Maſter's Papers, which is not fair, let the Maſter be who he will.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. It facilitates the belief of this.

L. C. J. Yes; Ay, ay, it is to make the Jury more apt to credit what the Evidence of this particular Fact is.

Mr. Saunders. My Lord, let me offer this Word and I ſubmit: Mr. Dangerfield himſelf does ſwear, that Lane brought him a Paper containing the ſame matter that he did falſly accuſe Mr. Otes of, and he read it over three times to him, and then he ſwore it before Sir James Butler. My Lord, I will put my Cauſe upon that Point, Whether Mr. Dangerfield did not believe it to be true at that time.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Your Client is the more miſchievous Man, to contrive it ſo, as to make the thing to be believed when it was falſe.

L. C. J. The uſe of the Argument he makes is this; That as Mr. Dangerfield might be deceived into a belief that the Information was true, ſo might Mr. Knox as well, when he ſaw one ready to ſwear it: But hath Dangerfield done thoſe ſubſequent Acts which he hath done in the Confederacy, for which he is now Indicted?

Mr. Saunders. He ſwears in his Information, that they came to his Hands from Lane and Oſborne.

L. C. J. Well Gentlemen, you of the King's Counſel and of the Jury, you need not any ſumming up of the Evidence, I think the thing is evident.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Gentlemen, 'tis a very clear Caſe, as clear as the Day; I think you need not go from the Bar, but do as you will.

[Then the Jury laying their Heads together, agreed without delay, and without moving from the Bar.]

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. How ſay you, Are the Defendants Guilty of the Offence and Miſdemeanour whereof they ſtand Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

[At which the People gave a great Shout.]

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, I pray the Verdict may be Recorded.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Let it be ſo. Come, where are theſe two young Fellows? Let us ſee if they can ſhew their Faces now.

[And they were brought into the middle of the Court.]

Knox. Will your Lordſhip give me leave to ſpeak one Word for my ſelf?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. No, no, there's no ſpeaking now; take them into your Cuſtody, Marſhal.

[Which was done, and the Court broke up.]

THE TRYALS OF

Lionel Anderſon, alias Munſon, William Ruſſel, alias Napper, Charles Parris, alias Parry, Henry Starkey, James Corker, William Marſhal, and Alexander Lumſden. And the Arraignment of Joſeph Kemiſh.

On Saturday the 17th of January, 1679. at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, by Vertue of his Majeſty's Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer and Goal-delivery of Newgate, for the County of Middleſex and City of London, the Perſons above-named were Arraigned and Tryed. And after the uſual Proclamation for Attendance was made, the Court proceeded in this manner.

Cl. of Cr. KEEPER, ſet David Joſeph Kemiſh to the Bar.

[Which was done.

David Joſeph Kemiſh, Hold up thy Hand.

[Which he did.

Thou ſtandeſt Indicted by the Name of David Joſeph Kemiſh, of the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Clerk; for that thou being born within the Dominions of our Sovereign Lord the King, and being a Prieſt, made and ordained by Authority derived from the See of Rome, after the Feaſt of the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, in the Firſt Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, and before the Fifteenth of November, in the Thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom of England not regarding, nor the Penalties in the ſame contained any ways fearing, the ſaid 15*th day of* November, in the 30*th Year of the King aforeſaid, at the Pariſh of St.* Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, traiterouſly, and as a falſe Traitor of our Sovereign Lord the King, thou waſt and didſt remain and abide againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided, and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. How ſayeſt thou, David Joſeph Kemiſh, Art thou Guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty.

Kemiſh. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be Tried?

Kemiſh. By God and my Countrey.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Kemiſh. I cannot ſpeak, I am not able to ſtand upon my Legs a quarter of an Hour.

L. C. J. What does he ſay? Sir William Scroggs.

Capt. Richardſon. He ſays he is ſo ill and weak he is not able to ſtand.

L. C. J. Then he muſt have a Stool.

Kemiſh. I am not able to ſpeak in my own Defence, and I have had no Time to prepare my ſelf.

L. C. J. Captain, He ſhall ſpeak ſoftly to you, and you ſhall report it to the Court again.

Capt. Richardſon. You may ſpeak ſoftly to me, and I will give an account what you ſay.

L. C. J. How will he be Tryed? Ask him.

Kemiſh. I would deſire my Tryal might be deferr'd till I be in a Condition to anſwer for my ſelf.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Brothers, I think his Requeſt is very reaſonable; he appears not to be in a Condition of taking his Tryal now, and Mr. Attorney is willing he ſhould be ſet aſide till next Seſſions.

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis, I think, very fit, if your Lordſhips pleaſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He muſt Plead firſt. Have you recorded his Plea?

Cl. of Cr. Yes, 'tis recorded.

L. C. J. Why then look you, Capt. Richardſon, you muſt take him back; the Court does think fit, and Mr. Attorney does think fit, by reaſon of his extraordinary Infirmity, that it is not ſeaſonable to Try him now. And that the World may not ſay we are grown Barbarous and Inhumane, we are all contented he ſhould be ſet by. Therefore let him be returned back, and in the mean time you muſt take care that he have that reaſonable looking to as is fit for a Man in his Condition to have.

L. C.

L. C. Baron. Acquaint him with what the Court ſays to you.

Capt. Richardſon. I will, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I deſire that the Judges may declare their Opinion in it.

L. C. J. They have done ſo already, we do all conſent to it; therefore take him, and go get him a Bed.

Cl. of Cr. Set William Ruſſel, alias Napper, to the Bar. Who was Arraigned upon an Indictment of the ſame Form, only the Day of the Fact differing, which was laid to be the 27*th* of November, in 30 Car. 2. To which he likewiſe pleaded Not Guilty, and put himſelf upon the Countrey.

Cl. of Cr. Set Henry Starkey to the Bar. Whoſe Indictment was the ſame, only the Time differing, which was the 26*th* of January, 30 Car. 2. And he alſo pleaded, Not Guilty, and put himſelf upon the Countrey.

Cl of Cr. Set William Marſhal to the Bar. Who being Arraigned upon a like Indictment, and the Time mentioned to be the 15*th* of January, 30 Car. 2. And being asked, Whether Guilty, or Not Guilty, anſwered thus:

Marſhal. My Lord, I do find by this Indictment, That I am Arraigned for the ſame Crime for which I was Tryed before: I do humbly deſire to know, Whether, according to Law, I can be tryed twice for the ſame Fact?

L. C. J. No, according to the Law you cannot be tryed twice for the ſame Fact, nor are you; for before you were Indicted for having an Hand in the great Conſpiracy, for being a Conſpirator in the Plot, and now you are Tryed for being a Prieſt, and abiding in England.

Marſhal. I was tryed before your Lordſhip as a Traytor.

L. C. J. You were ſo.

Marſhal. Now I am tryed for a Prieſt.

L. C. J. Which is another Treaſon.

Marſhal. If I am tryed for a Prieſt, I conceive I cannot be tryed unleſs as a Criminal Prieſt: And I conceive I cannot be tryed as a Criminal Prieſt, unleſs it be as a Prieſt that hath had ſome Attempt or Deſign againſt the Government.

L. C. J. Nay, you miſtake there: There may be Prieſts that have had no Hand in the Plot; if you were acquitted for the Plot, yet you remain a Prieſt ſtill. Do you ſuppoſe then that every Prieſt had a Hand in the Plot?

Marſhal. My Lord, I humbly conceive, that Prieſthood, as Prieſthood, is no Crime at all.

L. C. J. That is no Crime at all.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come, you muſt plead without more ado; and you muſt not uſe any more Speeches.

L. C. J. You muſt be governed in all things by the Direction of the Court.

Marſhal. I do ſubmit to the Direction of this Honourable Bench: But, my Lord, give me leave to ſay, I ſuppoſe I am Indicted upon 27 Eliz. Now if it be made appear, that according to that Statute Prieſthood alone is not Treaſon——

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Then you muſt ſpeak it afterwards, but now you muſt plead.

Marſhal. But if it be at leaſt made doubtful, then it becomes matter of Law; and I have juſt occaſion to inſiſt upon it, and pray Counſel.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You muſt plead to the Indictment firſt.

Marſhal. Why, can I ask Counſel after Plea pleaded?

L. C. J. Yes, you may if matter of Law ariſe, and you may have Counſel as to that matter.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. The Court is of Counſel for you in ſuch a Caſe.

L. C. Baron. But you muſt plead firſt.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You cannot be heard at all till you have pleaded to the Indictment.

L. C. J. Pray take the Directions of the Court.

Marſhal. I have a great deal of reaſon to ſubmit to this Honourable Court that hath been ſo full of Mercy and Clemency, and therefore I do anſwer, That I am Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. How wilt thou be Tryed?

Marſhal. By the King and my Countrey.

L. C. J. No, no, that will not do.

Marſhal. By God and my Countrey.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good deliverance. Set Alexander Lumſden to the Bar. Whoſe Indictment being of the ſame Nature, only reciting the Fact to be 11 Maii 31 Car. 2*di*, he pleaded, Not Guilty, and put himſelf upon the Countrey.

Cl. of Cr. Set James Corker to the Bar; who was alſo Arraigned for the ſame Treaſon, done upon the 24 Octobr. 30 Car. 2*di.* And being asked, Whether Guilty or Not Guilty, anſwered in theſe Words.

Corker. My Lord, I humbly beg the Judgment of the Court; I humbly conceive, my Lord, I have been already tryed and acquitted for this Crime.

L. C. J. Look you, that hath been over-rul'd already in the Caſe of Marſhal juſt now, who is in the ſame Condition: You are not now tryed for the ſame Fact for which you were tryed before.

Corker. My Lord, I ſuppoſe there is ſomething particular in my Caſe; I was expreſly Indicted as Clerk, one that received Orders from the See of Rome.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. His Addition was Clerk, that is all.

L. C. J. But you were not charged in that Indictment for this Fact.

Corker. My Lord, I pleaded to that Indictment under that Qualification of Clerk.

L. C. J. So Men do when they ſay in the Indictment, Labourer, plead to it in that Qualification; but if a Man plead by the Name of Gent. the Queſtion is not whether he be a Gent. or no, but whether he be guilty of the Fact he is indicted for: And the Queſtion in your Caſe was not whether you were Clerk or were not Clerk, but whether you had a Hand in the Plot or no.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. If the Jury had found you a Prieſt at that time, it had been a void Finding, more than they were to enquire of.

Mr. Belwood. He was told ſo at that time, he was not tryed for a Prieſt.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. After you have pleaded, then you may urge what you have to ſay.

Corker. Then I ſay, I am Not Guilty. And he put himſelf upon the Countrey.

Cl. of Cr. Set Lionel Anderſon, alias Munſon, to the Bar. Whoſe Indictment was for being a Prieſt, and abiding here the 28*th Jan.* 30 Car. 2. And he pleaded Not Guilty, and put himſelf upon the Countrey.

Cl. of Cr. Set Charles Parris, alias Parry, to the Bar. Whoſe Indictment was of the ſame nature, for abiding here 30 Maii 31 Car. 2. And he alſo pleaded Not Guilty, and put himſelf upon the Countrey.

Cl. of Cr. Set all the Priſoners to the Bar that are to be Try'd. William Ruſſel, Henry Starkey, William Marſhal, Alexander Lumſden, James Corker, Lionel Anderſon, and Charles Parry.

Capt. Richardſon. They are all on.

Ruſſel. My Lord, I have been confin'd, I have not had my Liberty till within theſe two or three days.

L. C. J. What then?

Ruſſel. I have not had my Friends to come to me, to adviſe me upon what Account I was to be Try'd.

Capt. Richardſon. He ſays, he wanted his Friends to adviſe for what he was to be Try'd.

L. C. J. Why, he knows he is to be try'd for a Popiſh Prieſt.

Capt. Richardſon. Here is one ſays he is ſick.

L. C. J. Who is that?

Capt. Richardſon. 'Tis Anderſon.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Then he muſt have a Chair to ſit down on.

L. C. J. We'll try him firſt that is ſick.

Then the Priſoners were call'd to their Challenges, and the Jury of Middleſex appearing upon their Summons, and none of them being excepted againſt, the Twelve that were firſt called and Sworn, were the Gentlemen following:

John Bradſhaw,	Jur'	Anthony Hall,
Lawrence Wood,		Samuel Jewel,
Matthew Bateman,		Richard Bealing,
John Vyner,		Thomas Hall,
Francis Mayo,		Richard Bromfield,
Martin James,		Samuel Lynne.

Then they were number'd, and Proclamation for Information in uſual manner was made.

L. C. J. Come, begin with the ſick Man Anderſon; and ſet away the reſt.

Cl. of Cr. Lionel Anderſon, hold up thy Hand. You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands Indicted by the Name of Lionel Anderſon, &c. Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and his Countrey, which Countrey you are. Your Charge is to enquire, whether he be Guilty, &c.

Then Roger Belwood, Eſq; of Counſel for the King in this Cauſe, opened the Indictment.

Mr. Belwood. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Priſoner at the Bar, Lionel Anderſon, alias Munſon, ſtands Indicted for High Treaſon; and it is alledged in the Indictment, That he being born within the King's Dominions, and made a Prieſt, and having receiv'd Orders by pretended Authority from the See of Rome, he did the 28*th* Day of January laſt come into the Kingdom of England, that is, as 'tis laid, in the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in this County; and there he did abide contrary to the Form of the Statute. And this is laid to be Traiterouſly done. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty, and we are to prove it upon him by the King's Evidence, whom we are now to call.

Anderſon. My Lord, for my ſtaying in the Kingdom, I had the King's expreſs Command, and an Order from the Council-Board: In the Year 71, they order'd Mr. Peter Welſh, and my ſelf, with four or five others, who had in Writing aſſerted his Majeſty's juſt Rights over all his Subjects, whether Proteſtant or Papiſt, againſt thoſe ſo frequently imputed Uſurpations of the Court of Rome. After this Plot was diſcovered I came to the King, being afraid of being involved in the general Calamity, and ſaid to him, Sir, I deſire to know what to do?

L. C. J. Do, Why?

Anderſon. Good my Lord hear me out. My Lord Privy Seal brought me an Order from the Council-board, and ſo 'tis Recorded; and I think Dr. Otes will be ſo juſt to me, as to acknowledge that he hath ſeen it, and this all that I have to ſay.

L. C. J. If you have an Order from the Council to protect you, you muſt apply your ſelf elſewhere; our Buſineſs is to try the ſingle Iſſue, whether you have offended againſt the Law.

Anderſon. My Lord, I that am but a poor little Individuum, who am born with an innate and implicit Obedience to my King, pray judge whether it lie in my power to diſpute with him and his Counſel, whether they can legally do this or no? Or that I ought to obey the King's Command. My Lord, I am put upon a hard Dilemma; if I (notwithſtanding his Majeſty's Command to the contrary) go out of the Kingdom, then the ſevere Imputation upon us is urged againſt me, That I have, with my Religion, renounced my Natural Allegiance: And if I ſtay, then by the Law (as you tell me) I forfeit my Life.

Mr. Belwood. This is not a Time for him now to inſiſt on this matter.

L. C. J. Reſerve your ſelf till the King's Counſel have done, and the Evidence given.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Let him ſave his Speech till ſuch time as he comes to anſwer for himſelf.

L. C. J. Give him a Chair if he be not able to ſtand.

Then Sir John Keiling, one of the King's Learned Counſel in the Law, purſued the Charge thus:

Sir J. Keiling. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Lionel Anderſon, otherwiſe Munſon, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands Indicted here, for that, he being a Subject born within the Dominions of the King, hath taken Orders from the See of Rome, and hath contrary to the Law come into England, and ſtaid here as a Traytor: For this Treaſon he is indicted, and the Indictment is grounded upon the Statute of the 27*th Eliz.* a Statute made almoſt an hundred Years ſince, and it was upon great occaſion: For it tells you plainly, That theſe Prieſts that had taken Orders from the See of Rome, were not only buſie in ſeducing and perverting the King's Subjects to the Romiſh Superſtition; but they had made many Attempts upon the Government, raiſing Sedition and Rebellion, and levying War againſt their Sovereign; which is evident from the Preamble of the Statute it ſelf. And it is true, the Lenity and Mildneſs of our Princes hath in a great meaſure let this Statute lie aſleep; they have not been willing to execute the Severity of the Law upon all occaſions at all times: But the occaſion being renewed at this time, for the remedying of which this Statute was principally made (that is to ſay, raiſing Seditions, and Commotions, and Rebellion againſt the King, the particulars of which I ſhall not inlarge upon, it hath been notorious in this place) that that is the Reaſon of the preſent Proſecution of theſe Perſons. Who have not been contented to enjoy the Indulgence of our Princes, (which hath been extended to them, notwithſtanding all their former numerous Affronts that they have given) but have rais'd new Commotions, and made Attempts upon the Perſon of our King, and of our Government, and that is the Occaſion upon which theſe Perſons come to be try'd. It is not purely (tho' that is a main Ingredient) that they are try'd quatenus Prieſts, but as Ordain'd by the See of Rome, and coming into England and abiding here. For a Prieſt, if he be Ordain'd by the See of Rome, if he comes not here, can do no hurt; but it is his coming and abiding here, that makes him the Subject of this Puniſhment, and hath occaſion'd this Man's Proſecution. Now my Lord, we ſhall prove that this Anderſon alias Munſon hath taken Orders from the See of Rome, whoſe Authority conſtituted him a Prieſt, and this we ſhall prove by ſeveral Inſtances and Steps; and then we doubt not but you will take that Care for the Preſervation of the Government, and for the Peace and Quiet of the Nation, which becomes you, and give a Verdict according as your Evidence ſhall lead you.

Then Sir George Strode, the King's Serjeant at Law, manag'd the Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Strode. My Lord, we ſhall call our Evidence. The Fact is this, That this Perſon being a Subject of the King's, and having received Orders from the See of Rome, that is, being a Romiſh Prieſt, did come and abide here contrary to the Statute; not that his Prieſthood is the Crime, no, 'tis his being a Subject of the King's, and owning an Authority from Abroad, and thereby denying the Authority of his own Sovereign. To prove this, we ſhall call Dr. Otes, Mr. Bedloe, Mr. Dangerfield, and Mr. Prance. [Who were all ſworn.

Set up Mr. Dangerfield firſt. Mr. Dangerfield, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Anderſon.

Mr. Dangerfield. What I do know againſt him?

L. C. J. Yes, for being a Prieſt.

Mr. Dangerfield. What, that particularly?

L. C. J. Yes, that particularly.

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, about the latter end of May, or beginning of June, when I was a Priſoner for Debt in the King's Bench, this Perſon took occaſion to ſpeak privately to me, and deſired me to go into his Room: He told me he had receiv'd a Letter from my Lady Powis, and that Letter was burnt. But the next Letter that came from my Lady Powis, he would ſhew it me. And he did ſo; and the Contents of the Letter was, as near as I can remember, juſt thus: Sir, You muſt deſire Willoughby to ſcour his Kettle; which was, to confeſs and receive the Sacrament, to be true to the Cauſe. A little after, that was Saturday, and I think it was the next Day, being Sunday, I went into Mr. Anderſon's, alias Munſon's Chamber, and there I went to Confeſſion, and received Abſolution. And he ſent me to another Perſon to receive the Sacrament, who was ſaying Maſs at that time. And when I had receiv'd the Sacrament and returned to him again, he did tell me, That he, as a Prieſt, did give me free Toleration to go and be drunk, and drink with one Stroude; and I ask'd him, being ſomething ſcrupulous in the matter, Whether I might lawfully do it, having but juſt received the Sacrament? he told me, Yes, he gave me Authority ſo to do, being for the good of the Cauſe.

L. C. J. Were you a Papiſt then?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, I was.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. You went to Confeſſion to him, and received Abſolution?

Mr. Belwood. What was the good of the Cauſe that he meant?

Mr. Serj. Strode. If you pleaſe, give an Account of the whole Thing.

Mr. Dangerfield. That was, as I was employ'd in a general Affair for the Catholicks: For I was to uſe my Endeavour to bring over Stroude to be a Witneſs for the Lords in the Tower, concerning the Plot, and to invalidate Mr. Bedloe's Teſtimony.

Anderſon. Here I am upon my Life and Death; all the World knows me, that hath heard of my Name——

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Pray make no Speeches, if you will ask any Queſtions you may.

Anderſon. No, I won't. Pray do not interrupt me; I perceive you have a Pique againſt my Life, and it may be I am as ready to give it, as you are to deſire it; I wiſh that all the Puniſhments of Hell and Damnation may come upon me, if ever I open'd my mouth to this Rogue for one Farthing, or about any ſuch Buſineſs in the World.

L. C. J. You muſt not call him Rogue in open Court. Let us have that Reſpect ſhewn us that is fitting, and ſo ſhall you have, but this Language we muſt not ſuffer.

Anderſon. In the firſt place, I will bring all the Priſoners in the King's Bench Priſon to teſtifie, That I deſired to be removed to Newgate, for here was the greateſt Rogue come in that was in England.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. This muſt not be ſuffered.

L. C. J. If you will ask him any Queſtions, you may.

Anderſon. Well, come Mr. Dangerfield, in the firſt place, Who ever ſaw you with me? 'Tis impoſſible but ſome body muſt ſee you with me, if we were together, as you ſay.

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, there is one Hill, that is now a Priſoner in the King's Bench, that ſaw me ſeveral times go into his Chamber.

L. C. J. Was there any body by when you confeſs'd your ſelf to him?

Mr. Juſt Dolben. Confeſſions uſe to be in ſecret.

Mr. Dangerfield. No, my Lord, he was not in the Chamber, neither was it reaſonable he ſhould, but he ſaw me go in often.

Anderſon. Surely, Mr. Dangerfield, you and I could not be ſo well acquainted, but ſome body or other muſt take notice, that we ſpoke together ſometimes. Now if you can produce any one body that will teſtifie it, I will be bound to be hang'd, and ſay no more.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. He is not bound to bring Witneſſes to this purpoſe. He ſwears the Fact charged upon you poſitively.

Mr. Dangerfield. This Hill, my Lord, that is in the King's Bench, hath made Oath of it before Mr. Juſtice Foſter.

Anderſon. But my Lord, this one thing I have to ſay againſt this Rogue; there is a Statute, made ſince his Majeſty's happy Reſtauration, which judges what ſhall be Treaſon during his Majeſty's Life: And after enumerating the Crimes, and directing that the Offender ſhall be convicted by the Oaths of two Lawful, adds, and Credible Witneſſes: As if the Prudence of our Legiſlators, which brings good out of evil, and meaſures the Subject's future Safety, by paſt Practices, judges that Clauſe neceſſary, and credible.

L. C. J. Pray ſpeak out, Sir, for I cannot hear you.

Anderſon. My Lord, I underſtand the Meaning applicable to me thus, That ſince the Statute does uſe the word (Credible) as well as Legal, it does judge that both would be very neceſſary. Now that he is not a credible Witneſs I can prove——

L. C. J. Why is he not credible? Certainly if he be legal he is credible.

Anderſon. No, my Lord, that does not follow. Firſt the——

Mr. Recorder. 'Tis not his time to make this ſort of Defence.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He ſhould have done it before the Witneſs was ſworn, if he would except againſt his Teſtimony.

L. C. J. But why is he not a good Witneſs, pray?

Anderſon. My Lord, a Man pilloried twice, that hath broke Priſon once, and committed other heinous Offences——

L. C. J. Where is the Record of any of this?

Anderſon. My Lord, I'll tell you how I prove it. That worthy Gentleman, Colonel Manſel, whom this Villain would have involved in——

L. C. J. You muſt not do thus, abuſe Perſons with Words, without Proof.

Anderſon. What, to prove it is day?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He muſt not be ſuffer'd ſo to do.

Anderſon. Why, here is Captain Richardſon, (taking him at the ſame time by the Shoulders) knows what I ſay to be true: Come ſpeak, you have been familiarly acquainted with that Rogue, (pointing at Dangerfield.) [Captain Richardſon laughing, I muſt not witneſs.] My Lord, I will do thus no more, indulge a little to my Innocency and Infirmity.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You don't ſeem to have ſo much Infirmity upon you.

Anderſon. My Lord, I will produce that worthy Gentleman Col. Manſel, whoſe innocent Blood was deſign'd to be ſhed by that Villain; who ſtood qualified then (as he doth now) with that magnificent Title of the King's Evidence; but as ſoon as Colonel Manſel urged, that he was pilloried twice, &c. our worſhipful King's Evidence was clap'd up, and Col. Manſel left at liberty.

L. C. J. Have you that Record here?

Anderſon. I have not.

Sir John Keiling. We pray we may go on then.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Set up Dr. Otes. Dr. Otes will you tell what you know of this Matter?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, he is a Prieſt. I can in ſincerity ſay it; I have heard him ſay Maſs my ſelf.

L. C. J. Where?

Anderſon. 'Tis very true, I did it; but, my Lord, I will ſhew you, Maſs is no Proof of a a Prieſt: For, 1. The Statute makes a Difference between ſaying Maſs, and being a Prieſt; in puniſhing Prieſts with Death; but ſaying of Maſs, with a pecuniary Mulct of 200 Marks, and a Year's Impriſonment.

Dr. Otes. He does execute the Office of a Prieſt; for I have been at Confeſſion with him as a Prieſt, and have ſeen him conſecrate the Sacrament, and I have ſeen his Letters of Orders as a Prieſt.

L. C. J. Did he wear the Habit of a Prieſt?

Dr. Otes. Yes, at Maſs.

Mr. Belwood. Pray, Sir, are you ſure you ſaw his Orders as a Prieſt?

Dr. Otes. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Of what Order is he?

Dr. Otes. A Dominican Fryar he is.

L. C. J. What can you ſay to that?

Anderſon. I can ſay enough; but what can I ſay againſt the King's Evidence? Your Lordſhip ſees this makes a very fine Jingle, but there is no Proof of it.

L. C. J. We can go no further than the Evidence. He ſays, You are a Dominican Fryar: That he heard you ſay Maſs: That he ſaw you conſecrate the Sacrament. And I am ſure you allow none but a Prieſt to do that.

Anderſon. I underſtand by the Laws of England, that I am try'd upon a Statute which makes Prieſthood a Crime. Now I will ask Mr. Otes a Queſtion: Mr. Otes, Can you prove, that I received Orders from the See of Rome? You are to prove by this Statute three Things againſt me. I am tryed upon a Penal Statute, which ought to be conſtrued moſt in Favour of the Priſoner.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ask him any Queſtions, if you will, but this is not your time for arguing.

L. C. J. Look you, we muſt do with you as we have done with others, and will do with the reſt. If you mean that this Statute ſhould never have any Effect, that is, that the Prieſts ſhall not be convicted as ſuch, unleſs we can produce Witneſſes that ſaw them take Orders, then you have avoided all the Statute; but if ſo be it be plainly proved, that you have done the Acts of a Prieſt, thoſe that none are allow'd of to do, or undertake to do, but a Prieſt, is not this a Satisfaction, and a plain one too, to your ſelf and all the World, that this Iſſue, whether you are a Prieſt, or not a Prieſt, is well proved in the Affirmative?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I ſaw his Letters of Orders.

Anderſon. My Lord Chief Juſtice, I would ſpeak a little to what you ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Look you, Sir, you muſt not have ſuch Liberty as this granted to you. You may, if you will, ask Queſtions, but it is not your time to diſpute.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You muſt not invert the Order of Tryals. When a Witneſs is call'd, he muſt give his Evidence. If you will ask him any Queſtions, you may do it. But if you will obſerve any thing, you have time to do it when the King's Witneſſes are all heard.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. Dr. Otes, the Priſoner did not underſtand ſure what you ſaid. Did not he confeſs to you he had Orders from Rome?

Dr. Otes. Yes, he did confeſs ſo.

L. C. J. You confeſſed it your ſelf.

Anderſon. My Lord, how comes it to paſs, that I did not come here in a Yellow Coat, and was not arraigned for a Fool, and not for a Traytor? If I am a Prieſt, that I ſhould tell him I was ſuch an one.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Nay, I can't tell, becauſe you did not put it on. If you would ask him any Queſtions, do.

Anderſon. Yes, Whether you do know me to be an Engliſhman? And whether you ſaw me take Orders from the See of Rome?

Dr. Otes. You ſaid you were an Engliſhman, and a Gentleman, and the Son of an Engliſh Gentleman.

L. C. J. Do you deny you are an Engliſhman?

Anderſon. I am not; nor no Man is to be try'd upon a Preſumption; 'tis but a Conceit in Law, and penal Laws are to be taken ſtrictly, and in favour of the Priſoner.

L. C. J. Methinks you ſpeak very like an Engliſhman.

Mr. Belwood. My Lord, we call now Mr. Bedloe. You know the Queſtion, what it is Sir, concerning the Priſoner's being a Prieſt.

Mr. Bedloe. He is a Prieſt, and an Engliſhman, if his Mother was honeſt, and he honeſtly born; for he is Mr. Anderſon's Son of Oxfordſhire, a Gentleman of 2 or 300 l. a Year; I know him and his Father very well.

Anderſon. My Lord, could I but apprehend that I lay under ſo great a Guilt, as to have been acquainted with ſo great a Rogue as this Fellow is, I would have been my own Executioner, and not have expected my Sentence at this Bar.

L. C. J. Do you know him well?

Mr. Bedloe. Very well, both him and his Father; his Father is an Oxfordſhire Gentleman.

Anderſon. Now I think I ſhall prove the Rogue perjur'd: Is my Lord Chief Baron in the Court?

Court. Yes, he is.

Anderſon. Why then my Father has the Honour to be well known to his Lordſhip, who knows this to be falſe.

L. C. Baron. No, no, Mr. Bedloe, he is a Gentleman's Son of Quality in Lincolnſhire.

L. C. J. You are miſtaken, you are miſtaken, his Father is a Lincolnſhire Gentleman.

Anderſon. And yet this Rogue is upon his Oath; but indeed all his Life is full of ſuch miſtakes.

Mr. Bedloe. I don't know, my Lord Privy-Seal's Nephew told me ſo.

L. C. J. But what ſay you to him, as to his being a Prieſt?

Mr. Bedloe. I have heard him ſay Maſs.

L. C. J. Did you ever receive the Sacrament from him?

Mr. Bedloe. Never. But I have ſeen him adminiſter the Sacrament, and he was in a Prieſt's Habit.

L. C. J. Where?

Mr. Bedloe. I think it was at the Venetian Reſident's, I am ſure it was at ſome of the Ambaſſador's Houſes.

Anderſon. This matter is ſo unlikely, I know not what to ſay to it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Anderſon. Upon my Salvation I never ſaw him before.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It is a ſtrange thing, that you ſhould take upon you to ſay upon your Salvation you never ſaw him: How many might come into a Room, and you not ſee them while you are at Maſs?

L. C. J. He might ſee you tho' you did not ſee him: He might come in, and you not ſee him.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. Is that any Argument, or any thing to the purpoſe, or does that contradict the Evidence? Does the Miniſter, or ought he to know all his Congregation whilſt he is in preaching?

Anderſon. I never ſaw him, I ſay. My Lord, I'll give you but one Argument, which is call'd, Argumentum congruentiæ.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Anderſon. To what purpoſe will it be for me to ask him?

Mr. Bedloe. When he was firſt taken I was not ſtirring; but while I was making ready they told me, There was one ſuſpected to be a Prieſt. I heard him ſpeak in the next Room, and I knew his Voice, and ſaid, That is Mr. Anderſon. I preſently knew his Tongue before I ſaw him.

L. C. J. You knew him very well then?

Mr. Bedloe. I never had any great Converſe with the Man: When he was taken they asked me, If I knew any thing of this Man about the Plot? I told them, No; but he was in Orders from the Church of Rome, for I heard him ſay Maſs at ſuch a place. He told me, ſaid he, I have been in Orders, but I revok'd them and turned Proteſtant.

Mr. Belwood. Set up Mr. Prance. Pray Sir tell what you know.

Mr. Prance. My Lord, I have heard him ſay Maſs ſeveral times at Wild-houſe; and he hath given the Sacrament there, and I have ſeen him take Confeſſions——

L. C. J. How often?

Mr. Prance. Several times.

L. C. J. Then you know him very well?

Mr. Prance. Yes, very well.

Anderſon. I never ſaw him in my Life.

L. C. J. But he hath ſeen you.

Anderſon. My Lord Chief Juſtice, I will bring Witneſſes to prove, That I did never ſay Maſs at Wild-houſe, nor went to the Chapel: For ſome (forſooth) would needs have me to have been Excommunicated for writing for the King's Temporal Juriſdiction over all his Subjects (independant of the Pope) as appears by a Letter of the Biſhop of London on my behalf to Sir Clement Armiger.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Mr. Prance. Seven Years.

L. C. J. How often have you ſeen him ſay Maſs?

Mr. Prance. A dozen times.

Anderſon. It may ſeem ſtrange that I ſhould have the impudence to deny what this worthy Gentleman ſays. Mr. Prance, dare you ſay you know me?

L. C. J. Why, were you never there?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Well, well, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Anderſon. Who did I give the Sacrament to?

Mr. Prance. A whole Rail full hath been at the Sacrament at a time; ſeveral People I have ſeen receive it from him.

L. C. J. Did he deliver the Sacrament to you?

Mr. Prance. No, he did not, I commonly received at Somerſet-houſe.

Mr. Serj. Strode. We have done, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. The King's Counſel have done with their Evidence, and now you may ſay what you will.

Anderſon. My Lord Chief Juſtice, may I ſpeak now?

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Yes, you may.

Anderſon. My Lord, all the World knows me, and I am known to moſt of the dignified Clergy in England: My Lord Biſhop of London, and Dr. Lloyd, and the Biſhop of Durham ſent to me to tell me, that if they knew of my Tryal they would be here. My Lord, I have lain under an ill Cenſure for ſcribbling and writing againſt the Temporal Power of the Church of Rome. I never ſaid Maſs in any Popiſh Church, I am confident, theſe Ten Years; that I have ſaid Maſs, I won't deny. I would not tell a Lie to ſave my own Life; nay, nor would I tell a Lie to take away the Life of the greateſt Villain upon Earth; no, not that Rogue (pointing to Dangerfield) But, my Lord, I proteſt there is not one Word true that hath been ſworn againſt me, but what Dr. Otes hath ſaid concerning my ſaying Maſs. Oh! my Lord, I would not deny it if I were to be hang'd preſently; and is not that a great Evidence of my Innocence and Sincerity? But this does not prove that I am guilty of what I am accuſed for; for I am indicted upon a Penal Statute, and three things muſt be proved ſtrictly to bring me within that Law: Firſt, that I am an Engliſhman———

L. C. J. 'Tis proved you are an Oxfordſhire Man.

Anderſon. No, my Father is Lincolnſhire, and my Lord Chief Baron knows him.

L. C Baron. I do know a Gentleman of that Name there.

Mr. Bedloe. I was told he was Oxfordſhire.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He ſpeaks himſelf to be an Engliſhman. All the World knows it by your Speech.

Anderſon. I know my Father is ſo.

L. C. J. Why do you deny it your ſelf?

Anderſon. 'Tis one thing to deny it, and another thing to have it proved ſo: I am not to prove it, they are.

L. C. J. He ſays you are ſo.

Anderſon. He talks like a Parrot: Theſe things are to be proved ſtrictly; no Man's Life is to be taken away by preſumption; which is but a Conceit in Law, and ought not to overthrow that Maxim of Law, That Penal Laws ought to be taken moſt ſtrictly in favour of the Priſoner: And I ought to be proved, ad literam, within the Law; and that according to the Statute made ſince his Majeſty's happy Reſtoration, by two lawful Witneſſes; and not only by two lawful, but by two credible Witneſſes too. I ſuppoſe the Gentlemen of the Jury being apprized of theſe my Exceptions to theſe Witneſſes, notwithſtanding give Credit to them, whom perhaps they would not truſt for 6*d.* in their Shops, and make themſelves their Compurgators; and, as in waging Law, do take it upon their Conſcience, that what theſe Rogues ſay is true.

L. C. J. So they do.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. If theſe things are not well proved, nothing will be proved.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. Have you any Witneſſes that you would call?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. If you will call any, you may.

Anderſon. How ſhall I call them when I did not know of my Tryal.

Mr. Recorder. If you will ſend for any Witneſſes the Court will ſtay, if they be to any thing material.

Anderſon. My Lord, I have againſt this Gentleman Mr. Dangerfield almoſt all the Priſoners of the King's-Bench for Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Call them and name them.

Anderſon. Mr. Adderly, Mr. Puller, who can ſay that I never drunk a pot of Ale with this Man while he was there.

L. C. J. Who would you ſend for?

Anderſon. Thoſe Perſons, to prove that I had a Grudge and Prejudice againſt this Man, and that I deſired to be removed to Newgate for that very reaſon.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But the Queſtion is, whether you be a Prieſt, or no? And you can't ſend for any one that knows you but will ſay, That he hath taken you for a Prieſt all along.

Anderſon. But ſtill 'tis but a Preſumption, not a Proof.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. The Jury is to be judge of that, how far that goes.

L. C. J. What do you expect for Proof? Do you imagine there ſhould be no Proof to convict you upon that Statute, unleſs we produce ſome Witneſſes that actually ſaw you take Orders?

Anderſon. Yes, I ſuppoſe ſo, my Lord, becauſe Penal Statutes are to be taken ſtrictly.

L. C. J. Look you then, How vain would you make a Statute of England, the Laws of your Countrey? How idle a thing were it to expect any poſſibility of Proof, ſuch as to Convict a Prieſt, if this be the Interpretation of the Law, That no man ſhould be convicted by a Jury upon this Statute, but one againſt whom two Witneſſes ſhould ſwear they ſaw him take Orders? Where can we find ſuch a Witneſs.

Anderſon. Admit that this Law were thus evaded, yet there would be no inconvenience, and I will prove it to your Lordſhip by Authority: It was the Opinion of all the Judges, delivered about nine Years ago to the King and Council, upon a Queſtion about Laws againſt the Romiſh Recuſants; they all agreed, That this Law was only made in terrorem.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Look you Sir, you muſt not talk ſo, it is not to be permitted.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Will you go to Arraign the Judges here?

L. C. J. No, no; the King's Counſel did very honeſtly and prudently upon that matter: For ſaid Sir John Keiling, 'Tis very true, our Kings have not ſince this Law was made, put the Statute in Execution unto Rigor, till you your ſelves occaſioned it: but ſtill the Law was a good Law, and abſolutely neceſſary at its making, as neceſſary as the Preſervation of the Queen's Life, and the Quiet of her Dominions; and now 'tis become as neceſſary for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, which all your Arts are employ'd to undermine; and more neceſſary again, for the Preſervation of our King's Life, againſt which your Contrivances are ſo bent.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Do you think that you ſhall be heard here to diſpute againſt the Law, and ſay it was no matter for the Law, it is a void Law; and ſcandalize the Judges, that they gave it for their Opinion, that it was only in terrorem?

Anderſon. No, I diſpute for the Law.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt employ your time otherwiſe if you intend to be heard.

Anderſon. Then this is that I require; I deſire theſe things may be proved: Firſt, That I am an an Engliſhman, and then I took Orders from Rome, and then that I abode here contrary to the Statute, which things in this penal Statute muſt be proved.

L. C. J. You have upon the matter prov'd the firſt your ſelf in your Appeal to my Lord Chief Baron, that he knew your Father, who is a Lincolnſhire Man.

Anderſon. I might be bred and born beyond Sea, tho' my Father was ſo.

L. C. J. If you will give no Proof to the contray, a little Proof will ſerve the Jury's Turn, hearing you ſpeak, and knowing your Father was a Lincolnſhire Gentleman.

Anderſon. No Negative can be ſworn, they muſt prove the Affirmative.

L. C. J. That will turn the Proof upon you to the contrary.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. A reaſonable Proof againſt you, with ſuch Probability, will put it upon you to diſprove it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Look you Mr. Anderſon, if you have any Witneſſes to call for, or ſend for, the Court will give you Leave to ſtand by a little and ſend for them; but if you continue to argue in this manner, the Court will give their Directions to the Jury.

L. C. J. But Mr. Anderſon, the Court will do you all the Juſtice that can be expected. If you have any material Witneſſes to be ſent for, the Court will have Patience till they come; but then you muſt be ſure they are material Witneſſes, for we will not go to loſe time upon a bare Surmiſe. If it be only to prove this Negative, that Mr. Dangerfield was never in your Company in the Kings-Bench, it will ſignify nothing, for there are three Witneſſes without him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Have you any Witneſſes to prove that you were born beyond Sea, or any thing that is material, we will ſtay for them.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. There is nothing now in queſtion, but whether you be an Engliſhman and a Prieſt; and if you can prove that you are not ſo, you ſay well. But I think you deny not now but that you are a Prieſt, only you would have us prove that you are an Engliſhman. Your Speech betrays you, and there is ſo much Evidence againſt you, that I have not heard in any Caſe as I know of. And all your Witneſſes will be to little purpoſe.

Anderſon. Only this I deſire to obſerve, That I have been a Man always countenanced by the beſt of Kings, and his Privy Council; and if the Parliament had not been diſſolved, I had been protected by the Parliament: Now I ſay, if your Lordſhips think me worthy of any Conſideration (as I have been a Man that have given ſeveral Teſtimonies of my Loyalty, and Obedience to the Government) I deſire your Lordſhips would pleaſe to ſtay till you know the King's Pleaſure.

L. C. J. You know where you muſt apply your ſelf for that, we are barely upon our Oaths, and ſo is the Jury too, to try the Fact, whether you be a Prieſt; and this I will tell you, and I muſt ſay to you, I dare appeal to your own Conſcience, whether this Iſſue, your being a Romiſh Prieſt, is not as plainly and evidently prov'd, to the Satisfaction of all Mankind, as any thing can be?

Anderſon. But 'tis all by Preſumption ſtill.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Matter that he inſiſts upon, are two things; Firſt, ſays he, you have not prov'd me to be an Engliſhman, and yet at the ſame time he appeals to ſuch as knew his Father to be an Engliſh Gentleman; and his Language, his Tongue betrays him. 'Tis true, ſome kind of Evidence is to be given, that he is an Engliſhman, he himſelf tells you, that he is born of Engliſh Parents; but 'tis a foreign Matter, that he ſhould be born beyond Sea. And if it were ſo really, then it comes on his ſide, if he can produce any Witneſs he ſays ſomething, otherwiſe we leave it to you, whether you are not ſatisfied in your Conſciences, by hearing him ſpeak, and underſtanding who his Father was, that he is an Engliſhman. The next thing is for his being a Prieſt: I do not know, nor can there be expected a plainer Proof than this that hath been given, becauſe he doth thoſe Acts which none but a Prieſt amongſt them does; he ſays Maſs, he conſecrates the Sacrament, he takes Confeſſion, he gives Abſolution, and all this proved by four Witneſſes.

Anderſon. That the Clerk does at Maſs, he gives Abſolution.

L. C. J. Does, or can any but a Prieſt Abſolve?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, the Clerk, he that ſerves at Maſs at that time, gives pro forma Abſolution to the Prieſt, without which, the Prieſt cannot approach to the Altar, after he hath made a general Confeſſion for the whole Congregation, the Clerk abſolves the Prieſt, that he may abſolve the Congregation.

L. C. J. Well, the Fact is plain upon you, we muſt never expect to convict a Prieſt upon this Statute, if ſuch Proof is not ſufficient.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He does acknowledge that Dr. Otes hath heard him ſay Maſs.

L. C. J. Go on to the next.

Mr. Belwood. The next we will try, ſhall be James Corker, with whom the Jury was charged as with the other.

Mr. Belwood. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; James Corker, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands Indicted for High Treaſon, for that being born within the King's Dominions, and made a Prieſt by Authority from the See of Rome, did traiterouſly come and abide in England, contrary to the Law. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty.

L. C. J. Well, call your Witneſſes.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Dr. Otes, Mr. Bedloe, and Mr. Prance, (Who were all ſworn.) Dr. Otes, pray tell my Lord, and theſe Gentlemen, what you know of this Mr. Corker's being a Prieſt.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, he hath ſaid Maſs at Somerſet-Houſe, and before the Proclamation and Declaration in 1674. made againſt the Catholicks, he was one of the Queen's Prieſts, he is a Benedictine Monk, and he hath ſaid Maſs at Somerſet-Houſe; and I have heard him ſay Maſs at the Savoy.

L. C. J. In a Prieſt's Habit?

Dr. Otes. Yes, I have ſeen him in a Monk's Habit.

Corker. When?

L. C. J. Have you ever ſeen him give the Sacrament?

Dr. Otes. Yes, I received the Sacrament from him my ſelf.

L. C. J. Where?

Dr. Otes. In the Savoy.

L. C. J. Did he Conſecrate the Sacrament?

Dr. Otes. Not that that I received, I cannot ſay whether he did or no.

L. C. J. Do any Adminiſter the Sacrament but Prieſts

Dr.

Dr. Otes. They are in Orders firſt. And 'tis againſt the Laws of the Church for any but Prieſts to do it.

L. C. J. None uſe to do it but Prieſts, do they?

Dr. Otes. I can't tell; but he that I took it from, I always took to be a Prieſt: Beſides, I ſaw his Patent to be Biſhop of London; and they don't uſe to make them Biſhops before they be Prieſts.

L. C. J. Did he ſhew it you?

Dr. Otes. I ſaw it.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. From whom was that Patent?

Dr. Otes. It was from the See of Rome.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. Under what Seal was it?

Dr. Otes. I can't tell that; but I remember that I ſaw the Patent.

L. C. J. Well, will you ask him any thing?

Corker. When was it that you heard me ſay Maſs?

Dr. Otes. The firſt time that I heard him ſay Maſs is near upon three Years ago; and then I heard him ſay Maſs about the laſt Winter was two Years.

L. C. J. How often have you heard him ſay Maſs?

Dr. Otes. Several times; a dozen times I believe.

Corker. Was there any body with you when you heard me ſay Maſs?

Dr. Otes. I believe there was an whole Church full at Somerſet-houſe.

Corker. Can you nominate any in particular?

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. How can he do that? He ſays there was an whole Church full.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Corker. No.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Then ſet up Mr. Bedloe. Pray Sir, will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of Mr. Corker's being a Prieſt.

Mr. Bedloe. I have ſeen him wear the Habit of a Benedictine Monk, before the ſuppreſſing of the Convent in the Savoy; and I have ſeen him confeſſing ſeveral People in Somerſet-houſe.

L. C. J. And gave them Abſolution?

Mr. Bedloe. Yes.

L. C. J. Do they uſe to let them ſee when they confeſs?

Mr. Bedloe. They confeſs in publick, but they ſpeak ſo ſoftly we can't hear; but the whole Chapel ſometimes may be full of People Confeſſing.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Bedloe. About four or five Years ſince, when Father Lathum was there.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him ſay Maſs at Father Lathum's?

Mr. Bedloe. No, I never ſaw him ſay Maſs, but only confeſs.

L. C. J. Did you never ſee him deliver the Sacrament?

Mr. Bedloe. No, my Lord.

Corker. When you ſaw me in my Habit, was it when you came to Father Lathum's?

Mr. Bedloe. I judge ſo, it was ſeveral times, with ſeveral of them.

Corker. Can you nominate any one that ſaw me at the ſame time?

Mr. Bedloe. There were a whole Chapel full of Catholicks.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. That is no great matter whether he can or no.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. 'Tis an immaterial Queſtion, Why do you ask it?

Mr. Bedloe. My Lord, what I did was done ſo privately, that if I went but from Strand bridge to the Monks, I either took a Boat and went by Water, or a Coach and went round about to avoid ſuſpicion.

Mr. Belwood. Then ſet up Mr. Prance. Pray Sir tell what you know of this.

Mr. Prance. I have heard him ſay Maſs at Mr. Paſton's in Dukeſtreet.

L. C. J. How often?

Mr. Prance. Never but once.

Corker. When, Sir?

Mr. Prance. It may be two Years ago.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. That is another Place too, Mr. Corker.

L. C. J. Have you any thing to ask him?

Corker. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What have you then to ſay for your ſelf?

Corker. My Lord, this I have to ſay for my ſelf, and I do proteſt it to be true: I never in my Life did ſay Maſs or hear Confeſſions at Somerſet-houſe.

L. C. J. What ſay you to Mr. Paſton's?

Corker. No, nor at Mr. Paſton's; nor ever was in the Company of that Man, nor ever ſaw him there in my Life to my knowledge.

L. C. J. That may be.

Corker. I likewiſe proteſt, that I never ſaid Maſs in any publick Place ſince I was born.

L. C. J. It may be you count not Mr. Paſton's a publick Place.

Corker. If it be a private Place, then I ſhould know who were in the Company, and who were admitted there.

L. C. J. No, you were not two or three Years ago ſo nice and cautious whom you admitted to ſee you in the Exerciſe of what you call your Religion; becauſe the Execution of the Law was not ſo ſtrict as now adays it is. And therefore 'tis very probable, and may very well be, that you were at Mr. Paſton's Houſe, and yet not know all the Company.

Corker. But, I ſay, I never did ſay Maſs there.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Here are three Witneſſes againſt you, and do you think your bare Word will be taken againſt their three Oaths?

Mr. Recorder. What ſay you to the Savoy, Mr. Corker? And I ask you, becauſe I would know whether you can ſpeak Truth in any thing.

Corker. I would not tell a Lie, tho' I ſhould thereby ſave my Life: And I do again proteſt before God and the Court, I never in my Life ſaid Maſs or heard Confeſſions at Somerſet-houſe Chapel, nor at Mr. Paſton's in Dukeſtreet. And as to the Savoy, ſeeing I will be ſincere, I ſhall only ſay, that as my Denial will not clear me, ſo I beg I may not be my own Accuſer.

L. C. J. Here is one hath ſwore it.

Corker. 'Tis only Otes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well Gentlemen of the Jury, you hear what is proved againſt him by three Witneſſes, that they heard him ſay Maſs and receive Confeſſions, and deliver the Sacrament. They tell you what Order he was of, and that they ſaw him do the Acts of a Prieſt.

Corker. I appeal to all the World that ever came to Somerſet-houſe, Whether ever any one heard me ſay Maſs there.

L. C. J. Here is one hath.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Strode. We will try William Marſhal next. [Who was charged upon the Jury as the others.]

Mr. Belwood. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, William Marſhal, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands Indicted for High-Treaſon. The Offence is not for being a Prieſt barely; but that he being born an Engliſhman, within the King's Dominions, and having received Orders from Rome, did, againſt the Laws of the Kingdom, come and abide here.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Swear Dr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe. [Which was done.] Dr. Otes, pray ſtand up.

L. C. J. What can you ſay to Mr. Marſhal's being a Prieſt?

Dr. Otes. I have heard him ſay Maſs in the Savoy, and I have ſeen him in that Poſture that the Prieſts are in when they give Abſolution.

L. C. J. Have you ſeen him in a Prieſt's Habit ſay Maſs?

Dr. Otes. Yes, in his Habit as a Benedictine Monk.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did you ever ſee him give the Sacrament?

Dr. Otes. Yes, and conſecrate the Hoſt.

Mr. Juſt. Jones Well, have you any thing to ask him?

Marſhal. When was this?

Dr. Otes. I have known him theſe three Years to be a Prieſt.

Marſhal. That is a Year longer than you knew me at the Tryal.

Dr. Otes. It is a great while ſince that Tryal.

L. C. J. Ay, that is a good while ago.

Marſhal. But where, Mr. Otes, and when?

Dr. Otes. At the Savoy.

Marſhal. When?

Dr. Otes. Within the compaſs of three Years, ſeveral times.

Marſhal. How does that afford me any occaſion of Defence? I can make no Plea, unleſs he aſcertains time.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. 'Tis good Evidence without confining himſelf to preciſe time.

L. C. J. He ſays a dozen times within that compaſs.

Marſhal. But why does he not name ſome particular time; for unleſs he name the time, how is it poſſible for us to diſprove him?

L. C. J. He tells you many times in three Years.

Marſhal. But when?

L. C. J. Why, within three Years.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What if he could tell you when?

Marſhal. Let him name the Day, then we could diſprove him; and let him name the day, and if I do not diſprove him, I'll be hang'd.

L. C. J. 'Tis an improper Queſtion that you ask.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He is not bound to name the Day.

Dr. Otes. Well, I will pitch upon a Day now.

Marſhal. When was it?

Dr. Otes. Several times laſt Summer was Twelvemonth.

Marſhal. What, before the Plot?

Dr. Otes. Several times in that Summer before the Plot was diſcovered; and ſeveral times the Winter before, when I came over from Spain.

Marſhal. Did you hear me ſay Maſs before you went over to Spain?

Dr. Otes. Yes I did.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Call another Witneſs.

Mr. Belwood. Mr. Bedloe.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Pray will you tell what you know of Mr. Marſhal.

Mr. Bedloe. I know a great deal of him.

L. C. J. What of his being a Prieſt?

Mr. Bedloe. I have ſeen him in his Habit of a Benedictine Monk in the Savoy.

L. C. J. Have you heard him ſay Maſs?

Mr. Bedloe. No, my Lord, I have not: But he hath been preparing to go to take Confeſſions.

L. C. J. Did he own himſelf to be a Prieſt?

Mr. Bedloe. He was in the Habit of a Prieſt, but I never ſaw him execute any part of the Office of a Prieſt.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Did you hear him declare, that he hath been going at any time to take Confeſſion?

Mr. Bedloe. The Monks have ſaid when he hath been gone, that he went to take Confeſſions.

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, Have you ever heard him own himſelf to be a Prieſt, or ever ſay, that he was going to take Confeſſion?

Mr. Bedloe. No, my Lord; but I have ſeen him in a Monk's Habit, and within half an hour he was in a ſecular Habit: For when they went abroad they took Confeſſions in their ſecular Habit.

L. C. J. How often have you ſeen him in a Monk's Habit?

Mr. Bedloe. I do not know whether it were more than once; and I asked then, Where is our Father going?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And what ſaid they to you?

Mr. Bedloe. He was going to take Confeſſions.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Have not you your ſelf been confeſſed by Marſhal?

Mr. Bedloe. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What ſay you to him, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Marſhal. I do not, I think, need to ask this Witneſs any Queſtions.

L. C. J. That ſhall be obſerved for you, if it be to your advantage. If you have any thing to ſay for your ſelf, pray ſpeak it.

Marſhal. If there be but one Witneſs, what need I make any Defence?

L. C. J. What ſay you to Mr. Otes's Teſtimony?

Marſhal. As for Mr. Otes, if your Lordſhip will but promiſe, that it ſhall not prejudice me, as to the point of having but one Witneſs, I have much to ſay for my ſelf: But I think I need not trouble your Lordſhip with it.

Sir John Keiling. Were not you here when Marſhal was try'd for the Plot?

Mr. Bedloe. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt not ask him any Queſtions about that.

Marſhal. My Lord, I ſay, if your Lordſhip will but grant, that the Witneſſes may have free Acceſs, and go away ſafe——

Mr. Bedloe. I believe the Court, upon his Tryal, was ſatisfied that he was in Orders, received from the Church of Rome.

Sir John Keiling. Swear Mr. Prance. [Which was done.] What did you hear him ſay at his laſt Tryal?

L. C. J. This is hard Evidence truly.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. If he would do it voluntarily of himſelf, he might, we did not ask him the Queſtion.

Mr. Prance. My Lord, I ſtood juſt by him when he ſtood at the Bar, and I heard him ſay this to the other Man Mr. Corker, Though we are Prieſts, this does not reach us.

L. C. J. But is this good Evidence?

Mr. Prance. I did hear him ſay he was a Prieſt.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. We did all hear him ſay ſo, I believe.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. I dare ſay none of the Court asked him the Queſtion.

Marſhal. My Lord, I was not asked, nor had any occaſion, and certainly I ſhould not pick an occaſion to condemn my ſelf: If I did it, I did it without occaſion. Beſides, my Lord, I humbly conceive, that there muſt be Proof againſt a Man, or his Confeſſion won't make him Guilty.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. I would not have you too ſure of that.

Marſhal. Certainly if a Man do confeſs at another time, without Proof againſt him that will not do.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. I believe the Jury will take your own Confeſſion.

L. C. J. Don't be over confident of that, for we have Memories too as well as you.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You are not bely'd by Mr. Prance, I believe, Mr. Marſhal.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. If he have confeſs'd it, that is ſure Proof enough.

Sir John Keiling. Swear Mr. Dugdale. [Which was done.] You were at the laſt Tryal, Sir: I only ask of you, Can you remember any thing of this?

Mr. Dugdale. To the beſt of my remembrance, I heard him own that he was a Prieſt.

Sir John Keiling. Then ſay what you can for your ſelf.

Marſhal. My Lord, I have only one material Witneſs againſt me. They ſay that I ſaid ſo; if I did ſay ſo, I muſt ſay it to the Court; and if it was to the Court, it muſt be upon ſome Queſtion asked me.

L. C. J. You muſt not ſay ſo; I am afraid if you appeal to the Court, it will do you no good.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It is plain that you are ſo free of your Diſcourſe, that you might ſay things that were not pertinent.

L. C. J. 'Tis not proper for the Court to give Evidence; if we did we ſhould do you little Service in this matter.

Marſhal. I do believe I ſhall receive all Juſtice from the Court. And I have experienced it ſo already. Now as to the preſent Teſtimony againſt me, I conceive that only Mr. Otes is a material Witneſs; no one elſe ſwears that they ever ſaw me officiate or perform the Duty of a Prieſt. As for Mr. Otes, he ſays he heard me ſay Maſs ſeveral times the laſt Summer before the Plot. And Mr. Otes did ſay he was preſent in June, July, and Auguſt. Sir William Waller, tho' he was pleaſed to forget other things, yet did remember that, and did teſtifie that he ſaw me in June, July, and Auguſt. Now then I humbly conceive, if he heard me ſay Maſs at any time in that Summer, it muſt be in one of thoſe three Months. Was it in any one of them?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I came over in April from St. Omers, and I did, as I remember, hear him ſay Maſs one time before I went again, and heard him ſay it ſeveral times after, which was about the middle of June, I think.

Marſhal. Now I ſay, if this Honourable Court will but pleaſe to promiſe, that the Witneſſes that come hither ſhall come and go ſafe, I believe there are Witneſſes that may contradict Dr. Otes.

L. C. J. What can your Witneſſes prove? you muſt not make Bargains with the Court.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Why ſhould you ſuſpect that your Witneſſes ſhould not go free?

Marſhal. Becauſe ſome have received great Abuſes.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. It was ſo ſaid, but not made out.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. There was only one Perſon that came here, and affirmed ſo, but he did not prove it.

Mr. Recorder. And the Court did ſay that they ſhould be puniſhed that did it.

L. C. J. The Witneſſes none of them, that I know of, were abuſed.

Mr. Bedloe. It was only the King's Witneſſes that have been abuſed.

L. C. J. What can your Witneſſes prove.

Marſhal. He came over the 24th of April, and I can prove that from the beginning of April, to the end of July, I was not within threeſcore Miles of London.

Dr. Otes. As to his Officiating as a Prieſt, I cannot ſpeak poſitively as to the time, but I think in laſt Summer was twelve Month.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He ſays, he thinks he did once in that time, but he is ſure, that he did ſee you ſeveral times that Summer.

Marſhal. But what part of the Summer?

Dr. Otes. From the time of my coming over again, to the time of the Diſcovery of the Plot.

L. C. J. When was it that you heard him firſt?

Dr. Otes. When I heard him firſt was in the Year 1677. before I went into Spain: I went away in the Month of April, and I am ſure he ſaid Maſs before I went into Spain; and when I came back again in the Winter, I came in November, and ſtay'd in Town about ten Days, and then went to the Savoy and heard him ſay Maſs.

Marſhal. What November?

Dr. Otes. Before the Summer I came out of Flanders.

L. C. J. He ſays he went into Spain in April, (77.)

Marſhal. And he heard me ſay Maſs before he went over?

Dr. Otes. Yes.

Marſhal. Pray look, my Lord, Mr. Otes will confeſs himſelf, he was but newly reconcil'd to the Church of Rome a little while before he went.

Dr. Otes. I was reconciled to the Church on Aſh-wedneſday, and I went in April following.

Marſhal. Where did you hear me ſay Maſs then?

Dr. Otes. In the Savoy, at that time, before I went into Spain.

Marſhal. Do you pretend to have known the Savoy ever before your coming back again?

Dr. Otes. Yes, I do.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He does ſwear it.

Marſhal. So he does, but he can't prove it. Mr. Otes came over in the Company, as he ſays, of Mr. Thimbleby and Mr. Hitchcock, and by his Means he did get to be commended to be received into the Order of the Benedictines, and he was then ſent to Mr. Pickering in order to it; Now, my Lord, is it credible that Mr. Otes having no acquaintance with the Savoy before he had acquaintance with Mr. Hitchcock, which was was when he came from Spain, ſhould hear me ſay Maſs before he went thither?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. All this is but a Story to the Court.

L. C. J. What a wild Inference do you make from this unintelligible Buſineſs?

Marſhal. Mr. Otes ſays ſo himſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. We all know you ſaid Maſs ſo openly in the Savoy, that any People whatſoever might come, and you did not know who they were.

L. C. J. Though he was not one of your Order, yet he might know you.

Marſhal. To my knowledge there were never three Maſſes ſaid in the World at the Savoy.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. The World knows the contrary.

Marſhal. Let Mr. Otes be poſitive in any thing, and we will diſprove him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He hath gone as near it as is neceſſary; he tells you, after his Reconciliation, before he went over into Spain.

Marſhal. But I ſay, he could not be at the Savoy before he was acquainted there, and I can bring Witneſſes to prove, that I was not then at the Savoy; but I pray, My Lord, will theſe Witneſſes do me any good?

L. C. J. What will they prove?

Marſhal. That all the Summer, from the beginning of April to the end of the Summer, I was in the Country, threeſcore Miles from London.

Dr. Otes. I am not ſo poſitive in that, my Lord, but as near as I remember, before I went into Spain again. Your Lordſhips all know that I was not ſo poſitive as to any one time; but the Summer before the Plot broke out, I heard him ſay Maſs ſeveral times in the Summer.

L. C. J. Now he is poſitive that he ſaw you ſay Maſs in the Summer before the Plot was diſcovered. The Subſtance of his Depoſition was your ſaying Maſs, the time is not material: He tells of a many times within that Compaſs.

Marſhal. How ſhall I diſprove that?

Mr. Recorder. He hath given you one particular time from Aſh-wedneſday, when he was reconciled to Rome, till he went to Spain in April.

Marſhal. If he names times, then am I able to diſprove him: And he did name one, but when he ſaw me offer to prove by Witneſſes, that I was not then in Town, he goes off from it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. 'Tis impoſſible for Witneſſes to be poſitive to a Day, a Week, or ſuch a thing.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. How is it poſſible to be ſo, unleſs it be a thing that he had taken ſuch particular notice of, as to intend to ſwear to it, and give Evidence about it afterwards: Now, I believe Dr. Otes at that time had no thoughts of giving Evidence as to any ſuch matter; but this he is poſitive in, That he did hear you ſay Maſs at the Savoy.

Marſhal. My Lord, if Mr. Otes had ſaid he had ſeen me Officiate at Somerſet-houſe or Wild-houſe, it might have been ſomething like; but at the Savoy it is known, that none are let in but Friends, nor could Mr. Otes come in, but upon a particular Acquaintance.

L. C. J. How does that appear ſo?

Marſhal. By thoſe that live in the Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt not ſpend the Court's time in this manner of Diſcourſe: If you have any Witneſſes that you think in your ſelf are material, the Court will ſuffer you to call them, and pray call them preſently.

Marſhal. Here is the Houſe-keeper her ſelf that will witneſs that ſhe never ſaw Mr. Otes there.

L. C. J. If the Great Turk had come there with a pair of Beads and a Crucifix, you would have let him come in: But in the mean time, Mr. Otes, you have given him a pretty compaſs of time, whereby he hath an opportunity of diſproving what you ſay: And you give him one particular ſhort time; but can you give any time afterwards in the Summer you ſpeak of, within any month, or two, or three; becauſe you ſay at ſeveral times?

Dr. Otes. I cannot be poſitive, but I will tell you, one time was the Sunday before they held their Conſpiracy, which was, I verily believe, the Sunday before the 21*ſt* of Auguſt.

L. C. J. Do you believe it was in Auguſt?

Dr. Otes. Yes I do, and confine my ſelf to the Month of Auguſt.

Marſhal. Then call Ellen Rigby.

Dr. Otes. I was acquainted with Mr. Pickering ſoon after my being reconciled; and being acquainted with him, I went along with him ſeveral times to the Savoy.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What do you talk of one Hitchcock, and I know not whom; he was acquainted with Pickering before.

Marſhal, When, my Lord?

L. C. J. Preſently after he was reconciled.

Marſhal. Well, but you pretend now, that ſince you came over here you were in the Savoy; Had you a Key to get in?

L. C. J. He was reconciled on Aſh wedneſday, he went in April to Spain.

Marſhal. Here is Ellen Rigby.

L. C. J. Well, what would you have with her?

Marſhal. I ask, Did ſhe ever ſee Mr. Otes in the Summer before laſt?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Don't you lead your Witneſs with ſuch Queſtions.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Otes?

Rigby. I have ſeen him when I ſee him come to ask Charity of Mr. Pickering.

L. C. J. How often?

Rigby. Twice or thrice.

L. C. J. What time in the Summer?

Rigby. I cannot ſay; but I ſaw him in Summer was Twelvemonth.

Dr. Otes. Why then did not this Woman, when ſhe knew this Evidence that would lay a blemiſh upon me, come and give it for Pickering, to have ſaved him?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Will you give me leave to ask this Woman this Queſtion; Whether ſhe ever heard you ſay Maſs?

Marſhal. Ay, my Lord, with all my heart; and if ſhe ſays ſhe hath, I will be hang'd without any more ado.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Then you are ſure your Proſelytes will ſay any thing you would have them?

Marſhal. I my ſelf am a perfect Stranger to the Savoy, in a manner.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Is he not acquainted with the Savoy?

Rigby. Yes, he was there one month when Pickering was taken.

Marſhal. Pray ask her whether ever, before Mr. Otes went over, ſhe ſaw him in the Savoy.

L. C. J. You ſhall have your Queſtion ask'd; but do you think you can build upon that; if ſhe did not ſee him, he did not ſee you: Did you ever ſee Dr. Otes there betwixt March and April, before he went over into Spain?

Rigby. No, there was no body in the Houſe but Mr. Pickering.

L. C. J. Was there never Maſs ſaid in the Houſe?

Rigby. Yes, while her Majeſty's Servants were in the Houſe.

L. C. J. But was there Maſs never ſaid ſince in the Houſe?

Rigby. Never ſince I came out of it, which was a Twelvemonth ago.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Was there not Maſs ſaid in three or four Years time there?

Rigby. Not in our Houſe, I lived but in one Houſe.

Marſhal. I call her to know, whether Dr. Otes was there? And, my Lord, here is that which I inſiſt upon; That none is let in there to hear Maſs, but thoſe that have ſome particular Acquaintance and Intimacy in the Houſe.

L. C. J. She only ſpeaks to one particular part of the Houſe; ſhe can't ſay but Maſs was ſaid in the other parts.

Rigby. There was no Maſs ſaid there that I know of.

L. C. J. Why, was there no Maſs ſaid but in that particular Houſe you liv'd in?

Rigby. I can't ſay that.

L. C. J. But the Queſtion is, whether ever you, Mr. Otes, ſaw him ſay Maſs in this Woman's Houſe?

Dr. Otes. I do not know that I ever ſaw this Woman in all my Life, before the Tryal.

Marſhal. He came there under a diſguiſed Name.

L. C. J. He tells you he went along with Pickering.

Dr. Otes. Pickering ſerv'd the Maſs.

L. C. J. Well, call your Witneſſes, if you have any other.

Marſhal. I can prove that I was out of Town the whole Summer, from the beginning of April to the end of the Summer: But if Mr. Otes will not ſtand to any time, I cannot be able to diſprove him: But then I'll only offer one or two things more.

L. C. J. When did you come to London, in Auguſt?

Marſhal. I will tell you as near as I can to a day. I came in the middle of Bartholomew Fair, which begins the 24*th* of Auguſt.

L. C. J. So it was the latter end.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Well, if you have any Witneſſes, call them, and do not ſpend the Court's time in vain.

Marſhal. My Lord, I have ſomething very material, I think, to offer: The only material Witneſs that is now againſt me, was a Witneſs againſt me in my laſt Tryal: Now I do conceive, that I being found Not Guilty at the laſt Tryal, that Witneſs ought to be look'd upon as perjur'd: And I appeal to the Court, whether it were ſo or no.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. That's a falſe Collection, Mr. Marſhal.

L. C. J. 'Tis a ſtrange inference you make: Do you think that every Witneſs is perjur'd, becauſe the Jury don't find according to what he ſays? He is not perjur'd, for he may ſwear true, and the Jury not belive him.

Marſhal. I ground it, my Lord, upon what my Lord Jones ſaid to the Jury that ſat upon Coleman; who at their going out told them, Either they were to find him Guilty, or bring in two Men perjur'd. Thus it was his Opinion, that the finding of the Jury contrary to the Evidence, did make them perjur'd; and there was none of the Court did oppoſe him.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What then?

Marſhal. And if this were the Senſe of the whole Court, That a Man muſt either be found Guilty, or the Witneſſes perjur'd; that is my Caſe, and he is not to be believ'd.

L. C. J. See how unconſequently do you talk: The Court might ſay, that you muſt believe theſe Men perjur'd, if they ſwear a poſitive thing and you find it not; but if you make uſe of it thus, that therefore they are perjur'd, 'tis falſe, for they are not ſo till they be Convicted upon Record: And tho' the Jury don't believe them, yet they may ſwear true.

Marſhal. 'Tis true.

L. C. J. Then you make no inference from it.

Marſhal. My Lord, I am before the ſame Court that I was try'd by before, and before the ſelf ſame Judges, who know that upon my Tryal he was not believed, and therefore is perjured.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt conſider, that ſometimes the Jury will go againſt the direction of the Court; but if the Witneſs be not believed by them, that does not argue that he does not ſwear Truth, or is perjur'd: I tell you my Brother Jones might ſay, You muſt find this Man Guilty, or think theſe Men perjur'd: Many times a Judge will ſay ſo, but the Jury often find againſt the direction of the Court; ſhall theſe Men be perjur'd then preſently?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. There were two poſitive Witneſſes, as poſitive as could be in the World, and nothing at all to contradict them.

Mr. Recorder. Will you give the Jury leave to believe you, Mr. Marſhal? For you your ſelf ſaid you were a Prieſt.

Marſhal. Yes, if I ſaid ſo, I humbly deſire the Jury to take notice of it, that they are the ſelf-ſame Witneſſes that brought ſuch a poſitive Teſtimony the laſt time; which if the Jury had believed, they muſt of neceſſity have brought me in Guilty: I would not ſpend the time of the Court, but I would obſerve this; it was all ſworn poſitively, That I did conſent to the King's Death, and other things.

L. C. J. You had the better luck.

Marſhal. Then they are not to be believed now.

L. C. J. This is to no purpoſe, neither is it to be ſuffer'd: For you break in contrary to all the Laws of Practice, if we ſuffer this as an Argument, That becauſe an Evidence was not believed in one Caſe, therefore he is perjur'd: And the Jury gave in a Verdict contrary to the Witneſſes, that therefore he is perjur'd in another Caſe.

Marſhal. This does invalidate the Teſtimony ſure of ſuch a Witneſs.

L. C. J. You have ſaid it often enough, come pray conclude.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. No, Mr. Marſhal, you muſt not be ſuffer'd in theſe Harangues to impeach the Witneſſes; if you have any thing material againſt Dr. Otes, or if you can ſhew any Record of his Conviction of Perjury, it may be ſomething.

Marſhal.

Marſhal. My Lord, it is for my Life, and 'tis the ſecond time that I plead for my Life, much beyond my expectation; and therefore I hope I may have the freedom to ſpeak: And though I confeſs this Jury is not obliged to proceed according to the Verdict of the former Jury; yet this Jury, as well as that, is obliged to proceed according to the appearance of Truth: And his being found falſe in his Teſtimony the laſt time, ſhould make him of no Credit here.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It is not ſo, they are not to take notice of it, unleſs you bring them a Record of Conviction.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He gave a good Evidence then no doubt of it, though they would not believe it.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. Upon what Grounds that Jury went, is unknown to us.

Marſhal. Then, my Lord, another thing is this: The Law does except againſt all Witneſſes who are ſtrongly or rationally ſuppoſed to have a Spight or Malice againſt the Priſoner, much more where there is a manifeſt Sign that he hath a Malice. Now I will endeavour to ſhew how it comes to my Caſe: Mr. Otes accuſed me laſt time of Treaſon, and that in the higheſt nature; if this had been true, he had ſhewn himſelf a good Subject, and me Diſloyal: And the Jury not believing him, I was found the good Subject: Now he purſues his malice.

L. C. J. You ſhall not go on in this manner, and make ſuch notorious falſe inferences; that becauſe it was not found according to his Teſtimony, therefore he is perjur'd: The Jury did not believe it, might not he ſpeak true for all that? Hath not many a Witneſs ſworn true, yet the Verdict gone againſt their Evidence? And therefore you don't mind: Ye are all giddy-headed, if you once get a thing into your Heads, you can't get it out again.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. If the Jury did not believe it, a great many others did.

L. C. J. All you build upon is but a falſe Concluſion; becauſe the Jury found you Not Guilty, therefore they found him perjur'd.

Marſhal. My Lord———

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Pray Sir, if you will ſpeak any thing that is material and modeſt, the Court will admit of it; but if you only go to throw dirt upon the King's Witneſſes, Men of good Reputation, and Men that have ſhew'd themſelves honeſt, and that have ſpoke Truth all along; ne'er a one of their Teſtimonies but what is confirm'd by another's; ſo that not one of them ſtands ſingle, and for you to ſay they are ill Men.

Marſhal. My Lord, I do not ſay they are ill Men, I ſpeak of Matter of Fact.

L. C. J. You conclude falſly; and if you did but mind it, you would never repeat it over and over again: That becauſe the Jury did not believe his Evidence, therefore he is perjur'd: Do you ſuppoſe then that any other Jury ſhould never believe him?

Marſhal. My Lord, I reckon his Evidence is not ſo good; and if I am found Not Guilty, there muſt be malice in him to accuſe me.

L. C. J. Look you Gentlemen, The ſingle Queſtion is, Whether he be a Romiſh Prieſt or no? It is proved by Mr. Otes, that he hath ſeveral times heard him ſay Maſs, that he hath ſeen him deliver the Sacrament, and ſeen him conſecrate the Hoſt. He inſiſted upon it how often, Mr. Otes ſays, ten or a dozen times, in what time he cannot charge himſelf particularly with a month or two; but at laſt he did tell him poſitively, becauſe Marſhal ſaid, how is it poſſible I can make my Defence to generals, unleſs you fix ſome time? Therefore ſays he, I was reconciled to the Church of Rome on Aſh-wedneſday, and afterwards between that and April, when I went into Spain, I heard him ſay Maſs, that was once; but I heard him ſay in the Summer ſeveral times: Being asked what part; he ſays, I cannot ſay exactly, but I think in the month of Auguſt; if he had ſaid any thing as to the particular time between Aſh-Wedneſday and his going in to Spain, it had been ſomething, but againſt that he makes no pretence, as to his ſaying Maſs in the Savoy, that can contradict it. If he can ſtill he ſhall call his Witneſſes that can prove he did not ſay Maſs between the Aſh-wedneſday and the April he went into Spain: He does indeed ſay, that he was a great part of the Summer in the Countrey, in June and July to Bartholomew Fair, threeſcore miles off; but to that Mr. Otes ſays it was ſome time in Auguſt, and ſo he might be in the Countrey till then, and yet ſay Maſs after; he might come to Town the 26*th*, or 27*th*, or 28*th*, and he might be here in Auguſt: So you hear no Evidence that contradicts, ſuppoſing it proved true, what he imagines his Witneſſes can ſay; the laſt time that he charges him to have ſaid it in the Summer, may be true according to his own Word and Confeſſion when he came to Town. Then there is Mr. Bedloe, he only tells you he ſaw him in a Prieſt's Habit, but he did not ſee him execute the Office of a Prieſt, but he looked upon him as a Prieſt, called him Father: and that is all that he charges him with; that is concurring Evidence, and backs Mr. Otes, but alone perhaps it would be very weak. But they ſet up here Prance, and he ſays directly, that at the Tryal he did confeſs himſelf to be a Prieſt; and he ſeems to deny it, and would appeal to the Court; but his appealing to the Court would not help him in that Caſe. So I leave this to you upon this Evidence; if you believe Mr. Otes, that ſwears he ſaw him before he went into Spain, and after ſay Maſs, with the concurring Evidence of Mr. Bedloe, that ſaw him in his Habit, and with the ſubſequent Evidence of thoſe two more that do ſwear that he did ſay ſo, you muſt find him Guilty; and a Man's own Confeſſion is Evidence againſt himſelf; and if Mr. Marſhal will recollect himſelf, he would not be too poſitive in that Point. If all theſe Particulars ſatisfie your Conſcience, I ſay, that he is a Romiſh Prieſt, you muſt find him Guilty, if you are unſatisfied, you muſt acquit him.

Cl. of Cr. Set William Ruſſel to the Bar. William Ruſſel, alias Napper, hold up thy Hand: You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Cauſe, &c.

Mr. Belwood. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, William Ruſſel, alias Napper, ſtands indicted for High Treaſon: The Offence charged in the Indictment is, That being born within the Kingdom of England, and having received Orders from the See of Rome, he did come and abide here. To this he hath pleaded, Not Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Swear Dr. Otes, and Mr. Prance. Dr. Otes, Will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of Mr. Ruſſel's being a Prieſt?

Dr. Otes.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, this Ruſſel went by the Name of Napper, and is a Franciſcan Fryar, and I heard him ſay Maſs ſeveral times at Wild houſe.

L. C. J. What in his Habit?

Dr. Otes. In Prieſt's Habit.

L. C. J. When was this?

Dr. Otes. The laſt Summer before the Plot; I have heard him twenty times ſing Maſs.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did you ever ſee him give the Sacrament?

Ruſſel. Where pray was this?

Dr. Otes. At Wild-houſe.

Ruſſel. What is his Name?

L. C. J. Otes.

Ruſſel. I do not know him I ſay, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did he do it publickly?

Dr. Otes. Yes, in the Chapel.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did he give the Sacrament?

Dr. Otes. I did receive the Sacrament from him.

Ruſſel. Why, firſt of all, I ſay I do not know him.

L. C. J. It may be ſo, more know Jack Pudding, than Jack Pudding knows.

Ruſſel. Well then if one Witneſs muſt ſtand, I have no more to ſay.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Ruſſel. He ſays he heard me a month ago.

L. C. J. No it was laſt Summer was twelvemonth.

Ruſſel. Then he muſt prove it.

Capt. Richardſon. He does prove it, he ſwears it.

Ruſſel. Well, I can make it appear, laſt Summer was twelvemonth I was in the Countrey.

Dr. Otes. And I heard him ſay Maſs, Novemb. 1677. he was then one of the Chaplains of Wild-houſe.

Ruſſel. Give me leave to recollect my Memory.

Mr. Belwood. Set up Mr. Prance. You hear the Queſtion: Sir, Is the Priſoner at the Bar a Prieſt?

Mr. Prance. Yes, I have heard him ſay Maſs twenty times in his Habit.

L. C. J. Did he give the Sacrament?

Mr. Prance. Yes, I ſaw him give the Sacrament to ſeveral, and he did hear Confeſſions; he had a great many People about him.

Ruſſel. When was this?

Mr. Prance. Two or three Years ago.

Ruſſel. Where?

Mr. Prance. At the Spaniſh Ambaſſador's, at Wild-houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, here is Sir William Waller, that took him, with his Veſtments and all his Trinkets. [Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. Come, what ſay you, Sir William?

Sir W. Waller. That morning I took him, as ſoon as I came into the Room, I asked him his Name: He told me his Name was Ruſſel: I asked him, if he ever went by any other Name? He deny'd it for ſome time, but looking amongſt ſome of his Papers, I found ſome Letters directed to him by the Name of Napper; and then he did confeſs his Name was William Ruſſel Napper. Searching among his Cloaths, I found ſome Religious Habits; I asked him, if they were his, and he confeſſed and owned 'em to be his.

Ruſſel. It was in my Cuſtody; it was none of mine.

L. C. J. Why did you ſay ſo then?

Ruſſel. I kept it for another.

L. C. J. But you told him it was your own, What ſay you to that?

Ruſſel. I do not remember that.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, he ſwears it.

L. C. J. Here are two poſitive Witneſſes againſt you, what ſay you to it? What ſay you to his ſaying, He hath heard you ſay Maſs twenty times?

L. C. Baron. What ſay you to the ſaying Maſs at the time Dr. Otes ſpeaks of?

Ruſſel. I believe he is miſtaken, as to the Time and Year: I was entred into the Houſe in—78.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Then you think it was at another time?

Ruſſel. He could not hear me at that time, for I was then in the Countrey.

L. C. J. Have you any thing to ſay? It ſhall be allow'd you, it was at another time, but it ſeems it is true. Look you Gentlemen, you have a very plain Buſineſs of it; here are two Witneſſes that ſwear they ſaw him give Abſolution, deliver the Sacrament, and heard him ſay Maſs, and one ſays twenty times: And Sir W. Waller, who ſays, that he confeſt the Prieſt's Habit to be his own.

Ruſſel. Conſider my Circumſtances, and give me a little time; I have not had any time to get my Friends near me, or to prepare my ſelf.

L. C. J. I do not ſee any Good Time would do you: I think the beſt uſe you can make of your time, is to repent.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, the Court here is peſter'd with Papiſts; here are a great many about here.

L. C. J. If they be Witneſſes, we can't keep them out.

Mr. Bedloe. Some of them may be Witneſſes, but all are not; and if they be, they come to catch Advantages.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. I don't underſtand why they ſhould be turn'd out.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Let them alone: Be at quiet.

L. C. J. No, no, they will revile us, that they had not an open and a fair Hearing; we won't have it ſaid, that we do any thing in Huggermugger; what we do is done openly and honeſtly.

Cl. of Cr. Set Charles Parris, alias Parry, to the Bar. Hold up thy Hand: You that are ſworn, &c.

Mr. Belwood. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Offence for which the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, is High-Treaſon, the ſame Offence for which the reſt have been indicted———

L. C. J. Then call your Witneſſes.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Dr. Otes and Mr. Prance.

[Who were ſworn.]

L. C. J. What can you ſay againſt the Priſoner, as to his being a Prieſt?

Dr. Otes My Lord, he is a reputed Prieſt, and hath ſaid Maſs ſeveral times: I have heard him ſay Maſs at Wild houſe, not in the publick Chapel, but in another Room.

L. C. J. Where do you ſay?

Dr. Otes. Once at Wild houſe.

L. C. J. Where elſe?

Dr. Otes. At Mr. Paſton's.

L. C. J. When was this, Winter or Summer?

Dr. Otes. Within the compaſs of a Year reckoning —77 and —78; it was on a Saturday one time, time, and twice at Mr. Paſton's, and once or twice, I can't tell which, at the other Place.

L. C. J. And in the Prieſt's Habit?

Dr. Otes. Yes, in the Prieſt's Habit.

L. C. J. And did you ſee him Conſecrate the Hoſt?

Dr. Otes. Yes.

L. C. J. And give the Sacrament?

Dr. Otes. Yes.

Parry. My Lord, as to that he ſpeaks of,—77, or —78, what month of —78 I deſire to know?

Dr. Otes. I cannot confine my ſelf to a month; I knew him to be a Prieſt, but I was little acquainted with him, but he was a reputed Prieſt.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But you are ſure this is the Man?

Dr. Otes. Yes, this is the Man.

Parry. Am I the Man? What is my Name?

Dr. Otes. You went by the Name of Johnſon?

L. C. J. Did you never go by that Name of Johnſon?

Parry. No, my Lord, but by this Name of Parry; Parry is my Name, and by that Name I went, and never by any other Name than Parry, whatever he ſays.

L. C. J. Why by that ſame Name you are Indicted, and you are the Man that he ſaw.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Will you ask him ever a Queſtion?

Parry. I have ask'd him already what I would ask him.

Sir John Keiling. Then ſet up Mr. Prance.

L. C. J. What do you ſay as to Mr. Parry?

Mr. Prance. I know he is a Prieſt, and have heard him ſay Maſs at the Venetian Ambaſſador's and at Mr. Paſton's, and he went by the Name of Johnſon.

Mr. Recorder. Did you go by that Name.

Parry. No, I never went in my life but by my own Name Parry; that is my Name, whatever he ſays, and I am not aſham'd of it.

L. C. J. How often?

Mr. Prance. Once at Paſton's, and two or three times at the Venetian Ambaſſador's.

L. C. J. And you ſaw him give the Sacrament?

Mr. Prance. Yes.

L. C. J. In his Habit.

Mr. Prance. Yes.

Parry. At what time?

Mr. Prance. I believe it might be half a Year before the Plot: And I know you by another Circumſtance: You brought a Chalice to my Houſe, and it was whole, and you broke it, and told me, I muſt not touch it till it was broke, and ſo you defaced it.

L. C. J. That was an holy Veſſel, was it not?

Mr. Prance. Yes; and he told me I muſt not touch it till it was broken in pieces.

L. C. J. If you had not been a Prieſt, he had been as holy as you, and he might have touch'd it as well as you.

L. C. Baron. His breaking was to deſecrate it.

Mr. Prance. He bought ſome Oil-Boxes of me about that time.

Parry. I do not know this man.

Mr. Prance. You were ſeveral times with me.

L. C. J. Why, have you forgot the Chalice you brought to his Houſe?

Parry. I have no reaſon to forget my ſelf, for I never did any ſuch thing, for I never bought, or ſold to him any Chalice, or any ſuch thing; and beſide, ſuppoſe I had, that doth not argue that I am a Prieſt.

L. C. J. No, but if he were ſo holy as to touch the Chalice, he would be a Prieſt. But there is no great ſtreſs laid upon that, but to ſhew you that he knows you, he did not miſtake the man. The Streſs of the Evidence lies, that he heard you ſay Maſs at the Venetian Ambaſſador's, and at Paſton's, and then Dr. Otes ſpeaks of Wild-houſe.

Parry. I was never in my Life at the Venetian Ambaſſador's, nor at Mr. Paſton's, nor at Wild-houſe.

L. C. J. Can you ſwear that he is the man?

Mr. Bedloe. No.

L. C. J. Then ſet him aſide.

Mr. Bedloe. I had Order to ſend for two Witneſſes out of Monmouthſhire——

L. C. J. Here is Proof enough.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Parry. I have this to ſay, and can ſhew it evidently, that is, I have Witneſſes to prove, that I never was at Wild-houſe to Officiate in the Years 77 and 78 before the Plot: And for theſe ſix or ſeven months that Mr. Prance does alledge I was in London, I was in the Countrey.

L. C. J. When?

Parry. Six or ſeven months before the Plot.

L. C. J. He did not confine himſelf preciſely to any ſix or ſeven months.

Parry. My Lord, I deſired him to fix upon a month.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He cannot do it.

L. C. J. If he can, let him; we will ask him the Queſtion; When was it that you ſaw him do thus?

Mr. Prance. My Lord, I am not certain what time it was, but about two, or two Years and an half ago, I am not certain, 'tis impoſſible for me to remember it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt take him in what he ſays; this he is ſure of, he did hear you ſay Maſs and give the Sacrament, but as to the time, he believes it to be about this time, but he is not poſitive, nor can be in it.

Parry. He only believes it now, becauſe he knows I have Witneſſes for that time: He hath ſworn it poſitively, it was ſix or ſeven months before the Plot, and I have Witneſſes to produce, can prove how long before the Plot I was in the Countrey.

L. C. J. Call your Witneſſes.

Parry. Call Lanſcroon and Jacob.

L. C. J. How long was it before the Plot, as near as you can tell the time, Mr. Otes?

Dr. Otes. I have heard ſo many Prieſts, that I cannot poſſibly give an account of the day.

Parry. I deſire to know of Mr. Otes, who was Ambaſſador at Wild-houſe at that time when he ſays he heard me?

Mr. Recorder. Were you never at Paſton's?

Parry. No.

Mr. Recorder. Nor at the Venetian Reſident's?

Parry. No.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Parry was not, but Mr. Johnſon was.

Parry. I know not Mr. Johnſon, my Name is Parry; I hope it is not juſt I ſhould be hang'd for another Perſon.

Mr. Recorder. I mean Mr. Johnſon, alias Parry.

L. C. J. Mr. Prance, you are ſure that is the man?

Mr. Prance. Yes, and I heard him confeſs himſelf to be a Prieſt.

Parry. 'Tis falſe.

L. C.

L. C. Baron. And this is the man that brought the Chalice to you.

L. C. J. Why did you never go with a Chalice to this Man, and break it?

Parry. My Lord, I never bought any thing of him, nor ſold any thing to him, nor had any Converſe with him.

Sir John Keiling. I do never wonder at their denying any thing, I would feign know whether he would not deny the Sun ſhines now or no?

Parry. And then for the private Room, what Room of the Houſe was it?

Prance. I took him up in the middle of Cheapſide, and therefore I muſt ſure know him.

Parry. He did not know me, but only took me on Suſpicion at random, becauſe I was in the Company of a Roman Catholick.

Then the Witneſs Lanſcroon ſtood up.

L. C. J. What would you have this Man asked?

Parry. About the Year 77 and 78, wherein Mr. Otes alledges he heard me, let them anſwer to that, how long I was at Windſor? And whether I did not dwell conſtantly there?

L. C. J. Well, you hear the Queſtion. How long was he at Windſor?

Lanſcroon. From what time do you ask?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Nay, you muſt not be lead into an Anſwer. How long was he at Windſor?

Lanſcroon. From Chriſtmas 77, to Alhallantide 78.

Mr. Juſt. Ellys. And was he never at London all that time?

Lanſcroon. No.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. How can you tell that?

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. Was he always in your ſight all the time?

Lanſcroon. Yes, he was there always.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. Were you there always your ſelf?

Lanſcroon. Yes.

L. C. J. What are you?

Lanſcroon. A Painter.

L. C. J. And was you and he always together at that time?

Lanſcroon. Yes.

L. C. J. What in a Room?

Lanſcroon. Yes.

L. C. J. Can you affirm, that for a Twelvemonth together, you ſaw him every day?

Lanſcroon. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. How many years ago do you ſpeak of?

Lanſcroon. From 77 to 78.

Mr. Recorder. I don't ask you that, but how many years ago 'tis?

L. C. J. When came he down to Windſor?

Lanſcroon. Chriſtmas (77.)

L. C. J. The Teſtimony of Mr. Otes goes to November, and he ſpeaks of Chriſtmas following.

Mr. Recorder. How many Years ago was it, I ask?

Lanſcroon. A Year ago laſt Chriſtmas.

Mr. Recorder. That is 78 and 79.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Your Witneſs is underſtood, Mr. Parry.

Then ſtood up the other Witneſs Jacob.

L. C. J. What ſay you about Mr. Parry's being at Windſor?

Jacob. He was a Gentleman that came along with me in the Coach to Windſor.

L. C. J. When?

Jacob. Before Chriſtmas (77.)

L. C. J. How long before?

Jacob. Ten days. He came there to take Air for his Health, he was not well.

L. C. J. How long ſtaid he there?

Jacob. He ſtaid at Windſor 'till Alhallantide after, he ſtaid there a Year.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him there every Day of that Year?

Jacob. Yes.

L. C. J. Why, what reaſon had you to ſee him every Day?

Jacob. He dined every day at our Houſe.

L. C. J. Your Houſe? What Houſe?

Jacob. The Painter's.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. However, that is but from Chriſtmas, and he ſpeaks of November before.

L. C. J. Did he dine there all that time?

Jacob. Yes.

L. C. J. Did he dine there every Friday conſtantly?

Jacob. Yes.

L. C. J. Did he never keep a Faſt in all that time?

Jacob. No.

L. C. J. Did he dine a Wedneſdays and Fridays?

Jacob. Yes.

L. C. J. There was one Good-Friday in that time.

Dr. Otes. Pray ask this Witneſs if he never heard him ſay Maſs?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Then he muſt be ſworn, and may be he will deny it.

L. C. J. Did he dine of Aſhwedneſday and Good-Friday?

Jacob. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. So, he ſays you eat of Good-Friday and Aſhwedneſday, the Pope ſhall know it.

Mr. Recorder. What ſay you? Did he eat Fleſh upon thoſe Days?

Jacob. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. You can tell what he did eat, can you?

Mr. Recorder. Did he eat Beef or Mutton?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Go, you talk like an idle Boy.

L. C. J. He tells you, that you eat meat too, that is more.

Parry. My Lord, we eat Fiſh, and ſuch things all Catholicks do.

Mr. Recorder. Ay, the Prieſts do, but their Pupils do not, they will not allow it to them.

L. C. J. Well, have you done, have you any more Witneſſes?

Parry. I would ask Mr. Otes, and deſire him to anſwer me to it, what did he depoſe againſt me before my Lord Shaftsbury, viz. That he heard me ſay Maſs in Wild Chapel, and there heard Mr. Collins's Confeſſion, and now he ſays, it was in a Private Room; now I have it to ſhew that I did not officiate there, nor frequent the Houſe.

L. C. J. Who is it that will prove that you did not come to the Houſe?

Parry. The Ambaſſador's Servants.

L. C. J. I do not underſtand what you mean.

Parry. I am to ask of Mr. Otes, and I deſire he ſhould anſwer to it, What he did depoſe before my Lord Shaftsbury and the Committee of Lords, touching Mr. Collins?

L. C. J. He cannot remember it may be.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt not ask ſuch Queſtions as theſe are, it does not refer to this matter.

Parry.

Parry. He did give in that I heard Mr. Collin's Confeſſion, I ask why he does not give it in now?

L. C. J. That is a foreign matter, what have we to do with it now?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. If you will prove any thing againſt him, you may, but you may not ask ſuch Queſtions as that.

Parry. I have proved that I was in 1677. and 1678. in the Countrey.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. They tell us of ten Days before Chriſtmas, and Mr. Otes ſpeaks of November.

L. C. J. Look you Gentlemen of the Jury, here are two Witneſſes againſt him, Mr. Otes and Mr. Prance.

Parry. My Lord, I have one thing I deſire to be taken notice of, that is, this Letter of the Ambaſſador's, who upon the Examination of all his Family does teſtifie and declare, that I did never officiate in any reſpect in his Family.

L. C. J. It cannot be read.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. It is not any Evidence.

Parry. How ſhall I clear my ſelf, if the Teſtimony of the Ambaſſador and his whole Family be not admitted?

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. 'Tis a hard thing for you to clear your ſelf.

L. C. J. Why don't you bring them hither as your Witneſſes?

Mr. Recorder. Where is my Lord Ambaſſador, why does not he come hither?

Parry. He hath left the Kingdom.

Mr. Recorder. Then you may boldly ſay any thing of him, and we cannot diſprove you.

L. C. J. Is all his Family gone with him?

Parry. There is but one remaining, I think he is here.

L. C. J. Call him.

Parry. Monſieur Rivier. (Who appeared and ſtood up.)

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Parry. Do you know this Hand, Sir?

L. C. J. It muſt not be read if he do.

Parry. He is one of the Servants to my Lord Egmond, and he lived in the Houſe, and he knows that by his Maſter's Order all his Domeſticks were examined, and all proteſted they neither knew nor ſaw me ever in Wild-houſe; all which I have under his Hand and Seal to ſhew.

L. C. J. It ſignifies nothing.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ask him any Queſtion, but don't tell him what he knows.

L. C. J. Why don't you ask him ſome Queſtions? Why, you have not Catechiſms in your Church, you don't know how to ask Queſtions.

Parry. Ask him whether he ever heard me ſay Maſs at my Lord Ambaſſador's Houſe?

L. C. J. It's to no purpoſe if he did not, here are ſome have.

Parry. Then my Lord, he knows that there was a ſtrict Examination at Wild-houſe by my Lord's Orders, whether I did frequent the Houſe, and it was reported by them all I did not, and they muſt know if ever I did officiate there, for there is none admitted to ſay Maſs there, but by Order.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Look you, Sir, do you know that Mr. Parry ever ſaid Maſs at Wild-houſe?

Rivier. No, my Lord, I do not know it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. It was in a private Room, Dr. Otes ſays.

Rivier. I never ſaw him there.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. If you ask an hundred here, they would ſay the ſame thing.

L. C. J. Come, when matters are plain 'tis in vain to contend; here is the Buſineſs, Gentlemen, here are Mr. Otes and Mr. Prance, two Witneſſes againſt Mr. Parry; Mr. Otes ſays, he hath heard him ſay Maſs one time at one place, and twice or thrice at another. Mr. Prance hath heard him often, and Mr. Prance does tell you plainly, that he cannot err, that he is not miſtaken in the Man, for he came to his Houſe with a Chalice, and broke it there, and he knew him ſo well, that meeting him by chance, he took him up in the Streets; ſo if you believe them, they ſwear it poſitively, and you muſt find it ſo.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice went away.

Cl. of Cr. Set Henry Starkey to the Bar. Hold up thy Hand, &c.

Mr. Belwood. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury. Henry Starkey ſtands indicted for the like Offence with the other Priſoners; that he having received Orders from the See of Rome, came into England, and this is High Treaſon; to this he hath pleaded not Guilty, we will prove it upon him. Swear Dr. Otes and Mr. Prance. (Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Strode. Pray Sir will you tell my Lord, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, what you do know of this Starkey's being a Prieſt?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, Mr. Starkey is a Prieſt, and I once heard him ſay Maſs at Mr. Paſton's.

L. C. Baron. When was that? How long was it ago?

Dr. Otes. It is about three Years ago.

L. C. Baron. Did he give the Sacrament then, or at any other time?

Dr. Otes. None received but himſelf.

Mr. Belwood. Was he in Prieſt's Habit?

Dr. Otes. Yes.

L. C. Bar. Did he receive the Sacrament, and conſecrate the Hoſt?

Dr. Otes. Yes, in both Kinds.

L. C. Baron. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Starkey. He tells me of Prieſts Habits; what are they, Sir?

L. C. Bar. What Habit had he on?

Dr. Otes. A thing about his Neck, and a Surplice, and a thing about his Arm; he had a Surplice girt about him.

Starkey. I know you not; and I perceive you neither know what a Prieſt's Habit is, nor the Difference between his Habit and his Ornaments. A Prieſt's Habit is a Caſſock down to the Ground, and a ſide Cloak; the Ornaments of a Prieſt are not a Surplice, (as Otes ſays) but an Albe that falls to the Ground, and other things beſides that.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You are well skill'd in it I ſee.

Starkey. And how did you know that I ſaid Maſs? Did you know that I took Orders? For if I took no Orders, it was no Maſs; for it is the Prieſt makes the Maſs, and not the Maſs the Prieſt, and then if I were no Prieſt, it could be no Maſs.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. That is a pretty Argument indeed: Do any but Prieſts ſay Maſs?

Starkey. I can bring an inſtance of a Gentleman in this Town, a private Lay-man, who ſaid Maſs about this Town, and he was a Proteſtant, and at laſt he ſtole the Chalice, (his Name was Gardener.)

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He did well, did he not? Is that your Uſe?

Starkey. Yes, with ſuch Prieſts as he.

L. C. Baron. 'Tis a great Evidence this arguing of yours, if he did not ſwear it, that you are a Prieſt.

Starkey. I wonder that this Gentleman ſhould ſo well remember me, I don't know him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Do you think you know every one that hath ſeen you at Maſs?

Sir John Keiling. Set up Mr. Prance. What ſay you, Sir, to this?

Mr. Prance. My Lord, I heard him ſay Maſs at my Lady Somerſet's in Lincolns Inn-Fields, and at Mr. Duncomb's, that taught School in Prince's ſtreet.

Starkey. As I hope for Mercy from Almighty God, I was never there in all my Life (except Pantly) her Houſe in Glouceſterſhire.

Mr. Prance. Did you know one Mr. Duncomb that is dead?

Stark. Yes.

Mr. Prance. Well, I heard you ſay Maſs at his Houſe.

Starkey. My Lord, I was never at Mr. Duncomb's in my Life, but at 3 or 4 a-Clock in the Afternoon, and if I ſaid Maſs there, it was over a Pot of Ale.

Mr. Prance. I have heard him ſay he ſaid Maſs in the King's Army.

Starkey. I know neither of theſe two Fellows.

Mr. Recorder. Come, I would fain ſee whether you Prieſts and Jeſuits can ſpeak one word of Truth or no: Come, Mr. Starkey, did you ever ſay Maſs in the Army?

Starkey. I never did: But pray give me leave to ſpeak; I appeared for the King, when he had not above 500 Men in Appearance for him; I am but a younger Brother, (ſecond Brother to John Starkey of Darley in the County of Cheſter, Eſq;) and yet with an Annuity of Seven-ſcore Pounds a Year, which I bought, and other Moneys which I had, I ſpent above 4000 l. in the King's Service, (which I bled for before I had it) for I got it in another Monarch's Service; I loſt my Leg for him by a Cannon-ſhot, and ſo ſpent my Eſtate to that degree, that that day when I received my Sentence of Baniſhment, I had but three half Crowns in the World, which were given me that ſame Morning by two Friends.

L. C. Baron. Mr. Starkey, you may urge this to the King, for his Mercy and Clemency, 'tis nothing to the Point here before the Jury to be try'd. Whatſoever you have merited by your Services, you muſt apply your ſelf to the King for his Mercy, it is nothing here.

Starkey. Pray my Lord, give me leave to add ſomething more: I was baniſh'd for 14 Years into France, becauſe I refuſed to take an Engagement never to bear Arms again for the King: I did diſcover to this King a Plot deſign'd againſt his Life, State, and Government, I ſuffer to this Day for it; and I delivered (into his own Hand) 11 Articles of High Treaſon againſt the Plotters and their Abettors.

L. C. Baron. You may be a Prieſt for all that.

Starkey. But, my Lord, by the Civil Law it is a Concluſion, that although a Man be a Traitor, and in the ſame Plot, he is to be indemnified for diſcovering the Conſpiracy againſt his Prince; much more for diſcovering another, that I was not a Party in.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. We have nothing to do with that here, but whether you are a Prieſt or not.

Starkey. That I muſt leave to the Proof.

L. C. Baron. Well then, I'll tell you, Gentlemen, this Perſon is indicted for being a Prieſt and coming into England. For the Point of his being a Prieſt you have heard two Witneſſes depoſe; and they both tell you, that they have heard him ſay Maſs, as great an Evidence of it as can be, for none ſay Maſs but Prieſts. Dr. Otes tells you at Mr. Paſton's. Mr. Prance ſays at Mr. Paſton's, at my Lady Somerſet's, and one Mr. Duncomb's. If you believe this, you muſt find him guilty.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. And they ſpeak too, to his receiving the Sacraments in both Kinds.

Starkey. If I was there, ſure there was ſome body elſe beſides my ſelf, I did not ſay Maſs alone; produce but one Witneſs for you, then I'll ſubmit.

Cl. of Cr. Set Alexander Lumſden to the Bar. Hold up thy Hand, &c. Your Charge is, to enquire of him as of your firſt Priſoner, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Belwood. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Alexander Lumſden the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted for High Treaſon, for that he being a Prieſt, and receiving Orders from Rome, did come here into England, and abide contrary to the Statute.

Sir John Keiling. Swear Dr. Otes, Mr. Dugdale, and Mr. Prance. [Which was done.

L. C. Baron. Come Dr. Otes, What ſay you to this Man?

Dr. Otes. I heard him ſay Maſs, he is a Dominican Fryar, as I remember. I heard him ſay Maſs twenty times at Wild-houſe.

L. C. Baron. And Conſecrate the Hoſt?

Dr. Otes. Yes, and I receiv'd the Sacrament from him.

L. C. Baron. And ſee him take Confeſſion?

Dr. Otes. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Lumſden. What time was this, if it pleaſe you, Sir?

Dr. Otes. That Summer that was before the Plot broke out. Mr. Lumſden knows me well enough.

L. C. Baron. Do you know him?

Lumſden. Truly I do not know that ever I ſaw him, or converſed with him in my Life.

L. C. Baron. What ſay you, Mr. Dugdale?

Dugdale. My Lord, I was at White-hall that day Mr. Lumſden was taken; and by the Importunity of ſome Friends I did go to him, but I did not know him, but by diſcourſe he did confeſs himſelf a Prieſt; I asked if he was a Franciſcan, he ſaid he was a Dominican.

Dr. Otes. He is Procurator-General of the Kingdom of Scotland.

Mr. Recorder. They have ſuch a parcel of People, and ſuch Names for them.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Mr. Prance, what do you know of Lumſden's being a Prieſt?

Mr. Prance. I know he is a Prieſt, and have heard him ſay Maſs ſeveral times at Wild-houſe.

L. C. Baron. Was he there in the Habit?

Mr. Prance. Yes, and conſecrated the Hoſt.

L. C. Baron. How long ſince?

Mr. Prance. Two years ſince, I heard him twenty times.

L. C. Baron. Do you know what Countryman he is?

Mr. Prance. An Iriſhman I think.

Dr. Otes. No, He is a Scotchman, he will not deny it.

L. C. Baron. What Countryman are you?

Lumſden. A Scotchman.

L. C. Baron. Of what part of Scotland?

Lumſden. Aberdeen.

L. C. Baron. Were you born there?

Lumſden.

Lumſden. Yes.

L. C. Baron. You have no more to ſay, have you?

Lumſden. My Lord, I am not here, I think, to be my own Accuſer, I humbly conceive ſo, and whatſoever is againſt me muſt be proved, not ſimply aſſerted: They ought to give Proofs and Reaſons; but ſo it is, it is but a ſimple Aſſertion what they ſay; I deſire they may prove it.

L. C. Baron. No, they need not; it is ſufficient if they prove it by ſuch Circumſtances that the Jury are ſatisfied and convinced that it is true; but it is not to be looked for, that no Proof ſhould be given againſt the Prieſt, but by them that ſaw him receive Orders.

Mr. Juſt. Atkyns. 'Tis impoſſible almoſt to prove that.

L. C. Baron. But if they prove the Circumſtances, that you have executed the Office of a Prieſt by ſaying Maſs, which none does but a Prieſt, 'tis enough to guide them in their Verdict.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. And they have proved that which is next to a poſitive Aſſertion.

L. C. Baron. That need not be.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. But let us not leſſen our Proof neither.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt conſider that the Proof is certain; for they have ſworn an Aſſertive poſitive Thing, which thing is enough to a Jury to prove you a Prieſt, becauſe none others but Prieſts may do ſuch things in your Church as you have done: Therefore it is a good Argument and Evidence to conclude you a Prieſt, from this Evidence that hath been given.

Dr. Otes. I have heard him own himſelf a Prieſt twenty times.

Lumſden. The excrciſe of the Prieſtly Function is but a Penalty of 200 Marks.

L. C. Baron. Ay, that is, if the King will go no higher: But you are proſecuted upon another Law.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. 'Tis Evidence, and a great Evidence, that which hath been given; for we muſt go according to the nature of the thing: 'Tis impoſſible the Act of Parliament ſhould be put in execution, if they muſt prove they received Orders from the See of Rome: But when they have proved thoſe things done by any man, which none ought to do but a Prieſt, it hath been in all times allow'd to be a Special Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. 'Tis a plain and ſufficient Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. But if there were any need of it, and you would have any more, he hath confeſſed, upon the Queſtion asked him, Whether he was a Franciſcan; No, he was a Dominican.

L. C. Baron. Have you done? Then Gentlemen of the Jury, you muſt not at this time of the day be inſnared by that Argument, That there muſt be a poſitive Proof of this Reception of Orders from the Church of Rome, becauſe it hath been all along accounted, and is an undoubted Proof for your Satisfaction, if it appear he hath exerciſed the Offices of the Function; thoſe Offices that are not done but by Prieſts: Now this hath been proved by two Witneſſes, and by the Confeſſion of the Prieſt himſelf to Dr. Otes and Mr. Dugdale: So I muſt leave it upon the point of Fact to you, whether it be not ſufficient Proof. But this Caſe will differ from all the reſt, and the Court is very tender in the caſe of Life, that it ſhould be without all Queſtion what is determined; therefore as to your Enquiry for him, it muſt go only whether he be a Prieſt or no; for the others, you muſt conſider them as Engliſhmen, and enquire of them as ſuch: He is a Scotchman, as he ſays, and they ſay ſo too: Now then there are ſome Words in this Statute whereupon the Court hath conceived a Doubt, Whether his Caſe comes within them; which are the Words about the King's Dominions, which now are far more enlarged than were thoſe of the Queen when the Statute was made; if then you find him a Prieſt, you muſt find the other matter ſpecially.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. Look you, Gentlemen, we are to be of Counſel for the Priſoner; and it being matter of Law, we ſhall take time to adviſe upon it before we give our Opinions in it: but for the matter of Fact, I doubt not but you will find that he is a Prieſt; and then the other matters, that he was born at Aberdeen in Scotland, and the other matters you may find ſpecially, there needs no more.

Mr. Recorder. Swear an Officer to keep the Jury.

Who after the Receſs of a quarter of an Hour, return'd into the Court, and having anſwered to their Names, and appointed their Foreman to give in their Verdict, he delivered it thus:

Cl. of Cr. Lionel Anderſon, alias Munſon, hold up thy Hand; look upon the Priſoner, how ſay you, is he Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. James Corker, hold up thy Hand: How ſay you, is he guilty, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Is William Marſhal guilty, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl of Cr. Is William Ruſſel, alias Napper, guilty, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Is Charles Parry guilty, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Is Henry Starkey guilty, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Alexander Lumſden, hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Priſoner; How ſay you, is he Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. We find he is guilty of being a Prieſt, and born at Aberdeen in Scotland.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. Read the Notes to them.

Cl. of Cr. You find that Alexander Lumſden is a Scotchman, of 58 Years of Age, born at Aberdeen in the Kingdom of Scotland, being then under the Dominions of King Charles the Firſt, and now under the Dominions of our preſent Sovereign; and in the Reign of the ſaid King Charles the Firſt, and that at the time in the Indictment mentioned, he was a Prieſt in Holy Orders, by Authority derived from the See of Rome, prout in the Indictment: And that he came and was remaining in England, prout in the Indictment. But whether upon the whole matter he be Guilty of High Treaſon within this Law or not, you do not know, and crave the Opinion of the Court.

Foreman. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath Recorded it: You ſay, &c.

Mr. Recorder. Call for the Executioner.

Then the Judges went off from the Bench, and the Court proceeded to Judgment.

Cl. of Cr. Set Lionel Anderſon, alias Munſon, to the Bar: Lionel Anderſon, alias Munſon, thou ſtandeſt Convicted of High Treaſon; What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon thee to Die according to the Law?

Anderſon. I can ſay this, I would have gone out of England, but the King kept me here, telling me, I ſhould not go; and I had a Protection from the Council-board: The Biſhop of London, when I was taken firſt, ſent a Letter to Sir Clement Armiger, that neither I nor my Books ſhould be meddled with, that I had written for the King and the Government, for which he conceived I might be excommunicated at Rome, and that I was then under a ſpecial Protection of his Majeſty and Council; and when I was again taken and put in Cuſtody of the Horſe-Guard, the Duke of Monmouth ſent Sir Thomas Armſtrong to have me freed again: I begg'd of the King that I might go, ſaid I, I won't expoſe the King to the worſt of Rabbles; but he told me, I ſhould ſtay in England, and Mr. Peter Welſh and I had Orders from the Council, he one and I another, to ſtay.

Mr. Recorder. For that matter you may be aſſured, I promiſe it you faithfully and publickly, that I will acquaint the King with what you ſay.

Anderſon. I thank you, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. For this Court hath nothing to do with that, the King is the proper Judge of that matter, to determine his own pleaſure as he thinks fit: Tie him up.

Anderſon. Sir, I had no notice of my Tryal but this morning: I ſent to my Lord Bridgwater, to know when I ſhould be Try'd, he told me, I ſhould have Ten days notice of it; now I have Witneſſes to diſprove Mr. Prance's Teſtimony; for Mr. Otes, I own he hath heard me ſay Maſs; but for Mr. Bedloe's Teſtimony, as I hope to ſee the Face of Almighty God, I know him not: When I was taken, ſaid he to me, Mr. Anderſon, let me ſee your Protection, and I ſhewed it him; You have two Names, ſaid he, I do not know whether it be you or no. And then beſides, theſe are not legal Witneſſes.

Mr. Recorder. Nay, that muſt not be allow'd you to ſay: You have been fairly heard and try'd; they were upon their Oaths, and the Jury, twelve men upon their Oaths, without any Exception made to them, they have Convicted you; therefore this is to calumniate the Proceedings of the Court.

Anderſon. I tell you this more; they are not the King's Evidence properly; for they ſwear for themſelves upon the account of Benefit, if any Prieſt be Convicted, they are to have ſo much money.

Mr. Recorder. The Court heard the Evidence that was given, and if you will have it of the Court, the Court does really believe them, and ſo did the Jury too.

Anderſon. I am ſatisfied.

Mr. Recorder. Tie him up then.

Cl. of Cr. James Corker, hold up thy Hand: You ſtand Convicted of High Treaſon; What can you ſay for your ſelf, &c.

Corker. Nothing, but that I refer my ſelf to God my juſt Judge and Saviour.

Mr. Recorder. Tie him up.

Cl. of Cr. William Marſhal, hold up thy Hand: Thou art in the ſame Condition, what ſayſt thou for thy ſelf?

Marſhal. I have very little more to ſay than what I have ſaid already: I thought the Law had not allow'd any man to have been condemned upon the Teſtimony of one Witneſs, but required two: Now there was but one poſitive Witneſs againſt me, the reſt only ſaid, I had confeſſed my ſelf to be a Prieſt; two of them did ſwear, they heard me confeſs it at my other Tryal; if it had been at this Tryal it had been another thing, and there had been ſome validity in the Proof; but to ſay, they heard me confeſs it at another time, I humbly conceive, according to the Law, bears no force. I have this further to add, his Majeſty, ſome Years ago, put forth a Declaration under the Broad-Seal, for a Toleration of Religion, and Liberty of Conſcience, whereby the Roman Catholicks had the uſe of their Religion in their private Houſes. Now I have been informed, that according to Law, whatſoever is put forth under the Broad-Seal, muſt be recalled by ſomething under the Broad-Seal, or it remains in force: which was never done as to this Declaration, and then I lie under the Protection of that Declaration.

Mr. Recorder. As for the firſt part, 'tis plain, to the ſatisfaction of every body, that there hath been two ſufficient Witneſſes, upon whoſe Teſtimony you are Convicted: For whether you were asked the Queſtion or not, yet if you will ſay you are a Prieſt, that Confeſſion of yours is Evidence againſt you, tho' you might poſſibly ſay ſo without being asked the Queſtion.

Marſhal. Is it credible I ſhould do ſo?

Mr. Recorder. Yes, the Jury believed it ſo.

Dr. Otes. One of the Jury ſtood by and heard the Words.

Mr. Recorder. And now, becauſe I will put it out of all doubt, 'tis not the Buſineſs nor the Duty of the Court to give any Evidence of any Fact that they know of their own knowledge, unleſs they will be ſworn for that purpoſe: For tho' they do know it in their own private Conſciences to be true; yet they are obliged to conceal their own Knowledge, unleſs they will be ſworn as Witneſſes. But now you are Convicted, I muſt take the liberty to tell you, that at your laſt Tryal you did own your ſelf to be a Prieſt; and I muſt put you in mind further of ſomething which you may very well remember: When I detained you after your Acquittal, and re-committed you when Sir George Wakeman was diſcharged, I did then tell you, you have own'd your ſelves to be Prieſts, I was bound to take notice of that Confeſſion of yours, and therefore obliged to detain you: Such a Token as that is may perhaps bring it to your memory; but as it was hinted to you before, you are a voluminous Talker, and abundance of things may drop out of your mouth, that you don't conſider before they are paſt.

Marſhal. 'Tis for my Life, and therefore I may be permitted to ſpeak ſure.

Mr. Recorder. That is as to the firſt Point: And then as to the King's Declaration, which was the other matter you inſiſted upon, I preſume it does not ſtick with any body that knows the matter; but leſt it ſhould, I would ſay this to it: 'Tis very well known, in the firſt place (I do not go now to determine the Law upon it, becauſe becauſe you know what Opinions and Judgment it received afterwards) yet this I will adventure to ſay, That it was never the intention of that Declaration that ever Prieſts ſhould come and reſide here; but it was only intended for tender Conſciences, as the very Letter of the Declaration it ſelf does ſhew, not to countenance Prieſts and Jeſuits, that have caſt off all their Allegiance to the King, and endeavour both to deſtroy him and his Government.

Marſhal. Pray Sir, will you give me leave to ſpeak as to that: If ſo be the uſe of their Religion were permitted to Roman Catholicks, that Religion not being to be practiced without Prieſts, it is to be ſuppoſed, that the Prieſts are permitted.

Mr. Recorder. But if a Man were to argue with you now in your own way; Pray are there not Prieſts in England, beſides thoſe Prieſts that were born here? You know, of your own Acquaintance there are ſeveral Roman Catholick Prieſts, not Engliſhmen born, that are conſtantly here, who can perform the Offices.

Marſhal. Nay, I don't know that; but this I know, if they be not born in England, or have lived in England, ſo as to know the Tongue, Roman Catholicks will be little the better for 'em.

Mr. Recorder. Nay, I don't ſay much the better, but much the worſe for their coming at them: and in caſe they would only uſe the Engliſh Truth, I preſume they would not have ſo many Proſelytes, but you gull them with Stuff they underſtand not.

Marſhal. Pray Sir give me leave a little, I have one word more: For all matters of Treaſon, and treacherous Conſpiracy, I was freed before in this Court; now I would obſerve what the beſt Lawyers that ever were in England have obſerved for me; That there is no Crime in Prieſthood it ſelf: For my Lord Coke in his 5*th* Report, 39*th* Leaf, commenting largely upon the Statute of 27 Eliz. and inlarging upon the Senſe and Meaning of that Statute, and calling to mind who the Men were that were formerly executed by force of that Statute, and why, concludes thus: Hence it appears, that no Man yet hath or can be executed for his Function of Prieſthood, but becauſe there was annexed to the Prieſthood treacherous Deſigns and treacherous Attempts. And the ſame Lawyer in the 3*d* Inſtitutes, 22*d* Leaf, ſays, That in this Statute of 27 Eliz. 'twas very wiſely and juſtly done by the Statute-makers, to provide, that the Judges ſhould proceed in their Judgments upon that matter, only according to what is expreſſed and ſpecified in that Statute. And thoſe Words were a Sanctuary to the Judges, and put in to prevent the ſhedding of guiltleſs Blood. Now if ſo be that ſo great a Lawyer, in a Diſcourſe about Prieſthood and Treachery, does thence conclude, That Prieſthood as Prieſthood is no Crime, nor no Function belonging to it hath any Crime in it, well may I conclude ſo too: And indeed, if it had, then a great part of the World would be Traytors; nay, it would bring in Chriſt himſelf, who was a Prieſt, to be a Traytor too: Therefore Prieſthood as Prieſthood, hath no Treaſon eſſentially link'd to it. And when he ſays, that they muſt proceed according to what is ſpecified, he does in the forementioned place ſhew, that it was not ſpecified at all, that any that were Executed, were for Prieſthood Executed: And I am accuſed of nothing elſe in the World but bare Prieſthood as Prieſthood, without any Deſign or Treachery joyned to it: And if, according to Law, Prieſthood be not liable to Condemnation, then I am not to be Condemned.

Mr. Recorder. Now you have been heard.

Marſhal. Yes, Sir, and I thank you for it.

Mr. Recorder. This long Speech of yours will ſignifie but little, when you conſider the Act of Parliament upon which you are indicted: 'Tis true, ſet that Act of Parliament out of the Caſe, and then to be a Prieſt is not High Treaſon; nay, in caſe a Man be born out of the King's Dominions, and be a Prieſt, and remain here, that is not High Treaſon within this Statute, becauſe Prieſthood it ſelf does not make the Crime (God forbid any one ſhould affirm it) but when all that is granted, when an Act of Parliament hath taken particular notice of the great Miſchiefs and Inconveniences that have attended the Government, and the continual Danger that the Supreme Head hath been in, by having Perſons which were born within the King's Dominions (as you were) to wave their Allegiance, and to acknowledge a Supremacy in any Foreign Prince or Prelate, as you all do, when you take Orders from the See of Rome; the Wiſdom of the Nation hath thought reaſonable that ſuch ſhould be adjudged Traytors: And this Act of Parliament, upon which you ſtand Convicted, does plainly ſay, If any one born within the King's Dominions will take Orders from the See of Rome, and ſhall after reſide here, he is guilty of High Treaſon: And this is not only thought ſo by us that are here, but by all my Lords the Judges that were preſent at your Tryal; for God forbid we ſhould condemn you for any thing as High Treaſon, if you had not been within the compaſs of the Act of Parliament: And what is Treaſon, the Act of Parliament particularly deſcribes, which all hath been proved upon you; and becauſe you are pleaſed to ſpeak it to the Court, and lay it on the Conſciences of the Court, I diſcharge my Conſcience; the Jury having Convicted you for High Treaſon, I am very ready to paſs Judgment upon you according to the Law, and I will clear my Conſcience of that preſently. Tie him up.

Cl. of Cr. William Ruſſel, hold up thy Hand, Thou art in the ſame Caſe, what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf? &c.

Ruſſel. I can ſay this, my Lord, that in my Conſcience, I do not acknowledge my ſelf Guilty of what they accuſe me for, but I muſt ſubmit to the Laws as they are made; but I do proteſt before Almighty God, and this whole Court, that I am innocent of all that is laid upon me.

Mr. Recorder. Why, what were you never at Wild-houſe, and ſaid Maſs there? I would feign hear, whether you in the State and Condition you are in (though you Jeſuits have a thouſand Tricks and Evaſions) have Confidence enough to ſay you never were, nor ſaid Maſs there?

Ruſſel. I ought not to accuſe my ſelf.

Mr. Recorder. You are convicted. But every thing that you ſay is but an Evaſion, and a Trick to catch and inſnare the Ignorant, but People of any ſort of Senſe will not be gull'd ſo.

Ruſſel. For my Witneſſes, you are my Witneſs, I have but one Witneſs upon that Buſineſs.

Mr. Recorder. The Jury have believed them.

Ruſſel.

Ruſſel. 'Tis poſſible it may be ſo.

Mr. Recorder. Nay, 'tis beyond poſſible, 'tis true.

Ruſſel. The Witneſſes that have depoſed againſt me, for my part, I know them not.

Mr. Recorder. You have heard of Dr. Otes, Mr. Prance, and of Sir William Waller too. Tie him up.

Cl. of Cr. Charles Parris, alias Parry, hold up thy Hand. You are in the ſame Condition, what have you to ſay?

Parry. What have I to ſay for my ſelf? I have this to ſay, That thoſe that did depoſe againſt me, did not ſay one word of Truth as to their Allegations, I take God to Witneſs for it; I am a dying man, and thank moſt heartily the Court for what they are to pronounce againſt me, and I am as ready to ſuffer, as any man may be to have me to ſuffer, for it is God's Glory and his Cauſe. Then I inſiſted upon two Parts, and complained, Firſt, of Sir William Turner, that being brought before him by Mr. Prance, and ſhewing him my Protection under an Ambaſſador, and I profeſſing my ſelf a Frenchman, he ſlighted it, which I held to be a manifeſt Breach againſt the Laws of Nations. Secondly, I was wrong'd by Sir William Waller, when (in his Examination of me with Juſtice Warcup) in the Preſs-yard, Newgate, he threatned me with Irons, &c. if I did not take my Oath I was not born in France, and I refuſing, (which none could be compell'd to) for 'twas my Opponent's Part to prove the contrary; and who can prove me to be other than a Frenchman?

Mr. Recorder. No body can; we believe you to be an Engliſhman.

Parry. If I be a Frenchman, I am not ſubject to the penal Laws.

Mr. Recorder. Why, no body does. We believe you to be an Engliſhman.

Parry. And if it pleaſe you, they are to prove it.

Mr. Recorder. Well, that is over now, Tie him up.

Parry. I am not a Subject, and as not a Subject, am not under the penal Laws.

Cl. of Cr. Set Henry Starkey to the Bar. Henry Starkey, hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition with him that went laſt before thee, what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf? &c.

Starkey. In the firſt place, Mr. Recorder, here is the Man (pointing at Mr. Prance) hath ſworn two Lies at one Breath.

Mr. Recorder. I muſt not hear that, Mr. Starkey.

Starkey. Will you pleaſe to hear me, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. I will give you all the Freedom you can lawfully deſire in the World, but it muſt be that which will conſiſt with my Duty, and the Reverence you owe the Court. You ſhall not revile the King's Evidence as long as I am here, by the help of God.

Starkey. If that it were true, that I had ſaid Maſs at my Lady Somerſet's and Mr. Duncomb's, yet it is not ſufficient to prove a man to be a Prieſt, for any man may take the Prieſt's Garments, and do the Ceremony and the Office, becauſe there are hundreds, perhaps thouſands, that have ſuffer'd Death for it. And ſo to do theſe Acts, is not Evidence of being a Prieſt.

Mr. Recorder. Indeed I don't underſtand what makes a Romiſh Prieſt, nor do I deſire it.

Starkey. But you will give me the Letter of the Law.

Mr. Recorder. And the Jury hath found you a Tranſgreſſor of the Law.

Starkey. The Letter of the Law is this, That if any one of the Queen's Subjects ſhall tranſport himſelf beyond the Sea, and ſhall in a Seminary take Orders, by Authority deriv'd from the See of Rome, and ſhall return into England, and ſhall not preſent himſelf here to the Ordinary, or elſe to ſuch a certain Number of Juſtices of the Peace within ſuch a Term, but ſhall ſeduce the King's Liege People——

Mr. Recorder. No, that is another Act.

Starkey. Then he ſhall be adjudged a Traitor. Now Mr. Recorder I come to this, as I told you before, I had diſcover'd a Plot to the King that was deſign'd againſt his Perſon, State, and Government, and did deliver into his Hands eleven Articles of Treaſon, which I had writ with my own Hands; (and this he hath own'd, and will own.) So, Mr. Recorder, upon this I was threatned my Life and Liberty by the Plotters, That the King ſhould not be gone twenty four hours, but I ſhould be impriſoned. When the King went, what muſt I do? Muſt I ſtay there and hazard my Life, or truſt to the King's Mercy? I was forced to come along with the King for Protection. I came to White-hall, and the King roſe up and gave me his Hand to kiſs, and ſo did the Duke of York, and told me I was welcome. I went to my Lord Chancellor Hyde, who, when he ſaw me, embrac'd me in his Arms, and ſaid, thou art welcome, I am glad to ſee thee in England. I had occaſion to ſpeak with the Biſhop of London, Dr. Shelden about another Perſon, and when I came to him, he asked me, What is your Name? My Lord, ſaid I, my Name is Starkey, with that he catches me faſt by the Hand, and when he had done that, he took me in his Arms, and told me, You are welcome. And Mr. Recorder, I do ſuffer to this day for the Service I have done the King.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Starkey, I can only ſay this to you, I do promiſe you faithfully, as I promiſed the other Gentleman that went before, I'll tell the King what you alledge. He is the beſt able to give an Account of it, and is the fitteſt Judge of his own Mercy. But I could recommend to you, Mr. Starkey, a thing that would be very acceptable, and then as far forth as 'tis modeſt for me to ſpeak, I am pretty well aſſured, I might ſay, I could prevail for Mercy to you, That is, as you did diſcover one Plot before, ſo you would diſcover this helliſh Plot that is now on foot.

Starkey. Mr. Recorder, I have wiſhed a hundred times, and wiſh now, that if there were any Commiſſions, as is pretended, the firſt that had delivered one to me, ſhould never have deliver'd a ſecond; for I would either have brought him to Juſtice, where he ſhould receive his Reward, or elſe I would have kill'd him in the place; tell the King, Mr. Recorder, that I ſay ſo.

Mr. Recorder. Well, the King is a Fountain of Mercy, and he is the beſt Judge of the fit Objects of it. I will, as I ſaid, tell him what you ſay.

Starkey. If the King does not own what I told you, then count me the greateſt Knave that ever you ſpoke withal.

Mr. Recorder. You remain now under the Conviction of the Law, what Mercy the King, who is the Fountain of Mercy as well as of Juſtice, will extend to you, is in his own Power.

Starkey. Mr. Recorder, I have here his Majeſty's Gracious Pardon of the 25*th* Year of his Reign.

Mr.

Mr. Recorder. I allow that, but you have ſtaid here ſince.

Starkey. Why then, Mr. Recorder, pray will you adviſe me what to have done? Nature teacheth all Men to ſhun Danger; for I was threatened with Life, &c. if I ſtaid in France: Whether ſhould I ſtay there, or return to my native Countrey with my King? Now, Mr. Recorder, I deſire to know what you would have had me done?

Mr. Recorder. I ſhall acquaint the King, and will do you all the kindneſs I can with him. Tie him up.

Starkey. But how ſhall I do then, when I am lame? I want a Leg, and I muſt uſe my Stick.

Mr. Recorder. Then let him alone.

Starkey. But I pray, good Mr. Recorder, will you be pleaſed before you give Sentence upon me, to acquaint the King with what I have to ſay for my ſelf.

Mr. Recorder. No, I cannot do that, the King's Pleaſure is to be known afterwards. Set Lumſden aſide, and ſet all the reſt to the Bar.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, whilſt Judgment was giving.

Mr. Recorder. You the Priſoners at the Bar; you have been ſeverally Accuſed, Arraigned—

Starkey. Mr. Recorder, May I ſpeak one word? I have preſented this Year, wherein at the 26*th* of this Month I have been a Priſoner, ſeveral Petitions by my Friends to the King, and deſir'd to be Tranſported; for my Age and Infirmities, and want of a Leg did not ſtand well with my being in England theſe troubleſome Times. The King, I am told, hath promiſed I ſhould, but I ſee no Fruits of thoſe Petitions. And pray conſider this, that I ſhould have been impriſoned if I ſtayed out of England, and now to be proſecuted in England in this manner, and to be drawn, hang'd, and quartered, is very hard.

Mr. Recorder. Whether it be true or not, God knows, I ſhall acquaint the King with it. It only remains with me to take notice of it for that purpoſe. And for my part I am ſorry with all my heart to ſee ſo many Perſons brought to receive the Sentence of Death by my Mouth. But I muſt ſay this, you your ſelves have been the occaſion of it, and therefore muſt blame your ſelves for it. You have had the Benefit of the beſt Laws, the Law of England, which gives every Subject the liberty to make a Defence for himſelf, when ever he is accuſed of any Crime; he hath the liberty to hear the Witneſſes what they ſay againſt him; to call any Witneſſes for him, and to make defence for himſelf. And not only ſo, but he hath likewiſe Twelve Men upon their Oaths, that are his Peers, againſt whom he hath the liberty to make a Challenge without ſhewing any Reaſon, to a certain Number; and if it ſhall appear that any of them have the leaſt Prejudice or Malice againſt any Perſons that are to be tried for their Lives, to a greater Number. Such, and ſo great is the Benefit of the Laws of England, beyond all the Laws of any other Nation in the World. But all theſe Forms having been paſſed, and a Jury of Men, againſt whom you made no Exception, having found you guilty of the Offences for which you were indicted, there remains now nothing more with the Court, but to paſs that Judgment of Death upon you, which the Law requires, and which is the Buſineſs that lies upon me now. But before I do that, for I know you may think it a Preſumption, or at leaſt a needleſs and unneceſſary thing for me to take upon me, and give any Directions to you, the Buſineſs of whoſe Profeſſion it hath been to give Precepts. However I think it is neceſſary for the Satisfaction of ſome Perſons that are here preſent, that I ſhould give them ſome Account, why I think this Law, and the putting it in execution at this time is not unreaſonable. For it is to be known, that every Subject of this Realm by his being born within the Dominions of the King, does owe an immediate Allegiance to the King, and is to take notice by the Law, that there is not any Perſon hath any Superiority over him; for under God he is the Supream Head and Governor. And if any Perſon born within the Dominions of the King ſhall ſo far forget himſelf, and what he owes to the King by his Birth, and that Supremacy which he ſhould maintain with his Life and Fortune, as to ackowledge any other Foreign Perſon to be Supream, and to have a Power to Depoſe the King, and diſpoſe of his Dominions (as every one does, that takes Orders from the See of Rome) he cannot but be thought deſerving of the greateſt Puniſhment. Wherefore the Wiſdom of our Nation, the Parliament, at the time when they made the Law, found that the Religion Eſtabliſhed (that Religion which I hope in God will remain notwithſtanding all the Enemies it ever had or ſhall have) was invaded by ſuch Prieſts as you: They found the Life of the Queen at that time in great danger, by the Attempts of thoſe Perſons whom they had made their Proſelytes, into whom they had infuſed Principles, that it was no Crime for them to depoſe their Queen, ſince they had the Authority of their Pope to juſtifie the Fact. And if once Men can preach ſuch Doctrine, and alſo but prevail with their Hearers to be of ſuch a Perſwaſion, if Care were not taken, we ſhall ſoon ſee an end of all ſort of Government, and of our Religion too. But in as much as theſe Principles were not ſo viſibly endeavoured to be put in practice till of late times, though you were not permitted, but connived at; yet that is no Reaſon but the occaſion of making the Law being revived, the Execution of the Law ſhould revive with it. I ſuppoſe it is not unknown to any of us, that there hath been an helliſh Plot againſt the Life of the King, and to deſtroy our Religion, I would to God I could ſay the Plot was at an end. For I muſt ſay, ſome of you, I fear, had too great a Hand in it: And what a ſort of Monſters were prevailed upon to compaſs the ſame, by you that are Prieſts and Jeſuits, who have wrought them up to ſuch a Belief, that Murder in this World is a certain Way to Saintſhip in that which is to come. And though you ſeem to deny it, your Practices are a Proof of it beyond all Contradiction, which is the reaſon that this Law, which was a good Law at the time of the making, and thought fit to be put in Execution then, though it hath ſlept ſome time ſince, ſhould now be put in Execution againſt you, who have occaſion'd all thoſe Miſchiefs to this Nation in theſe latter Times, which occaſioned the making of the Law. And one thing more I ſhould ſay to that Man, who pretends to merit by the good Services he hath done for the Publick, that he ſhould injoyn a Man to ſcour his Kettle, as he calls it, to receive the Sacrament, ment, and then give him a Diſpenſation to be drunk, and make another ſo, To promote a damnable Deſign, is ſuch a Power of Prieſthood, fit only for the Pope and his Imps to put in practice.

But to ſay no more, in Charity I am bound to compaſſionate your Condition, which with all my Soul I do, and heartily can ſay to you, I am ſorry to ſee you in that Miſery; it was in your own power to have prevented it; but ſeeing you have made your ſelves Obnoxious to the Law, the only thing required of me, is to pronounce the Sentence that that Law hath Decreed: And therefore in the Name of the Court I do pronounce this to be your Judgment——

Starkey. Mr. Recorder, Give me leave to ſpeak one Word: If any one ſhould have held to me that Poſition, That it is lawful to depoſe and murder Kings, I would have kill'd him in the place: Tell the King, Mr. Recorder, I ſay ſo.

Anderſon. It is my comfort, that no one of common Senſe can believe it.

Marſhal. May I ask one Queſtion, Mr. Recorder, before you pronounce Sentence?

Mr. Recorder. No, Mr. Marſhal, you can't ſpeak now; but this is your Judgment, and the Court does award it: That you the ſeveral Priſoners now at the Bar, be convey'd from hence to the Place from whence you came; and that you, and every of you, be convey'd from thence on Hurdles to the place of Execution, where every of you are to be ſeverally hang'd by the Neck; That you be ſeverally cut down alive; That your Privy-Members be cut off, your Bowels taken out and be burnt in your view; That your Heads be ſevered from your Bodies; That your Bodies be divided into four Quarters, which are to be diſpoſed at the King's pleaſure: And the God of infinite Mercy have mercy upon your Souls.

Parry. Te Deum laudamus; Te Dominum confitemur.

Then the Priſoners were carried away, and the Court Adjourn'd the Seſſions.

The TRYAL and Conviction of John Taſborough and Anne Price.

In Hillary-Term, Feb. 3. 1679.

This Day John Tasborough, and Anne Price (who were the laſt Term Indicted for the Offence in the Indictment hereafter recited, and found Guilty by the Grand Jury of the County of Middleſex) were brought to a Tryal at the Bar of the Court of King's Bench: Which proceeded thus.

FIRST, Proclamation was made for Information in uſual Form. Then the Defendants were called, and appearing, were by the Clerk of the Crown adviſed to look to their Challenges. Then the Jurors that were ſummoned to try the Cauſe being called, and appearing, the Twelve that were Sworn, were theſe Perſons following,

Thomas Harriot,	Jur	Edward Wilford,
Thomas Johnſon,		Richard Bull,
Charles Umphrevile,		Joſeph Radcliffe,
Thomas Earsby,		Richard Cooper,
Richard Pagett,		James Supple,
John Greene,		George Read.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen of the Jury, you that are ſworn, hearken to the Record. The Defendants, John Tasborough and Anne Price, ſtand Indicted by the Oaths of Twelve honeſt and lawful Men of the County of Middleſex; which Indictment ſets forth: That whereas one Thomas White, alias Whitebread, William Harcourt, John Fenwick, John Gavan, alias Gawen, and Anthony Turner, being Popiſh Recuſants, and falſe Traytors againſt our Sovereign Lord, Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the Thirteenth Day of June, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, the Thirty firſt, at the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-delivery, then held in the Old-Bailey, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchres, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London, for the City of London and County of Middleſex, were lawfully indicted for certain High Treaſons in the ſaid Indictment ſpecified; and afterwards were ſeverally Tryed by a Jury of the ſaid County, and then and there were Attainted, as appears by the Record thereof to the Jurors aforeſaid in Evidence ſhewn. And whereas alſo one Richard Langhorn, Eſq; being a Popiſh Recuſant, the 14*th* day of June, in the Year of the the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, the 31*ſt* aforeſaid, at the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, then held by Adjournment at the Old-Bailey, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, was lawfully indicted for divers High Treaſons in the ſaid Indictment ſpecified; and being afterwards Try'd by a Jury of the County, was then and there thereof Attainted, as appears by the Record thereof, to the Jurors aforeſaid in Evidence ſhewn. And whereas one Stephen Dugdale, upon the ſeveral Tryals of the Indictments aforeſaid, was a Witneſs produced and ſworn on behalf of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and then and there in lawful manner, did give material Evidence againſt the ſaid William Harcourt, and the ſaid ſeveral other Traytors, to prove them guilty of the matters in the ſaid Indictment ſpecified: The ſaid Defendants, John Tasborough and Anne Price, the Premiſes aforeſaid well knowing, and being Perſons deviliſhly affected towards our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, now King of England, &c. their Supreme and Natural Lord, and deviſing, and with all their Strength intending the Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom to diſturb, and to hinder and ſtifle the farther diſcovery of the ſaid Treaſons, and as much as in them lay, the due courſe of Law to elude, and the proſecution of Juſtice in that behalf to retard and obſtruct; as alſo to cauſe and procure that it ſhould be believed, that the Perſons aforeſaid Attainted, were unjuſtly Attainted: The ſaid Anne Price, before the Tryal of the ſaid William Harcourt, to wit, the 10*th* day of June, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King the 31*ſt* aforeſaid, at the Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, with Force and Arms, falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, corruptly, and againſt the Duty of her Allegiance, did ſolicit, ſuborn, and endeavour to perſuade the ſaid Stephen Dugdale, that he the aforeſaid Stephen Dugdale ſhould not be a Witneſs nor give Evidence againſt the ſaid William Harcourt, upon the Tryal of the ſaid William Harcourt for the Treaſons aforeſaid: And that the ſaid John Tasborough and Anne Price, afterwards, to wit, the 12*th* day of October, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, the 31*ſt* aforeſaid, at the Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, adviſedly, corruptly, and againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, did ſolicit, ſuborn, and endeavour to perſuade, and either of them did then and there, falſly, unlawfully, adviſedly, corruptly, and againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, ſolicit, ſuborn, and endeavour to perſuade the ſaid Stephen Dugdale, that he the ſaid Stephen Dugdale ſhould retract and deny all the Evidence and Information which he the ſaid Stephen Dugdale, as aforeſaid, had given againſt the Traytors and Popiſh Recuſants aforeſaid; the ſaid John Tasborough and Anne Price then and there falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly and adviſedly, corruptly promiſing, and either of them promiſing to the ſaid Stephen Dugdale great Sums of Money and Rewards, if he the ſaid Stephen Dugdale would retract and deny all the Evidence and Information by the ſaid Stephen Dugdale, againſt the Traytors and Popiſh Recuſants aforeſaid, as aforeſaid given, and would withdraw and abſent himſelf the ſaid Stephen Dugdale, in places unknown and beyond the Sea: And that the ſaid John Tasborough and Anne Price, their wicked Devices, Practices and Intentions aforeſaid to fulfil and accompliſh, afterwards, to wit, the ſaid 12*th* day of October, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King the 31*ſt* aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, by Force and Arms, falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, adviſedly and corruptly, and againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, did produce and ſhew, and each of them did then and there produce and ſhew to the ſaid Stephen Dugdale, a certain Note in Writing, the Tenour of which Note follows in theſe Engliſh Words following: Being touched with a true Remorſe of Conſcience, and hearty Sorrow for the great Ill I did in coming in a Witneſs againſt the Catholicks, and there ſpeaking things which in my own Conſcience I knew to be very far from the Truth: I think my ſelf bound in Duty both to God and Man, and for the ſafety of my own Soul, to make a true Declaration how I was drawn into this wicked Action. But being very well ſatisfied, that I ſhall create my ſelf many powerful Enemies upon this account, I have retired my ſelf to a place of ſafety, where I will with my own Hand diſcover the great Wrong that hath been done the Catholicks, and hope it may gain Belief. And likewiſe I proteſt before Almighty God, that I have no Motive to induce me to this Confeſſion, but a true Repentance for the Miſchiefs I have done, and hope God Almighty will forgive me. And that the ſaid John Tasborough and Anne Price, the Day and Year aforeſaid, in the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, adviſedly, corruptly, and againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, the ſaid Stephen Dugdale the aforeſaid Note in Writing, ſo as aforeſaid, to the ſaid Stephen Dugdale produced and ſhewn to ſign and ſubſcribe, did ſolicit and endeavour to perſuade, and each of them did ſolicit and endeavour to perſuade, and then and there falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, adviſedly and corruptly did promiſe, and each of them did promiſe to the ſaid Stephen Dugdale, that if he the ſaid Stephen Dugdale the aforeſaid Note in Writing would ſign and ſubſcribe, that then he the ſaid Stephen Dugdale great and vaſt Sums of Money ſhould have and receive; to the evil and pernicious Example of all Perſons in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Duty of their Allegiance. To this Indictment they have pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Tryal have put themſelves upon the Countrey, and the King's Attorney likewiſe, which Countrey you are: Your Charge is to enquire, Whether the Defendants, or either of them, be guilty of the Treſpaſs and Offence whereof they ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty: If you find them or either of them Guilty, you are to ſay ſo; if you find them Not Guilty, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Cryer, Make an O Yes.

Cryer. O Yes: If any one will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt the Defendants John Tasborough and Anne Price, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard.

Then Roger Belwood, Eſq; of Counſel for the King in this Cauſe, opened the Indictment.

Mr. Belwood. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Defendants, John Tasborough and Anne Price, ſtand Indicted for Subornation of Perjury: And the Indictment ſets forth; That whereas Thomas Whitebread, William Harcourt, and others, were Indicted, and that for Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King, and other Treaſons, and were legally Try'd, Convicted, and Attainted for the ſame; and that Richard Langhorn was likewiſe indicted and Attainted for the ſame Offence: And that upon theſe Tryals Mr. Dugdale was produced and examined as a Witneſs for the King, and did depoſe materially againſt the ſaid Traytors: And the Defendants knowing this, and contriving and deſigning to ſtifle the Diſcovery of the Treaſons aforeſaid, did before the Tryal of the ſaid Harcourt, ſolicit, ſuborn, and endeavour to perſuade the ſaid Mr. Dugdale not to be a Witneſs, nor to give Evidence upon the Tryal: And after the Tryal, did farther ſolicit him to retract and deny all the Evidence he had given on that behalf, and promiſed him large Rewards and great Sums of Money for it: And to accompliſh this, they did incite him to withdraw and retire himſelf, and produced a Note which he was to ſign, and which hath been read to you, wherein he was to acknowledge that he was in an Error, and had ſworn falſly, and therefore had retired himſelf; and for this they promiſed him great Rewards: And this Offence is laid to be done falſly, adviſedly, corruptly, and againſt the Duty of their Allegiance. To this the Defendants have pleaded, Not Guilty; if we ſhall prove the Fact upon them, we hope you will find it.

Then Mr. Serj. Maynard purſued the Charge.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, and you the Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel in this Cauſe againſt the Defendants. For the Fact that is laid in the Indictment, it conſiſts of theſe Particulars: Firſt, An Attempt to prevent the Evidence before it was given. And Secondly, When it was given, and the Traytors were Convicted and Condemned, then to Diſgrace that Evidence, and the Proceedings at Law that hath been againſt the Traytors; and this in favour of the Catholicks. Thirdly, The means they uſed to perſuade him, which was by corrupt Promiſes and Engagements to him. And, Fourthly, That they had prepared a Note which hath been read to the Jury; whereby he that had ſwore the Truth, ſhould publickly own to the World that he had ſwore a Lie: and that the Catholicks had received great injury by him, and that he had withdrawn himſelf to make this Diſcovery: And this is the Subſtance of the Charge upon theſe Perſons. This Practice my Lord, is not new, it hath appeared here in ſeveral other inſtances: We remember what Reading did, and we have not forgotten what Knox and Lane did; and this is the third Cauſe of that kind that hath come before you. Our Evidence will be this: We ſhall produce Mr. Dugdale, the Perſon againſt whom this Deſign was laid, and he can teſtifie all this matter. Now he was but a ſingle Perſon againſt theſe two Tempters; and your Lordſhip remembers what was ſaid in the like Caſe, two might convince one; and therefore he thought it ſafe to acquaint, and he did acquaint Perſons of Publick Concern and Authority with this Attempt upon him; and he did not only this, but they met ſeveral times about it at the Tavern, and there we ſhall prove what they did. Part of this hath been confeſſed, for this hath had another Examination in another place: And the Gentlewoman hath confeſſed, that ſhe did offer him Sums of Money; for it we will call our Witneſſes. We ſhall not now aggravate the Fault, that will come after the Evidence given; but I think it is helliſh enough if it be proved.

Then Mr. Attorney General proceeded to open the Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, This Caſe is of the ſame nature with thoſe that Mr. Serjeant hath mentioned of Reading, and Knox and Lane; but it goes ſomewhat further: For this muſt be done in Writing, and ſubſcrib'd by the Party, to be produc'd upon occaſion, to defame all the Evidence that had been given before: And the Subſtance of the Note is to recant all that he had ſaid, and aver it to be falſe; and ſo all that have died upon that Account, muſt have been ſuppoſed to have died very unjuſtly. This was the Deſign of the matter: And it was not only in this Caſe that theſe Perſons had been endeavouring things of this nature; for we can prove, if it be neceſſary, by another Witneſs, that this Gentlewoman hath been tampering to perſuade him to retract his Evidence againſt another Perſon, one Mr. Parſons, a Prieſt in Cuſtody; and to bring all about, ſhe did preſume upon Mr. Dugdale's old Acquaintance with her: They had been Fellow-Servants in my Lord Aſton's Family, and by that means were of ancient Acquaintance; and ſhe did preſume upon theſe grounds, that ſhe could withdraw him from all his Evidence. And we ſhall prove, I think, by another Witneſs which does fortifie this Teſtimony, that both theſe Perſons have already acknowledged this Fact, and that they perſonated great Perſons in it; that is, they pretended to come in the Name of very great Perſons, as you will hear, when they had nothing to do in the thing. They pretended to go to Windſor for Pardon and aſſurances of Protection, and they have acknowledg'd it; and 'tis in Proof that they were never near that Perſon: That is, Mrs. Price did pretend ſhe ſhould go down to Windſor and ſpeak with the Duke of York, for he was the Perſon nam'd, though 'tis acknowledg'd, and was in proof by her Companion, that ſhe never came near him, that is, by Mrs. Harris, of whom you will hear anon. And Mr. Tasborough did pretend the ſame thing to Mr. Dugdale, and did acknowledge it to the Council, but deny'd that it was true. We ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove the Fact as it hath been opened.

Sir Creſwel Levins.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. We will firſt prove the Indictments that are recited, and call for the Records of the Convictions.

Sir William Scroggs.

L. C. J. Sure they will admit that.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. We muſt offer our Proof; if they will admit it, ſo.

L. C. J. What ſay the Counſel for the Defendants? Do you admit the Indictments and Convictions?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I cannot tell in this Caſe; if we ſhould not ſtand upon it that all the Proofs be given, our Client perhaps will take it ill. I pray therefore the Evidence may be given according to Law.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Well, if you ſtand upon it, they muſt prove it. Produce the Records.

Mr. At. Gen. Give Mr. Clare his Oath.

[Who was ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Put in the Copy, Sir.

[Which was done.

Cl. of Cr. Come, Sir, is that a true Copy?

Mr. Clare. Yes; I examin'd it.

L. C. J. Where?

Mr. Clare. With Mr. Adderley, the Clerk of the Peace of Middleſex; and this other with Mr. Tanner, Clerk of the Peace for London.

Then the Copy of the Record of the Conviction of Whitebread, &c. was begun to be read.

L. C. J. Let them ſee it that are for the Defendants.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Don't read it all; if they have any Exception to it, let them make it: Give it over to them.

Mr. Pollexfen. Ay, my Lord, let us ſee it. Pray Sir, you ſay you examined this, is this a a true Copy?

Mr. Clare. Yes, it is.

Then alſo the Conviction of Langhorne in London, was read.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. That is the Conviction at Newgate.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Well, go on with the reſt now.

L. C. J. Go on with the Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Who do you begin with? Who do you call firſt?

Mr. Belwood. Mr. Dugdale, my Lord.

[Who was ſworn.

Price. Stand nearer me, Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. At. Gen. He ſtands near enough.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. He will be near enough you by and by, Mrs. Price.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Dugdale, What ſay you againſt Mrs. Price and Mr. Tasborough?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, Mrs. Price being an ancient Acquaintance of mine (for ſhe was my Fellow-Servant at my Lord Aſton's, may it pleaſe your Lordſhip) I coming to Town as a Witneſs for the King, I did ſend for Mrs. Price as one of my ancient Acquaintance; I think it was in January was Twelvemonth.

L. C. J. Is ſhe a Papiſt?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I think ſhe is ſo now: We uſed to go to Maſs together in the Countrey.

L. C. J. She was one, but is ſhe?

Mr. Dugdale. I ſuppoſe ſhe is one; we had Familiarity together, but never till June laſt did ſhe endeavour to take off my Evidence.

L. C. J. When was it ſhe firſt ſet upon you?

Mr. Dugdale. She began to tamper firſt the Night before Harcourt's Tryal.

L. C. J. But ſhe had been before with you in London?

Mr. Dugdale. Several times: For I ſent to her preſently after I came to Town; but that was the firſt time ſhe offer'd to take off my Evidence. And ſhe was then perſuading me to be out of the way, and not to give any Evidence againſt Mr. Harcourt, becauſe he was her Ghoſtly Father.

L. C. J. Who was by?

Mr. Dugdale. There was no body by, but one that was an Acquaintance of mine that heard her.

L. C. J. What is his Name?

Mr. Dugdale. Wright.

L. C. J. Then you two and Wright were together?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What ſaid you to her when ſhe made that offer to you?

Mr. Dugdale. I told her I could not do it; for that I was to appear the next day, and was to give my Evidence, or I muſt be forſworn: In any thing elſe I told her I would ſerve her; but that I could not do, becauſe I ſhould forſwear my ſelf; and I was ſworn next morning. It continued two or three days, or a pretty while, before I ſaw her again.

L. C. J. She was angry for a while with you, was ſhe?

Mr. Dugdale. She was afterwards well reconciled to me, and after ſhe deſired me that I would ſpeak to your Lordſhip, on behalf of one Mr. Parſons, a Priſoner in the Gatehouſe, that he might be bail'd out; I told her I would; I know not whether I did or no certainly, I ſuppoſe I did ſpeak to ſome of your Lordſhip's Servants; I do confeſs it was not done: But I was to go into the Countrey, into Staffordſhire, and juſt as I was going to take Coach, ſhe ſent a Meſſenger to me to ſpeak with me before I went. I ſaid I could not ſtay to ſpeak with her that morning, but I would remember her Buſineſs when I came to Town again: I ſuppoſed it to be this about Mr. Parſons. I went into Staffordſhire, and continued there about ſix or ſeven Weeks; I was there at the Aſſizes with your Lordſhip. Now ſhe had been ſeveral times at one Mr. Croſs's (where we uſually met) to enquire when I came to Town, and did deſire ſhe might know when I came, for ſhe had important Buſineſs to communicate to me. I think this might be about the 11*th* of September laſt, my Lord. When I came to Town, I came to Mr. Croſs's that very Night, and they told me of this, That Mrs. Price had been there ſeveral times to requeſt them, that whenever I came ſhe might have Notice. I deny'd it that Night; I am very weary, ſaid I, and therefore would not have her ſent for. Within two or three Days after, I came there again, and ſhe was ſent for: I cannot tell whether by my Direction, or whether they ſent for her of their own accord, they can beſt teſtifie that; when ſhe came to Mr. Croſs's, the firſt thing after Salutation from my Journey, ſhe asked me if I had ſpoken to your Lordſhip about Mr. Parſons? I told her, No, not as yet; but I would go ſtrait up to your Lordſhip's Houſe, and ſpeak with you about it. No (ſaid ſhe) you need not now do that, for we have a greater Work in Hand; which Work was this: She told me ſhe was come from a great Perſon, whom ſhe did not then name, to tell me, that if I would retract my Evidence (this was the ſhort of it, there were more particulars) and go beyond Sea, I ſhould either be in the D. of York's Court, or I ſhould be ſupported by him.

L. C. J. Did ſhe name the Duke of York then?

Mr. Dugdale. Not the firſt time; ſhe ſaid ſhe was come from a great Perſon, but named him not: The ſecond time ſhe named him, when I deſired to know who the great Perſon was.

L. C. J. But what ſaid ſhe the firſt time, if you would retract, what then?

Mr. Dugdale. I was to have a Thouſand Pounds paid into a Merchant's Hands to be ſecured for me till I came back to give Evidence for them. I was to take the Plot off from the Catholicks, and to lay it wholly upon the Proteſtants. I was to ſwear againſt ſome Perſons, as Mr. Tasborough told me, that after I was got on Shipboard, I was to do a great deal of more Service, and come to ſwear againſt a great Perſon, a Perſon of conſiderable Note whom yet they did not name.

L. C. J. But before you depart from what Mrs. Price ſaid to you, make an end of her Diſcourſe, when ſhe told you you ſhould have a Thouſand Pounds depoſited into what Merchant's Hand you thought fit?

Mr. Dugdale. I think not that, but into a Merchant's Hand.

L. C. J. Well, what ſhould you do for it?

Mr. Dugdale. I was to retract all my Evidence, and to be no Witneſs againſt them; but before I would much encourage this, I went to my Lord that was then Preſident of the Council, my Lord Shaftsbury.

L. C. J. Who was by when this Diſcourſe was; was the third Perſon by you ſpeak of?

Mr. Dugdale. There were others by afterwards; but there was no body but we two together, I think at that time: But I went to that Noble Lord my Lord Shaftsbury, and acquainted him and Mr. Hambden, and Mr. Charlton with it: For ſhe threatned, that all the King's Evidence would in a ſhort time be hang'd; and if I would come over to them, it ſhould all be turned upon the Proteſtants. The Duke had a wiſe Council, and had contrived it ſo, that if I would come over to them, there would not be a Papiſt that ſhould ſuffer more: but their Religion ſhould be eſtabliſhed in half a Year, and all the Witneſſes brought to condign Puniſhment. When I acquainted theſe Perſons I named with this, and communicated it to them, they thought fit I ſhould go on a little with her to trepan her, to ſee what kind of Plot it was they were deſigning; and I did give Encouragement; but not ſo far as to ſet my Hand to any Paper. But when it did come out, the Contrivance they ſpoke of did prove Mr. Dangerfield's Plot, as appear'd afterwards. So, as I was ſaying, I did encourage this to Mrs. Price, to ſee what I could get out of her; for I knew their Plots were dangerous and barbarous when I was amongſt them; but I never deſign'd to proſecute them at any Bar, but only to know the Depth of their Contrivance. And theſe Gentlemen thought it very fit I ſhould have ſome Evidence to teſtifie for my Innocency, if they ſhould proſecute me: And I did get two Perſons, one Dr. Chamberlain and his Clerk who were to be in a private place to over-hear what was the Communication between us; and when I had placed them, I asked Mrs. Price, whether I firſt began the Tampering or ſhe, ſhe anſwered ſhe did, and I reckon'd up all the Heads of our former Treaties, though not the Particulars.

L. C. J. When did Mr. Tasborough firſt appear in this Matter?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, he never appeared but twice, and it was about the 12*th* of October, I think, the firſt time. We appointed to meet at the Green Lettice, that was with Mrs. Price, for I never ſaw the Face of Mr. Tasborough before that time, and from thence we adjourned to the Pheaſant in Fuller's Rents.

L. C. J. There was the firſt time you met with Mr. Tasborough you ſay.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had you with him when you firſt met him?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, when we came there, Mr. Tasborough was at firſt pleaſed to open the Buſineſs to me, that Mrs. Price had acquainted him that I would come over to them. I ſate a good while and ſaid nothing, and when I did ſpeak, I did rather give Encouragement than ſpeak againſt it.

L. C. J. What did he tell you?

Mr. Dugdale. He ſaid, he was brought there to confirm what Mrs. Price had promiſed me.

L. C. J. Did he ſay ſo?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, becauſe I would not take it upon her Word alone, but deſired to have ſome other ſufficient Perſon; and ſhe told me, he was an honeſt ſufficient Gentleman, and I might confide in him; and he ſaid, what ſhe had promiſed, ſhould be certainly made good, and that he came likewiſe from the Duke of York, as he ſaid, to confirm thoſe Promiſes had been made me of his Encouragement and Protection.

L. C. J. Did he expreſs particularly of what ſhould be made good?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, in general.

L. C. J. Did he mention the Money that was to be paid into the Merchant's Hands?

Mr. Dugdale. In general Words only, all would be made good?

L. C. J. Then he did not ſay the Money; but what had been ſaid to you by her ſhould be made good?

Mr. Dugdale. We had ſome particulars mentioned, but I cannot poſitively remember which.

Mr. Attorney General. I deſire my Lord, the Jury may take notice of this, that what ſhe had promiſed, was, if he would retract his Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did he intimate that?

Mr. Dugdale. The ſecond time when he came,——

L. C. J. But before you come to the ſecond time, let us make an end of the firſt: Repeat what he told you, when he came to you. You ſay, he ſaid I am informed by this Gentlewoman, that you intend to come over to us, what then?

Mr. Dugdale. He told me a great many things for my Encouragement, if I did come, that it was a very charitable Act, and it was nothing but what was acted like a Chriſtian, and if I had done amiſs, I might have pardon for it; and he did ſay, he was encouraged by more than the Duke of York, that had taken my matter into Conſideration.

L. C. J. What was it in general Words?

Mr. Dugdale. It was, if I would come over and retract what Evidence I had given. And he ſaid what ever things had been promiſed me, ſhould be ſure to be made good. Then my Lord, the ſecond time, we did adjourn till Tueſday following; and then we met (as I think) at the Six Cans in Holbourn, and it was pretty late that time we met; ſo Mr. Tasborough and Mrs. Price did tell me it was the laſt time they were to come.

L. C. J. What, the ſecond time of Tasborough's coming?

Mr.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, and they offered me this Note. I had the Note before left with me to conſider of it.

L. C. J. Who had given you the Note?

Mr. Dugdale. Mrs. Price gave me the Note.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Tasborough leave you before the Note was given you? For look you, when he told you about retracting your Evidence, and that this is nothing but what you may lawfully do, 'tis a Charitable Act.——

Mr. Dugdale. That was the firſt time, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did he produce the Note then?

Mr. Dugdale. He and ſhe together did?

L. C. J. Who was it had it?

Mr. Dugdale. Mrs. Price had it from me, and produced it before Mr. Tasborough's Face.

L. C. J. Did ſhe give it to him to read?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Tasborough did read it, and reading it ſaid, this is nothing but what you may lawfully do; there is no hurt in it?

L. C. J. And then he went away and left you and Mrs. Price together, what became of the Note?

Mr. Dugdale. Then Mrs. Price, after ſome Importunity left the Note with me, and I delivered it to Dr. Chamberlain to copy out. And Mr. Taſborough and Mrs. Price at the ſecond Meeting told me, that was the laſt time of meeting, and if I did not then ſign it, it would be much to my Prejudice; and that they ſhould not be able to do any thing for my Advantage, if I did not ſign it before the Duke went into Scotland. He was then going, and it ſhould be much for my Benefit if I ſigned it firſt; but Mr. Tasborough ſaid, he could do me no more Service except I did that.

L. C. J. He ſaid, that that was the laſt time, and if you would do it, it would be for your Advantage?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What ſaid you then, did they produce the Note again?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, the Note was delivered to Mrs. Price, and ſhe brought it thither for me to ſign it, and laid it upon the Table, and preſſed me to ſign it.

L. C. J. I thought you had ſaid ſhe had given you the Note?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, But I gave it her again before we met the ſecond time.

L. C. J. And who produc'd it then?

Mr. Dugdale. She again the ſecond time. But my Lord, we have miſſed one thing about Mrs. Price. When ſhe was perſwading me, ſhe made uſe of the Duke of York's Name, and ſaid, ſhe would go down to Windſor to perſwade the Duke that I ſhould have my Pardon: Accordingly ſhe did go, as I believe; for ſhe took Coach at Charing-Croſs, and as ſhe ſaid, did go to Windſor, and brought me word back again, that the Duke did not ſeem to countenance it much, for fear he ſhould be drawn into a Præmunire himſelf; and then ſhe told me the Duke did wiſh her to acquaint the Spaniſh Ambaſſador with it; and ſhe did go and acquaint him with it, as ſhe told me. I asked her when I ſhould go to ſpeak with the Ambaſſador about it; ſhe told me, that the Spaniſh Ambaſſador could not ſpeak Engliſh, and it was not ſafe to truſt an Interpreter that they did not know; and ſo it was to be deferred a little longer; but ſhe ſaid, that he would protect me, and that all that ſhe ſaid that the Duke had promiſed for my Reward, and for my ſafe going beyond Sea, he would be ready to do it; and ſhe told me, that the Spaniſh Ambaſſador would write Letters into Flanders. And ſo they made uſe of the Duke of York's Name; but I could never find by any thing, nor can ſay, though they made uſe of the Duke of York's Name, that he did countenance any ſuch thing, or ever knew of it.

L. C. J. How long was this before the Duke went away?

Mr. Dugdale, It was about the twelfth or fourteenth of October. The Duke went the beginning of November from hence.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas Doleman, do you know when the King came to Town from Windſor?

Sir Thomas Doleman. No, I do not know.

Mr. Dugdale. It was before the Duke went over into Flanders that the King was at Windſor. For the King and the Duke of York came from Windſor, and then the Duke went to Flanders again, and then ſhe went as ſhe ſaid, to Windſor, and came home either the Day the Duke came from Windſor, or the Day after.

L. C. J. Her Diſcourſe when ſhe went to Windſor, was before the Duke went into Flanders?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. The ſecond time you mean.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, the ſecond time. For may it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I do remember now, that the Day when the Duke of York came back again from Flanders, I think it was the Twelfth of October, that was the time that I ſaw Mr. Tasborough firſt, and that was the time they produced the Note, and I ſhall produce ſome Witneſſes to prove that he had Diſcourſe with me then.

L. C. J. I would only know the time when ſhe told you ſhe went to Windſor, to ſpeak with the Duke of York?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, to the beſt of my Remembrance, and as I think, it was the Day before the King came from Windſor, that ſhe went down.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He cannot ſwear to a day, 'tis hard to put him to that.

L. C. J. He is not asked to a day, but we would be at ſome Certainty about the time as near as we can.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, this I dare poſitively ſay, ſhe went down of a Tueſday, and that was the day before the Duke of York came from Windſor.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He does give us the time as near as poſſibly he can.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you a Copy of the Note, Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, I have.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Now we will prove that Note.

Mr. At. Gen. For the Note it ſelf your Lordſhip obſerves, Mrs. Price had the Original back again, but your Lordſhip hears Dr. Chamberlain took a Copy of it, and he will prove it.

Then Dr. Chamberlain was ſworn.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſhew you the Note at the time that ſhe went to the Duke to Windſor?

Mr. ugdale. The Note was produc'd when the Duke came from Flanders, the Day I think he came, and that was in October.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. When did Tasborough and ſhe meet with you?

Mr. Dugdale. When the Duke of York came back from Flanders.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I think it was the Twelfth of October. Mrs. Price had appointed Mr. Tasborough to come to confirm what ſhe had ſaid before, which was the time that I ſaw him firſt.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Dugdale. The very Day the Duke came from Flanders, as I think.

L. C. J. Well then, ſhe talked to you of the Duke of York, and going to Windſor, before ever you ſaw Tasborough.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And ſo his Evidence was.

L. C. J. So then here is the matter, that the Jury may underſtand the Evidence; She ſolicited him firſt the Day before Harcourt's Tryal: Then the next was three or four Days after the Tryal, and then ſhe endeavoured to perſwade you to retract your Evidence and go beyond Sea.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. No, my Lord, that was only to get the Man bailed that was in the Gate-houſe.

L. C. J. Did ſhe not the ſecond time propoſe that?

Mr. Dugdale. No, my Lord, not till I came forth out of the Countrey again.

L. C. J. Then you went into the Countrey before the great matter was ſpoken to?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And then ſhe left word at the Houſe, that ſhe might know when you came, and when ſhe met with you, ſhe began to tamper with you, and ſaid you ſhould have 1000 l. paid into ſome Merchant's Hand, and be well look'd upon, and after that ſhe ſaid ſhe would go down to the Duke to Windſor.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But at that time ſhe told him, he ſhould have a place in the Duke's Court.

L. C. J. Did ſhe produce the Note the firſt time you ſaw Tasborough?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, the Note was produced the firſt time.

L. C. J. And Tasborough read it?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he read it.

L. C. J. And ſaid you might lawfully do it?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. When was the ſecond time?

Mr. Dugdale. It was within a few Days after, about two or three Days.

L. C. J. You are not asked to a Day, was the Note produced a ſecond time?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

L. C. J. And then he was upon the ſame Matter ſtill, when you ſwear the Note was produc'd the ſecond time?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And then he ſaid, this is the laſt time we muſt offer it to you, if you do not do it now, I can do you no good.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. But her Diſcourſe was before all this, that ſhe would go down to Windſor and get your Pardon?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Before your Acquaintance with Tasborough?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, before ever I ſaw him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Tasborough was to confirm it.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, for I made ſome Scruples about it, for they ſaid before the Duke would believe me real, I muſt ſubſcribe the Note, which I would not do without further Aſſurance. She promiſed a Perſon of good Sufficiency and Quality ſhould engage for the Performance, and one Mr. Perkins, as ſhe ſaid, was to be ſent for, and was ſent for out of the Countrey, and 3 l. 10 s. expended in ſending for him. And I ſaid to Mrs. Price when 1000 l. was propoſed, Lord in Heaven, that is too much Money, a 100 l. is enough to ſerve me; ſaid ſhe, we muſt have a care how we manage this matter, for ſhe told me the Duke of York ſtood upon a tickle Point, and if it ſhould be known the Duke tampered with the King's Witneſſes, it would ruin him, but ſhe ſaid 1000 l. was prepared for me if I would go beyond Sea into Flanders, where I ſhould be maintained and protected. But I objected my Fear of the Inquiſition in Spain, which I knew to be ſo cruel a thing, therefore I would not go beyond Sea. Then ſhe asked me if I would be contented with the Protection of a Proteſtant Earl's Houſe?

L. C. J. Did ſhe tell you his Name?

Mr. Dugdale. She asked me if I could not be content to be in a Proteſtant Earl's Houſe, and not go beyond Sea? But ſhe named no body.

L. C. J. When you ſaid you were unwilling to go beyond Sea, for fear of the Inquiſition, ſhe offered you the Protection of a Proteſtant Earl's Houſe, and you deſired to know who it was, but ſhe named no body?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And you ſay when Mr. Tasborough came to you, he told you, if you would retract your Evidence, all the Promiſes that had been made you by her ſhould be made good?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, and without I would ſign the Note, the Duke and the reſt of the Gentlemen could not be ſerviceable to me.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And he preſſed you to do it before the Duke went into Scotland?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Belwood. Pray Mr. Dugdale, what Diſcourſe was between you and Mr. Tasborough concerning the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman?

Mr. Dugdale. The laſt time, the ſecond time we were together ———

L. C. J. Then you were but twice with Tasborough?

Mr. Dugdale. No, my Lord, but that ſecond time, you may ſee, ſays he, what a Progreſs hath been made by the acquitting of Sir George Wakeman, even that the Proteſtant themſelves are at a ſtand about their Belief, whether there be a Plot or no, and if you come over to us, it will overthrow all.

L. C. J. Had he any Diſcourſe with you about the Spaniſh Ambaſſador?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I can't tell whether he had or no, ſhe had.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay he would undertake the making good of the Promiſes?

Mr. Dugdale. Said I, Mrs. Price, ſuppoſe I ſhould come over to you, what would it advantage you? There is Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe, and Mr. Prance when I am gone. Said ſhe, hang them Rogues, Rogues, ſo as we do but get you over, we do not care, we can quickly do their Buſineſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And he ſaid this I obſerve by the way, That if he came over, all the King's Evidence ſhould be hang'd, and the Plot turn'd upon the Proteſtants.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Yes, he did ſay ſo, that he was told by the Gentlewoman, if he would come over, the Plot ſhould be turn'd upon the Proteſtants, and the King's Evidence be hang'd.

Mr. Scroggs. Mr. Tasborough did not ſay ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Is this a true Copy of the Note?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But Mr. Tasborough perſuaded him to ſign the Note, and Tasborough did ſay it was a good Act, and confirmed and aſſured him, that all ſhould be made good to him that ſhe had promiſed, and deſired him to do it before the Duke went, that he might be the abler to ſerve him with the Duke.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Dugdale, is this a true Copy of the Note?

Mr. Dugdale. I have read it ſo often, that I do believe it is a true Copy: And here is the Doctor and his Clerk, who will ſwear it was a true Copy examined with the Note.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Dr. Chamberlain and Cleave.
[Which was done.

With what did you examine that Copy?

Mr. Cleave. By the Paper given me by Dr. Chamberlain.

Dr. Chamberlain. My Lord, I received the Paper from Mr. Dugdale, my Lord, and gave him order to tranſcribe it.

L. C. J. And that is a true Copy of the Paper you had from Dr. Chamberlain?

Mr. Cleave. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Mr. Dugdale, did you deliver that very Note that Mrs. Price delivered to you, to Dr. Chamberlain?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I did, and received it back again from him.

L. C. J. And you copied it out from that Note Dr. Chamberlain had?

Mr. Cleave. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. What is your Name, Sir?

Mr. Cleave. Cleave.

L. C. J. Read the Note. [Which was read as in the Indictment.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Was this a Copy of the Note delivered to you, that you were to ſign?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, it is a true Copy: And if I may not be too troubleſome, there is one thing more which comes into my mind that paſſed betwixt Mrs. Price and me: She was inſtructing me how I ſhould be convey'd beyond Sea, and ſhe mention'd the way of the Pacquet-Boat that comes from Dover, and goes every Tueſday or Wedneſday. I made a ſhew as if I was willing to do it, but the next time ſhe came, ſaid ſhe, We have thought it not to be ſo ſafe as to go in a Merchant Ship, which was the way we ſent all our Prieſts over.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, it was before the Duke came home the ſecond time, it was while he was in Flanders. And being deſirous to know, I preſſed her to tell me what became of Mr. Ewers, my ghoſtly Father in the Countrey: It was a long time 'ere ſhe would tell me; but at laſt ſhe told me that he was convey'd over in thoſe Yachts that carry'd the D. of York the firſt time over into Flanders.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Wright.
[Which was done.

Mr. Dugdale, is this the man that you mention'd concerning the Diſcourſe about Harcourt?

Mr. Dugdale. He hearken'd, as he told me afterwards, but I did not then know it.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you, were you preſent at any Diſcourſe between Mr. Dugdale and Mrs. Price, before Harcourt's Tryal?

Mr. Wright. My Lord, I was walking to and fro in the Room: Mrs. Price, that Gentlewoman was talking with Mr. Dugdale at the Window, and I was very inquiſitive, I did think it was upon the account of Marriage, or ſome ſuch Buſineſs; and ſo hearkening, I did hear her ſay, That Father Harcourt had been very kind to her, and that ſhe had viſited him before he went to Execution, and he bid her not be troubled, he dy'd in a good Cauſe; and upon this account I asked Mr. Dugdale afterwards what her Deſign was, and he ſaid it was to withdraw his Evidence.

L. C. J. How often were you in the Company of Mrs. Price and Mr. Dugdale, never but that one time?

Mr. Wright. Yes, a dozen times, I believe, I have been with them.

L. C. J. When was the firſt time that you heard them talk concerning Harcourt? they were always very private, were they not?

Mr. Wright. Yes.

L. C. J. Well, what did you hear the firſt time?

Mr. Wright. It was at the Horſeſhoe Tavern in Chancery Lane; and then the great matter that ſhe did deſire of him was, to be kind to Harcourt, for he had been her Confeſſor: But afterwards I remember, when he was condemned, ſhe ſaid ſhe had been with him, and he had bid her be of good cheer, for he dy'd in a good Cauſe.

L. C. J. Was this the time that you were at the Horſeſhoe Tavern?

Mr. Wright. The firſt time I heard no Diſcourſe of Harcourt then.

L. C. J. When was this? And what ſaid ſhe when ſhe ſpoke of Father Harcourt the firſt time?

Mr. Wright. It was to deſire him to be kind to Father Harcourt becauſe he was her Confeſſor. They ſpoke ſo ſoftly I could hardly hear them.

L. C. J. Well, how do you know then?

Mr. Wright. I asked him when he came out, what it was, and he ſaid it was to take off his Evidence againſt Harcourt; and afterwards ſhe ſaid ſhe had been to viſit him.

L. C. J. What more did ſhe ſay at that time?

Mr. Wright. I could not hear any more, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then all that you did hear was, ſhe ſaid to him, pray be kind to Mr. Harcourt, for he is my Confeſſor; and to that effect was all their Whiſpering that you heard?

Mr. Wright. That is all I did hear her ſay at that time.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But what did you hear Mr. Dugdale ſay at that time?

Mr. Wright. He ſaid it was upon the account of taking off his Evidence.

L. C. J. Well, what did you hear her ſay afterwards?

Mr. Wright. After ſhe was ſaying ſhe had been with him.

L. C. J. How long after?

Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright. I do not know, I cannot ſay to the time, for I never minded it, they ſent for me ſometimes at their pleaſure; but ſhe ſaid ſhe had been to viſit Father Harcourt, who took her in his Arms and ſaid, Do not cry for me, for I die in a good Cauſe; and this I told Mr. Dugdale of again: And ſhe did further ſay, If the King ſhould command me to be burnt at a Stake, I would do it, and ſo would any of the Party. Then ſaid Mr. Dugdale, while you give theſe kind Expreſſions, yet you would cut off his Head if you could: Said ſhe, you are a Rogue, and I am ſatisfied.

L. C. J. What, was it before the time that ſhe ſaid, pray be kind to Harcourt?

Mr. Serj. Maynard We call this Witneſs only in Confirmation of Dugdale's Teſtimony.

L. C. J. But Brother, here is the matter: He ſays at the time that ſhe told Dugdale he was a Rogue, and ſhe was ſatisfied; afterwards ſhe came to tamper with him to do Harcourt a kindneſs.

Mr. Wright. She ſaid many times, there were not four greater Rogues between this and Hell Gate than the King's Evidence.

L. C. J. What, was it before ſhe talked of Harcourt?

Mr. Wright. Yes, a great while.

L. C. J. That is the thing, that ſhe ſhould ſay he was a great Rogue, and yet afterwards tamper with him.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. There was ſome Love betwixt them, and they did keep Company together.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is before ſhe began to tamper with Mr. Dugdale; but that we call this Witneſs to prove is, that ſhe did afterwards tamper with him, as Mr. Dugdale tells you.

L. C. J. And the thing I ſay is, Would ſhe go to tamper with one ſhe had that Opinion of? 'Tis not impoſſible to be ſo, but it is not likely.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is not impoſſible nor improbable at all, with ſubmiſſion; who ſhould ſhe tamper with but a Rogue, or one that ſhe thought would be ſo?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. She thought as all the other Catholicks did, and did deſire to withdraw him from his Evidence againſt them.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And notwithſtanding that ſhe called him Rogue; yet ſtill the Witneſs ſays, he thought there was matter of Love between them.

Mr. At. Gen. Then we will call you Croſs, the man of the Tavern.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. It was about a matter that concerned the whole Catholick Party, and if you ask them they will call them all Rogues: But afterwards they will begin to tamper one with one, and another with another.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. And they take the ſame method with every one of them.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But this is that that is ſaid in confirmation of Dugdale's Evidence, that Dugdale did immediately after tell him, that her Buſineſs was to get him to retract his Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And he overheard ſo much, that ſhe deſired of him to be kind to Harcourt, who was her ghoſtly Father.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, as we have produced one Witneſs to confirm one part of Mr. Dugdale's Evidence; now we ſhall produce another Witneſs to prove the ſubſequent Diſcourſes, and her perſuaſion of him to retract and to ſign the Note. And for that we call Dr. Chamberlain.

Mr. At. Gen. We will call Croſs firſt to prove the meetings at the Tavern, he is the man of the Tavern. [Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. Come ask your Queſtion now.

Mr. Belwood. Pray what can you ſay concerning Mrs. Price's Diſcourſes with Mr. Dugdale?

L. C. J. Do you know Mrs. Price here?

Mr. Croſs. Yes, I do know her very well.

L. C. J. What ſay you then to her?

Mr. Croſs. I never heard any Diſcourſe from them but what was common.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But they have been often there only them two, have they not?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Did ſhe ever come to your Houſe?

Mr. Croſs. She hath been there ſeveral times.

Mr. At. Gen. I would ask you this Queſtion, Sir, Whether ſhe uſed not to come there and ſend for Mr. Dugdale when he hath not been there?

Mr. Croſs. Yes, ſhe hath been there often to enquire for him.

Mr. At. Gen. What, frequently?

Mr. Croſs. Yes, a great many times.

Mr. At. Gen. About what time of the Year?

Mr. Croſs. Laſt Summer in June, July, and ſeveral months.

L. C. J. What ſay you to September and October?

Mr. Croſs. I can't ſay the particular months, but ſhe hath been there, and deſired me to ſend for Mr. Dugdale, for ſhe had earneſt Buſineſs with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it preſently after he came to Town?

Mr. Croſs. My Lord, ſhe ſent for him before he went out of Town, and after he came to Town; before he went to the Aſſizes, and ſince he came from the Aſſizes.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray did you never hear them ſpeak about a Prieſt, one Parſons?

Mr. Croſs. I have heard ſomewhat about Mr. Parſons, that Mrs. Price did ſpeak to Mr. Dugdale, that he ſhould not proceed further againſt him than he had done.

L. C. J. Did you hear her talk about Harcourt?

Mr. Croſs. Yes, I have heard her ſpeak ſomething, but I do not know the Particulars of it.

L. C. J. But you have heard her name Harcourt's Name?

Mr. Croſs Yes, I have.

L. C. J. You do not pretend this man was by at the Agreement?

Mr. At. Gen. No, we do not: But only to prove they had frequent Diſcourſes together, and that ſhe ſent for him often about Buſineſs.

L. C. J. And 'tis to the ſame purpoſe that the other was called for, only in confirmation.

Mr. Saunders. My Lord, we pray he may be asked, Whether Mr. Dugdale did not ſometimes ſend for Mrs. Price?

Mr. Croſs. Not upon his own Account as I know of; for I have told you ſhe hath been there, and left word ſhe muſt needs ſpeak with him, and when he hath come, ſhe hath been ſent for.

Mr. Saunders. Do you know ſhe hath been ſent for at any other time?

Mr. Croſs. Not that I know of: But when he was in the Countrey, ſhe came to our Houſe, and desired that when ever he came to Town she might speak with him about earnest Business, and she was sent for.

Mr. Scroggs. But he does not say any thing of Mr. Tasborough.

L. C. J. No. He came only to the Pheasant, and that other Place.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship please, Mr. Dugdale did mention a matter that some Persons were by Direction to stand by and hear their Discourse, we have these Persons here, who will tell you how it was, Dr. Chamlain and his Clerk.

Dr. Chamberlain. My Lord, some time in September, Mr. Dugdale acquainted me, that there was a Design to draw him off from his Evidence, and he told me that the Duke of York was named in it. I said, if it were so, it were a thing of great moment, and if it could be confirmed it were well. He told me, if I would come to his Chamber some Morning, Mrs. Price should be there, and I should hear the Discourse; and accordingly I did come the 22*d*, or 23*d* of September, and was there about an hour, and went into the Closet with my Clerk, and bid Mr. Dugdale speak with an indifferent Voice, to see if I could hear what they said. He did so, and we did hear him. At length Mrs. Price came, the Gentlewoman I had never seen, but he called her by that Name, and she answered to it. They had several Discourses, I could not overhear all, but the Sum was, that the Spanish Ambassador was unwilling to treat with him, because it was dangerous, and he must make use of an Interpreter, and that the Duke of York would protect him, pardon him and give him a thousand Pound to maintain him: You know, says he, Mrs. Price, that I began not this Intrigue with you, but you proposed it to me. She owned it, that she had proposed it to him.

L. C. J. Now how can you tell this is the Gentlewoman?

Dr. Chamberlain. Nay, I don't know that, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. We don't pretend that, but will prove it by another Witness by and by.

Dr. Chamberlain. It was about the 22*d*, or 23*d* of September, a Monday Morning, as I remember.

Mr. Just. Jones. Was Tasborough there?

Dr. Chamberlain. No, my Lord, none but them two.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Dr. Chamberlain. She did press Mr. Dugdale very much to go with her to the Gate-House, he would willingly have excused it, but she pressed him so earnestly, telling him she would not go without him, that they went together, and he came up afterwards to me, where I had staid all the time.

L. C. J. Did you hear her say any thing what she would have him do for that thousand Pound?

Dr. Chamberlain. I cannot tell truly any thing, but only to be gone.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. You could hear that?

Dr. Chamberlain. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Whither?

Dr. Chamberlain. Nay, I don't remember that.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. This was before the Note, my Lord.

Dr. Chamberlain. Yes, my Lord, for that was brought me afterwards.

Mr. Recorder. Call the other Witness, Cleave.

L. C. J. How long was this before Harcourt's Tryal?

Dr. Chamberlain. I don't know that, my Lord, it was in September.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. But the Tryal was long before that, soon after Trinity-Term.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what did Mr. Dugdale say to her when she pressed him to be gone, did he not make any Objection?

Dr. Chamberlain. Possibly he might, I did not hear all that was said.

Mr. Cleave. I was there the 22*d* of September.

L. C. J. In the Closet with Dr. Chamberlain?

Mr. Cleave. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Had you ever seen Mrs. Price?

Mr. Cleave. No, never in my Life, as I know of.

L. C. J. What did you hear then?

Mr. Cleave. Before that Mrs. Price came, we shut up our selves in the Closet, and desired Mr. Dugdale to make a feigned Discourse to see whether we could hear him, and he did so, and we heard indifferently well. We bid him to speak a little loud that we might be sure to hear him. We staid there almost half an hour before she came. Afterwards she came up and Mr. Dugdale saluted her by the Name of Mrs. Price, to which she answer'd. He ask'd her, When shall I go to the Spanish Ambassador's? [This I heard distinctly; for I could see her Body, but not her Face, she stood with her Back to the Door.] 'Tis not convenient at present, said she, to go; for his Interpreter is out of Town. Then Mrs. Price was saying, If so be you will come over to the Church of Rome, and take off your Evidence, you shall have 1000 l. secured to you: But how, said he? Said she, I will bring to you in a Week's time a Person of Quality that shall secure and confirm it to you.

Dr. Chamberlain. That I heard too.

Mr. Cleave. That will be well, said Mr. Dugdale; I had rather do that way than any other. Said she, you shall have the Duke of York's Protection, and a Pardon not only for your Body, but for your Soul.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. A large Profer!

Mr. Cleave. And afterwards, said he, if I should come over again to the Church, what signifies my going out of the way when there is Dr. Otes and others to go on with the Evidence? Said she, We do not care so much for them, for the Duke's Eye is only upon you.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Did you hear that, Dr. Chamberlain?

Dr. Chamberlain. No, my Lord; the Duke was named indeed, but I do not remember that particular. And she several times desired him to speak softly; and then Mr. Dugdale was so honest, that he repeated it over again, that if we had not heard him before, we might understand him.

L. C. J. Now prove this Gentlewoman to be the Person.

Mr. Cleave. She afterwards pressed him to go with her to the Gate-house, which he seemed unwilling to do, but went, and we have a Man here that stood below the Stairs, that saw her come in and go out.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Call Holmes (Who was sworn.) What can you say about this Mrs. Price?

L. C. J. Do you know Mrs. Price?

Holmes. Yes, That is the Woman.

Mr. Belwood. Did you ſee her at Dr. Chamberlain's?

Holmes. I ſaw her at Mr. Dugdale's that morning that my maſter was there.

L. C. J. What time do you ſpeak of?

Holmes. The 22*d* of September I went along with my maſter.

L. C. J. Who is your maſter?

Holmes. Dr. Chamberlain.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was it?

Holmes. On a monday morning between 8 and 9 a Clock.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. That is the ſame time you ſpeak of, is it not?

Dr. Chamberlain, and Mr. Cleave. } Yes, my Lord, he went along with us.

Holmes. This is the Woman that came down with Mr. Dugdale; I took great notice of her, and know her very well again: There were ſome Words ſpoke in the ſhop, but I don't know what they were.

L. C. J. Dr. Chamberlain, ſhe went out of the Chamber with him, did ſhe not?

Dr. Chamberlain. Yes, my Lord, ſhe did.

L. C. J. How often have you ſeen her?

Holmes. I ſaw her go into the Houſe, come out with Mr. Dugdale to go to the Gatehouſe, and when they came back again from Weſtminſter, from the Gatehouſe.

L. C. J. How often have you ſeen her beſides? You took notice of her when ſhe came down ſtairs, and when ſhe came back again?

Holmes. Yes.

L. C. J. And this is the Woman upon your Oath?

Holmes. Yes, upon my Oath.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. She came down with Dugdale, and would have him go along with her to the Gatehouſe.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we ſay that Mr. Dugdale did acquaint Mr. Hambden, and Mr. Charlton, and my Lord of Shaftsbury with the Buſineſs; we deſire Mr. Hambden and Mr. Charlton may be called, who promiſed to be here.

[But they appeared not.]

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, here are the Clerks of the Council, they will all give your Lordſhip an account, that this Woman and the Gentleman did acknowledge this matter before the Council, and there did deny what they had ſworn at firſt.

L. C. J. Who do you ſwear firſt?

Mr. At. Gen. Sir Robert Southwell,

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. Come, Sir Robert, what do you know?

Sir Robert Southwell. My Lord, ſhe, this Gentlewoman, Mrs. Price, was about the 23*d* of October examined before the Council, and being examined, we were commanded to take Notes, the ſeveral Clerks of the Council, and we did take Notes, which were long, and, my Lord, I muſt refer to thoſe Notes.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Have you thoſe Notes?

Sir R. Southwell. Yes. 'Tis hard for me to give my Evidence, unleſs ſome particular Queſtion be asked me, becauſe they are very long.

Mr. At. Gen. Then I ask you, Sir, this particular Queſtion, Whether that Gentlewoman did acknowledge the Paper ſhe is charg'd with?

Sir R. Southwell. My Lord, I do remember Mrs. Price, when ſhe was asked who it was that framed the Paper for her (becauſe it ſeemed to the Lords as if it had been a thing ſo very well framed, that it was beyond a Woman's Capacity to do it) Mrs. Price ſaid, that ſhe ſtudied it herſelf, and indicted it her ſelf, and one Mrs. Man, as I think, writ it out for her; but ſhe took it upon her ſelf that ſhe had ſtudied it (that particular Word) and contrived it.

Mr. At. Gen. What did Mr. Tasborough ſay?

Sir R. Southwell. My Lord, I do alſo remember that Mr. Tasborough was cited before the Council-Board; and being asked about this Paper——

L. C. J. Was it ſhewn him?

Sir R. Southwell. I verily believe it was; it was read to him. Mr. Tasborough did ſpeak very cautiouſly, and as prudently as he could in the matter: He did not poſitively ſay he had preſſed Mr. Dugdale to ſign it; but did tell Mr. Dugdale, That unleſs he did ſign it, he could not proceed to get him any Favour, for that was to be the Foundation to teſtifie that he was a man of that ſorrow that he had expreſſed himſelf to Mrs. Price.

L. C. J. Did he own that to Mr. Dugdale?

Sir R. Southwell. Yes; and he added, my Lord, further (to do him juſtice in all he ſaid) in caſe Mr. Dugdale had ſign'd the Paper, he would preſently have carried it before a Magiſtrate.

Mr. At. Gen. I think we need not trouble your Lordſhip any further at preſent; we leave it here till we hear what they ſay.

Mr. Sanders. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for Mrs. Price, that is one of the Defendants in this Indictment; which, as hath been opened, does ſet forth, That ſhe did contrive to ſuborn the King's Evidence before the Tryals of thoſe Perſons, and to ſuppreſs it; and afterwards to retract the Evidence given, and go off from what before he had ſworn, to diſparage the Juſtice of the Realm, and to make it be believed, that thoſe Perſons who were condemned and executed for this Conſpiracy, were innocent, and had wrong done them by him. Now for that matter, that which we have to offer for her is this: Mr. Dugdale and Mrs. Price were Fellow-ſervants in my Lord Aſton's Family, and there they did contract a more than ordinary Familiarity; for in truth they did contract a marriage, and Mr. Dugdale did promiſe her marriage; but afterwards Mr. Dugdale having ſome other Deſign, did deſert her, and ſhe came to London and lived here; but afterwards when he came up to London, he thought fit to renew his Suit, and did not only ſend for her when he firſt came to London; but we have it in Proof, that from time to time he had continually ſent for her, and would not be quiet without her; and when ſhe denied to come upon his ſending in his own Name, he ſent in another Woman's Name, whom he knew to be an Acquaintance of hers: And thus there continued all along a great intimacy between them, inſomuch that ſeveral Perſons, and among them one of the King's Witneſſes, did obſerve they were ſpeaking about marrying, and did think they did intend to be married in a ſhort time; my Lord, what Diſcourſe might paſs between them I don't know; for ought I perceive ſhe is prov'd to be a Papiſt, and 'tis very like ſhe would ſolicit one with whom ſhe had that familiarity, for thoſe of her own Party, as much as ſhe could; but as far as I perceive by this Evidence that hath been given, he under colour of kindneſs and pretence that he would marry her, her, and ſending for her from time to time, at laſt to rid his Hands of her, hath put this upon her, That ſhe ſhould ſolicit to ſuborn him againſt his Conſcience to withdraw his Evidence. She is a kind of weak Solicitrix for matter of Judgment and Reaſon; I know not what other prevalency ſhe might have with him by any other thing, but for Judgment I think——

L. C. J. If ſhe penn'd that her ſelf, as ſhe did acknowledge and avow ſhe did, ſhe was a Woman of good Judgment certainly.

Mr. Sanders. I perceive he was of good Judgment, to get rid of one he was weary of by this means.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Alas! Alas! This is ſuch a Deſign indeed of counterproving the King's Evidence.

Mr. Sanders. Mr. Dugdale hath ſworn, That this was her Intrigue, and ſhe firſt began with him: If Mrs. Price be admitted to ſwear, who is the Defendant, as well as Mr. Dugdale, who is the Proſecutor, ſhe would tell you that Mr. Dugdale did contrive this matter himſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. She would deſtroy his Evidence that way, that's very well.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Dr. Chamberlain and his Clerk both ſwear, That he told her, You know it was not I begun this Intrigue, but you.

Mr. Sanders. And if ſhe had had but ſo much Wit to have planted Witneſſes to have taken Advantage of his Words, ſhe had counter-worked him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. They will learn ſuch ways ſoon enough of themſelves, you need not teach them.

Mr. Sanders. If you pleaſe we will go on with our Evidence, and call Witneſſes to prove, that Mr. Dugdale had contracted himſelf to her in marriage; and this is a very unkind ill thing in him to ſerve us thus.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr Sanders, you ought to remember, Publica privatis, &c. A man ſhould prefer the publick good and ſafety of the Nation before ſuch a miſtreſs as this is.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But hitherto the Proof runs, that ſhe ſought him, and not he her.

Mr. Sanders. But they were contracted firſt.

Mr Juſt. Dolben. And you hear what the maſter of the Horſeſhoe ſays about her leaving meſſages for him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He hath very good reaſon why he ſhould not marry her, for what I can perceive.

L. C. J. 'Tis much they ſhould be contracted, when ſhe told him he was a great Rogue.

Mr. Sanders. It may be ſhe might, I know not what cauſe he hath now to be diſpleaſed with her; but it may be ſhe might be diſpleaſed with him then. But I beſeech your Lordſhip and the Jury to obſerve, that tho' ſhe did tell him he was a Rogue, yet it was afterwards that ſhe did ſolicit and ſuborn him.

Mr. Juſt Pemberton. And therefore ſhe thought plainly he was fitter for her purpoſe, becauſe ſhe took him for a Rogue.

Mr. Sanders. But if ſhe had a purpoſe to ſuborn him, ſhe would not call him Rogue to his Face; that was not the way to inſinuate into him. I deſire Sir John Nicholas may be ſworn.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. What Queſtions do you ask Sir John?

Mr Sanders. I deſire, my Lord, Sir John would tell us, whether Mr. Dugdale in his hearing did not own he was contracted to Mrs. Price?

Sir John Nicholas. No truly Sir, that I know of.

Mr. Sanders. Pray Sir, will you pleaſe to recollect it; it was when Mr. Dugdale was before the Council.

Sir John Nicholas. Mr. Dugdale did then own ſome Propoſals of marriage, but nothing of a Contract.

L. C. J. 'Tis your Women-witneſſes are like to do that.

Mr. Sanders. That is all, Sir, you remember?

Sir John Nicholas. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Have you put the beſt foot forwards, Mr. Sanders?

Mr. Sanders. Which is Mary Benwell? Swear Mary Benwell. [Which was done.] We will now prove he ſent for us ſeveral times; we did not go after him ſo much. What do you know concerning Mr. Dugdale's ſending for Mrs. Price?

Benwell. He ſent for her to my Houſe ſeveral times.

L. C. J. Did he lie at your Houſe?

Benwell. No, my Lord, he did not.

L. C. J. Where is your Houſe?

Benwell. In Brownlow ſtreet.

L. C. J. What, is it a publick Houſe?

Benwell. It is an Alehouſe, the Green Lattice.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He told you ſo himſelf, that he did meet her at the Green Lattice.

L. C. J. What was their Diſcourſe when they met?

Benwell. I know nothing of that, I did not hear him ſay any thing; but only he would come in and ſay, Let your Boy go for Mrs. Price.

L. C. J. When was this?

Benwell. The laſt time was Sunday Sevennight before ſhe was taken.

Mr. Recorder. She always came when ſhe was ſent for?

Benwell. Yes, if ſhe was within.

Mr. Sanders. How often did he ſend for her?

Benwell. Above 20 times.

L. C. J. What great inference can you make from that? methinks 'tis as much againſt you as it is for you; for it proves there was a great familiarity and frequent meetings between them; and if it be ſo, it ſhews as if ſhe had that great confidence in him, as to attempt upon, and attack him in this affair.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Indeed, Mr. Sanders, if you would have proved an Inducement to Mr. Dugdale's Evidence, you could not have prov'd it better, that ſhe had great confidence in him; ſhe had an opinion, and reckon'd he was ſure to her, and ſo had a greater influence over him than another.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. He ſent for her to the Green Lattice, ſhe ſent for him to the Horſeſhoe; the maſter of the Houſe ſweareth that ſhe ſent for him 20 times, ſo they might ſend for one another 20 times apiece.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And he never came to ſeek for her but when ſhe had been there, and left word for him before.

Mr. Sanders. Now, my Lord, if you pleaſe, we will go on to prove, That when ſhe refuſed to come, he ſent for her in another Body's Name.

L. C. J. What will that do? Or what does that prove?

Mr. Sanders. It is not probable then that ſhe ſhould ſolicit him: And juſt at the laſt here are ſome Witneſſes planted, and ſome words are taken from her mouth, that it was her Intrigue all along.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr. Sanders, You do not ſhew the time when thoſe frequent ſendings and comings were.

L. C. J. It ſhews that which they have prov'd, that ſhe believed he was fond of her, and ſhe was confident of him.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I ſuppoſe Mr. Sanders means, and does drive at this, to ſhew that it was to drive on the Intrigue on his part that theſe frequent meſſages were ſent.

Then another Woman Witneſs was called and ſworn.

Witneſs. My Lord, at the time that the Proclamation was for the baniſhing of all Papiſts out of Town, ſhe came to me and ſaid, If Mr. Dugdale come to ask for me, don't offer to tell him where I am.

L. C. J. When was this?

Witneſs. Long before Eaſter Term, before the Papiſts were baniſhed out of Town.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton, } This was another part of and Mr. Juſt. Jones. } the Intrigue.

Witneſs. So Mr. Dugdale came to me, and ask'd me where Mrs. Price was? I told him I could not tell; but if you have any Letters I will convey them by a meſſenger or ſome Footboy to her.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did he ſend for her at any time in September?

Witneſs. The laſt time he ſent for her was the Sunday was ſe'night before ſhe was taken.

L. C. J. Did he frequently ſend for her a month or ſix weeks before that?

Witneſs. Yes, ſeveral times.

Mr. Sanders. Then ſwear Bridget Lee.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sanders. Pray Miſtreſs, you that ſpoke laſt, did Mrs. Price ever deny her ſelf to him, but that once when ſhe left that word with you?

Witneſs. Never to me, my Lord, but that time.

Mr Sanders. Bridget Lee, Pray tell my Lord, Whether Mrs. Price did deny her ſelf, and the way he uſed to get her to him?

Lee. Mr. Dugdale came into this Gentlewoman's Houſe, and coming into the Houſe I was in the paſſage; he asked me, Sweetheart, let me ſpeak with you; he deſired me to tell him where Mrs. Price was? I told him I could not tell: I wiſh, ſaid he, you would fetch her to me; no, ſaid I, I would not do it for 5 s. He clapp'd his Hand in his Pocket, and ſaid he, I will give you 5 s. No, ſaid I, I will not do it if you would give me 5 l. Let every Tub ſtand upon its own bottom.

L. C. J. What did you mean by thoſe Words, Let every Tub ſtand upon its own bottom?

Lee. I would not meddle nor make with any thing but my own Concerns.

L. C. J. How long was this before the Tryal of Harcourt?

Lee. A quarter of a Year before that.

L. C. J. It was before he went out of Town, the Circuit.

Lee. Yes, my Lord, ſo it was.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. There had been no tampering then, this was before the tampering.

L. C. J. It is no matter when the tampering was, but when Mr. Dugdale ſent for her, and ſhe refuſed.

Mr. Sanders. I wonder what they did together all the time before, if they were not tampering.

L. C. J. They made Love together.

Mr. Sanders. What was the occaſion that ſhe refuſed?

Witneſs I underſtand that Mr. Dugdale did find I was fearful of my ſelf; you may venture, ſaid he, for I would not do her the leaſt wrong, nor the leaſt Hair of her Head ſhould not periſh.

L. C. J. This was long before he went into the Countrey?

Witneſs. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Before the tampering?

Witneſs. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sanders. Where is that other Witneſs, Mrs. Holland? [Who was ſworn.] What do you know of Mr. Dugdale's ſending for Mrs. Price? I would know the laſt time, and where it was?

Holland. My Lord, I do not know what place it was he ſent for her to, nor the laſt time, but it was ſince Chriſtmas.

L. C. J. Since Chriſtmas?

Holland. No, before Chriſtmas, but I do not remember the Day.

L. C. J. How do you know that he ſent for her?

Holland. I was told by the People ſo, That a meſſenger was come from him for her.

L. C. J. You did not ſee him?

Holland. No, I did not.

L. C. J. She ſays nothing to the purpoſe.

Holland. I know Mr. Dugdale was in her Company one Sunday laſt Lent, and was there two Hours.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. 'Tis agreed of all ſides they were Acquaintance, and had great familiarity.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ay, or ſhe would never have had the confidence to have attempted upon him in this manner.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more?

Mr. Sanders. Here is one more, that is Mrs. Sheldon.

L. C. J. What do you call her for?

Mr. Sanders. To prove that there was a Note left to warn her to avoid Mr. Dugdale's Company.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Why did you not?

Mr. Sanders. It had been better for us if we had.

L. C. J. When was that Note?

Mr. Sanders. Lately.

L. C. J. That will do no good.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Come, call her however, they will ſay, their Witneſſes were not heard elſe. [And ſhe was call'd, but did not appear.

L. C. J. Come, ſhe is not here.

Mr. Sanders. Then, my Lord, we offer this as Evidence, That we had no Deſign to Suborn him to retract what he had ſaid; the occaſion of our being with him we have given you an Account of.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Why did you write your Note then?

L. C. J. Mr. Sanders, what you have ſaid amounts to nothing to avoid the Evidence that hath been given for the King; for all your Teſtimony ſays little more, than what he ſaid at firſt; That we were Fellow-ſervants, and well acquainted; we made frequent Viſits, and when I came to Town I went to ſee her, and ſhe came to me; They had no Diſcourſe of this ſame matter ter of tampering till the Day before Harcourt's Tryal, but Sir Robert Southwell does say, She owned that she did study the Note, which is the great Business in the Case: For if she prepared the Note for him to sign, what can be said more?

Mr. Sanders. We can say no more but that Mr. Dugdale might Dictate it.

L. C. J. No, she own'd she Dictated it, and got Mrs. Man to write it for her.

Mr. Sanders. I do not know, my Lord——

L. C. J. But you may know if you will; for Sir Robert Southwell hath sworn, That she being examined at the Council-Board, the Lords of the Council had so good an Opinion of the Skill of it, that they asked her, Who fram'd it for her? And she answered, She did it her self.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Mr. Sanders, if you be not satisfy'd, here is another of the Clerks of the Council.

Sir John Nicholas. All that Sir Robert Southwell hath said is true.

Sir Thomas Doleman. All that Sir Robert hath said I can swear to every particular.

L. C. J. Well, What say you, Mr. Pollexfen?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, if you please to spare me a Word for the other Defendant Mr. Tasborough: There is in the Indictment two Things charg'd on the Defendants; One, That they should persuade Mr. Dugdale not to give Evidence against Harcourt: For that there is no manner of Evidence against Mr. Tasborough, but he ought to be found Not Guilty for that part.

L. C. J. That is true, of that he must be acquitted.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then for the other part of the Charge, That they should endeavour to persuade Mr. Dugdale to Retract the Evidence he had formerly given, for a sum of mony, and other Rewards: We do reckon, That as this Evidence stands before your Lordships, whatsoever is proved against Mrs. Price, will have no influence upon Mr. Tasborough; for altho' Dugdale and Price have had Practices and Designs amongst themselves, unless he be a Party to them, if he have not a part in them they will not affect him: Then the next thing is, we must distinguish the Evidence as it stands, or else it may not be by the Jury so well understood how they are differenced one from another; for I would not mince the Evidence, but let it stand as it is: And how far Mr. Tasborough is concerned in it, and how far may be done by him as an honest man in this matter, or how far it is an illegal Act, will be to be determin'd by you. Now there is only two meetings that Mr. Dugdale hath had with Mr. Tasborough; and in the next place, there is no other Witness to prove it but Dugdale himself, excepting only what Sir Robert Southwell says of the Confession at the Council, which, I think, will not be very much neither, as I shall shew when I come to that particular. Mr. Dugdale says, that at the first meeting, the 12*th* of October, at the Green Lattice in Fullers Rents, Mr. Tasborough did say unto him, That Mrs. Price had told him, Mr. Dugdale would Retract his Evidence, and he was come to confirm what she had said.

L. C. J. Nay, but what she had promised.

Mr. Pollexfen. Yes, what she had promised; and and that he came from the Duke, and that it was charitably done of him to Retract, he goes no further: And that if he had done amiss he should be sorry for it. This is the Evidence, as near as I can remember to repeat it.

L. C. J. Part of it.

Mr. Pollexfen. As to the first meeting——

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Look you, do not mistake, Mr. Pollexfen, but observe this: For Mr. Dugdale does swear he told him, If you will Retract the Evidence you have given, then all she hath promised shall be made good.

Mr. Pollexfen. That he came to confirm what she had promised. I would repeat it as right as I could, because, my Lord, I hope, as this Case stands, that notwithstanding all that hath been proved, yet Mr. Tasborough hath done nothing amiss. Then I come to the second meeting.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. At the first meeting the Note was produc'd.

L. C. J. No, I think not.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. Was it, Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. Yes, he does swear so, and that he read it, and press'd Mr. Dugdale to sign it; and that this was the last time, and it must be done before the Duke went into Scotland, or something to that purpose. This, my Lord, under favour, may all stand and be very true, and yet Mr. Tasborough not criminal, with submission. For if so be Mrs. Price were so far in her intercourse with Mr. Dugdale, that as appears by his own Evidence he did seem to comply and treat, as if he were yielding, and to do what they would have him do, concerning his going beyond Seas, or being kept in a Protestant Lord's House, and she had such Confidence as to tell him how the Priests were sent away, and how he might be convey'd away: All this thus far comes to agree with what Mr. Tasborough says for his own Defence: For Mr. Tasborough says Mrs. Price did tell me, that Mr. Dugdale was sorry for what he had sworn, and would Retract all the Evidence he had formerly given. Thus he says: I'll apply it to our Case anon; and this appears by Mr. Dugdale's own Evidence: For when he does repeat what Mr. Tasborough told him, he says, That he said, Mrs. Price told him of it, and he hath not told you, that he did contradict it for false.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Pray consider; He tells you, that Tasborough said, that Mrs. Price had acquainted him with what Propositions she had made of 1000 l. and that he was the man that was come to confirm the Promises she had made.

L. C. J. That presses you, that is the truth of it: If that had not been in the Case, perhaps you don't talk much out of the way. 'Tis true, your Observation is right.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. 'Tis ingenious indeed, but 'twill not hold out.

L. C. J. When Tasborough comes into the Company to be acquainted with Mr. Dugdale, at that time Mr. Dugdale had been advised to comply, or seem to do so to find out the Plot and Design, and what he could get out by it; and without question, to pursue that end, he did shew yieldingness, and as you observe, for ought Tasborough knew, she might be sincere: But was it a good way for him to tell him? There is the matter in effect he does tell him so; If you will Retract your Evidence, according to this Note that was produced by her, and read by him, you shall have have a 1000 l. for your pains: Can you anſwer that?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Or can you anſwer the other, That he ſhould ſay, She hath acquainted me with what you propoſe; that is, That you would Retract all, and go out of the way, and be no more an Evidence; and if you would do that, that ſhe hath acquainted me with her Propoſition, which I come to confirm, that ſhe would give you 1000 l. What can be made of that?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And withal, formerly there was a Diſcourſe of ſome Perſon of Quality that ſhould come to him; he deſired that ſome ſuch one ſhould be a Security for the money, and afterwards ſhe brought Mr. Tasborough, and ſaid, That was the Gentleman ſhe told him of.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Come, Mr. Pollexfen, take this too: What had Mr. Tasborough to do to uſe the Duke of York's Name? And to ſay, That he had Authority from him to propoſe theſe things; which certainly is a very great wrong to ſo great a Prince.

L. C. J. That needed not to a penitent Perſon, that was ſorry for what he had done.

Mr. Pollexfen. He does indeed ſay, That Mr. Tasborough ſhould be the man that ſhould ſecure the money.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And there is one thing farther, to take in all that Mr. Tasborough did likewiſe ſay to Mr. Dugdale; That there is no harm in doing this, that it is a very charitable Act, and that he would do well in it.

L. C. J. But they anſwer that by ſaying, Suppoſing it to be true, that Dugdale had Remorſe, then it would be a very good Action; but to talk of 1000 l. to be given for it, there is the Crime.

Mr. Pollexfen. Whether my Anſwer will take with your Lordſhip or no, I can't tell; but the Anſwer I would give is this; There are ſeveral things in that Paper, as amongſt the reſt, That he ſhould fall under great Diſlike and Danger, and therefore was forced to hide and ſecure himſelf, for fear of thoſe whom he ſhould make his Enemies by it, and that was Terror enough to any man that ſhould run into ſuch a Retraction. Therefore now he muſt live when he hath done this, and ſo we ſhould apply the other part of the Diſcourſe, whatever money ſhe had promiſed to take off his fears of want, and ſo his coming there was to make good that part of the Paper, which ſays, he muſt be protected and maintained, and preſerved, that he may ſee he hath a ſubſiſtence and proviſion for him, if he did deſerve it. And, my Lord, it will be greatly diſtinguiſhing in our Caſe, and turn much upon this Point, with ſubmiſſion, if I give or offer money to any man to ſwear a Falſhood or Retract the Truth, 'tis a very great Crime, and if we are guilty of that, undoubtedly our Crime is very bad; but in order to the bringing of Truth to diſcovery, and to have a Retraction, not of a Truth, but of a Falſhood, and to preſerve that Witneſs from periſhing, I may promiſe him protection and ſubſiſtence.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Then you have found out a better way than the Devil himſelf could have ſuggeſted to uphold Subornation.

L. C. J. Upon my word, if that were a way that were allowable, then woe be to us, we ſhould eaſily have all the Witneſſes tamper'd with by the Temptation of 1000 l. Reward. Do you think that is a good thing for a man to ſay, This thing was raſhly ſaid, if you will unſay't, you ſhall have ſuch a Reward? People would be apt to bite at ſuch a Bait, and we do not live in ſo virtuous an Age, that 1000 l. will not Tempt a man to unſay what he hath ſaid at firſt, tho' what he ſaid then was true.

Mr. Pollexfen. It were an unjuſt and unfitting thing, if it were as you ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Nay, Mr. Pollexfen, conſider, theſe things muſt not be done by any one; their way, if they had been convinced of the Truth, had been to have carry'd the Complaint to a Magiſtrate, and there to detect him by what he had ſaid; not to corrupt him, and perſiſt in it, by telling him, if he would do ſo and ſo, he ſhould have 1000 l. By this you let in all manner of Temptations to Witneſſes, that we ſhall never know where we are.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Dugdale (becauſe I will ſhew you all very fair play, I think very well of Mr. Dugdale.)

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He hath carry'd himſelf always well.

L. C. J. Yes truly, I know nothing to the contrary: And pray tell upon your Oath, and tell the Truth; Did Mr. Tasborough, when he read the Note, ask of you, Is this true? Did he inquire of you, Whether or no you were really a Convert, and, Whether your Sorrow and Repentance were true?

Mr. Dugdale. No, he never did.

L. C. J. Did he ask you, If you could do it with a ſafe Conſcience?

Mr. Dugdale. No, nothing of Conſcience was ever nam'd in it.

L. C. J. Did he ask you, Whether it was true?

Mr. Dugdale. He never nam'd Truth or Falſhood: It was only to get me over to Retract what I had ſaid.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What is a Temptation, if this be not?

L. C. J. Truly I ask this Queſtion, That the World may ſee, we would find out the Truth by all the ways we can; for if he had been ſolicitous with him, and asked him, Whether he could do this ſafely, and with a good Conſcience, and whether the matter of it were true, it would have gone a great way; but now I have ask'd Mr. Dugdale this upon his Oath, and he ſays it was only to get him over to them.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And then conſider all that is ſaid againſt Mrs. Price is turn'd upon you, except that of the contrivance to keep him from giving his Evidence againſt Harcourt. A very ſubtle Invention it was; but whether Mr. Tasborough was in the buſineſs of the Note, in contriving it, I cannot tell, and it ſignifies nothing: But ſhe having contriv'd as ill a Note as can be penn'd, he is as much guilty; for he ſolicits as well as ſhe, and countenances it ſo far, as to undertake farther, that the money and the Bribes ſhe had offered, ſhould be paid and made good.

L. C. J. Mr. Dugdale, Mr. Tasborough talked with you of going away?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Adviſed you to be gone?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he did: He told me I were beſt to abſent my ſelf for a while beyond Sea, and ſhould have convenient paſſage.

L. C. J. Did he mention the Duke of York? What ſaid he?

Mr. Dug-

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he ſaid he had acquainted the Duke, and the Duke had given him Orders to preſs that Note home; for, ſaid he, the Duke will not believe you will be true, if you do not ſign this Note.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Tis never to be endur'd, that you ſhould abuſe ſo Noble a Prince.

L. C. J. Did you tell Mr. Tasborough then, If I come over, there is Otes, and Bedloe, and Prance ſtill left?

Mr. Dugdale. I did ſay ſo to Mrs. Price, but never to him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You ſee then what he would have this Note ſign'd for, to ſtrengthen the Catholick Cauſe.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, Will you pleaſe to ſpare me one Word for Mr. Tasborough: I confeſs the Evidence does ſeem by Mr. Dugdale to preſs us very hard, and particularly upon that matter of the money; but as Mrs. Price had manag'd the Buſineſs, Mr. Tasborough might have been very innocent: But, my Lord, we muſt make that Defence for our ſelves that we can in a caſe of this Nature; and therefore it will be, I hope, no Reflection to ſay, We muſt counterprove Mr. Dugdale, and diſprove him as far as we can, to acquit our ſelves. My Lord, it is a very great Crime that we are here charg'd with, and the Crime being ſo heinous, ought to be well proved, and with unqueſtionable Evidence: Mr. Tasborough, if he be guilty of what he is here accuſed of, is a very ill man; but men are not drawn up to great degrees of illneſs ſo ſoon, as at the firſt Act to attempt ſuch heinous Offences: And 'tis not probable, that at his firſt ſlip he ſhould be guilty of a Fault of ſo high a Nature, and ſo very ill as this is. My Lord, we ſhall call ſome Perſons that ſhall make it appear to your Lordſhip, that after Mrs. Price had given us Information of this Repentance of Mr. Dugdale's, we did make application to a Perſon of very great Honour, no leſs than my Lord Privy Seal, that Mr. Dugdale might receive the Diſcouragement which it was fitting he ſhould in ſuch a matter. My Lord, we muſt call our Witneſſes, to prove Mr. Tasborough to be a man of a very good Reputation, that he never did any ſuch thing before; and I hope we ſhall give your Lordſhip ſuch an Account of him, that the Jury will have reaſon to believe, That Mr. Tasborough is not ſo guilty as he is repreſented, but was drawn into this matter, whatever it is. Pray call a Witneſs to ſhew that Mr. Tasborough acquainted any Lord of the Privy Council.

Then my Lord Chief Juſtice went off the Bench, to ſit on Writs of Error in the Exchequer-Chamber.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. If Mr. Tasborough be drawn in, 'tis by Mrs. Price, but not by Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Thompſon. Is my Lord Privy Seal in Court?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You know he is not here.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You toſs great Names about, and make great noiſe with them, when you know they are not here.

Mr. Thompſon. If he had not fallen ill, ſure he would have been here, What ſay you, Mr. Tasborough?

Tasborough. My Lord, I was to attend my Lord Privy Seal Yeſterday, and I deſired him to do me the Honour to be here to Day, becauſe I was to come to my Tryal: He told me he had Buſineſs that would hinder him from coming; but, ſaid he, if the Attorney-General will inform himſelf of me, I am ready to teſtifie, that you gave me Information firſt of Mr. Dugdale's Recantation, before it came before the Council.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. We will do your Client this Right, Mr. Thompſon, as to ask whether my Lord Privy Seal was at the Council, and ſaid ſo much then.

Mr. Scroggs. He was not that Day, but we acquainted my Lord Privy Seal before that; but Sir Robert Southwell does him this Right, as to ſay, that he did declare, if Mr. Dugdale had ſign'd that Note, he would have gone with it immediately to a Magiſtrate.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. How does that appear he ſaid ſo?

Sir R. Southwell. My Lord, he did further ſay, after he had ſaid, that he would have carried it to a Magiſtrate in that caſe, he did ſay, he had been once or twice with my Lord Privy Seal.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ay, he did ſay ſo; but there was no Evidence but his Allegation.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Was my Lord Privy Seal at Council at that time?

Sir R. Southwell No, I think not, my Lord.

Mr. Scroggs. 'Tis a very ſtrange thing we ſhould be ſo forward to promiſe for Mrs. Price, if we had not thought Mr. Dugdale real.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. 'Tis a ſign you had a great inclination to the thing: Well, call your Witneſſes.

Mr. Thompſon. Call Sir Richard Aſhfield and Alderman Barker.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. 'Tis a fine thing this to make a long Brief with to no purpoſe.

Mr. Scroggs. We have a ſwinging Brief here indeed.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Ay, you come with a great Brief, but no Witneſſes.

Mr. Thompſon. If we do not call the Witneſſes nam'd in our Brief, our Client will take it ill; if they do not appear, we can't help it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You have forgot what you moved the Court about Tempeſt.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But we have not forgotten, that about ten Days ago you mov'd to put off this Tryal, becauſe Mr. Tempeſt was your material Witneſs; and being ask'd what he could prove, you ſaid it was how you were brought acquainted with Mr. Dugdale: But becauſe the Court did not think fit to put off the Tryal, Mr. Attorney did ſay, he would ſee if he had been examined, and what he had depoſed, and report it to us; and afterwards did ſo, and did conſent here that at the Tryal you ſhould make uſe of his Examination if you pleas'd; but we do not ſee that you make any uſe at all of it.

Mr. Thompſon. We that are of Counſel muſt make uſe of our Client's Witneſſes as we have them in our Brief.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. We deſire they ſhould call their Witneſſes, and not name Names.

Mr. Scroggs. We deſire that Examination may be read.

Mr. At. Gen. Produce it then.

Mr. Thompſon. We have it not.

Mr. Recorder. And we for the King do not uſe it as Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, if it be here you ſhall have it read, though I believe Mr. Tempeſt ſwears ſwears little to your purpoſe; for as I take it he ſays he does not know Mr. Dugdale at all.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But I told you that Mr. Tasborough puts you upon Trifles.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But whatſoever they put you upon, you ſhould not trifle with us.

Mr. Thompſon. Do you deſire they ſhould be read, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. We can't read them without the Conſent of both Parties. Do you conſent to them firſt for whom they are produced?

Mr. Tasborough. I only deſire to know by them how I came acquainted with Mrs. Price.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, you hear what Mr. Attorney ſays is in them; will you have them read?

Mr. Scroggs. 'Tis to no purpoſe then, if that be all.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I deſire to ſpeak but a few words, and I am bound to ſpeak them.——

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Brother, they have more Witneſſes.

Mr. Pollexfen. Theſe we ſhall now call are to this purpoſe, to prove Mr. Tasborough's Reputation, that he is a very honeſt man.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. I don't ſee but that he may be a fair-condition'd man in all other things.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Look you, thoſe that are in their Dealings ſometimes honeſt fair men, yet when they come to be of that Religion, there they are debauched, and there they are brought to do as wicked things as can be, in favour, and to ſupport that Religion.

Then Alderman Barker was ſworn.

Mr. Thompſon. Do you know Mr. Tasborough?

Mr. Barker. Yes, I have known him ſeveral Years.

Mr. Thompſon. How long?

Mr. Barker. Fourteen or Fifteen Years.

Mr. Thompſon. How have you look'd upon him?

Mr. Barker. I have looked upon him as an honeſt peaceable man.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You have known him to be a Catholick?

Mr. Barker. Yes, that I have.

Mrs. Price. May I beg the Favour of this Honourable Court, that I may ſpeak for my ſelf here?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, come Mrs. what will you ſay? But we muſt tell the Jury before-hand it ſignifies nothing for Evidence.

Mrs. Price. I deſire to ſpeak the truth.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But they muſt not believe a Word you ſay.

Mrs. Price. Be pleaſed to give me leave to ſpeak however.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Well, go on.

Mrs. Price. Sir, Mr. Dugdale does here accuſe me of ſuborning him to retract his Evidence. I do proteſt 'tis ſo far from it, that he importuned me, and ſolicited me to go to the Duke of York, and he told me if I would go, he would pay my Coach-hire. Is it not ſo, Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt not interrogate him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. The very firſt thing you have ſaid hath diſcredited all you would ſay; for if Mr. Dugdale (as you ſay) had importuned you that you would do this thing for him, how comes it to paſs that afterwards you ſhould promiſe him a Reward of 1000 l. and bring a Gentleman to make it good?

Mrs. Price. I aſſure you, my Lord, I never did.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. 'Tis moſt apparent Tasborough does not deny that.

Mrs. Price. But that which is the real Truth, that you ſay muſt not be believed.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Did he ſolicit you to draw your Note?

Mrs. Price. Yes, he did, upon the word of a Chriſtian.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You did confeſs that you did ſtudy it, and draw it your ſelf.

Mrs. Price. I did ſo, but he importun'd me to do it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. How do you prove that?

Mrs. Price. I deſire to know by what Words I took off his Evidence at Harcourt's Tryal?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You deſired him to be kind becauſe he was your Confeſſor.

Mrs. Price. I deſire to ask him the Queſtion by what Words it was.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Well, you may ask him, but 'tis little to the Purpoſe. Can you remember the Words, or the Effect of the Words that ſhe ſpoke to you in the Behalf of Harcourt? The Night before his Tryal, I think it was.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, it was the Night before, to deſire me I would not be an Evidence againſt him, in regard he was her Ghoſtly Father.

Mrs. Price. You know you came to me, Mr. Dugdale, and told me you rid Poſt to Town.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. We muſt have no more of theſe interlocutory Diſcourſes.

Mr. Dugdale. Mrs. Price, I would not do you the leaſt Injury in the World.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Mr. Juſtice Jones, I deſire a Word.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. If you will produce any Witneſſes, do.

Mrs. Price. I deſire I may ſpeak for my ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. 'Tis but Reaſon ſhe ſhould ſpeak for her ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But I hope if ſhe ask unreaſonable Queſtions ſhe is not to be heard.

Mrs. Price. I only ſpeak the Truth.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But we muſt not take your Evidence of it, produce your Witneſſes.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. If you have any to prove what you ſay, call them.

Mrs. Price. Whether you will take my Evidence or not, pray let me ſpeak for my ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. We cannot believe you, nor muſt the Jury believe you, I'll tell you that before-hand.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. We tell you, you muſt not be heard. If you have any Queſtions to ask, let your Counſel propoſe them.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. If you apply to the Jury, you are not to tell the Matter of Fact, but to prove it to them by Witneſſes

Mrs. Price. I deſire, however, I may be heard my ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Jones: If any thing hath been omitted by your Counſel, which is material for your Defence, and you have Witneſſes to prove it, they ſhall be called.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mrs. Price, you muſt know the Courſe of the Court, and the way of Evidence is, we are not to hear the Perſons indicted make long Speeches to the Court, or to the Jury, or come with great Confidence to deny the thing thing that is prov'd againſt them; if you have any thing material to ſay, we will hear you by your Counſel; you muſt not trouble us.

Mrs. Price. My Lord, I have Matter enough to to ſay, but it can't be heard.

Mr. Sauders. We deſire Wright may be call'd again.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. To what purpoſe?

Mrs. Price. To prove that you, Mr. Dugdale, would ſuborn him.

Mr. Dugdale. Call him, if you will, if you can prove any Practices upon me.

Mrs. Price. You have good Practices we know; you are a man of excellent Practices; you had need commend your Practices. You know very well, Mr. Dugdale, that you told me you were perjured.

Mr. Recorder. 'Tis not Language fit for you to give.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Is that Liberty of Speech fit to be given? She tells Mr. Dugdale that he ſaid himſelf he was perjured.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You are an impudent Woman to talk ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Your mouth muſt be ſtopped if you can uſe your Tongue no better.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What would you ask him when he does come?

Mrs. Price. I have told my Counſel.

Mr. Sanders. She ſays ſhe would ask him whether Mr. Dugdale did not offer him Money to ſuborn him in this Caſe. You are ſworn already, Sir, are you not?

Mr. Wright. Yes.

Mr. Sanders. Then pray anſwer the Court this Queſtion, Did Mr. Dugdale at any time offer you any Money to take an Oath, or give Evidence?

Mr. Wright. Offer me Money?

Mr. Sanders. Yes you. Anſwer upon your Oath.

Mr. Wright. No, my Lord.

Mr. Saunders. Or any thing elſe did he offer?

Mr. Wright. No, my Lord, he hath often ſent to me to come, and when I did come, hath ſaid, I am glad you are come, I'll do you as great a Kindneſs, but he did not know of my coming becauſe his Meſſengers had not met with me.

Mr. Sanders. Did any one on his Behalf offer you any thing?

Mr. Wright. No, I think not; if it was, I think it was in vain.

Mr. Sanders. But did he, or did he not?

Mr. Wright. No.

Mr. Recorder. If Mrs. Price hath any more ſuch Witneſſes, ſhe may call them.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Sir, under your Favour, here hath been a ſtrange way of Defence. Conſider what a Crime we are upon, and in what times we are. That there is a Plot of a very high and tranſcendent Nature under Queſtion, that divers Witneſſes have been ſuborned, and perſons tryed in this Place and convicted for it, 'tis undeniable. Now after Tryals for ſo high a Crime in the moſt publick Way, here come Price and Tasborough; What to do? She indeed before, but both Tasborough and ſhe afterwards, by Rewards, and ſuch Temptations, endeavours to diſgrace his Evidence, but there is not only that, but the great thing looked after by their Party, was, the Iſſue of it; upon this all the King's Evidence were to be hang'd. What hath been ſaid is only to make a Jeſt, and make the Company merry, that there was a Contract of Marriage between them, but what will be the Conſequence of that? He that ſpoke it, has unqueſtionably proved the Probability of our Charge, we have made it probable, and he hath proved it; and the Inference drawn by them is, She certainly did not tempt him, becauſe ſhe had an Intereſt in him, which concludes very naturally. But then for the other, Mr. Tasborough, Alderman Barker comes in, and ſwears the Gentleman is a very honeſt Man, I hope he did hear the Evidence, and then I wonder how he could ſwear it; but do we come to prove whether he be an honeſt man in his Life? 'Tis not at all our Queſtion; if we ſhould have offered to have diſparaged him in another way, we had not, I think, done our Duty, and the Court would juſtly have reproved us for it; but there is one thing, which if it had not been ſpoken, I would have held my Peace: How is Tasborough concerned in the Caſe? Divers have been queſtioned and executed for High Treaſon, upon Mr. Dugdale's Evidence; and after ſuch an Execution, what is Mr. Tasborough's Duty? It hath been repreſented as if he had been perſwaded by her, and drawn in that way, and he thinking that it was a Falſity that had been ſworn before, and that Mr. Dugdale repented of the Injury he had done them, he ſhould help to make this Diſcovery. But what was he concerned? Did he go to a Juſtice of Peace, or any juſt way? Did he not contrive with the Devil rather than the Juſtice? 1000*l.* muſt be paid to draw off a man, and corrupt him, to make him own himſelf perjur'd, in a truth that had been ſpoken. And this is not the firſt time that they have done it; for we remember the Caſe of Reading very well. I ſhall ſay no more, but this, under favour, it is not well to ſay, That a man may perſwade another to deny his Teſtimony, that is nothing concerned in the Caſe, in a Caſe of this publick Nature eſpecially, and for Money too, that was never meant by the Law, and I hope is not meant ever to be countenanced here. I hope the Court will give that Caution to all that hear it, as will diſcourage any Attempts of this Nature for the future. And that it ſhall not be enough to excuſe it, for him to ſay he was perſwaded, and thought his Sorrow was real, and thereby to put the King's Witneſſes to prove that thing to be true that they had proved already. What had Mr. Tasborough to do, as if he were a Judge of the Proceedings of the Court, and Witneſſes? Nothing at all, under favour, but is a very ill man, and as ſuch I hope ſhall be puniſhed.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Gentlemen, you of the Jury; theſe two Perſons have been Indicted for a very great Offence. The Indictment ſets forth (that which we all know to be true) that Whitebread, and divers others, have been Tryed and Condemned for a very Execrable, Helliſh, Popiſh-Plot: That upon theſe Indictments, Mr. Dugdale did give material Evidence; but that, when ſome other of the Conſpirators were to be Tryed, and brought to Puniſhment, theſe two Perſons did endeavour to make Mr. Dugdale abſent himſelf, and retract his Evidence. And not only ſo, when Harcourt was to be brought to his Tryal, (for whom it ſeems Mrs. Price had a particular Kindneſs) but likewiſe it was endeavoured, he ſhould be gone, and not give any further Evidence at all, and he ſhould have 1000 l. for a Reward. This is the Indictment.

The Inducement to the Indictment (that is, the Tryals of the Conſpirators) is all well known: And there have been Copies of the Records produc'd, which have been inſpected and peruſed by the Counſel on the Defendants parts; and they cannot ſay, but that the Records agree with the matter in that reſpect: So that there is nothing at all but the bare matter of Fact that you are to inquire into.

I ſhall diſtinguiſh the Perſons: Mrs. Price, according to the Evidence, hath gone thro' the whole Charge of the Indictment; and indeed, hath committed ſome further Crimes than have been mention'd in the Indictment.

Firſt, It hath been prov'd to you by Mr. Dugdale, That ſhe did not only deſire kindneſs to Harcourt, who was her Ghoſtly Father; but ſhe did deſign, as much as in her lay, that he ſhould not come in at all to give Evidence againſt him: This is prov'd by Mr. Dugdale, and another Perſon that was by, that did hear Mrs. Price ſay, She would have him be kind to Mr. Harcourt, becauſe he was her Ghoſtly Father: Withal tells you, That immediately after Dugdale did tell him, that ſhe did perſuade him he ſhould abſent himſelf, and not give Evidence againſt Harcourt.

She is likewiſe Charg'd (as they are both) that ſhe did treat with Mr. Dugdale for to Retract all that he had ſaid, to be gone, and to leave a Paper behind him, which ſhould ſignify, That there was trouble of mind upon him, and that he had done wrong in his Teſtimony given againſt the Catholicks: Therefore he would be gone, and leave a Teſtimony of it in Writing, when he was gone. And ſhe provides for his Security abroad, and he ſhould have 1000 l. Reward.

Dugdale is the Perſon with whom the firſt Treaty was: But becauſe he knew, and it was obſerved, that it was unſafe to deal with Perſons that were tampering with him in ſuch a nature as this was, and upon a matter of this kind, he does acquaint Perſons of very great Quality, as he ſwears, my Lord of Shaftsbury, and two other Perſons: They do adviſe him that he ſhould get ſome Perſons to be by when they ſhould come to ſome further Treaties concerning this buſineſs; and to that purpoſe he ſhould hold up a Correſpondence, and condeſcend to a kind of Agreement and Compliance, that he might be able to have further Teſtimony to confirm his Evidence. Whereupon Dr. Chamberlain and his Servant are plac'd in a Cloſet in Mr. Dugdale's Chamber, in ſuch a Place, that they might hear what was diſcourſed in the Chamber; in comes Mrs. Price, they being in the Cloſet, Mr. Dugdale and ſhe diſcours'd about the Buſineſs ſo loud, that Dr. Chamberlain and his Servant (as both of them tell you) heard their Diſcourſe upon it: The Queſtion was ask'd and put to Mrs. Price: Mrs. Price, I hope you know you are the Perſon that firſt mov'd this Intrigue; it began from you, and not from me: And this was confeſt by her. So that you have in confirmation of Mr. Dugdale, the Teſtimony both of Dr. Chamberlain, and of his Servant, to that part of the Charge againſt her. And withal, 'tis added, not only that he was to go beyond Sea, to retract what Evidence he had given; but likewiſe it was thought expedient he ſhould come over again, and ſwear againſt all the reſt of the Evidence that had been given, or ſhould be given for the King. And when it was ſaid by Mr. Dugdale, What will it avail you, if I do Retract my Evidence? There is Mr. Otes and Mr. Prance to teſtifie the ſame thing: She ſaid, No matter for that; if we get you on our ſide for the Catholick Cauſe, to be our Friend, we ſhall be ſure to baffle all they can ſay or do; and we ſhall not only ſave the Catholicks, but turn the Plot upon the Heads of the Proteſtants, and all the King's Witneſſes ſhall be hang'd. That you may remember was teſtify'd by ſome of the Witneſſes.

Mrs. Price deals frequently with Mr. Dugdale to this purpoſe.

Dugdale, that he might know (and 'tis very like with that honeſt intention, and no other, he did it) and that he might diſcover the bottom of this buſineſs, tells her, This is a thing of dangerous Conſequence, and it is fit that I have better Security than your Promiſe of this 1000 l. I will have ſome ſubſtantial Perſon that ſhall come and confirm what you promiſe. And thereupon ſhe tells him, He ſhould have a ſubſtantial Perſon brought, and he ſhould have Thanks from very great Perſons, naming the Duke of York; for he it was, as they ſaid, that would take care to protect him, and procure a Pardon for him.

Now Gentlemen, this is the Evidence againſt Mrs. Price. In Defence of this what doth ſhe offer, but that ſhe hath been acquainted with Mr. Dugdale, and there hath been great Familiarity between them. If there had not been ſuch a Familiarity, would there have been ſuch an Intrigue? Is this a matter to be communicated to a Stranger? If there were a Doubt before, whether there were this Contrivance, Does not this give us a better Aſſurance that it was ſo, becauſe there was ſuch an Acquaintance between them?

Then, as to Mr. Tasborough: He indeed is not in the beginning of the Deſign at all: There is no Evidence againſt him for that part of the Charge, That he ſhould abſent himſelf, and not give Evidence againſt Harcourt. He comes not in at that time; nor can I perceive by Mr. Dugdale, that he had any Acquaintance with him at all till the 12*th* of October; and he ſays he was but twice in his Company.

Now, Gentlemen, What does Mr. Tasborough do? Firſt, Dugdale is told by Mrs. Price, That a man of Quality ſhould come to him, and confirm all the Promiſes ſhe had made him. Tasborough does come to him, and tells him, He hath had ſome Diſcourſe with Mrs. Price, what ſhe had propos'd; and he is now come to make good and confirm, That all ſhall be effected that ſhe had propos'd to him. Ay! but it is ſuppos'd, that Mr. Tasborough is a very honeſt man, and a conſcientious man, and does come for nothing in the World, but to perſuade Mr. Dugdale to do the Office of a Chriſtian; it was a charitable thing of him, to take off the Scandal that was upon the Innocent. But you do not hear him charge it upon Mr. Dugdale's Conſcience, that he had given a falſe Evidence againſt any of thoſe Perſons, nor urge him much to Repent. But he muſt be gone; he muſt give no more Evidence againſt the Catholicks: And, What if he do comply with this deſire? Then he tells him he ſhall have a Reward: What Reward? A Thouſand Pound; which was made known before, fore, and Protection, and Pardon, and Security: And he comes to him in the Duke of York's Name, to inforce it the more ſtrongly upon him, and make him do it: Whereas, indeed, the Duke of York (as he himſelf and Mrs. Price have ſince confeſs'd) never knew any thing at all of the Buſineſs.

Now, Gentlemen, to move by honeſt Chriſtian means, any one that hath done an Injury of any ſort, to Repentance, and Contrition, and Recantation, that is a very good thing; but to do it with promiſe of a Reward of 1000 l. can't be juſtify'd: What way is there to inſinuate into any Perſon an intention of doing a miſchief, but ſuch a way as this? Will any one come to another, and ſay, forſwear your ſelf; whereas you know ſuch a thing to be true, ſwear it to be falſe, or Retract the Evidence you have given about it, and I will give you 1000 l. No, but ſerve the Catholick Cauſe; a great many have ſuffer'd, and by your Teſtimony; Retract, be gone, be ſecure, you ſhall have a certainty, that you ſhall be ſecure in another Kingdom; or elſe you ſhall have it in a Proteſtant Family, tho' neither that Proteſtant, nor any Proteſtant was nam'd.

Is not this a Bait to tempt a man to all the Villany in the World? If 1000 l. be offer'd, who can reſiſt? Such People as theſe are will not eaſily reſiſt ſuch a Temptation.

But Mr. Tasborough is a very honeſt man in his Life and Converſation; he produceth thoſe that tell you his Reputation is good, and the like: There is no doubt of it, and if he had produc'd 20 Witneſſes, do you think he would produce any one that ſhould ſpeak againſt himſelf? He chuſes out thoſe certainly as would ſpeak as much in his Favour as they can: But if a man hath been an honeſt man in his Converſation, may he not be intic'd or ſeduc'd? Eſpecially when it will be told him, If you do this you ſhall merit Heaven, you ſhall be Sainted and Canoniz'd, you do the greateſt Service in the World to the Catholick Cauſe.

Theſe Temptations may work upon a man, perhaps, that is morally honeſt, when he is infatuated with this Principle, That any thing may be done for the Catholick Cauſe; as it is a Catholick Doctrine too often inſtill'd into them, that any thing is become ſanctified when it tends to that end; 'tis eaſy then to prevail upon them in Things of this Nature.

I ſhould have told you (which I omitted before) one Circumſtance concerning matter of Proof againſt Mrs. Price more than Tasborough: Two Witneſſes ſaid they were in the Cloſet, and heard a Woman diſcourſe, but neither of them did ſee her Face; but afterwards it is proved by another, that he was deſired to obſerve who came into or went out of the Houſe; and he ſwears he ſaw Mr. Dugdale and her come out of the Houſe; That they went to the Gatehouſe, and he ſaw her come again from the Gatehouſe with Mr. Dugdale, and he is ſure this is the Perſon. And you remember that part of their Diſcourſe was of going to the Gatehouſe.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. They do not deny it neither.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I don't ſee they do.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. 'Tis a very ſtrong and plain Evidence as can be given.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. There is nothing can be ſaid for Mrs. Price, little for Mr. Tasborough.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. I ſee nothing that can do him any good.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come Gentlemen, lay your Heads together and conſider of the matter.

Which the Jury did at the Bar: And being asked by the Clerk of the Crown, Whether they were agreed? They anſwer'd, Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. Do you find the Defendants Guilty of the Treſpaſs and Offence whereof they ſtand Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Mr. Pollexfen. As to part only for Mr. Tasborough.

Foreman. Guilty of the Indictment.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. We all know he is not found Guilty of one part, and that muſt be conſider'd at the ſetting of the Fine.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Tasborough hath been upon Bail, but I ſuppoſe he muſt not go upon Bail now; we pray that he may be committed.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. They muſt both be committed, take them both.

Mr. Sanders. Mrs. Price is ſtill in the Gatehouſe.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. We have her here now, ſhe is in our Cuſtody.

Mr. Sanders. If you pleaſe, Sir, we deſire ſhe may be remanded back.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. No, they ſhall go both into the Marſhal's Cuſtody.

Mrs. Price. I beg of your Lordſhips I may go back to the Gatehouſe.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What! Theſe are not things to be trifled with.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. No, we muſt not ſhew you any Favour at all.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. No, we muſt have no Favour for you that would deſtroy us all.

Then the Priſoners were taken into Cuſtody by the Marſhal, to be kept till their Judgment.

THE TRYAL OF BENJAMIN HARRIS.

On Thurſday, the Fifth of this Inſtant February, at the Guild-Hall, in the City of London, there was an Information exhibited by the King's Counſel before my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, againſt Benjamin Harris, Bookſeller, to this purpoſe, viz. That he the ſaid Benjamin Harris, did maliciouſly and deſignedly to ſcandalize the King and Government, cauſe to be Printed, and Sold, a late ſeditious Book called, An Appeal from the Countrey to the City, for the Preſervation of His Majeſty's Perſon, Liberty, Property, and the Proteſtant Religion: And after it was read, Mr. Recorder made a Speech to the Jury, and the whole Court, to this effect.

Gentlemen,

I Hope, this being a Matter to be tryed in the City of London, Perſons coming here in great Multitudes, come to bluſh rather than to give Incouragement to it; and if we can give your Lordſhip and this Jury, Satisfaction that this Perſon is guilty of the Offence, according as it is laid in the Information, I hope that both you, and all others that ſhall hear it, (for I perceive there is a great Expectation this Day from this Cauſe) I hope, I ſay, you will abominate any man that ſhall offer at any ſuch like thing. Indeed we live in an Age where all ſorts of Faction and Rebellion is countenanced, Magiſtrates reviled, and ſcandalized by ſome Perſons, who think they have Authority ſo to do. It is juſt like ſuch another kind of Religion, which ſome have now of late taken up, that rather than they will be thought to turn Phanaticks, they will turn plain Atheiſts, and others, who ſcorn to be either, downright Rebels. This Book is as baſe a Piece as ever was contrived in Hell, either by Papiſts, or the blackeſt Rebel that ever was: It ſeems to carry with it a fine Character, and has a Figure of all plauſible Obedience to the Crown, to wit, An Appeal, &c. for the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Perſon, Liberty, Property, and the Proteſtant Religion. But if any of you have ſeen it, I hope you will be ſo far from giving any Countenance to it, as that you will, with me, think, 'tis ſo far from tending well to the Government, that it is only deſign'd to rake up all Sedition and Rebellion, and the very worſt of all Rebellion. I muſt confeſs, I would rather have believed that it was only the ſake of Lucre made him do what he did, for that would have ſomewhat extenuated his Crime, if he had not read it firſt; but then to go and have it printed, and expoſed to Sale, &c. this is a great Aggravation.

If the ſame ſort of Inſinuation had been uſed towards any private Tradeſman, as hath been offered to the King and Magiſtrates, I believe there is no man but would ſay, that e'er this time he might have hid his Head.

But Diſſemblances of Pretences for the ſake of the Proteſtant Religion now adays in his Shop will paſs well enough, and Perſons can tell you there how far you may go from hence to Rome with Safety; and after they have blackened their Mouths with Tobacco and Smoke, and do not rail againſt the Church and the Government, they are look'd upon ſtrait as no Proteſtants.

But ſtill as to this Perſon, the farther to urge it, by way of Aggravation upon him, he could vauntingly make his Boaſts, when it was put home to him, Why he would venture to do ſuch things, &c? That he had above a Thouſand Perſons who would ſtand by him in whatſoever he did.

L. C. J. There was hardly ever any Book more pernicious to ſet us together by the Ears than this, nor any thing a greater Incendiary; one can hardly write a worſe ——— Sir William Scroggs.

Says he, We in the Countrey have done our Parts in Chooſing, for the generality, good Members to ſerve in Parliament; but if (as our Two laſt Parliaments were) they muſt be Diſſolved, or Prorogued, whenever they come to redreſs the Grievances of the Subject, we may be pitied, but not blamed. If the Plot takes effect, (as in all probability it will) our Parliaments are not then to be Condemned, for that their not being ſuffered to Sit occaſioned it.

So

So that here is a fly way of casting it upon the King himself. And if it be not down-right Treason, I am sure, it is just upon the heels of it. 'Tis a most abominable Piece.

Then were called the Witnesses, to prove that the Books were sold in his Shop, and after they were all sworn, first of all Mrs. Grover, a Printer's Wife, stood up, who confessed she had half a Dozen of them, but not of him; for he was either gone out, or not in the way, but she had them of his Man.

Then stood up one Mary Darby, and she said, she had four of them.

After her, Mr. Benjamin Tooke, at the Ship in St. Paul's Church-yard, Bookseller, was Examined, who said he saw several Quires of them in the Shop. And being asked by Mr. Harris, How he knew they were all those Books? He answered, That he turned over a great many of them, and found them all the same.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, he was so mighty zealous of this Book, of so great Importance, no doubt, to his Party, that for fear he should be disappointed in time, he gave somewhat to hasten it.

Mr. Recorder. Call—the Printer's Man, and swear him. [Who stood up, and was sworn.

Mr. Recorder. What did Mr. Harris give you, ha?

Printer's Man. He laid me down Six-pence.

L. C. J. And what, that was for hastening the Book, was it not?

Printer's Man. I cannot tell, Sir, not I, but he gave me Six-pence.

Mr. Recorder. And what, did you do it in the Day-time, was you not at it in the Night?

Printer's Man. Yes, I was upon it in the Night.

Mr. Recorder. Ay, it was a deed of Darkness, and so fit for Night-Work.

Mr. Serj. Strode. My Lord, if it can be made out to your Lordship and this Jury, that he designed maliciously to scandalize the King and the Government by it, we must acquiesce, but that, my Lord, he absolutely denies; but seeing it running up and down the Town, he gets some of them, and suffers them to lie up and down in his Shop, and this only as a common thing to get Money, so that we suppose it may not lie within the Information, because it does not intentionally scandalize the King and the Government.

Mr. Williams. He in his Trade sold this Book, and that we admit; but my Lord, it is a material Part of the Information, that it was done with a malicious Design, &c. and we do not take it so, but for the other matter we submit to it.

L. C. J. Then you do admit, that he did sell some of these Books.

Mr. Williams. We do, my Lord, that he did sell one.

Mr. Ollibear. My Lord, this Book was publickly sold in other Booksellers Shops before we had it, and so we thought in a way of Trade, we might do the like; but as soon as ever we heard there was any thing ill in the Book, we suppress'd the selling of it.

Mr. Serj. Strode. They say, my Lord, the Printer had Six-pence given him by Mr. Harris.—Friend, does not he come, and give you some Money at other times? Have you never had any of him before?

Printer's Man. No, Sir, I never Printed any thing for him before.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Was not this Printed before you saw it?

Printer. Not to my Knowledge.

Mr. Serj. Strode. Pray ask the first Witness. Was not this in Print before you saw it in his Shop?

Mrs. Grover. Yes, my Lord,

Mr. Williams. My Lord, he is a Man of other Principles than to do such things.

L. C. J. There is scarce any but Smith, that is so factious a Seller of Books, as Harris: All your Domestick Intelligences are so; for which, you know, you have forfeited your Recognizance almost in every Book.

A Neighbour was called by Mr. Williams, to give an Account of Mr. Harris.

Neighbour. My Lord, I have known him about a Twelve-month; and I have always looked upon him, to be a fair-conditioned, quiet, peaceable Man: He is, and has been so reputed among his Neighbours. And I have never seen any thing from him, but what was very quiet and peaceable.

Mr. Recorder. A Book-seller, that causes a Factious Book to be Printed, or Re-printed, if it was Printed before, is a factious Fellow.

L. C. J. You say right.

Mr. Goodhall (another Neighbour of Mr. Harris's) said, upon his being asked, if he were acquainted with him? And, if he were wont to oppose, or to scandalize the King or Government? That he never heard such a like thing of him.

Mr. Recorder. I presume, that none of these do stand by him in any such thing: But he, being advertised of it, and being asked, Why he would offer to expose to Sale such a Book as this? He answered and said, That he had a Thousand Persons that would stand by him.

Call Robert Stevens.

L. C. J. What can you say?

Robert Stevens. My Lord, I have seen this Book several times in his Shop, and others too. And I have asked him, Why he would so publickly vend them? (I did not indeed buy one of them my self, but I caused a Man to buy one for me) and he said, He had several Thousands to stand by him: And he is accounted an Anabaptist. He said so before the Master and Wardens of the Company; who question'd him, why he sold such scandalous things? And he said he had several Thousands to stand by him.

Then spake the Lord Chief Justice to this purpose.

Because my Brother shall be satisfied with the Opinion of all the Judges of England, what this Offence is, which they would insinuate, as if the meer Selling of such a Book was no Offence. 'Tis not long since, that all the Judges met, by the King's Command; as they did some time before too: And they both times declared unanimously, That all Persons that do Write, or Print, or Sell any Pamphlet, that is either scandalous to Publick, or Private Persons; such Books may be seiz'd, and the Person punish'd by Law: That all Books, which are scandalous to the Government may be ſeiz'd; and all Perſons ſo expoſing them, may be puniſh'd. And further, That all Writers of News, though not ſcandalous, ſeditious, nor reflective upon the Government or the State; yet if they are Writers (as there are few others) of falſe News, they are Indictable and Puniſhable upon that Account.

So that your Hopes of any thing of that kind, will be vain; for all the Judges have declared this Offence, at the Common-Law, to be puniſhable in the Seller, though in the way of his Trade: The Books may be ſeized, and the Perſon puniſhed.

As for this Book, in particular; you can hardly read a more baſe, and pernicious Book, to put us all into a Flame: It gives you ſuch Incitements, and ſuch baſe Incouragements, with ſuch Reflections upon all ſorts of Perſons, (for I have read it upon this Account) that I think, there can ſcarce be a worſe made. He would ſet up another Man, that has no Title to the Crown: For (ſays he) the greateſt Danger accruing to your Perſons, as well as to the whole Kingdom, upon the King's untimely Death, will proceed from a Confuſion, and want of ſome Eminent and Intereſted Perſon, whom you may truſt to lead you up againſt a French and Popiſh Army: For which purpoſe, no Perſon is fitter than his Grace the Duke of Monmouth; as well for Quality, Courage, and Conduct, as for that his Life and Fortune depends upon the ſame Bottom with yours. He will ſtand by you; and therefore, you ought to ſtand by him. And remember the old Rule is, He who hath the worſt Title, ever makes the beſt King; as being conſtrained by a Gracious Government, to ſupply what he wants in Title: That inſtead of, GOD and my Right; his Motto may be, GOD and my People. He ſays, Such a one would make a better a King; for, as you ſee, the Worſe the Title, the Better the King. A King with a Bad Title, makes a Better King, than he that hath a Good One; for, he ſhall be obliged to comply with, and will humour the People, for want of a Title. A thing, which is of the baſeſt Nature that can be: And yet this Man muſt give Money, to haſten the Printing of ſuch a Book; and he had ſeveral Quires of them in his Shop. Except the Writer of it, there cannot be a worſe Man in the World; who, for trival Profit, will neglect the Peace and Quiet of his Countrey, and ſet us all together by the Ears for a Groat. And, Mr. Harris, if you expect any thing in this World, of this kind of Favour, you muſt find out the Author: for he muſt be a Rebellious, and a Villainous Traytor: For, though he ſeems to inveigh againſt Popery, it is only to be a Rebel. And certainly, he has rejected all the Laws of God, and all Obedience that Man requires; and prophaned all Holy Writ. He is ſome Body, whoſe Fortune does not ſuit with his Condition; and who, becauſe he is not at eaſe and quiet himſelf, will let no body elſe be ſo neither.

Speaking to the Jury, who preſently withdrew.

You have nothing more to do, but to give your Verdict:

If there be any thing in Law, let me know it, becauſe you go out.

Then one of the Jury asked my Lord, if they might not have the Book with them, which was there in the Court, and it was anſwered in the Negative.

Before the Jury went out, Mr. Harris would fain have ſpoke to them for himſelf, but it was not permitted him.

Then, after a little while tarrying, they returned to the Bar.

And being, as is uſual, asked if they were agreed on their Verdict, and who ſhould ſpeak for them; they anſwered yes, and appointed their Foreman, who ſaid he was guilty of Selling the Book.

At which there was a very great and clamorous Shout.

Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, that was not their Buſineſs, they were only to determine whether barely Guilty, or not Guilty.

The Recorder would have had them given their Verdict by the Poll, but they all unanimouſly cryed out, they were all agreed, and then the Foreman gave the Verdict again, Guilty.

Mr. Recorder then prayed, that he being for the King, Mr. Harris might ſtand Committed; who was thereupon preſently delivered to a Tipſtaff to be carry'd to the King's Bench.

Mr. Harris earneſtly beſeeched his Lordſhip, that he might be ſent to any other Priſon, and named Newgate three or four times, but it was not granted him: Thereupon he ſaid, I hope God will give me Patience to go through it.

Then my Lord Chief Juſtice ſpake to the Jury to this Effect.

I am ſorry you gave Countenance to this Cauſe ſo much, as to ſtir from the Bar, when the Evidence was ſo full, and when I told you plainly, not only my Opinion, but likewiſe that of all the Judges of England, that ſelling this Book was an Offence at the Common Law, for which they ought to be puniſhed: And yet with your Scruples, you give the Party (with their Hollows, and Shoutings) to take Advantage; though you did mean upon the matter the ſame thing then you do now: Yet you ſee, upon every little Occaſion, when a thing ſhall ſeem to thwart the Government, how ready they are to ſend up their loud Hollowings. It was not ſo prudently done as might have been done.

We had need look about us, for if at ſuch a time, and for ſuch a baſe Book, ſuch clamorous Noiſes ſhall be made, what ſhall become of us? Our Lives and Fortunes are at ſtake. Would I knew ſome of thoſe Shouters, I would make them know, I would puniſh them: I am incenſed in the Behalf of the Government, and of all our Lives and Fortunes, that ſuch ſhall go unpuniſhed.

THE TRYAL OF FRANCIS SMITH.

On Saturday the Seventh of this Inſtant February, 16$\frac{79}{80}$. at the Guildhall in the City of London, there was an Information between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Francis Smith, Bookſeller, brought before Mr. Juſtice Jones, one of the Judges of the King's-Bench: And after the Jury was Sworn, Mr. Holt began after this manner.

Mr. Holt. MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhip, here is an Information preferr'd in behalf of the King againſt Francis Smith, Bookſeller: And it ſets forth, That after Sir George Wakeman, Will. Marſhal, Will. Rumley, and James Corker, were Indicted and Try'd on the 18*th* of July, 1679, for divers High Treaſons at the Seſſions Houſe in the Old Bailey, before Sir James Edwards, then Lord-Mayor of London, and the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, and others; the Defendant, Francis Smith, publiſh'd a ſcandalous Libel relating to the late Tryals, which was intitled, Some Obſervations upon the late Tryal, &c. the Words are particularly ſet forth in the Information; to which the Defendant pleads Not Guilty: But if we prove it upon him, you of the Jury are to find for the King; and if you find he is not guilty, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, &c.

Then Mr. Recorder ſpake to this Effect.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, I am of Counſel againſt the Defendant for the King, who ſtands inform'd againſt for a very great Offence. The Information particularly ſets forth, That whereas ſome certain Perſons were indicted at the Seſſions Houſe in the Old-Bailey, before the then Lord-Mayor, Sir James Edwards, and other Perſons then in Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol-delivery for that Place, and particularly my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs; and after the Tryal was over, and the Perſons thereupon acquitted, there was a Book, which is mentioned in the Information, printed and publiſh'd, and it is a Book that is known by the Name of Tom Ticklefoot; a very abuſive thing; but Perſons now begin to grow wonderful witty in the beginning of their Books, in hopes to inſnare People to read them, and to prevail upon them ſo far as to make them believe there is ſomewhat extraordinary by the Title. You ſee, Malice finds out all the ways in the World to inſnare and gain upon the People, to ſo bad an Age are we come.

But I confeſs, it is the ſecond time ever ſince I had the fortune or happineſs to know this City of London, that I have known ſuch Expectations, as have been upon two Cauſes in this place: The firſt was but two Days ago, the ſecond is at this time; wherein is truly a ſort of Countenance, I am afraid, too much given by Perſons that dare pretend to be no other ſort of Proteſtants, but can impudently outface all ſort of Governours. Now, as all Perſons ought to abhor and deteſt that damnable Doctrine, That men hope to be Saints in another World, becauſe they may commit murders in this; ſo this ought too as much to be condemn'd by all Proteſtants as the other, That men ſhall endeavour to rebel, and be factious in this World, that ſo they may be reckon'd good Subjects; the one are as far from being good Saints, as the others from being good Subjects. I take this occaſion to ſpeak all this before your Lordſhip and this Court, becauſe I hope the City of London will never be corrupted by the baſe inſinuating of ſome idle Buſy-bodies in it; men, who cannot, or will not be pleas'd becauſe (forſooth) every thing does not go according to their mind and fancy; and tho' by no means they will allow the Pope to be infallible, yet every factious Fellow will expect, that every one ſhould pay him that Tribute as infallibly, as if he were the only fit Person to give measures to Government and Governours.

When we come to have extraordinary Cases and Persons, extraordinary Occasions ought to be taken to inflict due and just Punishments upon them.

And when they shall dare to come to disparage Great Men that act by Supreme Authority, men that act by their Consciences; and because they cannot be steer'd by the Humours of these sort of People, therefore they must be look'd upon as Papists, or at least as Brib'd, because they cannot comply with that base Humour which some sort of Persons have.

I take notice of this to your Lordship, because one that is intrusted in as great a Place for the Welfare of this Nation, as any whosoever, is extremely concern'd in the Affair of this Day; I mean, the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench; who being assisted with several other Judges, because, as far forth as it did appear to him, he did deliver the Sense of the whole Court; who, for acting according to his Conscience, and as he ought to do, hath been Libelled and Reproached with as base a Book as ever was written against any Magistrate whatsoever: If such things as this shall be permitted, then there will be an end of your Lordship's sitting here, or any where else, or of any other that shall act as a Magistrate ought to act, and that shall not be afraid to do his Duty. But such is the happiness of this City, in this Jury, that, I must confess, I receive so much the greater Satisfaction that it comes before them; for as I know the men to be men of Loyalty and Affection to the Government, and will be so just to him, that if they do not find him Guilty of the matter of the Information, they will acquit him: So, on the other side, they will not think themselves to be aw'd by a Multitude, or inslav'd by private insinuations, to debauch their Consciences, either in respect to God above, or to the King his Vicegerent here on Earth; therefore observe your Duty to both, that you may render to Cæsar the things that be Cæsar's, as well as to God the things that are God's.

Now as the King is God's Vicegerent, so is every Magistrate the King's Vicegerent, in that particular.

I would not take up so much of your Lordship's Time, but that I see this is a matter of great Expectation; and I know that every Word is taken in Short-hand, to be commented upon as Persons Humours shall steer them. I do think, as being the Mouth of the City of London, it is my Duty to speak thus much, that I hope, nay, I may dare confidently affirm, that the generality of the City of London, all good men, and men of Abilities, &c. are for the King, and the Government as it is now Establish'd by Law.

[At which there was a general Hem thro' the Court.

Having said thus much against this Person, Mr. Francis Smith, I must say, That if the way of common Report were Evidence enough to convict a man, he would be convicted without any more ado: But such is the happiness of our Laws, that they expect Testimony, besides common Fame.

I would rather a great deal it might be a caution to Mr. Smith, if there had not been many before, and that he could not be convicted, and the Evidence not plain in Proof against him.

Well, he printed this Book in the Name of another Person, one Mrs. Brewster: He sold several of them in Quires to several People; and Brewster questioning wherefore he should put her Name to this Book: Truly, he said, he intended no harm to her, for he was resolved to save her harmless; and this we will prove to you; and likewise that several Books have been taken in his Shop; and he justifying himself in what he had done, and his further Resolution to expose them still to sale. And if we shall prove this to you, there will be an end of all sort of Justice, if in case that you, who are the only means of bringing men to Justice, will not contribute to have Justice executed where it ought to be: None can be legally punished, unless they be legally convicted; and I doubt not your Honesty and Loyalty, but that you will do your part by Conviction, and by Justice too.

Against all Libellers, I am sure, there is Law enough, and every honest man will endeavour to have it put in execution against them, as far forth as it lies in his way: I hope the generality of those that are here, do come to shew an Abhorrency against this Person inform'd against, and not to give any Countenance to such base Actions.

Mr. Williams, Counsel for the Defendant. My Lord, the Libel is sufficiently infamous, we must needs own; and I do not come to justify the thing, neither Mr. Smith my Client, nor any body else that shall be guilty of it: The Question is, Whether he be Guilty of, &c. as it is laid in the Information.

Mr. Recorder. Sir, do you admit the Record?

Mr. Just. Jones. If you do not admit it, you must call in your Witnesses, and prove what you can.

Whereupon Robert Stevens, Anne Brewster, and Margaret Clark were call'd into Court, and stood up behind the Jury.

Mr. Williams. Sir, if you will give me leave, you shall hear what we will admit.

Mr. Recorder. Come, come, Sir, if you do not admit the Record, we will have none of your Anticipations.

Mr. Williams. What call you your Speech but Anticipation?

My Lord, the poor man, my Client, is a languishing, sick and dying man, and one that is almost ruin'd; if any Submission will serve the Turn, he will give all the Submission that is fit for a man to give: All that we say is this, that he did not order this to be printed, as it is laid in the Information.——But I think we may admit——

Mr. Fettiplace said (who was Counsel on the same side) he had no such Order given him by his Client, as to admit the Record.

Then they were just going on to swear the Witnesses, but Mr. Just. Jones said, It would be very well if they would admit, &c. Defendant come to Submission.

Mr. Recorder. Ay, that it is your best way, for it would be a great means to testifie, that your Submission is really intended as a Submission: But if it be to prepare you to think that you are innocent, then we will not have your Submission——And I am for a Sinner's Repentance with all my Heart.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. If your Client be willing to ſubmit, let the King have a Verdict in Law, and then he will find my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs full of pity and compaſſion; and if I can ſee any ſigns of Repentance, I will promiſe you to intercede to my Lord for him.

Mr. Williams. One that came from my Client told me, that if he had offended, he would ſubmit to any thing: And now here is his Wife come.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I would ſave him if I can, if he will throw himſelf into mercy.

Well, what do you ſay, Miſtreſs, for your Husband?

Mrs. Smith. My Lord, my Husband is very ſick and weak, and is not able to come himſelf, or elſe he would have done it; but I ask'd Mr. Williams if it were not beſt to ſubmit to the Court.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Are you content to own it ſhall be ſo?

Mrs. Smith. I leave it to the Gentlemen, my Counſel, I ſhall acquieſce in what they think fitting.

Mr. Williams. Then I preſume to admit the Record.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Then you are to find for the King: [Speaking to the Jury.] 'Tis the Cauſe of the King, altho' only my Lord Chief Juſtice be concern'd. 'Tis a high Scandal; a great Scandal againſt a great Officer and Magiſtrate of the King. I will ſay nothing more to aggravate the Offence at this time, becauſe I would invite Repentance in all Perſons that have offended in this, or the like Caſes.

Then the Jury being asked, Whether they were agreed on their Verdict, ſaid, Yes; and chuſing their Foreman to ſpeak for them, he gave the Verdict, Guilty.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Well, Miſtreſs, you have done very well; if, now you for your Husband came here to make a publick Acknowledgment of his Guiltineſs, hereafter he ſhall go, and ingeniouſly make Submiſſion to my Lord; I know he is a Perſon of that pity and compaſſion, that he loves no man's Ruin, but delights rather in the univerſal Welfare of all People: And I promiſe this, that I will be an Interceſſor to my Lord in your Husband's behalf.

Mr. Recorder. And as far forth as I can contribute to it, I will do the ſame.

The Tryal of Jane Curtis.

Mr. Holt. MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and Gentlemen of the Jury, here is an Information brought againſt Jane Curtis; and it ſets forth, That the Defendant did publiſh and put to ſale a ſeditious Libel againſt my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs: The Defendant pleads Not Guilty; if we prove it upon her, you are to find for the King, and if not, you are to ſay ſo, and no more.

Mr. Williams ſaid (who was a Counſel for the Defendant) he would admit the Record: Whereupon they proceeded no further to Tryal, but the Woman being call'd, ſhe ſaid:

Mrs. Curtis. I was ignorant in the matter, and knew no ſuch thing; my Lord, my Husband, an't pleaſe your Lordſhip, was in the Countrey a hundred miles off of me, in Lincolnſhire.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You did it ignorantly and ſimply, without any malice, and, I ſuppoſe, you are heartily ſorry for it. You ſee your Neighbour there, Mrs. Smith, hath ſhew'd good Diſcretion in the behalf of her Husband; ſhe has ingeniouſly declar'd, that he ſhall come and make ſubmiſſion; and if I find you as ſubmiſſive, and as ſorry for what you have done, I may do the like for you.

Mrs. Curtis. In any thing that I have done, I know not my ſelf guilty; and if I am, I beg your Lordſhip's pardon with all my Heart, my Lord, or any bodies elſe.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I know you will find mercy from my Lord Chief Juſtice, and therefore go and make your Submiſſion.

Then the Jury proceeded to give their Verdict, and their Foreman ſaid, Guilty.

Sir THO. GASCOIGNE, Bar.

On Saturday the 24*th of* January, 1679. Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's Bench, to be Arraigned for High Treaſon: Which was done accordingly in this manner.

Cl. of Cr. SIR Thomas Gaſcoigne, hold up thy Hand.

Sir Tho. Gaſc. I cannot hear.

Clerk. He ſays he cannot hear.

L. C. J. Then ſome body muſt repeat it that ſtands by him.

Sir William Scroggs.

Mr. Recorder. Do you hear what I ſay to you?

Sir Tho. Gaſc. No, I cannot hear, I am very deaf.

Then the Clerk of the Crown went down cloſe to the Bar, and went on thus:

Cl. of Cr. Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, hold up thy hand. [Which he did.]

Thou ſtand'ſt Indicted by the Name of Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, late of the Pariſh of Elmett, in the Weſt-Riding in the County of York, Bar. For that thou, as a falſe Traytor againſt our moſt illuſtrious and excellent Prince King Charles the Second, thy natural Lord, not having the fear of God in thy Heart, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance, but by the inſtigation of the Devil moved and ſeduced, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King ſhould bear to him, and of right are bound to bear, wholly withdrawing, deviſing, and with all thy power intending to diſturb the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Realm, and to bring and put our ſaid Lord the King to death and final deſtruction; and the true Worſhip of God in this Kingdom, by Law eſtabliſhed and uſed, to alter unto the Superſtition of the Church of Rome, and to move and ſtir up War againſt our ſaid Lord the King in this Realm, and to ſubvert the Government of this Kingdom; the Thirtieth day of May, in the One and Thirtieth Year of our ſaid Lord the King's Reign, at the Pariſh of Barwick in Elmett in the ſaid County of York, in the Weſt-Riding of the ſame County, with divers other falſe Traytors unknown, didſt traiterouſly compaſs, imagine and intend the death and final deſtruction of our ſaid Lord the King; and to change and alter, and wholly to ſubvert the ancient Government of this Realm; and to depoſe, and wholly to deprive the King of the Crown and Government of this Kingdom, and to root out the true Proteſtant Religion. And to fulfil and accompliſh the ſame moſt wicked Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes, the ſaid Gaſcoigne, and other falſe Traytors unknown, on the ſaid Thirtieth day of May, in the One and Thirtieth Year aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh of Barwick aforeſaid, adviſedly, deviliſhly, maliciouſly and traiterouſly did aſſemble, unite and gather together themſelves, and then and there did deviliſhly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, craftily, and traiterouſly conſult and agree to bring our ſaid Lord the King to death and final deſtruction, and to depoſe and deprive him of his Crown and Government, and to introduce and eſtabliſh the Religion of the Roman Church in this Realm. And the ſooner to fulfil and accompliſh the ſame moſt wicked Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes, thou the ſaid Gaſcoigne, and other unknown Traytors, then and there adviſedly, maliciouſly and traiterouſly did further conſult and agree to contribute, pay and expend divers large ſums of money to divers of the King's Subjects and other Perſons unknown, to procure thoſe Perſons unknown, traiterouſly to kill our ſaid Lord the King, and to introduce the Roman Religion into this Realm. And that thou the ſaid Gaſcoyne afterwards (to wit) on the ſaid Thirtieth day of May, in the One and Thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, didſt falſly, adviſedly, craftily, maliciouſly and traiterouſly ſolicit one Robert Bolron to kill our ſaid Lord the King; and then and there, with an intent ſooner traiterouſly to encourage the ſaid Bolron to undertake the killing and murthering of our ſaid Lord the King, offeredſt therefore to give and pay the ſaid Bolron 1000 l. of lawful money of England; againſt the Duty of thy Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided. How ſay'ſt thou, Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, art thou Guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and haſt been now Arraigned, or Not Guilty?

Sir Tho. Gaſc. Gloria Patri, Filio & Spiritui ſancto, I am not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Not Guilty, you muſt ſay.

Sir T. Gaſc. Not Guilty; nor any of my Family were ever guilty of any ſuch thing: I hope I ſhall be try'd fairly.

Cl. of Cr. How will you be try'd?

Sir T. Gaſc. By God and my Countrey.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Sir T. Gaſc. I deſire, that in order to my Tryal, I may have a Jury of Gentlemen, of Perſons of my own Quality, and of my own Countrey, that may be able to know ſomething how I have lived hitherto; for I am above Fourſcore and five Years old.

L. C. J. Tell him he ſhall have a good Jury of Gentlemen of his own Countrey.

Sir T. Gaſc. And beſides, my Lord, I deſire to know when I ſhall be try'd.

Sir Creſwel Levins. Mr. At. Gen. Some time about the latter end of the Term, as ſoon as I can get a Jury up.

Sir T. Gaſc. I do not know whether I can produce all my Witneſſes at that time, if there be not a longer time allow'd me; for I have a great many Witneſſes to fetch up: Theſe Witneſſes muſt be all here, or I can't make my Defence; and I know not how they ſhall be got hither in ſo little time.

L. C. J. Tell him he may have what Witneſſes he pleaſes, and the aid of this Court to fetch them.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Name them who they are.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. My Lord, ſome of his Witneſſes are at Paris.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why, he will not be try'd yet this Fortnight.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. They will not have time to come over between this and that.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Miſtreſs, he had reaſon to believe that he ſhould be try'd ſome time this Term, for ſo the Council order'd it; and therefore he ſhould have got his Witneſſes ready.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. My Lord, he did not know where they were till a Week ago.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Look you, Mr. Attorney, here is a Lady that is, I ſuppoſe, ſome Relation to this Gentleman.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. He is my Grandfather, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. She ſays a Fortnight's time will be too little to get his Witneſſes together for his Defence, becauſe ſome of the Witneſſes are beyond Sea at Paris, ſhe ſays.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I am willing he ſhould have as long time as the Term will allow of: But ſure that is long enough to get any Witneſſes from Paris.

L. C. J. What ſay you to Sir Miles Stapleton? I ſee he is joyn'd in the Indictment.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, he is not come up yet.

L. C. J. Will you try the one without the other?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, if we cannot have both: He is in the Hands of the Meſſenger at York; we have writ down to know the ſtate of his Health to ſome of the Juſtices of the Peace, and the Meſſenger returns word, he is ſick and can't come: I have ſent down an Habeas Corpus to the Meſſenger to bring him up; let him return a Languidus at his peril; that's all I can do.

L. C. J. Well, what Day do you appoint for Sir Thomas's Tryal?

Mr. At. Gen. Tueſday come Fortnight I think will be a good Day.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. By that time, Miſtreſs, you may get your Witneſſes; you muſt ſend a Meſſenger on purpoſe.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. But if the Wind ſhould be contrary, my Lord, and they cannot be brought over?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. 'Tis not an uſual thing to have the Winds long contrary between Dover and Calais.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. But if it do fall out that he wants a material Witneſs at his Tryal, I hope his Life will be conſider'd.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He ſhould have had them ready, he had warning before.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. We could do it no ſooner, becauſe we knew not where they were.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He ſaith he hath a great many Witneſſes; are they all at Paris?

Mr. At. Gen. There are a great many in Town we know already.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. If we had known when exactly, we might have been more ready perhaps.

Mr. At. Gen. But we could give no notice ſooner; it is early in the Term now. But there is time enough to get any Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Ay, you may ſend to Paris a great many times between this and that.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. What if the Letter miſcarry, my Lord?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why, you muſt ſend a ſpecial Meſſenger.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, if you pleaſe, let it be Wedneſday Fortnight, the laſt Day but one of the Term; becauſe I would give him as much time to provide himſelf as I can.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Well, Miſtreſs, you muſt ſend a ſpecial Meſſenger; we muſt not conſult your conveniency; do it as well as you can, you have time enough.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Your Grandfather is a man of an Eſtate, he may very well, in this Caſe, be at the Charge of a ſpecial Meſſenger.

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. But what if the Winds be contrary, muſt my Grandfather's Life be loſt?

L. C. J. We muſt give you that Favour we can by Law, and you muſt be content: Tell us at the Tryal what you have done.

Then the Lieutenant of the Tower was order'd to take the Priſoner back, and by Rule to bring him to the Bar on Wedneſday the 11*th of* February.

On which Day the Priſoner being brought up, the Tryal proceeded thus:

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, here is an extraordinary matter: Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne had a Rule for ſome Friend to aſſiſt him, by reaſon of the Defect of his Hearing; and now there are three of them that are got among the Jury.

L. C. J. No, no, they muſt come in of the inſide of the Bar.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray let him tell which he will make choice of; for he is by the Rule to have but one.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Tell him there can but one ſtay.

Counſel. He ſays one of them came out of the Countrey, and knows the Perſons that are the Witneſſes, which he does not himſelf.

L. C. J. Well, let the other come in, let him have them both.

Counſel. He ſays, the principal man he depended upon is clapt up.

L. C. J. Well, we can't help that.

Then way was made for the Jury to come up to the Stand, and Proclamation for Information was made in uſual manner.

Cl. of Court. Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, hold up thy Hand.

Sir T. Gaſc. I cannot hear what is ſaid.

Cl. of Cr. Thoſe good men which were lately called, and have appeared, are to paſs, &c.

L. C. J. Tell him the effect of it. If he will make any Challenges to the Jury, he muſt ſpeak to them before they are ſworn.

Hobart. If you will challenge any of the Jury, you muſt ſpeak to them before they are ſworn.

Sir T. Gaſc. I cannot hear who is called.

L. C. J. Tell him who is called.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Thomas Hodſon.

Hobart. This is Sir Thomas Hodſon, Sir.

Sir T. Gaſc. What muſt I ſay? Ay, or No?

Hobart. Do you except againſt him?

Sir T. Gaſc. No. [Who was ſworn.

Cl. of Cr. Richard Beaumont, Eſq;

Hobart. Do you challenge him, Sir?

Sir T. Gaſc. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, here is Sir John Cutler in the Pannel, one that lives in Town, and is the Foreman of the Jury; I deſire the Court to take notice of his not appearing in particular.

Cl. of Cr. John Gibſon, Eſq;
The Priſoner challenged him.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I perceive they skip a great many; pray call them as they are in the Pannel, and record their Non-appearance in Court.

Which was done accordingly; but their Names that did not appear, for brevity ſake, are omitted.

Cl. of Cr. Nicholas Maleverer, Eſq;

Mr. At. Gen. We challenge him for the King. I perceive the beſt Gentlemen ſtay at home.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Yes, 'tis ſo ſmall a Buſineſs.

Cl. of Cr. Beckwith, Eſq; Challenged by the Priſoner.
Stephen Wilks, Eſq; Sworn.
Matthew Prince, Eſq; Chal. by the Priſ.
Thomas Graver, Eſq; Chal. by the Priſ.

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, count theſe.

Sir Thomas Hodſon, Richard Beaumont, Stephen Wilks, Jervas Rockley, Robert Leeke, William Batt, Charles Beſt, John Croſſe, Barton Allett, William Milner, John Oxley, Francis Oxley. Jur'

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, hold up thy hand. Gentlemen, you of the Jury that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Charge. You ſhall underſtand, That he ſtands Indicted by the Name of Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, late of the Pariſh of Elmett, &c. Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis. Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon his Countrey, which Countrey you are, &c.

Then Proclamation for Evidence was made, and Dormer, Eſq; of Counſel for the King in this Cauſe, opened the Indictment thus:

Mr. Dormer. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, Baronet, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted for High Treaſon, in conſpiring the Murder of his Majeſty, the ſubverting of the Government, and the introducing the Romiſh Religion: And for the effecting theſe purpoſes, the Indictment ſets forth, That the ſaid Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, Sir Miles Stapleton, and other falſe Traytors, on the 30*th* of May laſt, at the Pariſh of Elmett, in the Weſt Riding of the County of York, did aſſemble together, and there reſolved to put their Treaſons in execution. And the better to accompliſh their ſaid Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations, they did agree to contribute ſeveral large ſums of money to ſeveral of his Majeſty's Subjects unknown, to introduce Popery, to kill the King, and ſubvert the Government: And that Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne did ſolicit Robert Belron to kill the King, and for that ſervice he was to pay him 1000 l. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty: If the King's Evidence prove the Charge of the Indictment, your Duty is to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Indictment, and it hath been opened to you. There can be no greater Crime charged upon any, than that this Gentleman is accuſed of. The Deſign hath been to kill and murder murder the King, to change the Religion and the Government; and to effect this, they make Aſſemblies, they offer Money: And this, my Lord, we ſhall prove. 'Tis no new Crime, divers have ſuffered for the like already; and we ſhall not need to make any Aggravations, for indeed it cannot be aggravated more than the plain matter it ſelf is. We ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove it directly upon him, even by Two Witneſſes; and we ſhall prove, that he held Intelligence with one Preſwicke a Prieſt; Letters between him and that Perſon are found in his Cuſtody, and we ſhall produce one of them wherein it doth appear, that there was Intelligence between them, and Conſultations had about the Oath of Allegiance; and that Praud did write to him, that it was a damnable Oath condemned by the Sorbonniſts: And upon that Point hangs the changing of Religion; for the Oath of Allegiance is the great Touchſtone to diſcover Men's Sincerity by, and the great Bond to tie them to the Government, and to the Proteſtant Religion. And We ſhall likewiſe prove another Paſſage in a Letter indorſed with the Priſoner's own Hand, wherein there is an Expreſſion to this purpoſe: That if England be converted, (the Prieſt writes this to him) then how a Sum of Ninety Pound was to be diſpoſed: Which was, as you ſhall hear, and we ſhall prove, in a Nunnery. If England be converted, that clearly ſhews what was their Intention, not only to deſtroy the King, but the Religion and the Nation; and ſo they were conſpiring not only againſt his Majeſty, but againſt God. That an old Gentleman that hath lived ſo long under the Peace of this Nation, and been ſo protected by the Government, which hath been ſo indulgent to men of his Perſwaſion, ſhould be guilty of ſuch a Deſign, is a lamentable thing to think of; that he ſhould ſo offend the Law, which hath been ſo mild in its Execution againſt ſuch Men. We ſhall prove the Profer of the 1000 l. and ſo leave it with you.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, theſe two Papers we ſhall uſe in confirmation of that Evidence will be given by two Witneſſes, who I think will concur in the ſame thing; that is, the Conſpiracy for killing the King, and for the carrying on of the Plot. The Papers the Witneſſes will expound to you; the one is a Letter, as Mr. Serjeant hath opened it to you, to Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne from a Prieſt, wherein he does diſcourſe about 90 l. a-Year at Maunſton, which Sir Thomas had purchaſed to ſettle upon a Nunnery called Dolebank in Yorkſhire; and therein it is ſaid, You will be well adviſed to put in a Proviſo into the former Writing (he meant for the Settlement) That if England be converted, the 90 l. a-Year ſhall be beſtowed at Heworth, or ſome other Place in Yorkſhire. Your Lordſhip will hear by the Witneſſes, that there were ſeveral Places deſigned for theſe Nuns to inhabit, as Dolebank and other Places; and this Letter will concur with their Evidence, and they will prove, that this very Place that they ſpeak of, was deſign'd for this purpoſe; and ſo it appears by the Papers taken in Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Cuſtody. My Lord, there is another Letter which was mention'd, and which I believe may have a great Influence in the Cauſe, I am ſure it may be likely to produce very bad Effects, which is that Letter from the Prieſt, wherein he decries the Oath of Allegiance as a damnable thing condemned by the Doctrines at Sorbonne, and other Prieſts from Rome. And this had its effect a little time before; for it was about the time that a matter of Thirty or Forty were convicted of a Præmunire in that County, for not taking the Oath of Allegiance, which they uſed to do before. And there will be ſome other concurring Evidence in this Cauſe, and is by ſome Papers taken in Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's own Hand; they are Almanacks, in which many of his own Memorials are, ſeveral Sums of Money mentioned to be paid, and returned to Prieſts at London: The Witneſſes will tell you it was returned for the Deſign of the Plot. There happens to be 900 l. return'd to Mr. Corker, who is now in Newgate; and ſome other Sums to Harcourt, who is executed; and ſome Money is paid to him, though I think not much, about 25 l. and ſeveral Sums are mention'd, and great Sums return'd to London, by Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, in five or ſix Years time, 5 or 6000 l. to what purpoſe I can't tell; they will give you an Account: I think he did live always in Yorkſhire himſelf, never uſed to come to Town; and what Occaſion he might have of returning Money, I don't know. We will call the two Witneſſes viva voce, and then uſe the other Evidence as we ſhall have occaſion to confirm them. Call Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray. [Who were ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Bolron, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I came to live with Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne in the year 1674, as Steward of his Colworks; and in the Year 1675, a little before Eaſter, being in the next Room to Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, I did hear Charles Ingleby and Sir Thomas in Diſcourſe together, and Sir Thomas did ſay, he was very fearful his Eſtate would be liable to be forfeited to the King——

L. C. J. In 75 was this?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What time in 75?

Mr. Bolron. A little before Eaſter.

L. C. J. Were you in the Room?

Mr. Bolron. I was in the next Room, and the Door was not ſhut; and Sir Thomas did ſay——

Mr. At. Gen. Tell the Diſcourſe what it was.

Mr. Bolron. He ſaid he was reſolved to make a colluſive Conveyance of his Eſtate, for fear it ſhould be forfeited to the King. And Charles Ingleby ſaid, it was beſt ſo to do: And then he told Sir Thomas he would have the Defeazance made ready, which he would draw with his own hands; but he bid him be ſure to bring none but Proteſtant Witneſſes along with him to teſtifie. And in the Year 1675, I did go along with Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne to Sir William Inglesby's of Ripley, and there I did ſee him receive colourably 1000 l.

L. C. J. How do you know it was colourably?

Mr. Bolron. I did hear Sir Thomas tell Charles Ingleby ſo.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Bolron. The 7*th* or 8*th* of April; the Deed bears the 8*th* of April 1675.

L. C. J. Was Charles Ingleby there at that time?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, when the Deed was ſealed; and he read it in the Preſence of the Witneſſes to be dated at that time.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What, that thouſand Pound was the Conſideration of the Deed?

Mr.

Mr. Bolron. Yes, it was. Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne did part thereby with all his Eſtate for Seven Years, he allowing him 100 l. a Year for his Maintenance, beſides the 1000 l. at firſt paid. And this was done with that Intent, for fear he ſhould be diſcovered in the Plot for killing the King——

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Bolron. I did hear Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne and Sir Miles Stapleton diſcourſe of it, and he ſaid it was for that End.

L. C. J. Where was that Diſcourſe?

Mr. Bolron. In Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Bedchamber.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. When was that?

Mr. Bolron. It was in or about the Diſcovery of the Plot.

L. C. J. But you ſay you ſaw the Deed ſealed.

Mr. Bolron. Yes, I was a Witneſs to it.

L. C. J. And you ſaw the Money paid?

Mr. Bolron. I and one Matthias Higgringil did help to count it.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Were you a Proteſtant at that time?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I was at the time of the ſealing the Deed; but I did hear the Diſcourſe between Sir Miles Stapleton and Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne upon the Diſcovery of the Plot, when I was a Papiſt.

L. C. J. When was the Diſcourſe you ſpeak of with Sir Miles Stapleton, do you ſay?

Mr. Bolron. It was about the Diſcovery of the Plot.

L. C. J. After the Money paid?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, after the Money paid: And he ſaid to Sir Miles Stapleton, he had done well to make over his Eſtate.

L. C. J. That is an abrupt thing for him to ſay; how did he begin the Diſcourſe?

Mr. Bolron. They were diſcourſing about the Diſcovery of the Plot by Dr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe; and then Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne ſaid to Sir Miles Stapleton, I have done well to make over my Eſtate to Sir William Ingleby, to prevent a Forfeiture.

L. C. J. What ſaid Sir Miles Stapleton?

Mr. Bolron. I do not know what he ſaid very well.

L. C. J. You ſeemed but now, as if he had ſaid he was in the Plot.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did he own he was in the Plot?

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

L. C. J. When?

Mr. Bolron. At ſeveral times.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Tell the manner how he was concerned.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, in the Year 1676, I did hear Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne ſay to one Chriſtopher Metcalfe, that he was reſolved to ſend 3000 l. to the Jeſuits in London for the carrying on of he Deſign.

L. C. J. What time in 76?

Mr. Bolron. The beginning of the Year 76.

L. C. J. To whom did he ſay ſo?

Mr. Bolron. To one Chriſtopher Metcalfe.

L. C. J. Were you a Papiſt then?

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

L. C. J. When came you firſt to be a Papiſt?

Mr. Bolron. About Whitſontide, 75.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You are a Proteſtant now?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I am ſo.

L. C. J. When did you turn Proteſtant again?

Mr. Bolron. I turned Proteſtant upon the Diſcovery of this Buſineſs.

L. C. J. When?

Mr. Bolron. Either the beginning of May, or the latter end of June.

L. C. J. To whom did he ſpeak it?

Mr. Bolron. To Chriſtopher Metcalfe, who then lived in his Houſe.

L. C. J. What ſaid he?

Mr. Bolron. He ſaid, he was to ſend 3000 l. to the Jeſuits in London, for the carrying on of this Deſign.

L. C. J. Who was in the Room beſides?

Mr. Bolron. None but Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne and Metcalfe.

L. C. J. Where is that Metcalfe?

Mr. Bolron. He is ſince dead, I think.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had they about the Deſign?

Mr. Bolron. They were diſcourſing about it when I came in; and I remember he mentioned 300 l. for Corker, 300 l. for Harcourt, and 300 l. for Cornwallis; and the reſt by 300 l. a-piece to other Perſons.

Mr. At. Gen. What Name did Cornwallis go by beſides?

Mr. Bolron. Pracid, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. That's the Name that is to the Letter.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Well, what do you know more?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne told this Chriſtopher Metcalfe, that he would return it by 300 l. at a time, to prevent Suſpicion, by the Hands of Richard Phiſick; and about the beginning of the Year 77, I did hear Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne ſay, that he had returned it, and that if it had been a thouſand times as much, he would be glad to ſpend it all in ſo good a Cauſe.

L. C. J. Did he ſay he had returned all the 3000 l?

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

L. C. J. Did he tell you how it was to be diſpoſed of?

Mr. Bolron. It was to be diſpoſed among the Jeſuits for the carrying on of the Deſign.

L. C. J. That was in the general; but this 900 l. you ſpeak of, was to thoſe three Prieſts?

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You ſay he reſolved to ſend 3000 l. to the Jeſuits at London about this Deſign; pray what was the Deſign? What did they ſay about the Plot at that time?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, at other times I have heard them ſay, it was for killing the King.

L. C. J. What ſaid Metcalfe to all this?

Mr. Bolron. He did allow of it, and thought it was the beſt way ſo to do. I have ſeen him return ſeveral Sums by Richard Phiſick.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was Metcalfe a Papiſt?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, and he died ſo, as I have heard.

L. C. J. Was you in the Room when they firſt began the Diſcourſe?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, I came in when they were diſcourſing.

L. C. J. You came in when they were talking, you ſay; but they did not ſtop talking becauſe you came in?

Mr.

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, becauſe I knew of it: I was brought in by one Ruſhton, who was acquainted with the Plot, to know of it, and therefore they did not ſtop me when I came in.

L. C. J. You ſay he ſaid, I will return 3000 l. to the Jeſuits in London: Did he ſay in what time he would ſend that 3000 l.?

Mr. Bolron. No, but in 76 he ſaid he would do it.

L. C. J. And it ſhould be employ'd for carrying on of the Deſign?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, thoſe were the Words.

L. C. J. And in 77 you heard him talk with Metcalfe again? And then he ſaid, If it had been a thouſand times as much he would have ſent it?

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

L. C. J. Was no body there but he, Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, and you?

Mr. Bolron. No body elſe.

L. C. J. Then go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, in the Year 77 ſeveral Gentlemen did meet and aſſemble together at Barnbow-hall in the County of York, Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Houſe; and their Reſolution was this, That they would build a Nunnery at Dolebank, in caſe that their Deſign and Plot of killing the King ſhould take effect, and the Roman Catholick Religion be eſtabliſh'd in England: Upon which account, the Company there preſent did reſolve they would loſe their Lives and Eſtates to further it: And Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne did conclude he would give 90 l. a Year for ever for the maintenance of this Nunnery: Upon which they all agreed, that after his Death he ſhould be canoniz'd a Saint.

L. C. J. Who were theſe Gentlemen?

Mr. Bolron. Sir Miles Stapleton, Charles Ingleby, Eſquire Gaſcoigne, my Lady Tempeſt, Thomas Thwing, Sir Walter Vavaſor, Sir Francis Hungatt, and Robert Kilingbeck a Jeſuit, and William Ruſhton a Romiſh Prieſt.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Is he dead?

Mr. Bolron. No, he is fled beyond Sea.

L. C. J. Who elſe?

Mr. Bolron. Theſe are the Perſons I can remember at preſent.

L. C. J. There was a Woman there you ſay?

Mr. Bolron. My Lady Tempeſt, my Lord, and one William Ruſhton, if you had not him before.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. That was your Confeſſor?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, and ingag'd me in the Plot.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What was your Diſcourſe? pray tell that.

Mr. Bolron. The Diſcourſe was upon eſtabliſhing a Nunnery at Dolebank, in hopes that the Plot of killing the King would take effect: The intention was to alter the Government, and introduce the Romiſh Religion.

L. C. J. Who was it ſaid this?

Mr. Bolron. It was ſpoken by Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne and the reſt of the Gentlemen.

L. C. J. In their Diſcourſe?

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

L. C. J. Did they ſpeak of killing the King?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, Sir Francis Hungatt ſaid it ſeveral times.

L. C. J. How? Upon what Account?

Mr. Bolron. They were mutually reſolv'd, and they would talk that they would venture their Lives and Eſtates in hopes the Plot would take effect; and accordingly about Michaelmas, 1677, or near upon, as I remember——

L. C. J. How long ſtaid they there?

Mr. Bolron. About ſix or ſeven Hours.

L. C. J. Were you with them in the Room ſtill?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I was ſometimes in the Room, and ſometimes out: What Diſcourſe I heard, I tell you; there was one Barloe——

L. C. J. What was that Barloe?

Mr. Bolron. I have had two Orders of Council for the ſeizing of him, and never could take him; he is a Prieſt.

L. C. J. Was he by?

Mr. Bolron. He went with them to take poſſeſſion of the Nunnery.

L. C. J. Was he not in the Houſe?

Mr. Bolron. No, not in the Room at that time.

L. C. J. Was there any Servant by in the Room when this Diſcourſe was?

Mr. Bolron. No.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Bolron, Accordingly Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne did erect a Nunnery about the Year 77, at Dolebank.

L. C. J. What, built it?

Mr. Bolron. He eſtabliſh'd it.

L. C. J. Who were the Nuns?

Mr. Bolron. Mrs. Laſhals was Lady Abbeſs, Mrs. Beckwith and Mrs. Benningfield were her Aſſiſtants, Ellen Thwing, Eliz. Butcher, and others, were Nuns, according as I heard Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne ſay: And when they went by Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, when one Mary Root was taking Horſe, Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne ſaid of her, There goes an old Maid and a young Nun.

L. C. J. Whither were they going then?

Mr. Bolron. To take poſſeſſion of the Nunnery.

L. C. J. Was it a new built Houſe?

Mr. Bolron. They call'd it a Nunnery in hopes their Plot would take effect.

L. C. J. Was it an old or new built Houſe?

Mr. Bolron. Nay, I never ſaw it.

L. C. J. Whereabouts was this Houſe?

Mr. Bolron. It was near Ripley.

L. C. J. What, was that Ripley his Houſe?

Mr. Bolron. No, his Houſe is at Barnbow.

L. C. J. Who did it belong to?

Mr. Bolron. They went thither till the Buſineſs was done, and that was only till the King was kill'd, and afterwards they reſolv'd to reſide at Heworth.

L. C. J. How long ſtaid they there?

Mr. Bolron. They liv'd in this place near a Year and half.

L. C. J. Till the Plot was diſcover'd?

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How do you know they liv'd there?

Mr. Bolron. I have ſeen ſeveral times Letters come from their Hands.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How do you know they came from thence?

Mr. Bolron. The Letters were dated from Dolebank.

L. C. J. Did he let them lie open?

Mr. Bolron. Sometimes he did.

L. C. J. What was in them?

Mr. Bolron. I don't know any of the particulars, there was no great matter in them.

L. C. J. Who writ them?

Mr. Bolron. The Name that I ſaw was Pracid, or from Mrs. Laſhals.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. They, or ſome of them.

L. C. J. You do not know whoſe Houſe it was?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, not I.

L. C. J. Where is Heworth hall?

Mr. Bolron. Heworth hall is about half a mile off of York.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Does not that belong to one Mr. Dawſon?

Mr. Bolron. It did, but it was bought of him.

Mr. At. Gen. What other place did you hear him mention?

Mr. Bolron Broughton, my Lord, but I never knew that any were there.

L. C. J. Nor at Heworth hall?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, ſometimes one and ſometimes the other; ſome of them came to Heworth hall, and ſome to Dolebank, but Dolebank was the Place they did generally reſide at: And then Sir Thomas did eſtabliſh 90 l. a Year, which was purchaſed of Mr. Tim. Maleverer, and Alver Aloftus enjoys it.

L. C. J. How much was it?

Mr. Bolron. 90 l. a Year.

L. C. J. Where does it lie?

Mr. Bolron. It lies at a place call'd Mawſon near Sir Tho Gaſcoigne's Houſe.

L. C. J. Did he ſay he had ſeal'd ſuch a Conveyance?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. I ſuppoſe he bought it of Dawſon.

Mr. Bolron. He bought it of Maleverer.

L. C. J. Is Maleverer a Proteſtant?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is he?

Mr. Bolron. I can't tell.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You did not ſee the Conveyance of it your ſelf ſeal'd?

Mr. Bolron. No, I refer to their Words for that.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. To what purpoſe was it bought?

Mr. Bolron. To eſtabliſh a Nunnery.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And they told him he ſhould be canoniz'd for a Saint when he dy'd?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, go on then.

Mr Bolron. My Lord, about March laſt, to the beſt of my remembrance, Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne and Eſquire Gaſcoigne being in their Chamber together, I was reading a Book call'd, The Lives of the Saints, and Eſq; Gaſcoigne told Sir Thomas that he had been before the Juſtices of the Peace, and they had given to him and Mr. Middleton licenſe to go up to London, which mention'd, that in conſideration that there was a ſuit in Law between James Nelthorp, Eſq; and Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, therefore it permitted the ſaid Thomas Gaſcoigne, Eſq; and his man to travel peaceably to London. And I did hear the other Copy read of Mr. Middleton's Licenſe to travel into the South, and for his occaſion into the South parts was pretended to receive ſome Rents there. But I did hear Eſq; Gaſcoigne ſay to Sir Thomas, that he was reſolv'd as ſoon as he came to London, and had done with Mr. Nelthorp, that he would fly into France, and ſo would cheat the Juſtices, for he was reſolv'd not to come back to Yorkſhire again, but he would commit the Deſign in agitation into ſuch Hands as would do it, and would not fail, but he would not ſtay to ſee execution.

L. C. J. You heard him ſay ſo?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. What ſaid Sir Thomas?

Mr. Bolron. He commended his Son's and Mr. Middleton's Reſolutions.

L. C. J. What Room was it in?

Mr. Bolron. It was in Sir Thomas's own Chamber.

L. C. J. Were there any Rooms near it?

Mr. Bolron. None that they could hear in, unleſs in the Chamber within, I don't know whether any one was there or no.

L. C. J. Could they hear in no Room that was near to them?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, in the Chamber within.

L. C. J. Was there no Servant there?

Mr. Bolron. Not as I know.

L. C. J. My reaſon is, becauſe he muſt ſpeak very loud to make his Father hear him.

Mr. Bolron. Yes he did, for I heard him in the Chamber-Window that I ſtood in againſt them, they were a little way off me.

L. C. J. Becauſe if any of the Servants were near, methinks they muſt needs be very cautious how they ſpoke ſo loud to make Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne hear.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, he was not ſo deaf then as they ſay he is, and he ſeems to be now. And Eſquire Gaſcoigne alſo becauſe he would be ſure there ſhould no damage come to him, cauſed all his Goods to be ſold off his Ground, and Mr. Middleton ſold his very Houſhold Goods.

L. C. J. He is a Papiſt too, is he not?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, he is ſo.

L. C. J. Was not he at the meeting with Sir Miles Stapleton?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, Mr. Middleton was one.

L. C. J. You did not name him before.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But he ſaid a great many were there beſides thoſe he nam'd.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Yes he did ſo. Well go on, Sir.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, laſt 30*th* of May, the Day after Holy Thurſday, as I remember, being in Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's own Chamber, Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne bid me go into the Gallery next to the Prieſt's Lodgings, and after a little time one William Ruſhton, my Confeſſor, came to me, and ask'd me, If I was at the laſt Pontefret Seſſions? I told him, yes, and that I had taken the Oath of Allegiance, as others had done: Whereupon the ſaid Ruſhton told me, That I and all the others were damn'd for ſo doing, if we kept the ſame; therefore he bid me be ſure to come next Sunday to have Abſolution from him; for it was a damnable ſin to take that Oath, and he told me, he had power from the Pope to abſolve me, and he added, that few Prieſts had that Power that he had.

L. C. J. Did he make you confeſs that as a Sin to him?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, for I did make the Diſcovery ſoon after.

L. C. J. When was it you firſt turned Proteſtant?

Mr. Bolron. In June, my Lord, after that.

L. C. J. Then you were not a Proteſtant at that time?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Were you a Papiſt when you took the Oath of Allegiance?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Why would not you then go and be abſolved according as you rPrieſtbidyou?

Mr.

Mr. Bolron. I thought I had done nothing that was evil, becauſe ſeveral had taken the Oath with me, as you ſhall hear afterward.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Bolron. I told him that ſeveral others had done it as well as I, that were Papiſts, and they judged it lawful, whereupon he ſaid, Away, and told me I was a Fool, and knew not how to judge of an Oath.

L. C. J. So you were ſatisfied the Papiſts might take the Oath?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I told him I thought it was no ſin to take that Oath, becauſe it was an Oath only to be true to my King and to my Countrey, and I told him that Mr. Ellis, Prieſt to Mr. Vavaſor, had written Commentaries upon the Oath, and juſtified the taking of it. Said he again, Mr. Ellis was a fool, and his Superiors will call him to an Account, and check him for his Pains. But ſaid he, by taking the Oath you have deny'd the Power of the Pope to abſolve you from it, but I tell you he hath a Power to depoſe the King, and had done it: And ſaid he, you will merit Heaven if you will kill him.

L. C. J. Who ſpoke to you?

Mr. Bolron. Ruſhton my Lord ſaid, it was a meritorious Act to kill the King.

L. C. J. But did Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, or any of the Company wiſh you to do that thing?

Mr. Bolron. Not at that meeting, but afterwards Sir Thomas did, my Lord, if you will give me leave to go on.

L. C. J. What did he ſay?

Mr. Bolron. He told me he would aſſiſt me in the Act.

L. C. J. Who?

Mr. Bolron. Ruſhton did. And he told me the Pope had granted him the Power, that I ſhould have the Benefit of Abſolution if I would do it. I deſired him not to perſwade me to do ſuch a thing, for I would have no Hand in it; then he quoted a certain Place of Scripture to me, which was, Thou ſhalt bind their Kings in Fetters, and their Princes in Chains. Whereupon he concluded, and made this Expoſition, that the Pope had depoſed the King, and abſolved all his Subjects, and it was a meritorious Act to kill the King. And that unleſs the King would turn Roman Catholick, the Pope would give away his Kingdoms to another?

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Bolron. Then I told him I would have no Hand in that Act and Deed, whereupon he anſwered me again, you may hang me if you pleaſe for ſpeaking theſe Words. No, Sir, ſaid I, I will do you no Injury if you do your ſelf none. So he bid me conſider what he ſaid, and come to him again, but I did not.

L. C. J. This was the 30*th* of May?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, and the ſame day as ſoon as I came down, I was told Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne had left Order with his Servants that I ſhould not depart the Houſe till he came in, and I ſtay'd there till about ſix of the Clock.

L. C. J. Did not you live with him then?

Mr. Bolron. I lived a little way off the Houſe.

L. C. J. How far?

Mr. Bolron. About a quarter of a mile.

L. C. J. Were you not his Servant?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, not at that time.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How long had you been gone out of his Service before?

Mr. Bolron. I went out of his Service about the beginning of July 1678.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Did Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne ſend you into this Gallery?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And there you found Ruſhton?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, he was not there when I came, but he came as it were from Chapel.

L. C. J. You were his Servant when all the Gentlemen met at his Houſe?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. When did you leave his Service, ſay you?

Mr. Bolron. The Firſt Day of July 1678.

L. C. J. And this was in May 1678, was it not?

Mr. Bolron. No, in (79) my Lord, laſt May. My Lord, I watched and ſtayed till he came in, and took him as he came in. I went up Stairs with him, and when we came into his Chamber he calls me to him, and asked me what Diſcourſe had paſſed between me and Ruſhton; I told him our Diſcourſe was concerning the Oath of Allegiance, and the Lawfulneſs, or Unlawfulneſs of it. Then Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne took me by the Hand, and told me, Well man, if thou wilt undertake a Deſign that I and others have to kill the King, I will give thee 1000 l. and I will ſend thee to my Son Thomas, if he be in Town, but if he be not in Town, he ſaid he would give me ſuch Inſtructions that I ſhould find the reſt that were concerned in the Buſineſs——

L. C. J. The reſt, what?

Mr. Bolron. The reſt that were in the Plot.

L. C. J. That you ſhould know where to find them in London, you mean ſo?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, if he were gone beyond Sea.

L. C. J. What ſaid you to him?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I told him I would have no hand in Blood, and would not do ſuch a wicked Deed, and deſired him to perſwade me no more. Then he deſired me of all Love to keep ſecret what he had ſaid. But afterwards I recollected that it was a very ill thing, and went immediately to the Juſtices of the Peace.——

L. C. J. How ſoon did you go?

Mr. Bolron. Soon after.

L. C. J. To whom did you go?

Mr. Bolron. To Mr. Tindal a Juſtice of Peace, and to Mr. Normanton.

L. C. J. Did you make an Oath there?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, that Sir Thomas promiſed me 1000 l.

L. C. J. And for what Purpoſe?

Mr. Bolron. For killing the King.

L. C. J. Did you put that in the Oath you made?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What time was this after the Diſcourſe?

Mr. Bolron. It was about a Week or ſuch a time.

L. C. J. Was it the next day?

Mr. Bolron. No.

L. C. J. Was it within a Fortnight?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, I believe it was, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it not a Month?

Mr. Bolron. No it was not above a Fortnight, for Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne was apprehended in July or there abouts, I believe my Lord.

L. C. J. But was that the firſt time that Sir Thomas ever ſpake to you to kill the King the 30*th* of May?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You ſay you left Sir Thomas's Service in July 1678?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, the firſt Day of July.

L. C. J. How, did you leave him in good Friendſhip?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, in very good Friendſhip.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Were you in good Correſpondence?

Mr. Bolron. I always went to his Houſe to hear Maſs, and often times was there.

L. C. J. How came you to leave his Service?

Mr. Bolron. It was my own Fault I left it.

L. C. J. Why, it might be no Fault neither. But why did you leave it?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, it was becauſe there was one Henry Addiſon, and Bennet Johnſon did ſeek to take my Work and Service out of my Hands. Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne did deſire me to let them come in to ſee what they could do, and that I ſhould have my Sallary, and that I ſhould gather in his Debts; I was willing to be rid of it, and told him they that looked after the Pit ſhould gather in the Debts, for I conceived elſe it would be but a double Charge to him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. This is only how he left Sir Thomas his Service, Sir Thomas thought the other men could do it better than he, and ſo ſaid he, then let them do your whole Work.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But he ſays he did uſually reſort to the Houſe after he had left his Service to hear Maſs.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. They will ask him ſome Queſtions, it may be.

L. C. J. Had you any Eſtate of your own when you left Sir Thomas's Service?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, I had a Farm I rented of Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne.

L. C. J. What Rent?

Mr. Bolron. Fifteen Pound and a Mark a year, after I was married?

L. C. J. When were you married?

Mr. Bolron. In July (75.) But afterwards I was there, and did ſtill Service.

Mr. At. Gen. I think you have ſome Eſtate of your own beſides that?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, I have 7*l.* a year.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, will you for Sir Thomas ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Babbington. No.

L. C. J. Mr. Bolron, pray what did the Juſtice ſay to you when you made this Oath?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, thus, I was reſolved to come to London, and make my Confeſſion here, and deſired I might ſo do, whereupon one of the Juſtices were unwilling, but at laſt they ſaid I might do what I would.

L. C. J. You ſay Juſtice Tindal it was ſworn before, what did he ſay when you made the Oath?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, as I remember, he ſaid, he muſt give the Council an Account of it, and perhaps he ſhould not have an Anſwer of it in a month after, ſo I thought it was better to come to London, and make a ſpeedy Diſpatch of the Buſineſs, for I did not know but the Prieſts in the mean time might eſcape.

L C. J. But did Mr. Tindal do nothing upon that Oath that was made?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, he did make out his Warrant for the apprehending of one.

L. C. J. Did he not make out a Warrant for the apprehending of Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I think they would have done it, but I deſired I might come to the Council.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. How long after came you there?

Mr. Bolron. As ſoon at I could get ready.

L. C. J. What time came you thither?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I ſet out upon Monday, and came hither to London upon Wedneſday.

L. C. J. Do you know what month it was in?

Mr. Bolron. In June it was, I think.

L. C. J. And who did you come and apply your ſelf to in London, when you came there?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I had a Letter directed from Mr. Juſtice Tindal to his Brother Tindal in London, to carry me to the Council. I chanced to loſe this Letter at Ware, and loſing it there, I came to the Green Dragon in Biſhopſgate-Street, I was acquainted with the man of the Houſe, and having told him ſome of my Buſineſs, he carry'd me before Sir Robert Clayton, and then we went to my Lord of Shaftsbury Preſident of the Council, and preſently got an Order of the Council about me.

L. C. J. How long was this after Dr. Otes's Diſcovery? When did Otes and Bedloe make their Diſcovery?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. This was a long time after, in May laſt.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did Mr. Tindal take your Examination in Writing?

Mr. Bolron. He took a ſhort thing in Writing.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did you ſet your Hand to it?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He reſolved to go to the Council and tell them.

Mr. Bolron. I was not willing to tell the Juſtices all, for I had a mind to go to the Council.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But you told them the great matter of all, Sir Thomas's Proffer to give you 1000 l. to kill the King.

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Had you a Leaſe of your Farm under Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne?

Mr Bolron. It was but a Leaſe parol.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. For how long?

Mr. Bolron. For nine years.

Mr. Babbington. May I have leave to ask him any Queſtions?

Court. Yes, yes, you may.

Mr. Babbington. You ſay you had a Leaſe of the Farm, a Leaſe parol.

Mr. Bolron. Yes, I had ſo.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Counſel muſt not be allowed in matter of Fact, my Lord.

L. C. J. But Brother, this man hath made a long Narrative.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Ay, and a ſhrew'd one too.

L. C. J. His Evidence is very great, and Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne does not hear any one Word.

Mr. Bolron. One thing more I would ſpeak to. It was in September 1678, a little before the Diſcovery of the Plot, I did hear Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne ſay, and tell my Lady Tempeſt, that he would ſend 150 l. to Dolebank in hopes the Blow would be given ſhortly.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. That is the ſame Word us'd by all the Witneſſes.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Bolron. In September 78; the Plot was not known by us to be diſcover'd then, as I know of.

L. C. J. Who did he ſpeak it to?

Mr. Bolron. To his Daughter, the Lady Tempeſt.

L. C. J. What ſaid ſhe?

Mr. Bolron. She ſeem'd to like it very well, I did not hear any thing to the contrary: And I heard a Letter read afterwards from Cornwallis, that he had receiv'd it, but it was too little for the carrying on ſo great a Deſign.

L. C. J. Who is Cornwallis?

Mr. Bolron. And it was for the arming the poor Catholicks when the Blow ſhould be given.

L. C. J. Is his Daughter living?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, ſhe is out under Bail.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, I ſhall deſire to ask but one Queſtion, which concerns the Priſoner at the Bar: How long after the Diſcourſe that you had with the Prieſt in the Gallery, was it that Sir T. Gaſcoigne ſpoke to you of the ſame thing?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr. Recorder, if you ask him but one Queſtion; let it not be that which he hath anſwer'd before; he ſays the ſame day.

Mr. Hobart. I deſire to ask him one Queſtion.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. No, tell Sir Thomas firſt what he hath ſaid, and ſee if he will ask any Queſtions.

Mr. Hobart. Sir Thomas, here is Mr. Bolron hath given Evidence againſt you, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Read your minutes to him.

Then Mr. Hobart repeated the firſt part, about his coming to Sir T. Gaſcoigne's Service, and the Colliery Conveyance.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Ask him if he will ask any Queſtions upon this part. [Which he did.

Sir T. Gaſc. No, 'tis no great matter at all, for it is true; when 'twas I can't tell, there was ſomething I did ſeal to Sir William Ingleby, and ſome money I had of him.

Then Mr. Hobart repeated his ſaying to Metcalfe, he would ſend 3000 l. to the Prieſts in 76.

Sir T. Gaſc. How comes that, I deny that utterly.

Mr. Bolron. 'Tis all true that I have ſaid by the Oath that I have taken.

Sir. T. Gaſc. There is no ſuch thing at all.

Mr. Hobart. He ſays it was return'd by Mr. Phiſwick.

Sir T. Gaſc. Phiſwick was a Servant to me, and return'd ſome money for me ſometimes, but it was all for my Children, my Sons, and my Daughters, and my Kinſpeople, to whom I paid Annuities, but it was a far greater ſum the whole than 3000 l. and for one great ſum of 1000 l. you know how it was diſpos'd of.

Mr. Hobart. He ſays, that in the beginning of 77, you ſaid you had return'd this 3000 l. to London, and if you had a thouſand times as much, you would give it for ſo good a Cauſe.

Sir T. Gaſc. I never ſaid any ſuch thing, never thought of any ſuch thing in my life.

L. C. J. Now tell him of the meeting at Barmbow.

Mr. Hobart. He ſays, in the year 77 there were ſeveral Gentlemen met at your Houſe at Barmbow.

L. C. J. Name them. [Which he did.

Mr. Hobart. Theſe were all together with you.

Sir T. Gaſc. No ſuch matter at all.

Mr. Hobart. And he ſaid all theſe Perſons did diſcourſe with you about the eſtabliſhing a Nunnery at Dolebank, and another at Heworth, and another at Broughton.

Sir T. Gaſc. Not one word of all this is true.

L. C. J. Tell him what he ſaid concerning killing the King.

Mr. Hobart. He ſays that the Nunnery was eſtabliſh'd at Dolebank, and ſuch and ſuch were Nuns.

Sir T. Gaſc. He may ſay what he will, but not one word of all this is true.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But you skip over the main thing, what the Gentlemen reſolv'd upon at that meeting.

Mr. Hobart. He ſays, theſe Gentlemen did reſolve the Buſineſs ſhould go on for the killing of the King, and that they would venture their Lives and Eſtates for it.

Sir T. Gaſc. I never heard of any ſuch thing as killing the King; Sir, did I ever ſay any ſuch thing?

Mr. Bolron. It was in your own Dining-Room, and in your own Chamber.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He did not ſay ſo, I think, about their meeting.

L. C. J. Yes, he ſays they all met at his Houſe, and there they had diſcourſe of killing the King. In what Room was it?

Mr. Bolron. In the old Dining-Room.

Sir T. Gaſc. I deny it utterly; there was no ſuch thing: Some Perſons might be at ſeveral times at my Houſe, but no ſuch meeting, nor words at all at one time or other.

Then Mr. Hobart told him of Mr. Gaſcoigne's and Mr. Middleton's Licenſes to go to London, and intention to go to France.

Sir T. Gaſc. 'Tis very true, my Son did go to London for that end.

Mr. Hobart. And ſo Mr. Middleton, upon pretence of receiving Rent.

Sir T. Gaſc. I cannot tell about Mr. Middleton.

Mr. Hobart. He ſays, your Son would immediately fly into France, and commit the Deſign into other Hands; and you ſaid you approv'd of it: And this he heard you diſcourſe very plainly.

Sir T. Gaſc. but I plainly deny it all.

Mr. Hobart. He ſays you bid him go up (the 30*th* of May) to the Gallery to Mr. Ruſhton.

L. C. J. No, not to him, but when he was in the Gallery, Ruſhton came to him.

Then Mr. Hobart repeated the Diſcourſe with Ruſhton about the Oath of Allegiance.

L. C. J. You need not tell him what Ruſhton ſaid.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Yes, my Lord, it is convenient.

Mr. Bolron. For I told him our Diſcourſe about the Oath of Allegiance my ſelf.

Then Hobart repeated Sir Thomas's further Discourse and Proffer to him.

Sir T. Gasc. There is nothing of all this true: He might come there and talk with any body, for what I know, but I was not with him.

L. C. J. But ask him what he says to this, that he proffer'd him 1000 l. to kill the King?

[Which he did.

Sir T. Gasc. Where should you be paid it?

Mr. Bolron. I would not undertake the Design.

Sir T. Gasc. Did you ever know I was master of 200 l. together in my life?

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

L. C. J. Tell him, he says he would not undertake it, and therefore it was in vain to appoint where.

Sir T. Gas. I utterly deny it all, upon my Life, that's e'en just like the rest, I never heard it before.

L. C. J. He puts it to you, Whether ever you saw him have 200 l. together?

Mr. Bolron. I have seen 500 l. at a time in the House, and I have seen in Phiswick's hand 700*l.*

[Which was repeated to him.

Sir T. Gasc. What Phiswick might have of other mens monies I do not know, he never had so much money of mine.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, Sir T. Gascoigne I believe had at that time at least 1200 l. a year of his own Estate. [Which was repeated to him.

Sir T. Gasc. I wish he would make it good.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, 'tis true enough, I believe he hath settled some Estate upon his Son, about 600 l. a year.

L. C. J. I can't tell what becomes of the Papists Estates, nor how the Priests drain them, but there are men of very great Estates among them, but they are greatly in Debt.

Mr. Hobart. Will you ask Mr. Bolron any Questions?

Mr. Just. Jones. You have not repeated to him one part of the Evidence; That in September, 78 he said to my Lady Tempest, he would send 150 l. to Dolebank, in hopes the Blow would be given shortly. [Which was then repeated.

Sir T. Gasc. I know no such thing at all; there is not one word of all this true.

Mr. Hobart. Will you ask him any Questions or no?

Sir T. Gasc. I know not what Questions to ask, but where the money should be paid?

L. C. J. That can be no Question, for the thing was never undertaken.

Mr. At. Gen. Then pray, Mr. Mowbray, tell your knowledge.

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I came to Sir Tho. Gascoigne's in the beginning of the Year 1674.

L. C. J. Were you his Servant?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord, but never an hired Servant.

L. C. J. In what Quality did you serve him?

Mr. Mowbray. In his Chamber, my Lord, and continued with Sir Thomas until 76, in which time I did observe Mr. Thomas Addison, a Priest, Fincham, a Priest, Stapleton, a Priest, Killingbeck, a Priest, and Thwing the elder and the younger, several times to visit and confer with Mr. William Rushton, Sir T. Gascoigne's Confessor.

L. C. J. Were you a Papist then?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. Are you one now?

Mr. Mowbray. No.

L. C. J. Well, go on then.

Mr. Mowbray. I being very diligent in attending Mr. Rushton at the Altar, I became in great favour with him, and was permitted to be in the Chamber when the Priests were in private with him, and I heard them often talk and discourse of a Design laid for setting the Popish Religion uppermost in England, and how like the same was to take effect in a short time.

L. C. J. Who did speak it?

Mr. Mowbray. The Priests in private with Mr. Rushton: I speak now, my Lord, of the Plot in general, I come to Sir T. Gascoigne anon.

L. C. J. When? In what Year was this Discourse?

Mr. Mowbray. In 1676.

L. C. J. Well, what said they?

Mr. Mowbray. Why they discoursed concerning the setting up the Popish Religion in England, and how like the same was to take effect, and succeed, in regard that most of the considerable Papists in England had engag'd to act for it, and if it could not be done by fair means, force must be us'd; and particularly declar'd, That London and York were to be fir'd.

L. C. J. In 76?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes.

L. C. J. What? Would they fire it again?

Mr. Mowbray. And I heard them often say, That the King in Exile had promis'd them——

L. C. J. Did they say the City was to be fir'd a second time?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, to further their intention.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. It was effected in Southwark.

Mr. Mowbray. And they did also declare, That the King, when he was in his Exile, had promised the Jesuits beyond Sea to establish their Religion whenever he was restor'd; which they now despair'd of, and therefore he was adjudg'd an Heretick, and was to be kill'd.

L. C. J. Who did say this?

Mr. Mowbray. The Priests.

L. C. J. Who was the Heretick?

Mr. Mowbray. The King. Also I did hear Mr. William Rushton tell Addison and the rest of the Priests——

L. C. J. Do you know which of the Priests said the King was to be kill'd?

Mr. Mowbray. It was Rushton, Rushton and Addison were together, and he did declare to Mr. Addison, that according to Agreement, he had given the Oath of Secrecy and the Sacrament to Sir T. Gascoigne, Esq; Gascoigne his Son, my Lady Tempest his Daughter, Mr. Stephen Tempest, and had communicated the whole Design to them.

L. C. J. Were you by when he said this?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, in his Chamber.

L. C. J. How long after the Discourse of the Priests was this?

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, he told them he had done it according to Agreement before; and they did approve of it, and had severally engaged to be active, faithful and secret, and would do to the utmost of their powers, as far as their Estates would permit, to establish the Roman Catholick Religion in England: And about Michaelmas, 1676, there was another meeting of these Priests, and others, where they declar'd,

That

That the King was an Heretick, and that the Pope had Excommunicated him and all other Hereticks in England, Scotland and Ireland, and that Force was to be made uſe of.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. When was that, Sir?

Mr. Mowbray. About Michaelmas 1676.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You were his Servant then?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord: And then did Ruſhton produce a Liſt of Names, of about 4 or 500, and he read them over, all of whom, he ſaid, were ingag'd in the Deſign, and he did read the Names of Sir T. Gaſcoigne, T. Gaſcoigne Eſq. my Lady Tempeſt, Mr. Vavaſor, Sir Francis Hungatt, Sir J. Savile, the two Townley's, Mr. Sherborne, and others.

L. C. J. Did you ſee this Liſt?

Mr. Mowbray. I ſaw ſeveral Subſcriptions to it, and amongſt the reſt I ſaw Sir T. Gaſcoigne's own Hand.

L. C. J. Do you know it?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, very well.

L. C. J. And upon the Oath you have taken, do you believe that was his Hand to the Liſt?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it was his Hand.

L. C. J. Did you know any other Hands? Do not you know his Son's Hand?

Mr. Mowbray. No, nor any but Sir T. Gaſcoigne's.

L. C. J. It was in ſeveral Hands, was it not?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, it ſeem'd to me to be ſo.

L. C. J. What did they ſubſcribe to do?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. This was in 77?

Mr. Mowbray. No, it was about Michaelmas, 1676.

L. C. J. What was it for?

Mr. Mowbray. The Title of it was, as I remember, A Liſt of them that are ingag'd in the Deſign of killing the King, and promoting the Catholick Religion.

L. C. J. Was that writ on the top?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. They were Words, I ſuppoſe, to that effect.

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, it was to that effect, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it mention'd in the Liſt, for killing the King?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes: And then they declar'd alſo, That the Pope had given Commiſſion to put on the Deſign, and proſecute it as quick as they could; and that he had given a plenary Indulgence of 10000 years for all thoſe that ſhould act, either in Perſon or Eſtate, for killing the King and ſetting up the Romiſh Religion in England, beſides a Pardon and other Gratifications: And ſo much as to the Plot in general. Now, my Lord, I come to the Particulars, as to the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir T. Gaſcoigne. About Michaelmas, 1676, much about that time, there was Sir T. Gaſcoigne and his Son, my Lady Tempeſt, and Ruſhton the Prieſt together; where I heard them hold ſeveral Diſcourſes of this Deſign about killing the King, and firing the Cities of London and York; and Sir T. Gaſcoigne did declare and aſſure Mr. Ruſhton, that he would not ſwerve from what he had ſaid, but would keep to the Oath of Secrecy he had given him, and that he would do to the uttermoſt of his power for the killing the King, and the Eſtabliſhment of Popery.

L. C. J. Were you in the Room?

Mr. Mowbray. I ſtood cloſe at the Door, where I heard very well, the Door was not quite ſhut.

L. C. J. They did not know you were there?

Mr. Mowbray. No.

L. C. J. They would not truſt you with it then?

Mr. Mowbray. They did not know I was there. And they did unanimouſly conclude, That it was a meritorious Undertaking, and for the good of the Church, and they would all venture their Lives and Eſtates in it.

L. C. J. Ruſhton was there, was he not?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, Ruſhton was there; and Dr. Stapleton, a Prieſt, coming from another Door, and finding me at the Door, went in and deſired them to ſpeak lower, for there was one at the Door: Whereupon my Lady Tempeſt call'd me in, and order'd me to go below and entertain ſome Strangers: So much for the Particulars concerning Sir T. Gaſcoigne.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Was Sir Miles Stapleton there at that time?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, he was there.

L. C. J. Where?

Mr. Mowbray. In an upper Room.

L. C. J. Who were by?

Mr. Mowbray. Mr. Gaſcoigne, and the Prieſt, and my Lady Tempeſt.

L. C. J. This is all you ſay?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, ſo far as to the particulars of this matter.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Have you any more to ſay?

Mr. Mowbray. No, no more but theſe particulars, unleſs ſome Queſtions be ask'd.

Then Hobart began to repeat this Evidence to Sir T. Gaſcoigne, how he came to be his Servant.

Sir T. Gaſc. He came as a Boy to me, without hiring.

Then Mr. Hobart repeated the Prieſt's Diſcourſe at Ruſhton's.

Sir T. Gaſc. I deny it all.

L. C. J. He was not preſent, this was a Diſcourſe among themſelves.

Then Hobart told him about the Oath of Secrecy, and the Sacrament.

Sir T. Gaſc. No, there is no ſuch thing, there is not a word of it true.

L. C. J. Then tell him of the Liſt.

[Which was done.

Sir T. Gaſc. 'Tis a moſt impudent Lie.

Mr. Hobart. What ſay you to your Hand being to that Liſt?

Sir T. Gaſc. Not one word of it.

Mr. Hobart. But he ſays 'twas your Name to it.

Sir T. Gaſc. He had a pair of Spectacles on ſure that could ſee any thing: Was it a printed Liſt, or a written one?

Mr. Mowbray. It was written, your Name was put to it, with your own Hand-writing.

[Which was told him.

Sir T. Gaſc. He makes what he will.

Then Mr. Hobart repeated Ruſhton's declaring that he had given him the Sacrament of Secrecy.

Sir T. Gaſc. I'll warrant you he hath gotten this Oath of Secrecy out of the News-Books; for for I never heard of it before: Let me ask thee: Didſt thou ever hear it before you came to London?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, Sir Thomas, I did.

Mr. Hobart. But will you ask him any Queſtion?

Sir T. Gaſc. No; it is all falſe he ſpeaks, not a word of Truth comes out of his mouth.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, We will now go on to another piece of our Evidence.

Sir T. Gaſc. I muſt leave it to the Jury to take notice of their Converſations and mine.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Whereas he ſays he was never Owner of 200 l. together, we will produce his own Almanack under his own Hand.

L. C. J. Do it, and we will ſhew it him, and ſee what he ſays to it.

Sir T. Gaſc. Why did not he diſcover it before?

Mr. Hobart. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, Sir Thomas deſires he may be ask'd, Why he did not diſcover it before?

Mr. Mowbray. Becauſe the Papiſts did threaten me at ſuch a rate, and I being a ſingle Perſon againſt them, durſt not.

L. C. J. When did you firſt diſcover it?

Mr. Mowbray. It was about Michaelmas laſt: The Papiſts did threaten me, that if I did diſcover it they would take my Life away.

L. C. J. When did you turn Proteſtant?

Mr. Mowbray. When the Plot broke out, then I took the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy.

L. C. J. Why did you not diſcover it as ſoon as you turn'd Proteſtant?

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, I was not in a condition to make any Friends, or come up to London upon ſuch an Account: Beſides, my Lord, they did threaten me, and particularly after the Plot was come out, Addiſon did threaten me.

L. C. J. But this was a great while before the Plot broke out.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. So long he continued a Papiſt, and then he would not diſcover.

Mr. Mowbray. This Addiſon was often with me, and he flatter'd me, and made me continue a Papiſt, leſt I ſhould diſcover it.

L. C. J. Where is he now?

Mr. Mowbray. He is fled.

L. C. J. What ſaid Addiſon when you did turn Proteſtant?

Mr. Mowbray. He ſaid if I did diſcover, he would take away my Life.

L. C. J. I wonder they did not give you the Oath of Secrecy.

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord, I did receive it from Ruſhton's own Hand.

L. C. J. When?

Mr. Mowbray. In 76.

L. C. J. Who receiv'd it with you?

Mr. Mowbray. It was given to me after the Communicants were gone from the Chapel.

L. C. J. What was the Oath?

Mr. Mowbray. He reſerved the Sacrament for me, and ſwore me by it, that I ſhould be faithful and ſecret, and ſhould not reveal any Diſcourſe I was privy to.

L. C. J. Reveal no Diſcourſe; what Diſcourſe did they mean?

Mr. Mowbray. Thoſe Diſcourſes when the Prieſts were in private with him.

Then Sir T. Gaſcoigne's Almanack was produc'd.

Mr. At. Gen. Who proves Sir Thomas's Hand? Is this Sir T. Gaſcoigne's Hand?

Bolron and Mowbray. Yes, it is his Hand.

L. C. J. Shew it him himſelf. [Which was done.

Mr. Hobart. Is that your Hand?

Sir T. Gaſc. Yes, I think I ſaw it at the Council-Table; this is my Writing, and I will juſtifie every word that is written there.

Mr. At. Gen. Read that one place.

Clerk. The 15*th* to Peter for 100 l. to Corker.

Mr. At. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I deſire he may be ask'd what that 100 l. was for.

Mr. Hobart. Look you here, Sir, did you order 100 l. to be paid to Corker?

Sir T. Gaſc. It may be I did.

Mr. Hobart. What was it for?

Sir T. Gaſc. For the Portion of a Child I had.

Mr. Hobart. What Child was that?

Sir T. Gaſc. I know not who it was, Mary Appleby, I think.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ask him how it came to Corker's hands? Why it was return'd to Corker?

Sir T. Gaſc. I know not that, becauſe we did not know where ſhe lived, ſhe was beyond Sea.

Mr. Hobart. Where is ſhe?

Sir T. Gaſc. She is at Paris.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is another Book of his that does make mention of 900 l. to Mr. Corker, upon Agreement between them.

L. C. J. Ask him how much money he might return to Corker from time to time.

[Which was done.

Sir T. Gaſc. My Lord, I don't know, we have been ſeveral Years returning of money.

L. C. J. Math he returned 8 or 900 l. in all?

Sir T. Gaſc. No, I don't think ſo much.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ask him how much was Mrs. Appleby's Portion?

Sir T. Gaſc. Indeed I can't certainly ſay; but as the Rents came in I was to pay ſeveral Sums to ſeveral Perſons, it was 100 l. a year to that Mary Appleby, it may be 2000 l. in all from firſt to laſt, but I ſhall ſatisfie you about that.

Mr. At. Gen. Will you ſatisfie us anon why 900 l. was paid in one year?

Then the Book was ſhewn to Sir Thomas, who own'd it to be his Hand.

L. C. J. Read it.

Clerk. Q. Of Mr. Corker what Bills, for how much, and to whom directed, he hath received of me ſince the 21ſt of July, 1677. to June, 1678. vid. the Book, p. 45. and the great Book, fol. 54. where you may find P. for 900 l. and agree in this Accompt, Corker, the 7th of Auguſt, 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Firſt he makes a Quere, how much he returned, and then ſays he, the 7*th* of Auguſt I and Corker agreed.

L. C. J. Let him read it himſelf. [Which he did.

Mr. Hobart. What ſay you to that, that you ſent ſo much money to Corker?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You muſt underſtand he is one of the Prieſts, and Bolron ſwears, that he intended to ſend 2000 l. and by 300 l. apiece, he reckons up 900 l.

Sir T. Gaſc. It was a great many years, and ſeveral times.

L. C. J. Tell him it was between July 77, and June 78.

Sir T. Gaſc. That does not appear.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, it does, by the Book.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Then how came you to return 900*l.* in one Year to Corker?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. And never had 200*l.* he ſays together.

Mr. At. Gen. Then here is another Paſſage in this Book, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip to have it read.

Clerk. Take Heworth at an eaſie Rent of the Widow—and purchaſe the Reverſion of Craddock—and in the Interim Dawſon.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Ask him what he did mean by taking of Heworth?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. I took no Houſe there.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But did he agree to buy the Reverſion of it.

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. It was for my Neece Thwing. She was born in the Houſe, and was very deſirous to be in the Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Ay: But why did he take the Leaſe of the Widow, during her Jointure, and why buy the Reverſion?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. I know no Reaſon but my Affection to her.

Mr. At. Gen. Ask him who he did intend ſhould live in the Houſe?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. Nay, I don't know what they intended my Neece Thwing.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did you intend to buy it for your ſelf?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. No, I lent her the Money.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did you intend it for her?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. I might do with it what I would.

Mr. At. Gen. Ask him if his Neece Thwing was a ſingle Woman, and was to have the whole Houſe to her ſelf?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. She had her Brother with her.

Mr. Hobart. He ſays Mrs. Ellen Thwing was a Nun, Mrs. Laſſels was to be Lady Abbeſs, Mrs. Beekwith was her Aſſiſtant, and Mrs. Cornwallis and others were Nuns.

L. C. J. Ask him if Mrs. Laſſels was not to be Lady Abbeſs and live there?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. I know nothing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Ask him if there was not one Mrs. Benningfield to be there?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. No.

Mr. Bolron. Yes, ſhe was to be there.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Why, do you know any thing of her?

Mr. At. Gen. She is in York Gaol.

Mr. Bolron. No, ſhe is gone from thence. My Lord, Ellen Thwing was a Nun, and was ſent for from beyond Sea to inſtruct all them that ſhould be made Nuns, and this Father Cornwallis was Father Confeſſor to the Nuns. He is now in York Gaol, taken with two Women.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Ask him what he meant by that writing in the Almanack?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. I did write things here for a Memorandum to help and aſſiſt my Neece, and the poor Children of my Brother; and ſo the Widow that was Sir Walter Vavaſor's Siſter, was to ſell the Houſe, and one Craddock meant to ſell all the Lordſhip, and the Children were deſirous to keep the Houſe, and ſo they bought the Houſe and one Cloſe, and all the reſt was ſold; ſo I writ it only that they ſhould have the Aſſiſtance of Sir Walter Vavaſor to have the Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Pray ask him what he means by the words, in the interim Dawſon.

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. Nay, what do I know.

L. C. J. Ask if Mrs. Thwing were not a Nun?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. They did deſire if they could not get that Houſe, that they might have another Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And all this for Mrs. Thwing. Ask him if ſhe was not beyond Sea, and kept in a Nunnery?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. Nay, I can't tell what ſhe was.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is another Note in this Almanack, pray read it. It was firſt ſhewed to Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, who owned it to be his Hand.

Clerk. Mr. Harcourt, next Houſe to the Arch within Lincolns Inn-Fields, Mr. Parr's.

L. C. J. No queſtion but he was acquainted with all the Prieſts about the Town, and had Directions to write to them.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He hath been Prieſt-ridden by them, that is plain.

Mr. Recorder. Ask him what he means by the laſt Mark there ſet under London?

Sir. Tho. Gaſcoigne. I can't tell what it is, 'tis a Query.

Mr. At. Gen. In the Almanack there is a Memorandum to acquaint Mr Thwing with the whole Deſign, what it was I can't tell.

L. C. J. Ay, pray let's ſee that.

Mr. At. Gen. This Thwing is a Prieſt, in Newgate at this time.

Clerk. The 15th of April 1676. Memorand. Acquaint Mr. Thomas Thwing with the whole Deſign.

L. C. J. Now ſhew him that.

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. Look you, what is it you would have?

Mr. Hobart. What Deſign was that?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. It was my providing Monies for him and his Siſter, that they ſhould tell how to purchaſe the Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. What, a Prieſt and a Nun?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. They had vow'd contrary to that.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ask him whether Thwing be not a Prieſt?

Mr. Hobart. Is this Thwing not a Prieſt? Thomas Thwing?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. No, it was Ferdinando Thwing, that is now dead.

Mr. At. Gen. No, but this is Thomas Thwing: Is he a Prieſt?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. I do not know, what have I to do.

L. C. J. Then conſider how likely it was, he was to purchaſe an Houſe for a Prieſt and a Nun, for ſome ſuch Buſineſs as is ſworn.

Mr. Hobart. He ſays no, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is the meaning of it then, that he ſhould name the whole Deſign?

Mr. Hobart. He ſays it was the Brothers and Siſters that lived next door to him.

L. C. J. Ay, but 'tis ſaid, Acquaint Thomas Thwing with the whole Deſign.

Mr. Hobart. He might acquaint Thomas Thwing with ſuch his Intention.

Mr. At. Gen. We will now ſhew your Lordſhip a Letter, taken among the Papers of Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, wherein is this Proviſo, talking of the Settlement, In the formal Settlement, let this Proviſo be added, If England were converted, then to be diſpoſed ſo and ſo.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Mr. Bolron, how came you by that Paper?

Mr. Bolron. I took this Paper in Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Chamber, with ſeveral others, I remember ſome had his Hand to them, others had not, and ſome were ſigned Pracid, and ſome Cornwallis.

L. C J. Is there any Mark of his Hand to that Paper?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, there is a Mark in this, of Sir Thomas's own Hand, the word (Yes) in the Margent.

Clerk. Dolebank, June the 9th, 78.

Moſt Honoured Sir,

AFter moſt grateful Acknowledgements of all your charitable Favours, as to my own particular; I am alſo herewith to preſent moſt humble and heartieſt Thanks on behalf of your Neece, and Mrs. Haſtings here, who both would eſteem it a great Happineſs to ſee you, here, as alſo my Lady, your honoured Daughter, to whom we beſeech our humble Reſpects may be preſented. I have ſent the Paper ſafely to good Mrs. Beddingfield, from whom ſhortly you will have Religious Acknowledgments. I told her, that I ſuppos'd you would judge fitting to inſert into the formal Writing the Proviſo, viz. That if England be converted, then the whole 90 l. per Annum is to be apply'd here in Yorkſhire, about, or at Hewarth, &c. The which, doubtleſs, will be as acceptable unto her, and as much to God's Glory as poſſibly can be imagined. Now, deareſt Sir, let me not be too much troubleſome, ſave only to wiſh you from his Divine Majeſty, for whoſe everlaſting Glories greater Praiſe and Honour you do this moſt pious Action, the happy Enjoyment of that Glory everlaſting. I would laſtly adviſe you in God's holy Name, to compleat the Buſineſs by drawing the formal Writing as ſoon as poſſible; and with-

YES. out making any material Alteration from what you have already ſigned, ſave only the Proviſo above written. I ſhould be glad to know concerning the Receipt hereof; and when Sir Miles and your Son are likely to attend you to finiſh the Buſineſs: As alſo when Mr. Pierpoint ſhall be arrived. Theſe good Religious are very deſirous with your Approbation (and Mrs. Bed. at my coming from her wiſhed the ſame) to try for a Removal to Mr. Dawſon's; the Impediments here being eſſential, as the Houſe incapable to receive more Scholars, with many other Inconveniencies alſo. Time permits no more, only we again expreſs our earneſt Deſires to ſee your Honour here with my Lady, as the greateſt Satisfaction we can deſire: I remember you hinted to Mrs. Bedding. not long ſince, that perhaps you might ſee her at Hammerſmith, and how much eaſier you may come hither, we earneſtly beſeech you to take into conſideration to the Purpoſe.

Moſt Honoured Sir,

Your Honour's moſt obliged faithful Servant,

JO. PRACID.

L. C. J. I think 'tis pretty plain, there was a Deſign of erecting a Nunnery.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If England is converted then the whole 90 l. a Year to be employed in Yorkſhire about a rotten Houſe, which would be much for God's Glory.

L. C. J. What other Evidence have you?

Mr. Recorder. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we have another Letter Dated from York Caſtle, and the backſide of the Letter is indorſed by Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's own Hand, the time when he receiv'd it.

L. C. J. When was it?

Mr. Recorder. The laſt May, he dates it from York Caſtle, where he was in Priſon, and therein gives Sir Thomas an Account of the Opinion of the Doctors of Sorbonne about the taking the Oath of Allegiance.

L. C. J. No Doubt all of them do not approve of it.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. As I believe this ſame Pracid was the Occaſion of ſo many Gentlemen refuſing the Oath of Allegiance, I convicted above 40 of them in that Country for not taking of it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Noſcitur ex comite. You ſee if this be the effect of it, what Reaſon we have to rid our ſelves of theſe Prieſts. One that dares write ſuch a Letter, and 'tis found in Sir Thomas's Study.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And Sir Thomas's own Hand on the back of it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, under Favour, I do take it, that the debauching of Men in point of Conſcience, that they may not take the Oath of Allegiance, is to ſet them looſe from the Government, and looſe from the King, and make them ready to arm when they have Opportunity.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. No doubt of it, Brother.

L. C. J. All the Jeſuits ſay they may not take it, but ſome of the Sorbonniſts ſay they may.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But now you ſee they are againſt it.

L. C. J. Some will, and ſome will not allow it.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. They take or leave Oaths as it is convenient for them.

Then the Letter being ſhewn to Mr. Mowbray, and the Indorſement acknowledged to be Sir Thomas's Hand, was read.

Clerk. York Caſtle, May the 24th.

Honoured and ever deareſt Sir,

LOnger time having paſs'd ſince your laſt writing, it is fit to inform you how God's holy Providence diſpoſes concerning us. All the Out-priſoners being call'd into the Caſtle, (as you may have heard) Mrs. Haſtings's Room was needed, and ſo ſhe went into Caſtlegate to reſide at the former Lodging of one Mrs. Wait, (who is now in the Jayl) where ſhe remains with Mrs. Waits's two Children and their Maid-ſervant, teaching the Children, as formerly; alſo the Moor's Neece goes daily thither; and Mrs. Haſtings lives without Charge as to Diet and Lodging, as I formerly told you; ſhe ſpends all her time well, God be praiſed, and comes every morning about Seven a Clock to ſerve God at the Caſtle: But I and two others are much abridg'd of that Happineſs by her Room being left by her here. My Liberty of going abroad is reſtrain'd with the reſt, none being as yet permitted the leaſt, ſince theſe laſt were forced to come in. Madam was here the other day, and ſeem'd ſomewhat timorous about Mrs. Haſtings's teaching: But moſt in the Caſtle perſwaded her, that it was moſt commendable and moſt ſecure, and ſo ſhe reſts ſatisfied: Mrs. Cornwallis is recovered of her Ague, God be bleſs'd: She deſires her dutiful Reſpects may be always preſented unto you, and intends her ſelf to write to you. Mrs. Wood and her Companion are well, but dare not as yet walk in their own own Garden. All our now Priſoners are chearful, and each of us comforted, in hopes that God will make all Catholicks of one Mind: For I have a Letter from our * Spr. at London (who was the ſame day taken and carried to Priſon) wherein he declares, alledging Authority, That the pretended Oath of Allegiance cannot be taken, as it is worded, adding, that three Briefs have formerly been ſent from the Pope, expreſly prohibiting it; and in the third, it is declared damnable to take it. And yeſterday we had a Letter communicated amongſt us, ſent by Mr. Middleton (now at Paris) to his Friends here, containing the Atteſtation of all the Sorbon Doctors againſt it; adding, that whoſoever here in England give leave, they deceive People, and are contrary to the whole Catholick Church. There was alſo a Meeting ſome Years ago, of all the Superiors both Secular and Regular, wherein it was unanimouſly declared, that it could not be taken. Mr. Hutchiſon (alias Berry) who has lately printed a Pamphlet in defence of the Oaths, has the other day declared himſelf Proteſtant at St. Margaret's Weſtminſter. And ſo I reſt,

Honoured Sir,

Your ever obliged

J. P.

* Mr. Record. That is Superior.

Mr. Recorder. That is all, the other is private.

Mr. At. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we ſhall now prove by ſome Witneſſes, that he hath returned great Sums of Money, becauſe he ſaid, he never had 200 l. together; and for this we call Mr. Phiſwick; (Who was ſworn.) Come Sir, were you a Servant to Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne?

Mr. Phiſwick. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. For how long time?

Mr. Phiſwick. For ſix years and upwards.

Mr. At. Gen. In that ſix years time what Sums of Money did you return to London?

Mr. Phiſwick. 'Tis abſtracted in a Note.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you return all the Sums in that Note?

Mr. Phiſwick. I refer my ſelf to my Almanack.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſet down this Account?

Mr. Phiſwick. Yes, Sir?

Mr At. Gen. Then thus, Sir, pray what comes it to?

Mr. Phiſwick. Thoſe Sums do come to 6128 l.

L. C. J. Whoſe Money was that?

Mr. Phiſwick. Part of it was Sir Thomas's, part his Son's, and part my Lady Tempeſt's.

L. C. J. Can you tell how much in any one year you return'd upon the Account of Sir Thomas?

Mr. Phiſwick. Not unleſs I had my Almanack.

L. C. J. It will be endleſs to look over the Particulars.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Can you make any Eſtimate in ſix years how much you return'd for Sir Thomas himſelf?

Mr. Phiſwick. No, not without my Almanack, becauſe I return'd Money for them all.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lady Tempeſt and Mr. Gaſcoigne, it hath been proved, were in all the Diſcourſes.

L. C. J. But that hath not any Influence upon Sir Thomas.

Mr. Phiſwick. The Eſquire liv'd much in London.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What Eſtate had he to live upon?

Mr. Phiſwick. Betwixt 4 and 500 l. a year.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What Eſtate had Sir Thomas beſides?

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, I believe it was 1600 l. a-year, beſides what Mr. Gaſcoigne had.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And what had my Lady Tempeſt?

Mr. Phiſwick. Three hundred Pound a-year.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But ſhe liv'd in York ſhire?

Mr. Phiſwick. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. So ſhe needed little Returns to London?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But admit they had return'd all, yet there was 300 l. a-year to be return'd for Sir Thomas.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, here is Mr. Mawſon, I think 2500 l. was received by him.

Mr. Phiſwick. I paid in the Countrey, at Leeds, Money, that he paid here in Town.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is the 25 l. paid to Harcourt, I would ask him whether it were the ſame Harcourt that was executed?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. I think that not material.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, if you pleaſe we will ſhew you the Examination taken before the Council, that Sir Thomas did own this Bolron had been his Servant, and never unfaithful, but always took him to be, as he now found him, a Fool.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. If he object any thing, it will come in properly by way of Reply.

Mr. At. Gen. Then now we have done till we hear what the Priſoner ſays to it.

L. C. J. Tell him they have done with their Evidence againſt him, if he will have any Witneſſes examined, he muſt call them.

Mr. Hobart. The King's Evidence have been all heard, and ſaid as much as they can, the Court asks you if you would call any Witneſſes, or ſay any thing for your ſelf? Have you any Witneſſes here?

Sir Thomas Gaſc. Yes.

Mr. Hobart. Name them, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Ask what he will have done with them?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Let him tell us to what purpoſe he will call them.

Sir Thomas Gaſc. To examine them to the Credit, and Demeanour of theſe men, and that there is no Probability in their Suggeſtions.

Mr. Hobart. Name them, Sir.

Sir Thomas Gaſc. They are all in that Note.

Mr. Babbington was firſt Examined.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ask Sir Thomas what he would have him asked.

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. Look you, Sir, what do you know concerning the difference between Mr. Bolron and I?

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to that Queſtion?

Mr. Babbington. My Lord, I have not been imploy'd in Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Buſineſs before the laſt Winter.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What do you know then?

Mr. Babbington. About Spring laſt Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne was conſulting with me about Money Bolron owed him upon two Bonds, and gave me Directions to ſue them. And likewiſe he was giving me Directions to deliver Declararations in Ejectment for gaining the Possession of his Farm, because he did not pay his Rent.—

L. C. J. How much were the Bonds for?

Mr. Babbington. I have them here I think.

L. C. J. You need not look for them, you may tell us the Sums.

Mr. Babbington. The one is for Twenty eight Pounds, the other Twenty, to the best of my Remembrance. Mr. Bolron having Notice of this, did desire he would accept of a Conveyance of an House he had at Newcastle for Satisfaction of his Debt. Sir Thomas was unwilling to accept of it, but I did prevail with him to accept it, not in Satisfaction, but as an additional Security; and the Deeds I have here that I drew for that End.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. What time was this?

Mr. Babbington. This was a little before last Trinity-Term begun. I have taken a Memorandum within a day or two, if your Lordship will give me leave to look upon it.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Have you not had all this time to get your Papers ready?

Mr. Babbington. My Memory is very short indeed. But now I see about the third or fourth of June Sir Thomas gave me Orders to deliver Declarations in Ejectment.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When did he first bid you question him for Monies upon the Bonds?

Mr. Babbington. It was some time in May.

L. C. J. Did he tell you, you must sue him?

Mr. Babbington. Yes.

L. C. J. What then did Bolron say?

Mr. Babbington. Bolron did then desire that Sir Thomas would accept of Security out of his House at Newcastle. Sir Thomas was very hard to be perswaded, but at length I did prevail with him, and I used this Argument, That it was not to lend so much Money upon that Security, but his Money was already out of his Hands, and else desperate, and this was a further Security, and that it would not lessen his other Security, and upon these Perswasions he did let me draw a Deed to that purpose.

L. C. J. Was this some time in May?

Mr. Babbington. This Discourse was in May.

L. C. J. Are you sure of it?

Mr. Babbington. The Directions that I had for drawing the Deed was in June, but the Discourse with Sir Thomas was in May, and I do perfectly remember it by a Circumstance which I shall tell your Lordship. After the Deeds were drawn, (for drawing of which I had a Letter under Bolron's own Hand, and if occasion be, I have the Letter here to produce) I came from York, having been there, and appointed a Day for the Sealing of them. I came to the House where Bolron liv'd, and Sir Thomas met me, and there I produced the Deeds, and he of himself was very ready and willing to the sealing of them, but his Wife, who was joyned in the Deeds with him, would not by any means seal, unless Sir Thomas would deliver up the Bonds he had taken for the Money, but Sir Thomas did utterly refuse to deliver up the Bonds.

L. C. J. What time in June was this?

Mr. Babbington. A little before Whitsontide.

L. C. J. What time was that?

Mr. Babbington. That was the 14*th* of June, as I remember, that I delivered the Declaration; and that day before, which was the 13*th,* to the best of my Remembrance, I had this Communication and Discourse about sealing the Writings, which the Wife refused to joyn in; but Sir Thomas would only take it as an additional Security, refusing to deliver up the Bonds, but he would suspend further Prosecution, and Bolron did then desire no longer time than a month for Payment of the Money. But his Wife, though she were urged to seal the Writings, would not be perswaded, but utterly deny'd it. After we had spent a great deal of time there, Bolron comes to me and desires me to come another time, and he would perswade his Wife to seal the Deed; nay, said I, 'tis not fit for me to come up and down unless it be to some purpose, and your Wife will Seal; Will! nay, says he, I will force her to it. My Answer was this, if you take these Courses, Mr. Bolron, I must by no means be concerned in the matter; for your Wife must pass a Fine, and we must examine her secretly, and if she tells me she does it by your Force, I will not pass it if you would give me a 1000 l. After this about a Fortnight he sent for me to come and his Wife would Seal.

L. C. J. By the way, are you a Protestant?

Mr. Babbington. Yes, I am, Sir.

L. C. J. And always was?

Mr. Babbington. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, he is an Attorney at large, I know him very well.

Mr. Babbington. This was a Fortnight or three Weeks after that, the latter End of June, he sent for me to his House, and that his Wife would be contented to Seal. And this he desired might be done on the Tuesday, which was Leeds Market-day, and I could not go. The next day I call'd upon him at Shippon-Hall; he was then within, and desir'd me to go up to Barmbow to Sir Thomas Gascoigne's with him: He said he should go within two or three days to Newcastle, for he had a Chapman that would lay down the Money, and take the Security of the House, and he desired he might have the liberty to go thither to treat about it. I told him I did believe it would be no hard matter to perswade Sir Thomas to that, for he would be very glad of it. I went up with him to Barmbow, and as we went along, he asked me if Sir Thomas did intend to sue him upon his Bond? I told him I had Directions so to do. He asked me likewise if he would turn him out of his Farm? I told him, Yes, if he would not pay his Rent; and the truth of it is, he did then deny he had received the Declaration in Ejectment: But my Man afterwards made his Affidavit of Delivery, and had Judgment upon it. Afterwards I went up to Sir Thomas, and told him what Bolron desired, and he consented to it as readily as it could be asked; and in coming away he told Bolron, that in the management of his Coal-pits he did neglect very much, and did go abroad, staying away two or three Days together. To this Bolron made some Excuse, and said it was for Collecting his Debts. Said Sir Thomas, I know not what you are about, but if you do well for your self, I am satisfied.

L. C. J. How long had he been from him, and left his Service then?

Mr. Babbington. I know not when he went, but this was in June last. After this we went back again, and in coming back he was very inquisitive to the same purpose; he was asking me ——

L. C. J. You say he chid him, and told him he was not a good Husband in his Colliery.

Mr.

Mr. Babbington. Yes; and as we came back he was inquiſitive whether Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne would ſue him, and turn him out of his Farm. I did then enter into the ſame Expreſſions, and told him, if he did not pay, he muſt be ſued.

L. C. J. You told me, Sir Thomas had agreed to ſtay ſo long, when was this?

Mr. Babbington. My Lord, this was after we had parted with Sir Thomas.

L. C. J. After Sir Thomas had promiſed him to ſtay ſo long time, then ſaid he, as you were coming home, Do you think he will ſue me, and turn me out of my Farm?

Mr. Babbing. Yes ſaid I: Well, ſaid he, then by God I will do that which I did not intend to do. What he meant by it I cannot tell, but this was a little before he came to London, which I judge to be the latter End of June; and this is all I have to ſay.

Then Obadiah Moor was called.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did you tell Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne what he ſaid, then I will do what I never did intend to do?

Mr. Babbing. I did never tell him, my Lord, for I look'd upon it as an idle Expreſſion. And I will tell your Lordſhip why; becauſe this man that is now to be examined did tell me how that he was bound for him, and that Bolron to incourage him to be bound, ſaid, You need not fear, for if Sir Thomas ſues me, I will inform againſt him for keeping Prieſts in his Houſe; and I did look upon it as an idle Expreſſion.

Mr. Moor. My Lord, in September laſt was Twelve-month, Mr. Bolron did deſire me to be bound with him to Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. Said I, I told him, Mr. Bolron, I have ſome ſmall Acquaintance with you, but I have no reaſon to be bound with you. Said he, Do not fear; there is my Brother Baker, and Stephen Thompſon are to be bound as well as you. Said he, I will give you my Counter Security. That ſignifies nothing, ſaid I. You need not fear any Suits, ſaid he; for if Sir Thomas ſues me, I will inform againſt him for keeping Prieſts. Said I, When muſt this Money be paid? Said he, at Candlemas next. So we went and were bound; the one Bond was to be paid at Candlemas laſt, and the other in Auguſt. And after Candlemas he did not pay the Money, and ſaid I, Mr. Bolron, I don't like theſe Bonds, you muſt make new Bonds for my Security. I was afraid of being ſued, and I deſired Mr. Babbington to bring a Writ againſt him, which he did; and upon Holy Thurſday I had two Bailiffs ready to arreſt him, but he could not be found; and I had two likewiſe the Saturday before at his Pits. Preſently after he came up to London, and made an Information, and on the 8*th* of Auguſt laſt I met him in Ferry-Bridge, and he came along with me; ſaid he, Mr. Moor, you and I have often diſcourſed of Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, you may do me good, if you do not, pray do me no harm. You have been often at his Houſe. With that, I asked him if he was concern'd in the Plot? For, ſaid I, you have been often telling me, and ſworn it, and deny'd it utterly, that he was no more concerned than any body elſe: But I did but equivocate then, for I was a Papiſt, and if I had told a 1000 Lies, or killed 20 Proteſtants, our Prieſt would have forgiven me for it. And ſo coming to Farnborn, two Miles from Ferry-Bridge, he pluck'd out 10*s.* and ſaid, I have no more Money in my Pocket but this, but pray be kind, and do me no Harm, for you know I have deny'd it all along.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Hath he done ſo?

Mr. Moor. Yes, ſeveral times.

L. C. J. How came you to diſcourſe with him, and queſtion him about it?

Mr. Moor. Becauſe there was a general Diſcourſe in the Countrey, that there were few Papiſts but what were concern'd, and guilty of the Plot.

L. C. J. When was that Diſcourſe?

Mr. Moor. The latter end of September was Twelve-month, when the Plot was firſt diſcover'd. And he ſaid, Sir Thomas was no more concerned than the Child that was to be born.

L. C. J. Had you any Diſcourſe with him about May laſt?

Mr. Moor. No, my Lord, in Auguſt, as I told you, I had.

L. C. J. When was the laſt time that he told you, Sir Thomas had not an hand in the Plot?

Mr. Moor. I can't certainly remember, but I think it was in February, when I told him I would ſue the Bond, or have better Security. It was a ſmall time after Candlemas.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What are you, a Proteſtant or a Papiſt?

Mr. Moor. A Proteſtant, bred and born ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He would have ſworn it no doubt at that time, for he was under an Oath of Secrecy.

L. C. J. But you ſay Auguſt was the firſt time that he diſcourſed to you that Sir Thomas was in the Plot?

Mr. Moor. Yes.

Then Stephen Thompſon was call'd.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, what do you know of this Buſineſs?

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, if you will give me leave to ſpeak, I know a great deal of the Unkindneſs betwixt Sir Thomas and Mr Bolron. He came down to me, he was Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's Steward of his Colliery, and Sir Thomas liked not of his Accounts, and turned him forth. There was a great deal of money owing to Sir Thomas, and he came to Sir Thomas to agree about it, and he deſired me to be bound with him to Sir Thomas: Said I, Mr. Bolron, how ſhall I be ſecured? Said he, there is a great deal of Money of which I never gave Sir Thomas any Account, I will gather it in and ſecure all, and ſo Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne knew nothing of it. So Bonds for 60*l.* were entred into to pay 28*l.* at Candlemas. So Sir, when Candlemas came, and he did not pay the money, I went up to him, and asked him what he would do about this money, what Courſe he would take to ſatisfie? Oh! never fear, ſaid he; why ſaid I, hath he any Hand in the Plot? If he hath, let us know it; for he had made a great deal of his Goods away, and then I thought I ſhould not be ſecured, Oh ſaid he, he is a ſin leſs of it.

L. C. J. Who did make away his Goods?

Mr. Thompſon. Bolron did.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Thompſon. Candlemas laſt. For then I thought Sir Thomas might ſue me for the money, and I would fain have known if Sir Thomas had any hand in the Plot, and I preſſed him much to tell me. Then it paſs'd on, and having a Writ out againſt me, I durſt not ſtir out my ſelf, but I did ſend my Man to him to know what he did intend to do about it: He told my Man, Brother, tell thy Maſter he need not to fear at all; Why, ſaid my Man, do you know he hath any hand in the Plot?———

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. That is but what your Man ſaid.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Is your Man here?

Mr. Thompſon. No.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Therefore you muſt not urge that he ſaid to you, 'tis no Evidence.

Mr. Thompſon. On Thurſday after I went up to him my ſelf, and got him to go up to Sir Thomas, and ſo when he came to Sir Tohmas, he would give him no time but a Fortnight to pay the money; Bolron deſired but three Weeks time and he would procure him his money; ſo away we came down. Said I, What do you intend to do in this Caſe? Said he, If he do ſue me, I will do him an ill turn; and ſoon after he went to London, and ſaid, he would go to ſell his Land at Newcaſtle: And a while after I went out to ſee if he were come again; and meeting him, it was when he was going to London again to carry on his Deſign: Said I, Robert Bolron, what do you ſay in this caſe? You are going now to leave the Countrey, and how ſhall I be ſecur'd againſt Sir Thomas? Do not queſtion it, ſaid he, for I am to receive on the King's Account 30 l.

L. C. J. Upon whoſe Account?

Mr. Thompſon. Upon the King's, concerning the taking Sir T. Gaſcoigne.

Mr. Bolron. But I never had a Farthing of it.

Mr. Thompſon. But ſaid he, I will not take it, for another bids me 60 l. and I know what Otes and Bedloe had, and I won't abate a Farthing of that.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Thompſon. It was after he had taken him; and on Holy Thurſday he did ſay, If he did ſue him, he would do him an ill turn.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice being to ſit at Niſi prius at Guildhall, went off.

William Backhouſe was next call'd.

Mr Juſt. Jones. Let him ask Backhouſe what he will.

Sir T. Gaſc. I would ask him what Threats he gave to his Wife to ſwear againſt her Conſcience, and promiſe of 500 l. he ſhould gain by it.

Backhouſe. I ſerved the Warrant to carry the Witneſſes before Eſq; Lowther and Eſq; Tindall: I was charg'd the 7*th* of July laſt to help fetch the Witneſſes before the Juſtices, and to take Sir T. Gaſcoigne, I and two of my Sons, and he open'd the Door his own ſelf. When we had taken him, Eſq; Lowther directed us to bring the Witneſſes before him, and we did ſo. When we came to Bolron's Houſe, his Wife was ſick on Bed, and I ſaid that ſhe muſt go before the Juſtice of Peace to ſwear againſt Sir T. Gaſcoigne for High Treaſon: She ſaid ſhe knew nothing againſt Sir Thomas; but Bolron ſaid ſhe muſt go, or he would have her drawn at the Cart's Arſe.

Then Hamſworth was call'd.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What will he ask him?

Sir T. Gaſc. I ask him about the threatning of his Wife.

Hamſworth. May it pleaſe you, my Lord; the ſame day that Sir T. Gaſcoigne was taken, Robert Bolron came to his Wife and told her, ſhe muſt go to Eſq; Lowther to ſwear againſt Sir T. Gaſcoigne: She fell a weeping, and would not go by no means; he threatned if ſhe would not go, he would tie her to the Horſe's Tail.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did he tell her what ſhe ſhould ſwear?

Hamſworth. I did not hear him, only to ſwear againſt Sir Thomas.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What ſhe knew, was it?

Hamſworth. Yes; and ſhe ſaid, ſhe did not know any thing of miſdemeanour of Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne touching his ſacred Majeſty, or the Church Government.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Art thou ſure ſhe ſaid thoſe Words?

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, he is a Papiſt.

Hamſworth. I am a Proteſtant.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. How long have you been a Proteſtant?

Hamſworth. I was born ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Well, thou haſt added a few fine Words that I dare ſay ſhe never ſaid.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Were you never a Papiſt?

Hamſworth. Yes, I was.

Nicholas Shippon was call'd.

Mr. Mowbray. This man is a Papiſt too.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Do you think he is not a Witneſs for all that?

Sir T. Gaſc. What Diſcourſe he had May 30, the Day after the Race.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Well, ask him what you will: What do you ſay?

Shippon. Mr. Bolron was with me the 30*th* day of May.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What, May laſt?

Shippon. Yes, the Day after Aſcenſion-day: He came to my Houſe about Two a Clock in the Afternoon, and ſtaid at my Houſe all that Afternoon while an hour after Sun-ſet before he went away; he came and brought a Letter with him to carry to Newcaſtle, and it was ſent away thither.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Are you ſure it was the Day after Aſcenſion-day? How if it ſhould fall out to be another Day?

Shippon. Yes, Aſcenſion-day was the 29*th* of May; He came to me about Two a Clock.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Pray what reaſon had you to take notice of this?

Shippon. He came and brought a Letter to me that was to go to Newcaſtle, and deſired me, that my little Boy might carry it to a Kinſman's Houſe of mine; for he ſaid, he was afraid of the Bailiff, and did not care for ſtirring out; my Wife brought him ſome meat and drink, and he ſaid it was better than he had at home; and ſhe ſaid ſhe was the more ſorry things were no better with him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But how came you to take notice that this fell out the 30*th* of May?

Shippon. The Night before I met him coming from the Race, which was the 29*th* of May, and he asked me if I ſaw any Bailiffs waiting for him? and I ſaid, yes; and he ſaid, it was well if he miſs'd 'em; and he ask'd me if I ſaw Bennet Johnſon.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How long was it you ſay he ſtaid?

Shippon. He came about Two a Clock, and ſtaid till an hour and half after Sun-ſet.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. What Religion are you of, Friend, let us know?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What ſay you to the truth of this, Bolron?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, there is not a word of it true; for I was about Two a Clock at Sir T. Gaſcoigne's; they were marking ſome Sheep, and I was there moſt of the Afternoon.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Were you ever at his Houſe at any other time to ſend any ſuch Letter?

Mr. Bolron. I never ſent any ſuch Letter: Indeed that Day I was a little of the Afternoon at his Houſe, but I ſtaid there but half an hour; but I was moſt part of the Afternoon at Sir T. Gaſcoigne's ſeeing them mark Sheep.

Then Roger Gregſon was call'd:

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What do you ſay to him?

Sir T. Gaſc. Let him ſpeak his knowledge.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I deſire he may ask the Queſtion, for he only generally refers to them what they know.

Sir T. Gaſc. What did he ſay to you about Auguſt laſt?

Gregſon. My Lord, I will tell you: We met about Auguſt laſt, Robert Bolron and I, about a Week before Bartholomew Day: We had ſome Diſcourſe; he came from London a little before that, and I ask'd him how Sir. T. Gaſcoigne did.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was he apprehended in Auguſt laſt?

Gregſon. Yes, he was in the Tower. He ſaid, Well. I ask'd him how he would come off about the Plot (as they call it)? Said he, he may come off well enough, but it will coſt him a great deal of money. I then did ask, how they came to fall out? And he ſaid it was long of that Rogue Addiſon, Brother to the Prieſt, who had call'd him to account, or elſe he had never done Sir Thomas that injury; and I ſuppoſe that was the cauſe of it. And then we had ſome more Diſcourſe, and that Diſcourſe was this: He rides a little from me (he was on Horſeback) and came back again; ſaid he, I can tell you, the King was at Windſor, and one of the Privy-Council made an attempt to ſtab the King, and the King made his eſcape, and now they will believe my Informations the better.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Go on.

Gregſon. That is all I have to ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What are you, a Papiſt?

Gregſon. No, I am no Papiſt, I deny it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Nor never was?

Gregſon. Nor never was.

Then James Barlowe was call'd.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, I conceive this man ought not to be heard, for he is under an Accuſation of the ſame Crime; and we have had two Orders of Council to apprehend him.

Mr. At. Gen. There was an Order of Council within this Fortnight to ſend for him up in Cuſtody.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. There is nothing upon Record againſt him, and you may diſcredit his Teſtimony, but you cannot refuſe him; he is not to come upon his Oath.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Bolron ſwears too that he was at the Conſultation. Sir Francis Winnington.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Let us hear him what he ſays; we muſt leave it to the Jury what to believe.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. They would queſtion him about Mr. Bolron's cozening, which ought not to be.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This man hath ſworn it againſt him.

Mr. Hobart. Why did you not indict him, Sir?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Sir, you ought not to prate here.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come, I doubt you are a little too pragmatical.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. If you had any Record of the Indictment to ſhew againſt him, we would not examine him.

Mr. Hobart. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Sir?

Sir T. Gaſc. You know, Sir——

Mr. Serj. Maynard. That is not proper, he tells him what he knows.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Look you, Sir, we did not intend that you ſhould come here to manage all as a Counſel; it was ſaid, he could not hear well, and ſo you were only to tell him what was ſaid.

Sir T. Gaſc. I would ask him what he does know concerning taking of money, and ſtealing from me?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But that muſt not be asked. [Which Hobart told him.

Sir Tho. Gaſc. Then you muſt tell me what I muſt ask.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Come, you have been pragmatical, Sir, and made him a Brief, and he cannot manage it without you.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Did you write this Brief? [Meaning a Brief in Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's Hand.

Mr. Hobart. No, an't pleaſe you, Sir.

Then Mr. Ravenſcroft offered to ſpeak what this Witneſs had told him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Look you, Mr. Ravenſcroft, if what he ſays tend any thing to this Buſineſs, that Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne comes to know of his ſtealing, and then turn'd him out of his Service, it is material; but if you come to tell a Story here of another man's Knowledge, we can't ſpend our time ſo.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. It was not known but laſt Night to me; and if you will not let me tell you what it is, how ſhould you know it?

Mrs. Ravenſcroft. He is a chief Witneſs for my Grandfather, and I deſire he may be heard, for he diſcover'd it but laſt Night to my Husband.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. If it tend any thing to this Buſineſs, that Sir Thomas turn'd him out of Doors, and therefore this Man bears him an ill Will.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. We had as good hear Mr. Ravenſcroft however; but pray Sir, make your Story ſhort.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. He came to me and ſaid theſe Words, I have kept a Secret a long while, in which I have done very ill——

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Then it does not tend at all to this Affair; for you muſt not come to tell a ſtory out of another man's mouth.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Pray ſit ſtill, Sir, and be quiet.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Indeed you muſt be ſatisfy'd.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. If you have any other Witneſſes, call them, and do not ſpend our time.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. For the Jury muſt be told, that 'tis no Evidence coming out of another man's mouth.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. 'Tis as if a man ſhould come and ſay, I can ſay ſomething for Sir T. Gaſcoigne, when I know nothing but what another man told me.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Ask Sir Thomas if he would have this Barlowe examined?

Sir T. Gaſc. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Then what Queſtions will you ask him?

Sir T. Gaſc. What Conſpiracy was had to take away a great deal of money from me; and how he concealed it becauſe he would not do him a miſchief?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What is that to Sir Thomas's Life?

Mr. Ravenſcroft. I cannot tell you by bare Aſſertion, but if you will hear what I have to ſay, do. Laſt night, late at night, about nine a Clock, Barlowe came to me, ſays he, Mr. Ravenſcroft——

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come, don't tell us the Preamble, but the Story.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. Said he, I have a thing that ſticks upon my Thoughts, which I doubt may endanger Sir Thomas's Life.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, was it about taking Money?

Mr. Ravenſcroft. Said he, If I am ſilent I doubt it will coſt Sir Thomas his Life. Then I asked him what it was? Says he, Mr. Mowbray, who is a Witneſs in this Court, and I, did juſt a little before his going away, combine, or rather he did ſeduce me——

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Was it about Money?

Mr. Ravenſcroft. Money is in the Caſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He did conſpire what to do?

Mr. Ravenſcroft. If you will hear me, I will tell you.

Mr. Juſt. Jrnes. Pray do it quickly then.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. Did combine to rob Sir Thomas of a great Sum of Money; and whereas I held my Tongue, thinking not to ſpill his Blood, I ſee now if I do not tell the truth, I ſhall make good his Credit, and ſo endanger Sir Thomas's Life.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, I'll ask you, or any man alive now; Two men combine to rob Sir Thomas, whether one man be a competent Witneſs againſt the Credit of the other Witneſs? He makes himſelf a Rogue by combining, and you have made him a Knave by his own Confeſſion.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. I may perhaps err in that word; he did not ſay, combine, but the other ſeduced him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You have told a Story to no purpoſe.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You think it a fine thing to be a Catholick, and to appear brisk for them.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. Who ſays I am a Catholick?

Then George Dixon appear'd.

Sir Tho. Gaſc. What do you know of any Conſpiracy of theſe People againſt me?

Dixon. My Lord, I was at William Batley's in Auguſt laſt in the Morning at ten a-Clock, and Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray came in, and called for a Flaggon of Drink, and when it was brought, they fell into a Diſcourſe together concerning Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne and my Lady Tempeſt. Says Mr. Mowbray, I know nothing of Sir Thomas but that he is a very honeſt Man.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. He was not bound to tell you what he knew.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. When was this, in Auguſt laſt?

Dixon. Yes; but, ſaid he, if I knew any thing againſt my Lady Tempeſt, I would diſcover it, for I would hang her if I could. And they ſate down at Mr. Batley's Houſe to conſult what they ſhould do.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Before you?

Dixon. Yes. I heard every word.

Mr Juſt. Jones. And what did they ſay?

Dixon. They ſaid they would meet at Mr. Bolron's Houſe, and if they would compleat their Buſineſs they ſhould be very well gratified.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Againſt whom?

Dixon. Againſt my Lady, and Sir Thomas.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But you ſay, Mowbray ſaid he knew nothing againſt Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne?

Dixon. No; he ſaid he knew no Hurt by them.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How come they to ſay they would contrive their Buſineſs?

Mr. Mowbray. What man is that, Mr. Bolron?

Mr. Bolron. I know him not, nor ever held any ſuch Diſcourſe.

Mr. Mowbray. Nor I.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How far do you live off one from another?

Dixon. I live at Leeds, Mr. Mowbray knows me.

Mr. Mowbray. I don't know that ever I ſaw you.

Dixon. He hath drunk with me.

Mr. Mowbray. I know him not, nor where he dwells.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What Trade are you of?

Dixon. A Cloth-dreſſer by Trade, but I keep a Publick-Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. This Diſcourſe was at Leeds, was it not?

Dixon. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. They ſay both, they do not know you, nay they ſwear it. And 'tis very like you were but very little acquainted, would they let you hear them talk thus?

Dixon. We were as well acquainted as can be, but that he will deny it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what Religion are you of?

Dixon. A Proteſtant.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you been ſo?

Dixon. All the Days of my Life.

Mr. At. Gen. I can't but wonder at the Strangeneſs of your Acquaintance.

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, I have not drunk at that place which is near the old Church at Leeds, not this two Years.

Then William Batley was called.

Batley. And if it like your Honour, theſe two Gentlemen Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray, came to my Houſe, and called for a Pot of Drink.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you not know this man neither?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, I do, but I was never three times in his Company in my Life.

Batley.

Batley. I filled them a Flaggon of Ale, and when I had done I left them. They began to diſcourſe of the Plot, and Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne; and Mr. Bolron.——

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. At your Houſe, where is your Houſe?

Batley. My Houſe is near the old Church at Leeds.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Is that the ſame place the other Man ſpeaks of?

Batley. Yes. Says Mr. Bolron to him, Thou knoweſt that Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne hath been very ſevere againſt thee and me, and now here is an Opportunity offered us to take a Revenge upon Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne: Mowbray replyed again, As for Sir Thomas, he is a very honeſt man, and I know no hurt by him; but as to my Lady Tempeſt, if I knew any thing againſt her I would hang her, for I would diſcover it. But thou knoweſt, ſays Bolron, that Sir Thomas ſues and troubles me, and if I do not make ſomewhat out againſt him, he will ruine me, and it muſt be done by two Witneſſes. To which Mr. Mowbray anſwered again, How ſhall we bring this Buſineſs about? If thou wilt but come to my Houſe, ſaid he, I will put thee in a way to contrive it, and we ſhall have a conſiderable Reward. And Mowbray told him he would come to him ſuch a Day.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was that Man that went out laſt, with you all the time they ſpake?

Dixon. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He does not ſay half ſo much as you do.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Were you in the Room?

Batley. No, I was at the Stairs Head.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What did you ſtand there for?

Batley. I hearing them diſcourſing of Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, hearked what they did ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. The other man ſaid he was in the Room with them; Were you in the Room?

Batley. I ſtood upon the Stairs.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Were you in their Company at all that Day?

Batley. Yes, my Lord, I carry'd up a Flaggon of Ale.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Was the Door left open.

Batley. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Would any men talk in ſuch a Place as this, that all the World may hear them, when they are contriving to take away a man's Life?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You were in the ſame Room, Dixon, were you not?

Dixon. They were at the Grice Head, and we at the Foot.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But the other ſays, he was at the top of the Stairs, the head of the Stairs.

Dixon. We were at the Stairs Foot, and they were in the Room.

Batley. The Table they ſate at, joined juſt upon the Head of the Stairs.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did you hear them down to the Stairs foot?

Dixon. We did ſtand there to hear them diſcourſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Could you ſee them where you were?

Dixon. Yes, as fair as I ſee you.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Could they ſee you?

Batley. No, they could not.

Dixon. Yes, if they had looked down.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why then I ask you, Do you think, if you ſtood in ſo open a Place to be ſeen, and they had ſeen you, can you imagine that they would talk ſo about taking away Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's Life?

Batley. I do imagine they did not know I was there, nor believe any one heard or ſaw.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Do you know how they came there?

Batley. They ſaid they came out of Leeds, and ſaid, one Mr. Legat was to come that way, who they were to ſpeak with.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I ask you, if you were in the Room under them?

Batley. And if it like your Lordſhip, I ſtood at the Stair's-foot.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Juſt now you ſaid it was at the Stair's head.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Did you ſay any thing to them about this?

Batley. No, I did not open my Lips to them about it, but I told it to a Friend about three or four Weeks after.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. To whom?

Batley. To a Neighbour of mine: I ſuppoſe it was told Mr. Babbington.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What ſay you, Mr. Babbington? How came you to know of this?

Mr. Babbington. When the Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer were ſitting at Leeds, there was one came and told me, George Dixon could afford me ſomething that would be very advantageous for the Benefit of Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Who was that man?

Mr. Babbington. Bennet Johnſon, or Francis Johnſon.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was that the man you ſpoke to?

Batley. No, I ſpoke it to a Smith, one Richard Loftus.

Mr. Babbington. I'll tell you another Perſon I heard it from, that was Mr. Bailiff of Leeds.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Well, was this the common Diſcourſe of Leeds?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He ſays ſo. Was it then preſently?

Mr. Babbington. The Bailiff did not tell me ſo ſuddenly.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Would it not have been to your purpoſe to have brought the Bailiff here?

Mr. Babbington. It was after the Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer that I had it from him, which was in October.

Mr. Bolron. In the time of Auguſt I was not at Leeds, I was in Northumberland ſearching for Prieſts, and in the Biſhoprick of Durham, all but a little of the firſt of it.

Then Mrs. Jefferſon was called.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What do you ask her?

Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. Pray be pleaſed to ſpeak to the Conſpiracy and Combination againſt me.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Whoſe Combination? Come, Miſtreſs, what do you know?

Jefferſon. I asked Mr. Mowbray one time, what he knew concerning Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne? And he ſaid, he knew nothing, but Sir Thomas was a very honeſt Gentleman for what he knew, and the beſt Friend he had.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Is that all you know?

Jefferſon. He thought he was wrongfully accuſed.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. When was this? Was this after the time he was accuſed by Bolron?

Jefferſon. It may be it might be, I think it was in Auguſt.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. In Auguſt laſt?

Jefferſon. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But you muſt needs know (it was the talk of the Countrey) when Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne was ſent for up to Town; was it after that time?

Jefferſon. Yes, I think it was.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Then you ſay, you heard Mowbray ſay that Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne was an honeſt Gentleman, and he could ſay nothing againſt him?

Jefferſon. Yes, ask him elſe.

Then Matthias Higgringil was called.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was he one at the meeting?

Mr. Bolron. He was at the ſealing the colluſive Conveyance.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. This Higgringil is a Proteſtant, is he not?

Mr. Bolron. I know not, I think ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come Sir, what ſay you in this matter?

Higgringil. To whom?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What can you ſay to the Buſineſs about Sir Th. Gaſcoigne?

Sir T. Gaſc. Speak to the Threatnings to take away my Life.

Higgringil. I have nothing to ſay to Bolron; but Mowbray on the 25*th* of September laſt, being at an Alehouſe, Mr. Legat and he were together, conſulting how to diſgrace Sir Thomas, and take away his Life; and he calls me out to ſpeak with me: Now, ſaid he, I ſhall match them, for they have done what they could to diſgrace me.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How did he mean that?

Higgringil. I ſuppoſe he had taken away ſome money and gold, and they ſpoke of it, and that was to diſgrace him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was it charged upon him?

Higgringil. It was ſuſpected always he had taken it away.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But was there any ſuch thing talked of in the Countrey?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What did he ſay to you?

Higgringil. He ſaid, they did what they could to diſgrace him, and take away his Life, and he would requite them.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Who they?

Higgringil. Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne and my Lady Tempeſt.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Why? Did Sir Thomas indict him?

Higgringil. No; but the noiſe was about the Countrey.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. When was this? In September laſt?

Higgringil. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What Profeſſion are you of, Higgringil?

Higgringil. An Husbandman: I graze, and I farm a Farm.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You know this man, do you not, Mr. Mowbray?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, Sir Thomas employs him, he is a kind of Collector to him.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. He is no Papiſt.

Then Francis Johnſon appeared.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, come, what do you know?

Johnſon. He hath ſuſtained great Loſſes by him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He! Who?

Johnſon. Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. By whom?

Johnſon. By Mr. Bolron.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What Loſs hath he received?

Johnſon. The very firſt month he entred, he wronged him of 3 l.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How do you know that?

Johnſon. I caſt up the Accompt my ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But he kept him 2 years after that?

Johnſon. Yes, he did.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I loſt 3 l. the firſt three Weeks, and Sir Thomas forgave me it, I don't deny it.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Do you know of any malice between them, and that he ſaid he would do him any miſchief?

Johnſon. No.

Then Mr. Pebles, Clerk of the Peace in the County of York, was called.

Sir T. Gaſc. I would deſire you to ſpeak of the Carriage of Mr. Bolron to you, Sir, what you know.

Mr. Pebles. My Lord, I was in York laſt Aſſizes, and Mr. Bolron came to me into a Room, where I was with ſome Gentlemen, and asked me how I did? And asked me if I did not know him? I told him I did not remember him; ſaid he, I am the Proſecutor againſt Sir Th. Gaſcoigne. So when he was ſat down, after a little while, he deſired to diſcourſe with me; and asked me, If a man was indicted as a Traytor, whether it were fit to pay him money? I owe, ſaid he, Sir Th. Gaſcoigne money, and I would know whether it be fit to pay it to him? Said I, I think you may ſafely pay him his money before he be convicted, but then 'tis the King's, in my Opinion. Nay, ſaid Bolron, he is ſure to be convicted: Then ſaid I, I think it not ſafe to pay it, therefore I leave that to your own Diſcretion, whether you will or no. A little after he deſired to have my Opinion concerning the two Judges that came our Circuit, for I am mightily abuſed by them, ſaid he, they will not at all give me Audience; I came from the King and Council, and they ſlight me, and will not hear me ſpeak: Said I, I believe if you will go to them, they will hear you. I went to ſpeak with them, and they ſent ſome of their Servants out to know what I would ſay to them; but I have writ a Letter to them to tell them my mind; but ſaid I, I can't believe that any one will preſume to carry ſuch a Letter; but for that I will leave it to you. So I came away from him; and after he follows me out, and deſires to ſpeak with me again: Said he, I have ſomething againſt you concerning this Buſineſs in hand, I can do you a prejudice if I will: Said I, God bleſs me, I know nothing of it, I do not at all intend to court your favour, I have no mind at all to that: Said he, I will not do it; and he ſpoke as if he had no deſire to do it; I would not court him, but

but came away and left him: He followed me to the Street again, and ſaid, will you help to apprehend a Traytor? Who is it, ſaid I? It is a Gentlewoman, ſaid he; a Woman greatly concerned in the Plot; you may apprehend her in the Street, and 'tis the beſt time. Now the Street was full, and I thought it a little unſeaſonable; ſo he looked after me, but I never offered to go from him: But, ſaid I, was ſhe in the Plot? Yes, ſaid he, ſhe was to be the firſt Lady Mayoreſs of York after the Plot took effect, and the King was killed; but he did not lay hold upon her; ſo I parted with her; then, ſaid he, I can have no reſpect; ſaid I, I have nothing to do with you; I am Clerk of the Peace of the Weſt Riding in this County, and am always ready to do my Duty there; ſo away I went and left him. The next News I heard was, he had procured a Warrant of the Council againſt me; and he brings the Warrant to a Juſtice of Peace, and that Juſtice of Peace told him, there would be ſeveral Juſtices of Peace at Leeds within two or three days after, and then they would examine the Buſineſs. I chanced to be in a Room with ſome Gentlemen, not knowing of the Warrant that was out againſt me, and this Gentleman that was the Juſtice of Peace called me into another Room, and told me of this Buſineſs: I admired at it, and told him I did know nothing of it, nor that I had diſobliged him, unleſs it was becauſe I did not give him the Complement and Ceremony of my Hat, nor give him mony, neither did I know what Information he had procured that Warrant upon. He told me Mr. Mowbray and Mr. Bolron were in Town: So I deſired him to ſend for the other Juſtices into the Room, where he acquainted them with the matter, and ſaid he, if you will, we will examine it to night; ſo they ſent notice to Mr. Mowbray and Mr. Bolron, that they would examine the Buſineſs that night at 6 a Clock; and they came; and he was asked what he had to ſay againſt me? He ſaid I had taken money for keeping a man from taking the Oath of Allegiance, and they had Witneſſes to prove it——

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Muſt he be here admitted to make his own Defence?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Brother, let him go on.

Mr. Pebles. The Witneſs was called upon, and they asked him to that point, and he denied abſolutely upon his Oath that he gave me any money, and alſo ſwore, he had taken the Oath when it was tendred to him. Then, my Lord, there was one Mr. Dunford an Attorney was ſpoken of, as if he could prove ſomething, but he was 14 miles off, and they could not ſend for him, and ſo I begg'd they would appoint another time for hearing when he could be there; they appointed Monday following, and ordered me to attend, and one of the Juſtices of the Peace undertook to give Dunford notice. Accordingly I came there, but there was no Mr. Bolron nor Mr. Mowbray; but I deſired that Mr. Dunford might be examined upon his Oath, and they did take his information in writing, and he ſwore he knew nothing of it, neither did he ever give me money upon any ſuch account.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You were not by when it was ſworn?

Mr. Pebles. I ſaw the Examination taken in writing.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And you were diſcharged?

Mr. Pebles. Yes, for he could not make out any thing at all.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. It was well for you he could not make it out.

Mr. Pebles. They ſaid they could prove it, and vouched theſe two Perſons, but both denied it upon their Oaths.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Is that all you know?

Mr. Pebles. That is all I can ſay in particular; I have not a mind to ſpeak againſt him in general, becauſe he is the King's Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You can ſay nothing of his Repute?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You were a Stranger to him, you did not know him.

Sir T. Gaſc. I deſire he may ſpeak what Reputation he hath among the Juſtices.

Mr. Pebles. I have no mind to reflect on the King's Evidence, and if I did, it would ſeem as if I ſhould ſpeak in malice; he hath done me wrong, but I never did him any.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But what is his Reputation generally?

Mr. Pebles. Truly, 'tis not very good in the Countrey.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Among whom?

Mr. Pebles. The Grand Jury and the Gentlemen of the Countrey?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Is it a Common Fame in the Countrey.

Mr. Pebles. Moſt People diſcourſe ill of him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did he ſay he did not ſpeak with the Judges?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You did ſpeak with us; indeed you would have had us allowed you a Guard for your ſafety, which we could not do.

Mr. Bolron. Whereas he ſays I gave in a wrong information; this ſame Hunt when he came before them confeſſed he gave him 40 s. but he would not ſwear for what it was.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. 'Tis nothing to the purpoſe one thing or other that he hath ſaid.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. 'Tis altogether uncertain; no body knows what to make of it.

Then Hardwicke was called.

Sir T. Gaſc. Do you ſpeak what Threats Bolron hath uſed to his Wife to ſwear againſt me.

Hardwicke. When the Purſuivants came up to Barmbow, the chief Conſtable ordered me to aſſiſt Mr. Bolron in Execution of the Warrant, and to carry the Witneſſes before a Juſtice. We went to Robert Bolron's Houſe to take the Witneſſes, and there was his Wife, his Brother, and his Siſter: We were to carry them before a Juſtice, and they refuſed to go; his Wife pretended to be ſick and could not go, and they begg'd of us to excuſe them.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Who do you call they?

Hardwicke. His Wife, his Brother and his Siſter: Bolron told them they muſt go, and William Backhouſe and I ordered them by all means to go along with us, I ſuppoſe it was to teſtifie what he had ſworn.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What were they to do, did he tell them?

Hardwicke. They were to go to tell what his

Teſtimony was above, as well as I underſtood the Diſcourſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. We have had 2 Perſons to this purpoſe before. They ſay he would have his Wife go, and ſhe refuſed to go, and cried; but they do neither of them ſay he preſſed her to ſpeak any thing more than ſhe knew, or againſt her knowledge.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. No, one of the Witneſſes ſaid, he told her it was to ſpeak her knowledge.

Then William Clow was examined.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come, what ſay you?

Clow. The 21*d* of May laſt I had a Writ againſt Bolron, and my man arreſted him and brought him to my Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. At whoſe Suit?

Clow. At the Suit of one Higgringil that was Servant to Sir Thomas, and there I had him 2 Days and would not carry him to the Gaol, for he begg'd of me I would not; but then I told him I would keep him no longer there, for he had no money for Lodging and Diet; but he begg'd ſo hard of me that I would but tarry till Higgringil came, and then he did not care what they did with him; for he would make Sir Thomas pay Higgringil his Debt that he owed him, or he would play him ſuch a Trick as he little dreamt of.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. When was this?

Clow. The 21*ſt* or 22*d* of May laſt, or thereabouts.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. May laſt?

Clow. Yes. And ſo Higgringil came over, and they did agree, and he gave him a Leaſe of an Houſe he lived in, and Higgringil took the charge of both the Debts upon him.

Then Hobart ſtood up:

Sir T. Gaſc. Speak whether he pretended he writ a Letter to the Duke of Monmouth from Leeds.

Mr. Hobart. My Lord, I have nothing to ſay to that.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What can you ſay then?

Mr. Hobart. All I can ſay is to the ſums of money returned to Town.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He did not mention that.

Mr. Hobart. If you pleaſe to let me declare what I know about the returning of the money.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Pray ſpeak what you know of your own Knowledge.

Mr. Hobart. For moſt part of it I know of the payment of it, and to whom; 1800 l. there was paid to Mr. Trumbal about the purchaſe, it was paid at Mr. Mawſon's, I was a Witneſs to the Deed, and to the Receipt.

Mr. At. Gen. That is ſome, but what to the reſt?

Mr. Hobart. 200 l. was paid to a Client of mine, 80 l. was paid to one Widow Cawſon that was upon Bond.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How much was paid to Mr. Corker?

Mr. Hobart. Several ſums, above 300 l. paid to Corker in 6 years time.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Nay in 4 years time.

Mr. Hobart. This 300 l. and 300 l. before I drew the Receipt for, and commonly he ordered me when Mr. Corker came for it, that I ſhould have a Receipt from Mrs. Mary Appleby, and it came back ſigned by her, to whom Sir Thomas was Guardian.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And was all this money paid to Corker upon the account of this Appleby?

Mr. Hobart. It was mentioned in the Receipt.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How much was ſhe to have by the year?

Mr. Hobart. 100*l.* by the year, or 2 ſometimes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How came ſhe to have 900 l. in 4 years?

Mr. Hobart. My Lord, I will tell you; for that there was a great Arrear upon a ſuit between Sir Thomas and Mr. Appleby, this Mrs. Appleby's Father; and upon the hearing of the Cauſe, my Lord Keeper Bridgman was pleaſed to order, that this money ſhould be paid to Sir Thomas for the uſe of the Daughters; 200 l. a year, that is 100 l. a piece; and there was an Arrear for 3 or 4 years during the ſuit, about 2 or 300 l. it was; I drew a Receipt for it, and Sir Thomas being preſſed for the money by Mrs. Appleby, who went beyond ſea, he ſent to Corker to get the money returned to her.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Ay, but you dance about the Buſh; was there an Arrear of 500 l?

Mr. Hobart. For 3 or 4 years, and Mrs. Ravenſcroft was one of the Siſters, her part was paid when ſhe was married, but this Gentlewoman's was paid beyond ſea.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Were the Arrears from Sir Thomas to the Gentlewoman beyond ſea?

Mr. Hobart. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Are you ſure there was?

Mr. Hobart. Yes, Sir Thomas told me ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Who was to pay this money?

Mr. Hobart. Mr. Appleby, by Order of my Lord Keeper.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Sir Thomas was Guardian, was the Eſtate in Yorkſhire?

Mr. Hobart. It did ariſe out of Rents there.

Then one Culliford was called.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What ſay you? What do you know of this matter?

Culliford. This Gentleman lodged at ſuch a time at my Houſe, the 4*th* of June, 1677. he was at my Houſe 7 Weeks, and he was gone 3 Weeks, and returned again; he was 3 Weeks away.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What Gentleman was this?

Culliford. Mr. Mowbray.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What is that to the purpoſe?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How do you apply that?

Mr. Hobart. Mr. Mowbray hath ſaid he ſent a Letter to the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. There hath been no mention made of any ſuch thing: Have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Hobart. No.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Then ask Sir Thomas what he hath to ſay for himſelf.

Mr. Hobart. Have you any thing to ſay to the Court for your ſelf?

Sir T. Gaſc. No, I refer my ſelf to the Judgment of the Court.

Then a Woman Witneſs appeared.

Sir T. Gaſc. What do you know concerning Mowbray, whether he was ſuſpected of ſtealing when he was at my Houſe?

Witneſs. Yes, he was, my Lord; he would have given me 5 l. to have gone away, and he did did intend to have clapped me in Priſon, and laid it all upon me.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How do you know that ?

Witneſs. He told me ſo.

Mr. Mowbray. This is a Common Woman and not to be believed.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, we will reply but one ſhort thing in matter of Evidence. Much of this that hath been given by the Defendant hath been to take off the Credit of the Witneſſes, and for Bolron they would ſuggeſt that he hath been diſhoneſt to Sir Thomas, but when Sir Thomas himſelf was examined to that Point before the Council, he ſaid he found him honeſt, but only accounted him a Fool.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. That is proper for you to do now Brother.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. And Sir Thomas being examined about Ruſhton, he ſaid he did not know ſuch an one, and then afterwards he did ſay he knew one of that name. Here is Sir John Nicholas the Clerk of the Council. [Who was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir, do you know what Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne ſaid at the Council-Table?

Sir John Nicholas. He was aked whether he knew Bolron, he ſaid he knew him very well, he had been his Servant till within this Twelvemonth or ſomething more, but for his Honeſty he had nothing to ſay to it, till of late that he had not behaved himſelf ſo well in giving Informations againſt him. But he did find him now what he did always take him to be, a Fool.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What did he ſay about Ruſhton?

Sir John Nicholas. At firſt he did ſay, he did ont know Ruſhton the Prieſt, but after it was brought to his memory, he ſaid he knew one of that Name.

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis taken down in the Minutes, Sir John look upon them.

Sir John Nicholas. He denied at firſt that he knew Ruſhton the Prieſt, and afterwards the next time he came to the Council, he ſaid he did deny it, becauſe he was afraid of an old Law againſt Harbouring of Prieſts.

Mr. At. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe we will now trouble you with a Witneſs or two in anſwer to what Backhouſe and Hardwick have ſaid as to Bolron's threatning of his Wife. We will call the Wife to give you an Account of that.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. They did not charge him that they preſſed her to ſwear falſely.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. That does not at all touch upon the Witneſs.

Mr. At. Gen. If the Court be ſatisfied we will trouble you with that no further.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I believe Backhouſe did ſay, That this Bolron would have his Wife go before the Juſtice of Peace, ſhe ſaid ſhe knew nothing at all, yet he would have her go and teſtifie her Knowledge, and if ſhe would not, he would have her dragged at the Horſe's Tail.

Mr. At. Cen. I think 'tis neceſſary to call a Witneſs or two to that. Firſt to call her her ſelf. [Then Mrs. Bolron was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. What did your Husband threaten you to make you ſwear againſt Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Now you are upon your Oath ſpeak the truth.

Mrs. Bolron. No, never in his Life did he threaten me upon any ſuch Account.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Do you remember when the Conſtable came down to have you go before Eſq; Lowther ?

Mrs. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How chance you did not go with him ?

Mrs. Bolron. I was unwilling to go then, becauſe I could ſay little to the purpoſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did he uſe any Threats to you to make you ſwear againſt Sir Thomas ?

Mrs. Bolron. No, my Lord, but he would have me go, whether I ſaid any thing or no.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did he ever deſire you to ſpeak any thing you did not know ?

Mrs. Bolron. No, my Lord, never in his life.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Bolron deſires to have this Woman his Grand-mother be asked whether he threatned his Wife ? [And ſhe was ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. She was by at that time.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Were you by at that time when the Conſtable came to carry the Witneſſes before Mr. Lowther ?

Mrs. Bolron Senior. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Heark you, did not you ſee the Woman that went over there cry, and ſay ſhe was unwilling to go ?

Mrs. Bolron Sen. Her Husband ſaid ſhe ſhould go, tho' ſhe ſaid nothing.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But her Husband did not preſs her to ſay any thing but what was truth ?

Mrs. Bolron Sen. No indeed did he not.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And did not ſeem to ſtick before.

Mr. At. Gen. What can you ſay to this honeſt man here your Son ?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. I'll warrant ſhe will ſay he is honeſt ſtill.

Mr. At. Gen. But here are a Company of People would make him a diſhoneſt man.

Mrs. Bolron Sen. Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne ſaid he was as truthful a Servant as ever he had in his Life.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did you hear him ſay ſo ?

Mrs. Bolron Sen. I heard him ſay ſo in his own Chamber.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. When ?

Mrs. Bolron Sen. After he was married: And beſides Sir Thomas did ſay he would do any thing he could for him, in relation he had been a true Servant to him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Call Mr. Phiſwick again. (Who appeared.) Look ye, Sir, you are a man that I ſee have been truſted by all the Family of the Gaſcoignes, and you know in what Reputation he was.

Mr. Phiſwick. Sir, while I was his Fellow-ſervant I knew no Ill by him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was he accounted an honeſt man?

Mr. Phiſwick. I can ſay nothing to the contrary.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Then my Lord to conclude, I deſire to ſpeak a word. On the one ſide here is an ancient Gentleman's Life in queſtion, and that or his Death are to be the Iſſue of this Cauſe ; on the other ſide here is the Diſcovery of a Plot upon which all our Lives, our Religion, and the Life of our King depend. It did require your Patience, and you have yielded it. Where lies the Queſtion ? If theſe Witneſſes that have been examined be believed, there is no Queſtion but he is highly guilty of the Plot : The W tneſs tells you, When there was no talk of the Plot, there was a Preparation of a falſe and fraudulent Conveyance to be drawn by Advice of Counſel, and why was this made? Leſt he ſhould forfeit his Eſtate. This is proved in the beginning. You find next a meering of the Prieſts, and there what they did, does not concern this Gentleman at the Bar till he took notice of it, and then joined in it, and approved of it, and did declare it was a worthy Plot, a meritorious Plot for the good of the Church, and at laſt particularly he would give 1000*l.* to Bolron to deſtroy the King and murder him. The other Witneſs agrees with him, and what is ſaid againſt all this? They have call'd and examined I think nineteen or twenty Witneſſes, three touching the Threatning of his Wife, but that falls out to be nothing; two Ale-houſe-keepers that ſtood at the bottom of the Stairs and overheard their Diſcourſe; but you have all heard how they have contradicted one another, they had not agreed well enough together on their Story. All that the reſt do is meant thus, and ſo far they make ſomething of it, that there ſhould be a Debt due from this Bolron to this Gentleman, and ſo it were ſome Contrivance as if he would do it by way of Revenge; it does fall out many times that men do quarrel, but this is a Buſineſs of another Nature. They ſay that he ſhould threaten he would ſerve him a Trick, or there were ſome ſuch words; but under favour, the Queſtion is of the Truth of his Teſtimony; now it is not likely, that they knew what his Teſtimony would be, and there is nothing againſt the other Witneſs that concurs with him, but the Fellows that were upon the Stairs, that talk one of one part of the Stairs and the other of the other. The Matter is clearly whether the Witneſſes be to be believ'd, or whether there be any thing ſufficient offered to take off their Teſtimony. You will be pleaſed to obſerve as to what was ſpoken about the money and the Nunnery, we brought you a Letter from the Prieſt who was mention'd to be one of them at the meeting, Pracid, that writes and dates his Letter from the Place the Witneſs ſpeaks of, and there you will obſerve that in one of the Letters 'tis expreſs'd If England be converted, (there is the main of the Plot) for all I ſuppoſe goes to that purpoſe, pray who thought of England's Converſion at that time? What led them into that but a Conſciouſneſs of a Deſign to convert England? My Lord, another piece of a Letter there is concerning the Oath of Allegiance, you have heard it read, and every body knows what the meaning of it is, it is the Engine of the Jeſuites that if they can but draw men off from their Fidelity to the King, whereof there is no Teſtimony ſo great as the Oath of Allegiance, they need not uſe ſo much of Equivocation; but that is an abominable thing, and not to be endured to go take off the Strength of that Oath that hath been taken by men more honeſt than the reſt, and not ſuffering the reſt to take it at all: And it is a damnable thing that they ſhould aſſert the King is an Heretick, and the Pope has depoſed him, therefore it is meritorious to kill him: But you have heard the Evidence fully, and it needs no Aggravation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I think the Evidence hath been already repeated by Mr. Serj. Maynard, and my Lord, I think there is nothing in this Caſe, but only the Credit of the Witneſſes, for if they be to be believed, there is an Evidence as full as can be. I know your Lordſhip obſerves how it is introduced, how they are fortified in ſome Circumſtances, which Sir Thomas did at firſt deny. They tell you that he had a pious Intent to found a Nunnery, and did proceed ſo far as to make a Settlement, this was deny'd by Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, but hath been verified, and made out by his own Books and Letters writ to him, which were found in his own Cuſtody. This did Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne do with an Expectation of a ſudden Change, for the Letters do declare, that England was to be converted as they called it, and therefore they had ſettled their Matters in order, and they thought fit to inſert that Proviſo in the Settlement, That if England ſhould be converted, then the Money was to be diſpoſed ſo and ſo. But your Lordſhip likewiſe obſerves, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, what other Correſpondence Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne had with one Cornwallis or Pracid a Prieſt. He receives a Letter which ſhews you what the Principles of all the Catholicks are, how far they have proceeded to take away even the Oath of Allegiance, and the Conſequence of that how far it will go, when they think themſelves obliged in Conſcience to caſt off Fidelity to their Prince, and what Miſchiefs may enſue no man knows, but we may in part imagine. You have already had ſufficient Diſcovery to make out the Uſe of this inſtilled Principle, and that is the Deſign to kill the King, for this you hear what the Evidence ſay. Mr. Bolron one of them is ſent to the Prieſt to be inſtructed by him; and by him was chid for offering to go againſt their Principles to take the Oath, and told him he was damned for ſo doing. And preſently after he was examined by Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne upon ſome Diſcourſe with him what Ruſhton had ſaid, who had moved him likewiſe to kill the King as he ſays. Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne knew to what purpoſe he ſent him thither, not only to renounce the Oath of Allegiance, but to carry on the Deſign which he had in hand, and did introduce by laying aſide the Oath, and tells him he muſt engage in the Deſign to kill the King. He examines him what the other had ſpoke to him of, and he ſaid he knew it was more than bare chiding of him for taking the Oath of Allegiance, and he told him for his better Encouragement to go on, that if he would undertake, he ſhould have 1000*l.* And this is the Sum of Bolron's Evidence as to Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne. What then ſays Mowbray the ſecond Witneſs, he was ſo faithful a Servant and ſo diligent, that he was imploy'd by Ruſhton the Confeſſor to attend him at the Altar, and being in ſervice immediate about him, and he being by that means ſo dear to him waited upon him in his Chamber, and was privy to all the Conſultations held there. And he gives you an Account how long this Plot hath been in agitation, for they had been diſcourſing a good while of it; and reſolved it ſhould be done if not by fair Means, by foul, and tells you plainly by killing the King. And that he heard Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne himſelf declare that it was a meritorious Act to kill the King, and that as before he had the Oath of Secrecy given him by Ruſhton, ſo he did declare (which Mowbray ſtanding at the Door heard) that he would never ſwerve from the Oath, but he would aſſiſt to the utmoſt of his power, and they that were with him ſaid, They would ſtand by it with their Lives and Fortunes; and when my Lady Tempeſt underſtood he was there, and was jealous of him, ſhe bid him go down, and entertain the Gueſts below ſtairs. So here is an Evidence from two Witneſſes as full as can be in any Caſe, that Sir Th. Gaſcoigne was privy to the Conſpiracy, and himſelf partaker of it, to kill the King. All that hath been ſaid againſt 'em, is to vilifie their Reputation. As to Mowbray I hear but little, only there are two Witneſſes that touch him; and indeed if theſe Witneſſes were to be believed, they ſay a great deal; that is, They were in an Alehouſe together, and heard them conſpire to take away the Life of Sir Th. Gaſcoigne. Indeed Mowbray ſaid, for Sir Th. Gaſcoigne I know nothing but that he is a very honeſt Gentleman, but for my Lady Tempeſt, if I could hang her I would. That they ſhould hear them contrive this together, and conſpire how they ſhould take away the Lives of this Gentleman and the others: Indeed, if theſe men ſay true, 'tis a great matter to take off the Credit of their Teſtimony, but you heard Gentlemen how they did vary; for the one ſaid, as I apprehended, at firſt he was in the Room, afterwards he was below ſtairs. Ask the one, Could you hear them? Yes. Could you ſee them? No; ſaid the other Yes. So that they were not well provided, as to that matter, nor had they conſulted that point well, where they ſhould agree to ſtand to overhear the matter. Now if that be likely, they ſhould in the preſence of two Perſons whom they did not know, and one of them they never ſaw, but in the Court, declare and diſcourſe of ſuch a matter as this for the taking away the life of Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, then we have nothing to ſay to them, we muſt leave the Credit of that to you, you will obſerve their variety in the ſtory, and the improbability of the thing. But then for Mr. Bolron, the Evidence againſt him is, that he is a very diſhoneſt man, and that this is all out of malice to Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, becauſe he would ſue him upon his Bonds. You obſerve how he does behave himſelf under that proſecution; all that he hath he is willing to part with for payment of his Debt, he makes over his Eſtate for ſatisfaction and ſecurity, and does as much as an honeſt man can do, all he hath ſhall lie at ſtake: And as for Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne himſelf, he had no ſuch Opinion of him in point of Diſhoneſty, for he declared he lived in his ſervice without exception, and ſaid before the Council, he knew nothing of Diſhoneſty by him but only this Information, and now he found him to be (what he always thought) a great Fool. Now whether he thought him a Fool for telling this ſtory, or what elſe, you may explain the meaning of his Expreſſion; but as for any thing of Diſhoneſty, there is nothing againſt Mr. Bolron. He was in Debt 'tis true, but what he had lay at ſtake for the payment of it, and as far as it would go Sir Thomas might take it, but that for malice he ſhould come to ſwear againſt him, there is nothing clearly made out. One Witneſs ſays indeed, that he ſhould ſay, Does Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne intend to ſue me, then I will do what I did not intend to do; whether that be a ſpeech of malice or no, or rather does confirm the Truth of his Evidence, is left to your conſideration: It ſhews rather, there was ſomething that he had in his power to do before any proſecution from Sir Th. Gaſcoigne, or any occaſion of his malice againſt him; it hath not the neceſſary import of a malicious Speech, that he did intend not to do ſuch a thing, and becauſe he was ſued did do it; that therefore is only Truth and no Malice. For the other matter that is ſaid againſt him, That he ſhould endeavour to ſuborn his Wife to ſwear falſly, that was by no means fully proved, but rather that matter hath been ſufficiently clear'd, That tho' ſhe ſaid ſhe knew nothing, yet he would have her go tho' ſhe ſaid nothing; and you hear what the Evidence hath been for Mr. Bolron, that he never did preſs her to ſwear falſly, nor threaten her if ſhe would not, but only deſired her to declare her knowledge if ſhe knew any thing, the Truth and nothing but the Truth. Theſe are all the Objections made againſt the Credit of the Witneſſes; and I think if their Credit do ſtand, you cannot have a clearer Evidence to Convict any one than hath been given you to Day; but that we leave to you, and ſubmit theſe Objections, whether they have any weight in them, and whether they have not been fully anſwered.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. And our Evidence is given in all upon Oath, and their's is not.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Gentlemen, you of the Jury: The Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for High Treaſon, and for High Treaſon of the higheſt Nature, for conſpiring to take away the Life of the King, and for endeavouring to change the Religion, the Proteſtant Religion into Popery; that is, contriving to extirpate the Religion of Proteſtantiſm here, and introduce Popery inſtead of it; and certainly greater Crimes than theſe no man can be accuſed of. There have been produced, on the behalf of the King, two Witneſſes, Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray, both of them Servants to Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne the Priſoner, and therefore might very poſſibly and probably enough be privy to all they have ſaid and teſtified in this Caſe. It does appear by them both, that Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne was a very early man in the Plot (if they ſay true) We heard nothing of it till the long Vacation (78) but it ſeems Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne was a Plotter and Conſpirator in the year 75, or 76. And that he might be able to do this ſomewhat more ſafely, he contrives how he might convey away his Eſtate to prevent the forfeiture; and he makes an Aſſurance of it to Sir William Ingleby, colourably, as the Witneſſes ſwear, for 1000 l. And it does appear likewiſe, as to the introduction of the Popiſh Religion here, they began to ſettle a Nunnery, and it was fit to do ſo againſt England ſhould be converted; firſt, in ſuch a place; but if it happened England were converted, then to be removed to another place. There was at this Nunnery appointed an Abbeſs, an Aſſiſtant and ſeveral Nuns; and Sir. Tho. Gaſcoigne ſo well knew of this, that one of them that was appointed to be a Nun, at the time of her taking Horſe, he ſaid to her, There goes an old Maid and a young Nun. And there are Letters come from that very Nunnery, and from the Prieſt that was appointed to attend them as Confeſſor, which have been read to you. And there is another Preparation thought neceſſary to introduce this Plot, and that is, That all Papiſts might be ſeduced into an Opinion, that it was a Dangerous thing to take the Oath of Allegiance, and that it was a Damnable Sin: For this purpoſe Letters came from the Doctors at Sorbonne, and they determine it to be ſo, leſt any man of that Religion ſhould be ſo good a Subject as to profeſs Obedience to the King in Temporals. Then the Plot goes on between Sir Miles Stapleton, Sir Francis Hungatt, Sir Charles Vavaſor, Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, Mr. Gaſcoigne, Middleton, Ruſhton, my Lady Tempeſt, and a great Company more; all met together and conſulting in Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's Houſe, in his great Room, his old Dining-Room to this purpoſe, not only to bring in their Religion, but kill the King expreſly (ſo ſays the Witneſs) I think they had often talked of it before the Witneſs in the Prieſt's Chamber; for he being then a Papiſt was privy to his Maſter's Deſign, and the reſt of the Confederates, for killing the King, which was the only thing they deſired to effect, as the beſt way to bring in their Religion; and there was great reaſon to do it they ſaid too, for the King had not kept his Word with them when he was in his Exile, for they ſaid, he had promiſed, if he was reſtored to his Kingdoms he would reſtore the Popiſh Religion, but now he was returned and had broke his Promiſe, and nothing more was to be done, the Pope having declar'd him an Heretick, but to deſtroy him; and this was that which was agreed among them: The 30*th* of May laſt, after divers other Conſults had about it, the Prieſt Ruſhton being at Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's Houſe, Bolron is deſired to go into the Gallery, and there preſently comes in Ruſhton, Sir Thomas's Prieſt; Bolron acquaints him that he had been at the Seſſions and taken the Oath of Allegiance: As ſoon as ever he heard it, he cries out, He had committed a damnable Sin, he muſt of neceſſity renounce it, and repent of it, and he could give him a Pardon, for he had an extraordinary Power, more Authority than others, he could give him Abſolution if he did repent of it, and that no Catholick muſt by any means take the Oath. A while after they had a Diſcourſe concerning killing the King; and the Witneſs ſays indeed he was not actually in the Room, for he ſays he ſtood at the Door, and heard all the Diſcourſe, till at laſt the Lady Tempeſt, one of the Conſpirators, taking notice of his being there, ſent him down ſtairs.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. That is Mowbray.

Mr. Mowbray. I was called into the Room and then ſent down.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. 'Tis true, Brother, that was Mowbray: But as to Bolron's Diſcourſe with Ruſhton; when Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, who was not in the Houſe at the time Bolron was with Ruſhton, but had given a Charge he ſhould not go before he ſpoke with him: When he did come home and ſpoke with him, he takes upon him to go on with the Diſcourſe concerning the Plot, and he ſwears poſitively that he offered he would give him 1000 l. and this he ſwears he ſhould have paid him in London: This is expreſly the Teſtimony of Bolron. Now what ſays Mowbray? He tells you (tho' that is but introduction to make his Evidence more probable) That there was great reſort of Prieſts to the Priſoner's Houſe. He tells you of the Diſcourſe and Conſultation the Prieſts had in the Houſe, and that it was expreſly and preciſely for killing the King. He tells you, that he did ſtand at the Door and heard it, as I obſerved before; and he tells you too, which hath not been obſerved, that at that time there was produced a Liſt of 4 or 500 Perſons that had ingaged in the deſign of killing the King; he did ſee the Liſt, he did ſee Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's Hand, which he very well knew and was acquainted with, and which might very well be, being his Servant. So that here is not only a Diſcourſe and Agreement by parol, that he ſhould be in the Conſpiracy, but if you believe him, he ſays, that here is actually the Hand of Sir Thomas to the Engagement to do the Villany; and truly they that were of that Perſuaſion at that time might eaſily be induced to it. For it was agreed amongſt them, that they ſhould have a plenary Indulgence of 10000 years, and it was a meritorious Act; and tho' Sir Thomas perhaps was not ſo ready to contribute in all things, yet hearing of the meritoriouſneſs of the Act, and withal that he ſhould be canonized for a Saint for this piece of Piety, he certainly might readily conſent to it. Mr. Mowbray indeed was asked, Why he did not diſcover it ſooner? He tells you why, He was in fear of the Papiſts; he was threatned; and very like he might be poſſeſſed with fear, and ſo might a man of greater conſtancy till the Buſineſs was diſcovered; and therefore he did not talk of it in the Countrey, but came up here, where it was more ſafe to diſcover it, and hath been here ever ſince. Beſides this Teſtimony of theſe Witneſſes, Gentlemen, there are ſome Papers produced; ſome that mention money that hath been convey'd by Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, in confirmation of the Teſtimony of Bolron the firſt Witneſs, who does ſwear, that he heard Sir Thomas ſay, he would ſend 3000*l.* to the Jeſuits to go on and proſecute this Plot; and afterwards he did hear him ſay, he had ſent the 3000*l.* that he had promiſed. Now it does appear by Sir Thomas's Almanack that he had ſent ſeveral Sums; his Receiver Phiſwick did ſpeak of 6000 l. and he himſelf did give a touch towards it. Indeed Phiſwick was a Receiver for Sir Thomas, and likewiſe for his Son, and for the Lady Tempeſt; but it is impoſſible, if they had ſent all the money that ever they had, and conſidering too, that the Lady Tempeſt, as appears by the Witneſſes, lived in the Countrey, that it could have amounted to near that ſum of money; for ſhe had but 300 l. a year, and the eldeſt Son had but 400 l. a year, how then could 6000 l. be returned for them in 4 years time? 'Tis true, there is ſome Anſwer given as to that 900 l. by that Witneſs Hobart, who ſays there was a Suit, and 100 l. a year decreed to be paid to Mrs. Appleby, Sir Thomas's Niece, for ſo many years, and he to take care of ſending that to her; and tho' that was but 100 l. a year, yet there was a Decree, or ſome Order, to pay the Arrears with the other money, which made it up 900 l.

The Evidence for the King againſt the Priſoner is but two Witneſſes, but they as poſitive and expreſs as poſſibly can be. What then is ſaid by the Priſoner, or the Witneſſes, in his Defence? There is one, that is Shippon, that gives ſome Teſtimony againſt the very Evidence, and the poſſibility of it to be true in one part of it: For Bolron he tells you, that the 30*th* of May was the time when there was that Conſult held at Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's in the Gallery with the Prieſt, that he ſtaid there till night, and that then Sir Thomas talked with him and made this proffer to him for the Murther and Deſtruction of the King. Here comes a Witneſs, Shippon, and tells you, that that very 30*th* of May, Bolron was at his his Houſe at 2 a Clock, and ſtaid an Hour or 2 after Sun-ſet: If that were true, that he were there all that time, it is not then true that he ſpeaks of about Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne; and it was impoſſible that he ſhould be at the Conſult at that time when he ſays he was there, and afterwards ſpoke to Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne. Now, Gentlemen, you have the King's Witneſs upon his Oath; he that Teſtifies againſt him is barely upon his Word, and he is a Papiſt too, for that he was asked, and he did confeſs himſelf ſo. I do not ſay that a Papiſt is no Witneſs, a Papiſt is a Witneſs, and he is a Witneſs in a Papiſt Cauſe, and for a Papiſt; but I muſt tell you, there is leſs Credit to be given to a Papiſt in a Cauſe of this Nature, who can eaſily believe they may have Indulgences and Pardons enough for ſaving one from the Gallows who is to be Canonized for a Saint if the Plot take effect. He hath only affirmed it who is a Papiſt, the other who is a Proteſtant ſwears what his Evidence is.

Mr. Babbington who was the firſt Witneſs examined for the Priſoner, he tells you there had been ſome Debates and Differences about Rent and Money that was owing by Bolron to the Priſoner. He laboured and interceded often on his Behalf, but at length not being able to prevail that he ſhould not be ſued; the Witneſs ſwears, I will then do that which I did not intend to do. What he meant by it is doubtful, and it is an ambiguous Speech, but to interpret it that he would ſwear falſly to take away a Man's Life, and ſo commit both Murder and Perjury, is hard to infer and conclude from ſuch doubtful Words. There are ſome Witneſſes that tell you, that is, Moor, and others, that Bolron did ſay and ſwear that Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne was never concerned in the Plot: That might very well be, eſpecially if you take the time when he did ſay this, he was a Papiſt a great while after Sir Thomas had ingaged himſelf in the Plot, and while he was ſo, it is not unlike he would venture an Oath to ſave any of the ſame Perſwaſion and Religion he himſelf was of. But whatſoever he ſaid it was not Judicially, he was not bound to diſcover to him he ſpoke to, he is now upon his Oath, and you have heard what an expreſs Teſtimony he gives. As to what is ſaid concerning his Wife, that he ſhould endeavour to perſwade her contrary to her Knowledge to give Teſtimony againſt Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, and therefore he is not to be believed here upon his own Oath, who would have his Wife forſwear herſelf to fortifie him: There is no ſuch thing, and it does appear by the Evidence of thoſe that are ſworn, that he was earneſt, and would have his Wife go and teſtifie her Knowledge; but did not infuſe or intimate any thing to her ſhe ſhould ſay, whether ſhe did know it or no: And to aſſure you that, you have the Oath of the Woman herſelf, who hath been preſent here, and tells you the ſame thing. Dixon he comes and ſays, in Auguſt laſt, Mowbray ſaid he knew nothing of the Priſoner, which may be anſwered by his Fear; but concerning the two Witneſſes that Mr. Sollicitor did take notice of, he did tell you, and 'tis plain, how very improbable it was two Perſons ſhould ſpeak in the Preſence of Strangers, and tell them they were about to take away the Life of another Perſon, the one of the Lady Tempeſt who had done him a Diſpleaſure, the other of Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, but Mowbray at that time ſaid he knew nothing of Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne; but Gentlemen, beſides what was ſaid before, this is improbable any ſuch thing ſhould be, and you hear the Witneſſes, at leaſt one of them, that he never knew one of the two.

Mr. Bolron. I knew neither of them.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I ſhould be very loth to omit any thing on the Witneſſes ſide, or that hath been materially teſtified againſt them on the Priſoner's. I did not conceive the Evidence given by Mr. Pebles to come to any thing at all. There was a Diſcourſe between Bolron and him at laſt Aſſizes, after ſome Talk Bolron tells him he had ſomething to ſay to him, and what was it? Bolron was told that he had charged ſome Perſons that he ought not to do, (excuſed them for Money that did not take the Oath of Allegiance as they ought to have done) and it ſeems he did it here, and ſo far he went as to bring Witneſſes before the Juſtices of Peace to prove it. And although they did not give Evidence againſt Mr. Pebles in that very Particular, yet certainly he thought they would have ſaid ſomething, but that does not argue at all, that becauſe he did accuſe Mr. Pebles (as he thought juſtly in that particular) therefore that now he ſhould falſly accuſe Sir Thomas in a Matter that concerns his Life ſo highly. There are ſome other things that were ſaid by the Witneſſes that would tend towards the proving of ſome Malice in the Witneſſes towards Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, and therefore they give in this Evidence: One thing indeed was ſpoken by Higgringil, that is, it was generally reported in the Country that Mowbray had taken away Money from Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, and that Mowbray himſelf ſaid, that as they had endeavoured to take away his Fame and Life, now he had found an Opportunity to requite them. So ſaith the Witneſs, but 'tis not very probable. I leave it with you upon the Credit of the Witneſſes for the King, who have ſworn it upon their Oaths, and the others that go upon their Words, and not their Oaths, whether they have taken away the Force and Strength of the King's Evidence which is as full, expreſs and poſitive as can be by two Witneſſes.

Gentlemen, here is on the one ſide the Life of an ancient Gentleman before you, on the other ſide there is a Conſpiracy againſt the Life of the King, who is the Breath of our Noſtrils, and whom God long preſerve. I know you being upon your Oaths will take into your Conſiderations both, and give a Verdict according to the Evidence you have heard.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. I will tell you Gentlemen, I cannot forbear ſaying one thing to you. There is ſome Evidence that makes it a very improbable thing to be true what Mr. Bolron hath ſaid, and yet Mr. Bolron having ſaid it ſo poſitively, and Mowbray agreeing with it, Probabilities muſt give way to poſitive Proofs. I ſaw you did obſerve it when it was mentioned, and 'tis true, to me it ſeems improbable that at the very ſame time that Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne ſhould ſue him upon his Bond, and take a Courſe to turn him out of his Houſe, that he ſhould then be privy to ſuch a Conſpiracy; 'tis improbable either that Sir Thomas ſhould offer him ſuch a Sum of Money to kill the King, or if he had, that he ſhould afterwards take that Courſe at Law againſt him. Now for that I ſay this to you, you are to give a Verdict according to your Evidence. They have ſuch ſecret Contrivances amongſt themſelves (and he was a Papiſt at that time) that where there are two Men that poſitively tell you a thing that lies within their own Knowledge, and ſwear it is true, it is ſcarce any Improbability that ſhould weigh againſt ſuch an Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And Gentlemen conſider withal as to that, for truly my Brother Dolben hath rightly minded you of that Improbability, for it was no more: But then you muſt conſider all the Circumſtances. 'Tis indeed at the firſt bluſh improbable that a Man would communicate ſo great a Secret to another, if he did intend to ſue him for Money he owed him, but then 'tis likewiſe as improbable that he would provoke him by a Suit if his Life were in his Hand; but conſider the delivering of the Leaſe of Ejectment, and thoſe things were the 13*th* of June.

Mr. Babbington. But I had ſued him before, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. The 2*d* of June he ſays.

Mr. Babbington. I had direction long before I did it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. They threatned him the ſecond, but they did not do it. But look you Gentlemen conſider this; I do not doubt but Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne was ſure that this Man durſt not diſcover any thing of this, for they had given him the Sacrament and an Oath of Secrecy, which they look upon as a Tie among themſelves, as long as they continue in that Religion, not upon any Account whatſoever to be undone, and they have ſuch Confidence in it that they will truſt their Lives and every thing in a man's Hand when they have given him that Oath. Alas how could theſe People have the Confidence to plot one with another as they do, when they know their Lives are in the Hands of any one of all the reſt, but upon this Account? Do but ſwear them unto Secrecy and give them the Sacrament of the Maſs upon it, and then they think ſuch a one is proof enough againſt any thing in the World, for that is Damnation if they break it, as their Prieſts tell them, but I doubt not but Sir Thomas thought he had them as faſt as can be upon that Lock. But as to Sir Thomas's Evidence of thoſe two Men at Leeds, this is after the Accuſation of Sir Thomas that they ſpake of, and can any man alive believe that they would go and plot to contrive the Death of theſe two Perſons in the Face of two Strangers, after he was accuſed? 'Tis ſo ſtrange an Evidence that no man alive can believe it to be Truth. Look you Gentlemen, Perſons that go to contrive ſuch things as theſe are, go in ſecret, and hope they ſhould never be diſcover'd, but by one of themſelves. Who would contrive when two be by, and if they ſay true might ſee them as well as hear them, though they did contradict one another in their Evidence, the one ſaid he was above, the other ſaid he was below, the one ſaid he might ſee them, the other not. Look you Gentlemen, I do ſee that they do lay ſome Streſs upon this, that he was his Debtor, for that they ſeem to prove by their Witneſſes, but you muſt lay no great Streſs upon that at all, for the Money were not quit if Sir Thomas were found guilty, the Money is due to the King then, he ſaves nothing by it, his Money muſt be paid let the Priſoner be found Guilty, or not Guilty, 'tis all one to him. You muſt conſider this Caſe, Gentlemen, If you believe theſe men are perjured men, and have gone and contriv'd a malicious Deſign againſt a man's Life; then God forbid they ſhould be believed any way, but it is a poſitive Evidence, and 'tis not an Evidence barely of it ſelf, but introduced by a great many Circumſtances that went before, they tell you the whole Affair, that it does ſeem they have been privy to the Affairs of theſe Jeſuites all along, and Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne's Houſe hath it ſeems abounded with them, he hath been very beneficial to that ſort of People, mighty charitable as they call it in Superſtition, and you muſt conſider that nothing can ſeem ſtrange to them that will be ridden by Prieſts, they put them upon all the Immoralities and Villanies that can be found out for the Cauſe of Religion as they call it; nothing can ſeem ſtrange that is teſtified againſt them. Therefore I muſt leave it to you upon what you have heard, and upon their Credit whether you believe the Witneſs or not.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Ay, 'tis left upon their Credit that are your own Countrey-men, better known to you than us.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Look you Sir Thomas Hodgſon, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, if you will come in again in any time, we will ſtay in Court, otherwiſe you muſt lie by it all Night, for we can take no privy Verdict in this Caſe.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ay, we will ſtay, and hear Motions a little while.

Then the Jury withdrew from the Bar, and after half an Hour returned again, and being call'd over gave their Verdict thus.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Priſoner: How ſay you, is he Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Did he fly for it?

Foreman. Not that we know of.

Then the Verdict was recorded and the Court roſe.

THE

You Gentlemen of the Jury that are now Sworn, Look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Charge.

You ſhall underſtand that he ſtands Indicted by the Name of Roger Palmer, Eſq; Earl of Caſtlemaine in the Kingdom of Ireland; For that he as a falſe Traytor againſt our moſt illuſtrious and excellent Prince and Lord, Charles the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. and his Natural Lord; not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, his cordial Love, true, due and Natural Obedience which True and Faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King ought to bear towards him, altogether withdrawing and contriving, and with all his might intending to diſturb the Peace and common Tranquility of this Kingdom, and to bring and put our Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction, and alter the true Worſhip of God within this Kingdom eſtabliſhed, to the Superſtition of the Romiſh Church, and to ſtir up and move War againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King within this Realm of England, and to ſubvert the Government thereof, the Twentieth Day of June, in the Thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord, Charles the Second, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields in the County of Middleſex, with divers other falſe Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, did Traiterouſly imagine and intend the killing, Death and final Deſtruction of our ſaid Lord the King, and to change and alter and utterly ſubvert the ancient Government of this Kingdom, and to depoſe and wholly to deprive our ſaid Lord the King of his Crown and Government of this Realm of England, and to extirpate the true Proteſtant Religion: And to accompliſh and fulfil the ſame moſt wicked Treaſons and Traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, the ſaid Roger Palmer, Eſq; Earl of Caſtlemaine in the Kingdom of Ireland, and other falſe Traytors to the Jurors unknown, the ſame Twentieth Day of June, in the Thirtieth Year aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, in the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, adviſedly, deviliſhly, maliciouſly and traiterouſly did aſſemble, unite, and gather themſelves together, and then and there adviſedly, deviliſhly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly and traiterouſly did conſult and agree to bring our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction, and to deprive him of his Crown and Government of England, and to introduce and eſtabliſh the Religion of the Church of Rome in this Kingdom; and the ſooner to fulfil and accompliſh the ſame moſt wicked Treaſons and Traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, he then and there did falſly, maliciouſly and traiterouſly promiſe divers great Rewards, and did pay divers ſums of money to ſeveral Perſons unknown; and then and there falſly and traiterouſly did write divers Notes, to incite ſeveral other Perſons to accompliſh the Treaſons aforeſaid, againſt the Life of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and contrary to the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided.

Cl. of Cr. Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and hath pleaded thereunto, Not Guilty, and for his Tryal he puts himſelf upon God and his Countrey, which Countrey you are.

Your Charge is to inquire, Whether he be Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty? If you find him Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements he had at the time when the High Treaſon was committed, or at any time ſince? If you find him Not Guilty, you are to ſay ſo and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Cryer. O yes! If any one will give Evidence on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt Roger Palmer, Eſq; Earl of Caſtlemaine in the Kingdom of Ireland, let him come forth and he ſhall be heard; for the Priſoner now ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Mr. Bonithon. May it pleaſe you my Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for High Treaſon; for that he intended to diſturb the Peace within this Kingdom eſtabliſhed, and to deſtroy and alter the Government, and to bring the King to Death and final Deſtruction, and to alter our Religion to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome, did on the 20*th* Day of June, in the 30*th* Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King, conſult and treat with ſeveral other Perſons, and that he with theſe Perſons did agree to deſtroy the King and alter the Religion, and cauſe Rebellion; and further to accompliſh theſe Treaſons, he did promiſe and agree to pay ſeveral Accompts and depoſit ſeveral ſums of money, and did likewiſe write and publiſh ſeveral Books.

To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove theſe things, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, my Lord Caſtlemaine here ſtands Indicted for High Treaſon; that is, For deſigning to murther the King, and alter the Government and Law: And this is but a Parcel of the Plot, which hath been carrying on a great while, and many Perſons Tried for it, and ſome have ſuffered and been executed for it: And, my Lord, we will give your Lordſhip Evidence, That my Lord Caſtlemaine hath at ſeveral times conſpired the Death of the King, and he hath reproved Perſons for not doing it. And, my Lord, he hath been in Conſults among Jeſuits, where theſe matters have been carried on, and this whole Deſign hath been Negociated: And my Lord Caſtlemaine hath been conſenting and agreeing to all theſe matters. And, my Lord, when the Tryals were in hand, it did appear upon thoſe Tryals there were many Perſons brought from St. Omers to be Witneſſes againſt Dr. Otes, to prove he was not in England at that time when he ſaid in his Depoſitions that he did conſult with the Jeſuits; and theſe Perſons my Lord Caſtlemaine had the management and inſtruction of at that time: And all along at the Old Bailey my Lord Caſtlemain was preſent there, and did countenance theſe Perſons, and was an Interceſſor for them. Theſe are but Branches and Circumſtances; what is material we will prove by Witneſſes. Sir Creſwel Levins.

Mr. At. Gen. Come Dr. Otes, pray tell what you know.

Priſoner. My Lord, I have a long time wiſh'd for this Day; and your Lordſhip may very well remember it. The Reaſon why I have ſo much deſired a Tryal is, becauſe I thought it a means, and the beſt means, and the only means to ſhew to the World my Innocency, and alſo to ſhew to the World how much I have been calumniated by this Charge.

L. C. J. What have you to ſay? Have you any thing to ſay againſt Dr. Otes? Sir William Scroggs.

Priſoner. No, my Lord: I only ſay this, here I am a Priſoner at the Bar, and I have pleaded Not Guilty, and throw my ſelf upon this Court; and therefore I am very willing to hear what this man will ſay.

Dr. Otes.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I humbly move the Court, Whether or no I may uſe my own method?

L. C. J. Give your Charge, we direct nothing.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, in the Year 1677, I was ſent over into Spain by the Jeſuits that were here in England; where I remained for ſeveral months, and tranſacted Buſineſs for them; and, my Lord, I returned from Spain in November, and brought ſeveral Letters from ſome Engliſh Fathers there; among which there was one directed for my Lord Caſtlemaine. My Lord, I did not deliver the Letter to him, but, my Lord, the Contents of the Letter were to this Effect——

L. C. J. How came you to ſee the Contents?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I was at the writing of the Letter, and ſo I did ſee the Contents of it.

L. C. J. Did the Prieſts ſhew it you? Or did you only ſee it your ſelf?

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord; it was ſhewn me by them: And the Contents of this Letter were; That the Fathers in Spain were very zealous to concur with the Fathers here in England in the Deſign; which was the Subverſion of the Government, altering the Religion, and the Deſtruction of the King.

L. C. J. Was that in the Letter?

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord, not in Words at length.

L. C. J. What was, as far as you know, the very Expreſſion of the Letter?

Dr. Otes. The word Deſign, my Lord.

L. C. J. Only that, to promote the Deſign?

Dr. Otes. Yes, my Lord; and under that word we did comprehend all thoſe things; that is, as we uſually took it among one another.

L. C. J. Did you deliver this Letter to my Lord Caſtlemaine?

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord, I did not deliver this Letter; but when I went to St. Omers we received an account from my L. Caſtlemaine of his receipt of this Letter.

L. C. J. What did you do with it?

Dr. Otes. I left it with the Provincial, my Lord, who was then Mr. Strange.

L. C. J. Was it not given to you to give it to him?

Dr. Otes. It was given me to give the L. Caſtlemaine; but being then a ſtranger to him, I was willing to ſend one of his own Meſſengers with it.

L. C. J. Where was my Lord?

Dr. Otes, I can't tell, my Lord, I did not ſee him then; I went over to St. Omers in December, 77, or the latter end of November.

L. C. J. Where were you when you gave this Letter to the Provincial?

Dr. Otes. I was in London, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you receive this Letter?

Dr. Otes. In Spain, my Lord, at Valladolid, of one Armſtrong.

L. C. J. Who was it directed to?

Dr. Otes. To my L. Caſtlemaine; but I did not then know him, and ſo I gave it the Provincial, my Lord; I went over to St. Omers in the latter end of November or the beginning of December 77, and after I had been there ſome few days, there did arrive a Pacquet from London to St. Omers, in which there was a Letter from my L. Caſtlemaine.

L. C. J. To whom?

Dr. Otes. To the Fathers of the Society of St. Omers; in which my L. Caſtlemaine gave them an account of a Letter that he had lately received from Spain.

L. C. J. How did you know the Contents of this Letter?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I was privy to their Letters.

L. C. J. Was you acquainted with my L. Caſtlemaine's Hand?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I will give you an account of that; I did not know it then, but only as it was generally ſaid amongſt us.

L. C. J. How was it ſubſcribed?

Dr. Otes. Caſtlemaine, my Lord; and ſometimes my Lord, he ſubſcribed himſelf Palmer.

L. C. J. How many Letters have you ſeen?

Dr. Otes. Several Letters.

L. C. J. Was this the firſt?

Dr. Otes. This was the firſt, as near as I can remember. And, my Lord, he gave an account in that Letter, that he had received a Letter from Spain, and was glad the Fathers in Spain had ſo good an Opinion of his integrity in the Cauſe.

L. C. J. Did he ſay from whom he had received it?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I can't remember that; that he had received a Letter I am certain.

L. C. J. Do you know what the purport of the Letter was?

Dr. Otes. Yes, my Lord, I will give you a plain Account. My Lord, he wrote he had received a Letter from Spain, and that he was glad the Fathers in Spain had ſo great confidence in his integrity. And, my Lord, in March there came another Letter from my L. Caſtlemaine; for my L. Caſtlemaine had left ſome things at Liege, wherein he did complain of the Fathers, that they made no more haſte for to ſend his things to him; ſome odd things he had left there, and, my Lord, he gave an Account of a certain Letter he received from the Rector of Liege, whoſe Advice he did not like; for the Rector of Liege and the Rector of Gant were mighty zealous that the ſecular Clergy ſhould be perſonally preſent in this Affair.

L. C. J. Did he write ſo? I would have you ſay what he writ.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I have told you, he gave an Account, that he was unwilling to have the ſecular Clergy engaged, becauſe they were a looſe ſort of men, and of no Principles, and therefore he thought them not fit to be truſted. My Lord, in April there was a Conſult; I came over from St. Omers in April, ſome 3, or 4, or 5 Days before the Conſult, I am not able to gueſs at the particular time, but it was near upon the Conſult. My Lord, this Conſult was divided into ſeveral Companies, after they had met at the White Horſe Tavern, wherein they did ſome things that did relate to the Order, as to ſend Father Cary to Rome. After that they had divided themſelves into ſeveral Companies, wherein they did agree in ordering the Death of the King.

L. C. J. You were by?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I was employ'd by them to give an account of the Senſe of one Company to another.

L. C. J. Were you by when they concluded the Death of the King?

Dr. Otes. Yes, my Lord, I was then preſent,

L. C. J. Did you ſign among the reſt?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I don't come here to accuſe my ſelf.

L. C. J. You are pardon'd if it be ſo.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I did conſent. My Lord, in this Conſult they met together, and an Oath of Secrecy was adminiſtred; my L. Caſtlemaine was there too within ſome few days after the Conſult: That is, the Gentleman whom I accuſe for Treaſon, I ſay, did come, and enquir'd about the Copies of ſome Letters for to be ſent up into Germany, and did deſire, that an Agreement between them and the Monks might be made up, there being a Difference between 'em, ſo that they might have the Aſſiſtance of that Order to carry on the Deſign.

L. C. J. What Gentleman was this?

Dr. Otes. It was the Priſoner, my Lord, at the Bar.

L. C. J. Would the Gentleman let you hear him ſay, that he deſired Aſſiſtance to carry on the Deſign, and you a Stranger to him?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I do not think I was a Stranger to him ſo much as he was a Stranger to me; he knew I was their Servant, and employ'd by them.

L. C. J. Would he ſay in your hearing, that he deſired their Aſſiſtance to carry on the Deſign, and you did not know him?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I did not well know him at that time; and I brought ſeveral Meſſages from the Fathers, and from Mr. Langhorn, and I gave them an Account before him.

L. C. J. How often had you ſeen him?

Dr. Otes. That time he was there, my Lord.

L. C. J. How many Meſſages had you?

Dr. Otes. I will tell your Lordſhip where I had been: I had been at Mr. Simmonds's, who was then Confeſſor to the Earl of Arundel, who is ſince turn'd Proteſtant; Confeſſor to him as he pretended, and we looked upon him to be. And I had been at Father Cain's, who was in Turnmill-ſtreet; and I had been, my Lord, at Mr. Langhorn's in the Temple; and ſome other places which I do not now remember, it is ſo long ſince. So, my Lord, I gave them account of my Buſineſs, and I did ſee that Gentleman, but didn't know his Name till, my Lord, in June.

L. C. J. When was this?

Dr. Otes. This was, my Lord, as near as I can remember in May.

L. C. J. So you did not know his Name till 3 weeks or a month after.

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord, it was in the latter part of June.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You ſaw him firſt in May?

Dr. Otes. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And you did not ſee him till after the Conſult? I don't ask you whether he was there or no? But whether you ſaw him before the Conſult was ſign'd?

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. How did you come to know his Name?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, in June Mr. Langworth and I were going over Lincolns-Inn Fields, intending to go to the Fountain in Fullers Rents, becauſe there was a ſort of Drink that he loved, and we were to drink together, it was in the Evening; and ſo, in our way as we went we met with my L. Caſtlemaine, whom Mr. Langworth did ſalute, and then we came back to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber.

L. C. J. With whom did you come back?

Dr. Otes. With my L. Caſtlemaine.

L. C. J. Did you know his Name?

Dr. Otes. Mr. Langworth told me, it was the Priſoner at the Bar, my Lord, and the Priſoner at the Bar was giving an Account of ſome Letters he had received out of the Countrey; and Mr. Langworth was giving him an Account how forward the Rector of Liege and the Rector of Gant were in offering to have the ſecular Clergy engaged with them; and ſome other Diſcourſe they had which I can't remember, but about the Deſign.

L. C. J. What did they talk of at that time? You muſt as near as you can tell us what Diſcourſe they had.

Dr. Otes. I will give your Lordſhip this, They were ſpeaking of the Tranſactions of the Conſult, and how unanimous the Fathers were in ſigning the Conſult.

L. C. J. Who was ſpeaking of it?

Dr. Otes. Mr. Langworth and Mr. Fenwick, and my L. Caſtlemaine was preſent.

L. C. J. They did talk of it?

Dr. Otes. Yes.

L. C. J. Did they mention the particulars of that Conſult?

Dr. Otes. Yes.

L. C. J. What was that?

Dr. Otes. Laying aſide the King.

L. C. J. And what elſe?

Dr. Otes. And bringing in the Popiſh Religion, the Catholick Religion, I ſpeak their own Words.

L. C. J. And this Diſcourſe they had in the hearing of my L. Caſtlemaine?

Dr. Otes. Yes; and my L. Caſtlemaine ſaid, Now he ſhould be revenged for the Injuries done to him.

L. C. J. Go on.

Dr. Otes. I have nothing elſe to ſay of my L. Caſtlemaine that I can think of at preſent.

L. C. J. Now, my Lord, you may ask him what Queſtions you think fit.

Priſoner. Mr. Otes, Repeat your Journey again.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I ſay this; I went a Shipboard in April, I returned from Valladolid in November, I arrived in London in November, and ſtaid in London ſome time, and then I went to St. Omers in November or December, new Stile or old Stile, I ſtaid at St. Omers, from thence I went to Watton, then, my Lord, in the month of March we went to Liege, and returned back again; in the month of April we came hither, ſome time before the Conſult, and ſtaid here ſome time after.

Priſ. What time were you at Liege, pray Sir?

Dr. Otes. In March 77.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. The end of 77?

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord, we were at St. Omers again in March.

L. C. J. You returned in March $\frac{77}{78}$.

Dr. Otes. Yes, my Lord, the Stile doth ſo alter.

Priſ. That is before Lady day?

Dr. Otes. Yes, my Lord, it was before Lady-day, we arrived here in London in May or in April, and we ſtaid here ſome few days.

Priſ. When did you come over again, pray Sir?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, it is now two years ago, or better, and I can't remember every particular time; my Lord, we were here in May.

Priſ.

Priſ. I will ask him as many Queſtions as I think reaſonable, and when, my Lord, I do deſire Times, and he can't tell the Times, he muſt tell me ſo.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes, Anſwer my Lord what Queſtions he asks you.

Dr. Otes. I will tell my Lord Caſtlemaine as near as I can remember, my Lord.

Priſ. Mr. Otes, When was it you came over?

Dr. Otes. Really it was ſome few days before the Conſult.

Priſ. How many days do you think?

Dr. Otes. Really I can't remember.

L. C. J. I ſuppoſe you have your Memorials.

Dr. Otes, Really, my Lord, no.

L. C. J. Have you any thing more to ask?

Priſ. Yes, my Lord, a great many Queſtions. Were you preſent, Mr. Otes, pray, at that Conſult, when I conſented to the King's Death? Was you by?

Dr. Otes. I was preſent at the Conſult; but I do not charge you to be at the Conſult.

L. C. J. He asks you where it was he agreed to it?

Dr. Otes. At Mr. Fenwick's Chamber, I remember it was about ſeven or eight a Clock that we were going over Lincoln's-Inn Fields.

L. C. J. How long might you be at Fenwick's?

Dr. Otes. It was about eleven or twelve a Clock I came away.

Priſoner. When you met me in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, was I in a Coach or on Foot, or was any body with me?

Dr. Otes. I can't ſay whether your Lordſhip had a man with you or no.

L. C. J. Was there any body with him?

Dr. Otes. I did not take notice of that.

L. C. J. You were two Hours together, pray let me ask you this Queſtion, What was your Diſcourſe about?

Dr. Otes. That was part of the Diſcouſe, my my Lord.

L. C. J. What? You have given us a very ſhort Account of it in four Lines: You were two Hours together, What was the main of your Diſcourſe about?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I will give you, as plainly as I can, the Diſcourſe at that time.

L. C. J. Pray let us know what the main of your Diſcourſe was about.

Dr. Otes. One part of their Diſcourſe was about the Revenues of their Colleges, and how they had ſuffer'd by the French's taking St. Omer's, and what Loſſes they had ſuſtain'd by Reaſon of the Change of Government by the Conqueſt; for the Crown of Spain had entail'd on the College of St. Omer's five or ſix Hundred a Year, for the maintaining the Foundation of their Houſe, or Foundation-Rent, and it was taken away by Reaſon of the Conqueſt that France had made over the Spaniſh Dominions there; and they were conſulting how they ſhould write to Father Le Cheſe to be an Inſtrument to move the French King to reſtore this Annuity, that was a Settlement entail'd upon it.

L. C. J. How came you into this Diſcourſe?

Dr. Otes. This was after the other Diſcourſe.

L. C. J. How came you to diſcourſe this Affair here in England?

Dr. Otes. I will tell your Lordſhip as near as I can remember: When we met in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, Mr. Langworth recommended me to my Lord Caſtlemaine, and bad me take notice of him. I can't ſay this is my Lord Caſtlemaine, but this is that Man I ſaw.

L. C. J. Did he call him by his Name?

Dr. Otes. He told him that I was ſuch a one, and that I was ſerviceable to them. And upon our way as we went to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber, he inquir'd into the Cauſes of my coming over ſo ſoon again, for he ſaid I went over but laſt Month. Said he, How came it to paſs he came over ſo ſoon again? Saith he, We wanted him to do ſome Buſineſs for us. And there were more Particulars of the Tranſactions of the Conſult mention'd to my Lord Caſtlemaine.

L. C. J. How did they bring in the Particulars of that Deſign?

Dr. Otes. This is as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. How came they to talk of laying aſide the King and bringing in the Catholick Religion?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, after they had given an Account of the Tranſactions of the Conſult: This was one part of the Conſult.

L. C. J. Pray how came they to bring it in, in Diſcourſe?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, they ſpake of the Particulars of it.

L. C. J. I wonder what introduced the Particulars: Was it to acquaint him with thoſe Particulars?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I have nothing to ſay to that, they were things ſo generally talked of by thoſe of the Jeſuitical Party, that whenever they met, they ſcarce did talk of any thing elſe but of that, and ſo they did at this time.

L. C. J. Pray tell me the whole Diſcourſe, as you can remember, that relates to this time.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I have told your Lordſhip, we met with my Lord Caſtlemaine in Lincol'ns Inn-Fields. I have told you, my Lord, that we went to Mr. Fenwick's; I have told you, my Lord, that after ſome Diſcourſe (how it was introduced, I cannot be poſitive, but as I can remember) they were ſpeaking of my going over and coming again ſo ſoon, my going from the Conſult to St. Omer's, and returning again into England ſo ſoon, and ſo one word brought in another.

L. C. J. Did you know then that my Lord Caſtlemaine had ever heard of this Matter before?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I don't know; but I am morally certain as to my ſelf; but I can't ſwear he did?

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ſpeak of it to him as a Stranger to it?

Dr. Otes. No.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. By the Letter you ſpake of he knew before.

L. C. J. Anſwer my Brother's Queſtion, Was the Letter you had ſeen, before or after that Diſcourſe at Fenwick's?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, that was after the Conſult.

L. C. J. Then you know he did know of the Deſign?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I think not of the Particulars of the Deſign.

L. C. J. That is, he knew of this Deſign for the main. When you talk of the Deſign, you always mean the Conſult.

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord, when we ſay the Conſult, we mean what was agreed on at that Conſult, not concerning theſe Matters that were done Six Months before.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes, Tell me when you mention the Deſign and the Conſult; Do not you always mean the Death of the King and the bringing in Popery?

Dr. Otes. Yes, my Lord, but the Terms are not convertible: For, my Lord, when we ſay the Conſult, there was ſomething elſe done, my Lord, as that Conſult which had not an abſolute Relation to the Deſign, and of that I will give your Lordſhip one Inſtance, as the ſending Father Cary to Rome, which they did in ſome Three Years.

L. C. J. Some trival Matters concerning their own Government, but the thing you talk of is the ſame Conſult and Deſign.

Dr. Otes. When I ſpeak of the word Deſign, it was ſo taken among us, and ſo received by my Lord Caſtlemaine.

L. C. J. How can you ſay it was ſo receiv'd by him?

Dr. Otes. Becauſe he uſed the ſame word, and anſwer'd us according to our Interpretation.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. My Lord, he ſpeaks of the Deſign thus, There was a Deſign for the killing of the King, there was a Deſign of the Prieſts and Fathers for it; but ſaith he, Afterwards there was a general Conſultation, and this Deſign came to be form'd by this general Conſult, which my Lord Caſtlemaine, as he thinks, had no Knowledge of till the time they met together in Lincoln's Inn Fields, and afterward went and diſcourſed about it.

L. C. J. It is very fair, that he doth not know that my Lord Caſtlemaine had any Knowledge, before the Conſult, of this Buſineſs; but, he ſays, The Deſign upon which the Conſult was, that he might know, which was to deſtroy the King, and bring in Popery. And he ſays, my Lord Caſtlemaine did underſtand this word Deſign in that Senſe they did; becauſe he anſwered their Letters according to their Interpretation of it. How do you know he underſtood the word Deſign in its utmoſt Capacity as you underſtood it?

Dr. Otes. When we have our Words, we have our Keys whereby we underſtand them. But I will anſwer this Queſtion to the Satisfaction of the Gentlemen of the Jury. My Lord, he hath many times ſpoken in his Letters of introducing the Popiſh Religion, and annex'd it to the word Deſign of promoting the Catholick Religion here in England.

L. C. J. Now methinks you have brought the word Deſign to ſomething elſe than killing the King.

Dr. Otes. Yes, my Lord, the Subverſion of Religion and the Government.

L. C. J. Did he put in Government? Did he talk of bringing in the Catholick Religion and altering the Government.

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord, I won't ſay that.

L. C. J. When we are examining concerning Mens Lives, we muſt be careful of their words in ſuch Matters.

Dr. Otes. One part of my Evidence I have omitted, Your Lordſhip did ask me how I came to know my Lord Caſtlemaine's Hand. My Lord, ſometimes we received Letters from him ſubſcribed Palmer, and ſometimes ſubſcribed Caſtlemaine, ſometimes ſome other Name which I may not remember; and they were generally received as from him. And I have ſeen my Lord Lord Caſtlemaine write, for that Night, as near as I remember, it was Poſt-night.

L. C. J. At Fenwick's Chamber?

Dr. Otes. At Fenwick's Chamber, and my Lord Caſtlemaine did write a Letter, ſubſcribed it and ſealed it, and I was fain to go to the General Poſt-Houſe, it was ſo late.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What did he ſubſcribe then?

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord, I ſaw no more than the Superſcription.

L. C. J. Then you did not ſee his Name to it?

Dr. Otes. No my Lord. My Lord Caſtlemaine did ask, Why he had not Anſwers to ſuch and ſuch Letters? For ſeveral Letters I had ſeen which were not of much Moment.

L. C. J. I wiſh you had one that was of Moment.

Dr. Otes. It cannot be expected, my Lord, that I ſhould have them.

L. C. J. My Lord, Ask him what you pleaſe.

Priſ. You ſay, Mr. Otes, you received Letters from me in Spain.

Dr. Otes. I never ſaid ſo.

Priſ. You ſaw Letters in Spain from me?

Dr. Otes. Yes, I have ſeen Letters in Spain that were from you.

Priſ. Look you, Mr. Otes, pray let me ask you a Queſtion, you ſaid this, That you did not know me when you met me at the Conſult?

Dr. Otes. What Conſult?

Priſ. At Fenwick's Chamber.

Dr. Otes. I did not know you at Wild-houſe.]

Priſ. There you met me firſt?

Dr. Otes. There I met the Priſoner at the Bar.

L. C. J. He ſays he did not know you at Wild-houſe, but he came to know you by Langworth in Lincoln's Inn Fields, and then you went together to Fenwick's Chamber.

Priſ. Mr. Otes, Did not you ſay, that at Wild-houſe you did not know me, nor I you?

L. C. J. He ſays he can't tell whether you knew him or no, but he did not know you.

Priſ. Was I familiar with you?

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord.

Priſ. Did I talk Treaſon at Wild-houſe?

Dr. Otes. It was the Diſcourſe of the day, but I do not remember every Particular of the Diſcourſe, but I remember what your Opinion was concerning the Rector of Liege and the Rector of Gant.

Priſ. Was there any thing about killing the King at Wild-houſe?

Dr. Otes. Really, my Lord, I can't remember, I wont charge it there becauſe I am upon my Oath; though I morally believe, as to my ſelf, that there was Diſcourſe bad enough there.

Priſ. Mr. Otes, Pray will you hear me, then the Acquaintance I had with you was by Mr. Langworth, and then we went that Night to Fenwick's Chamber, and there we ſtaid very long, and there we had all this Diſcuorſe?

Dr. Otes. Yes.

Priſ. Look, Mr. Otes, Was there any body by beſides Mr. Langworth and Mr. Fenwick?

Dr. Otes. Really, my Lord, I don't remember any body was by, unleſs a Maid might come to fill a Cup of Drink or ſo.

Priſ. Mr. Otes, Pray Mr. Otes, did you and I ever meet together after that time?

Dr. Otes. Really, my Lord, I can't be exact in that.

Priſ.

Priſ. Did you never ſee me nor diſcourſe with me after that time?

Dr. Otes. I cannot recollect my ſelf as to that, I cannot remember.

L. C. J. He does not remember that ever he was with you afterwards.

Priſ. You don't know whether ever I diſcourſed with you afterwards?

Dr. Otes. I don't remember.

Priſ. Very well, Mr. Otes, Look you, Sir, you don't remember that I ever had any Diſcourſe with you after that time; and no body was by but Mr. Fenwick and Mr. Langworth?

Dr. Otes. As I remember.

Priſ. Was not there another Prieſt there?

Dr. Otes. There is no body occurs to my Memory.

Priſ. Mr. Otes, you brought me Letters from Spain?

Dr. Otes. I brought a Letter from Spain directed to you in 77.

Priſ. Was I in Town or out of Town?

Dr. Otes. I delivered it to the Provincial.

Priſ. You went over to Liege; did not you ſee me there?

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord, I did not ſee you there, I only went to wait upon a Gentleman that was a Prieſt afterwards, that went to take Orders.

Priſ. Did you not ſee me at Liege?

Dr. Otes. No, my Lord.

Priſ. You were at Liege, did you ſtay there?

Dr. Otes. I lay there one Night.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you any thing to ask, my Lord?

Priſ. Preſently, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. It is very reaſonable my Lord ſhould queſtion you. You own him to be the Lord Caſtlemaine; When was it you did firſt diſcover this Buſineſs concerning my Lord Caſtlemaine?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I did diſcover my Lord Caſtlemaine to be in the Plot, the laſt Seſſions of the Long Parliament, and I accuſed my Lord Caſtlemaine this Trinity-Term was Twelve-months, and my Lord Caſtlemaine was committed: For when Mr. Dangerfield came in and accuſed my Lord Caſtlemaine, I brought a Charge a ſecond time againſt my Lord Caſtlemaine.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did you diſcover all this then?

Dr. Otes. I did charge him for having an hand in the Deſign in general.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. To the Parliament?

Dr. Otes. Yes, to the Parliament.

Priſ. You ſay when I aſſented to the King's Death in Fenwick's Chamber, that I ſaid I ſhould now find a time to be revenged?

Dr. Otes. Pray, my Lord, don't put me to mention ſuch reflecting Evidence.

Priſ. When you were before the King, you did in purſuance of this ſpeak of a Divorce.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I will give Evidence as to that if that my Lord comes to be Indicted for his Prieſt-hood.

L. C. J. My Lord may ask what Queſtions he ſhall think fit.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord ſays he has ſaid it, and what he ſaid in another place he is not to treat now of.

Priſ. Suppoſe I can prove him an ill Man in any place, is not that fit to be ſpoken of here? Since he hath brought the King upon the Stage, and ſince he hath accuſed me before the King and your Lordſhips of a Divorce, I ask him whether he ſaw it?

Dr. Otes. I will tell your Lordſhip what I ſaid as to the Divorce, I heard it diſcours'd of generally among the Fathers beyond Sea, and this was ſome other part of the Diſcourſe at Wild-houſe; and I heard my Lord Caſtlemaine ſay that he had been at great Charge to carry on that Buſineſs of the Divorce.

Priſ. At Wild houſe?

Dr. Otes. At Wild-houſe. Now, my Lord, I took no Notice of it, becauſe it was not my Buſineſs. But, my Lord, after that there was a Prieſt's Chamber that was ſearched, and there was the whole Caſe ſtated; now what is become of the State of that Caſe, my Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. By whom was that Caſe ſtated?

Dr. Otes. There was a Letter found, whereby my Lord Caſtlemaine ſhould have the Matter directed, in order to the carrying on the Divorce that was to be between him and his Wife Barbara.

Priſ. Did not you tell the King that you ſaw the Divorce in Strange's Hand?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I will tell you this, I gave an Account to the King, that I ſaw in Strange's Hand an Account of a Divorce that was between my Lord Caſtlemaine and Barbara Dutcheſs of Cleaveland.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, if he ask too many Queſtions that don't relate to this Matter, it is impoſſible to give an Account of every Particular.

Priſ. My Lords, I humbly ſubmit this Caſe.

Mr. Recorder. Ask him what you ſaid to ſuch a Man upon the Ninth of Auguſt was Twelvemonth, muſt he give an Account?

L. C. J. He muſt ſay he does not know.

Mr. Recorder. Indeed it is reaſonable that my Lord Caſtlemaine ſhould ask him ſome Queſtions, and that Mr. Otes ſhould give him an Account.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, will you give me leave to ſpeak? If he may ask Queſtions about ſuch foreign Matters as this, no Man can juſtifie himſelf.

L. C. J. This is not ſo mighty remote but uſe may be made of it.

Mr. At. Gen. If he ſhould ask whether he were ſuch a day at ſuch an Houſe, and tell him yes, and miſtake the day; any Man may be catch'd thus.

Priſ. How can a man be catch'd in the Truth?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Caſtlemaine may, if he can, catch him in any thing he gives in Evidence here.

Priſ. My Lord, if your Lordſhip over-rule me, I will ſay no more. Mr. Attorney ſays I come to catch him, I confeſs I do.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſhould not ask him foreign Queſtions.

L. C. J. He asks a plain Queſtion, why do you labour ſo much that he ſhould not ask, whether he had ſeen the Divorce? My Lord Caſtlemain, I have ask'd the Queſtion for you, Whether or no he ſaid he had ſeen the Divorce? And he does not remember whether he ſaid ſo or no.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I think, with your Lordſhip's leave, that he is not bound to anſwer Queſtions, that are not to the Evidence.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. If ſo be he would come to make Application, it may be well enough.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſay it for the method of the Evidence, my Lord, that I would not have theſe Excurſions.

Priſ. I deſire your Lordſhip that I may ſay out what I have to ſay. I ſay this, That no man in the World that ſpeaks Truth can be catch'd, neither will Mr. Attorney ſuffer me to catch him.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſay you have liberty to catch him in any thing that doth belong to the Evidence.

Priſ. I come to ſhew you the fitneſs of it to this Affair. He comes and tells you, among other Conſults, of Wild Houſe; and my meeting him in Lincolns Inn Fields, the Recommendations of Mr. Langworth, and going to Fenwick's Chamber, where we talked of altering the Government, and my aſſenting to kill the King: And ſince you have brought the King upon the Stage, I will refreſh your memory a little; ſince you talk of revenging my ſelf, look you if you did not mention a Divorce to the King, and alſo to my Lord Chief Juſtice.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, you are under a miſtake.

Priſ. Pray give me leave, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. You make ſuch Excurſions into foreign matters.

Priſ. Mr. Otes, you did ſay you ſaw a Divorce. I ask you whether you ſaw a Divorce, and where; or whether you ſaid ſo?

L. C. J. He ſays, he does not remember he ſaid ſo.

Dr. Otes. I do not remember whether I ſaid ſo or no, my Lord, I have it down, but indeed I did not ſet my thoughts a-work.

Mr. At. Gen. He hath given you an Anſwer that may ſatisfie you.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. He hath Papers wherein he hath enter'd Memorandums to refreſh his memory, but theſe Papers he hath not by him.

L. C. J. Then he may ſay he hath not.

Mr. At. Gen. That he hath already, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay?

Priſ. I have, my Lord, if you will give me leave to write down two Words.

Priſ. Mr. Otes, you told my Lords the Judges that I did ſay, I was at great Expence about a Divorce?

Dr. Otes. Yes.

Priſ. That is very well, Mr. Otes.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Mr. Dangerfield.

Dr. Otes was going out of the Court.

Priſ. May Mr. Otes go out of the Court?

Court. Yes, yes.

Dr. Otes. I will be within call, my Lord.

Priſ. I only ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, Whether or no a Witneſs may go out of the Court?

Dr. Otes. I will ſtay then.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Dangerfield.

Priſ. Pray ſtay.

L. C. J. Why ſo?

Priſ. Here I am a Priſoner, my Lords, and ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, Whether or no Mr. Dangerfield, who hath had the Cenſure of this Court, may be a Witneſs? Whether or no Council ſhall ſhew Reaſons to your Lordſhip, Whether he may ſpeak or no?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You muſt ſhew your Exceptions that you have againſt him.

Priſ. My Exception is this: That he was Convicted of Felony, that he broke Priſon, and was Outlaw'd upon it. Beſides this, my Lord, he is a Stigmatick, hath ſtood in the Pillory, and was burnt in the Hand. Now I humbly beſeech your Lordſhips, that you will be pleaſed to hear what my Council can ſay: and then, my Lords, if you over-rule, I ſhall give place with all my Heart.

L. C. J. I think it reaſonable, if you deſire Council, that they ſhould be allow'd to ſpeak.

Mr. At. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, when my Lord's Exceptions appear.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What are your Exceptions, my Lord?

Priſ. That I told you beforehand; he is an Outlaw'd Perſon, he is Convicted of Felony.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. When was he Outlaw'd?

Mr. At. Gen. In the 27*th* year of the King, and we ſay he hath a Pardon in the 30*th* year of the King.

L. C. J. How do you prove he was burnt in the Hand, my Lord?

Mr. At. Gen. When was he burnt in the Hand?

Priſ. Call Briſcoe.

Mr. At. Gen. We bring a Pardon unto that, and that will reſtore him.

[A Record produced.

Mr. At. Gen. That Record we confeſs, ſhew the Pardon, ſhew the Pardon.

L. C. J. Now go to that for which he was burnt in the Hand.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is a Pardon that extends to them all.

[The Pardon read: Decimo tertio die Januarii, Anno Regni, &c.

L. C. J. This does not do it.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, it does.

L. C. J. Is that the Newgate Pardon?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. We have had it in the Court.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And Felony and Outlawry is in it.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is that for which he was burnt in the Hand?

Mr. At. Gen. For that we give an Anſwer; he was received to the Benefit of his Clergy, and he was burnt in the Hand, and his Pardon is after that too.

L. C. J. So it is.

Mr. At. Gen. Then his Pardon anſwers them all.

L. C. J. Now you ſee, my Lord, you think Dangerfield ought not to be a Witneſs, who hath gone thro' ſo many Puniſhments, Outlaw'd for Felony, and burnt in the Hand for Felony: Mr. Attorney makes Anſwer, We have a Pardon, and by that he is reſtored, as he ſays, to be a Witneſs again. If you deſire Council to ſpeak to this Point, Whether or no a man branded and burnt in the Hand for Felony, and afterwards is pardoned, is capable of being a Witneſs? I ſee no Reaſon to deny it you.

Mr. At.

Mr. At. Gen. If there be matter for Counſel to ſpeak, in that Caſe we muſt ſubmit, if your Lordſhip make it a Doubt.

L. C J. I do for my own part; in this I am clear: If a man were Convicted of Perjury, that no Pardon will make him a Witneſs, becauſe it is to do the Subject wrong. A Pardon does not make a man an honeſt man; it takes off Reproaches; and the Law is wiſe in that, the Law will not ſuffer endleſs Contumelies to be heap'd upon men, nor to be call'd perjur'd Raſcals, and ſuch things; it is only to prevent upbraiding Language, which tends to the Breach of the Peace. But in my Opinion, if a man ſtands Convicted in Court for Perjury, no Pardon can ever make him a Witneſs, and ſet him upright again. But that is a different Caſe from this; we are upon this ſingle Caſe, Whether a man that is burnt in the Hand for Felony, whether a Pardon can ſet him right or no? For this I make more doubtful than the other; for a man, may be, that hath committed a Robbery, would be afraid to forſwear himſelf; for tho' one is a great, the other is a greater Sin, and that in the Subject matter; which conſidered, I think it reaſonable to allow my Lord Counſel to ſpeak to that ſingle Point, That a Perſon being burnt in the Hand for Felony, and afterwards pardoned. Whether he is capable of being a Witneſs?

Priſ. Then I do name Mr. Jones, Mr. Saunders, and Mr. Darnal.

L. C J. Very well.

[Mr. Saunders was called, but was not in Court.

L. C. J. Are you prepared, Mr. Jones, to ſpeak?

Mr. Jones. No, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. My Lord, do you except againſt that one particular?

Priſ. I ſtand upon both, his being pillory'd, and burnt in the Hand.

L C J. Will you admit that he ſtood in the Pillory?

Mr. At. Gen. I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. I will tell you, my Lord, you will ſee whether it be neceſſary to protract this or no; for your Counſel will hardly undertake to argue unprepared about this point, and if the Tryal ſhould be adjourn'd, it would be very troubleſome. I think it the Duty of my place to diſcharge my Conſcience for you and againſt you, as the matter ſhall fall out; and if ſo be that you ſhould inſiſt upon it, and he be capable of being a Witneſs, ſuppoſing it ſo, yet I muſt ſay, you may give in the Evidence of every Record of the Conviction of any ſort of Crimes he hath been guilty of, and they ſhall be read. They ſay laſt Day there were ſixteen; if there were an hundred they ſhould be read againſt him, and they ſhall all go to invalidate any Credit that is to be given to any thing he ſhall ſwear.

Priſ. My Lord, I humbly ſubmit my ſelf to your Lordſhip; ſixteen we have, I bring but ſix, you ſhall have them Mr. Attorney when you pleaſe.

L. C. J. My Lord, if you think it worth your while to put it to Counſel to argue, Whether he may be a Witneſs, or whether you think it may be as well for you, ſuppoſing he be a Witneſs, the producing thoſe things againſt him, or the Records of thoſe Crimes that he hath been Convicted of; whether that will be as well for you or no, I leave it to your ſelf to do as you think beſt.

Mr. Darnal. I conceive, with ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip, that he cannot be a Witneſs.

L. C. J. Are you prepared to ſpeak to it now?

Mr. Darnal. My Lord, I am ready to offer ſomewhat to your Lordſhip, why I conceive he ought not to be Sworn: But I deſire firſt, that the Pardon may be read, becauſe many Perſons and Offences are comprized in it.

L. C J. It is a Pardon for Felonies and Outlawries of Felony in general.

Mr. Darnal. If the Perſons and their Offences are ſeverally and ſufficiently pardoned, then, my Lord, I will proceed unto the other Point.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. The whole is good.

Mr. Darnal. Then, my Lord, I conceive, notwithſtanding this Pardon, Mr. Dangerfield ought not to be Sworn; and that no Perſon attainted of Felony (tho' pardon'd) can be a Witneſs. My Lord, it hath been adjudged in 11 Hen. 4th, quadrageſimo primo, That a man atttainted of Felony (as Mr. Dangerfield is) tho' he be afterwards pardon'd, cannot be ſworn of a Jury. My Lord, the ſame Queſtion hath been reſolv'd ſince, in nono Jacobi. It is reported in Mr. Brownlow's and Goldsborough's Reports, Folio Triceſimo quarto. And my Lord Cook in Mr. Bulſtrode's ſecond Reports, 154. in Brown and Craſhaw's Caſe, is of the ſame Opinion. He ſays, A man attainted and pardon'd cannot ſerve upon any Inqueſt; and that by the ſame reaſon, the Teſtimony of ſuch a man for a Witneſs is in all Caſes to be rejected.

L. C. J. Who ſays ſo?

Mr. Darnal. My Lord Cook.

L. C. J. Men do not ſlight my Lord Cook, where do you ſay that is?

Mr. Darnal. It is in Mr. Bulſtrode's 2*d* Reports, in Brown and Craſhaw's Caſe, fol. 154.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But you ſhould have brought theſe Books hither.

Mr. Darnal. I ſuppoſe, Sir, they may be had in the Hall. My Lord Cook gives this Reaſon for it in that Caſe; he ſaith, That notwithſtanding his Pardon he is not probus & legalis homo.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. That Pardon was before any Judgment; it was a Pardon of Felony before any Tryal or Judgment; but here is a Conviction.

Mr. Darnal. My Lord Cook puts the Caſe there of a man attainted. And, my Lord, in duodecimo Jacobi, it is reported in Brownlow's Reports, Fol. 47.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. Which of his Reports?

Mr. Darnal. I know but of one ſet out in his Name alone, the other (which is call'd the Firſt Part) is ſet out in his and Goldsborough's Name. I have Mr. Brownlow's Reports here, and if your Lordſhip pleaſe you may ſee it.

L. C. J. What is the Page?

Mr. Darnal. 47, my Lord; the Caſe there reported is, The King pardon'd a man attaint for giving a falſe Verdict; yet he ſhall not be at another time impannell'd upon any Jury; and the reaſon given there is, that tho' the Puniſhment was pardon'd, yet the Guilt remain'd.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. That is a very ſhort Note, and not ſo much in the Book as you have mentioned.

Mr. Darnal. I writ it word for word out of the Book, Sir, and I am ſure there is ſo much in my Book. My Lord, in Mr. Juſt. Crooke's Eli- zabeth, fol. 686. in Shelborn's Caſe, it is held, That tho' the King may pardon Simony, yet he cannot enable a Simoniack to retain a Living.

L. C. J. The Act doth make him not capable.

Mr. Darnal. I conceive, Sir, it is upon the ſame Reaſon, becauſe the Pardon cannot take away the Guilt, tho' it may the Puniſhment of the Offence.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. He can't diſpenſe with Simony, he can't give a Diſpenſation to take a Living.

Mr. Darnal. My Lord, upon theſe Reſolutions and the Reaſon of them, I humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, Whether Mr. Dangerfield (having been attainted of Felony, tho' he be ſince pardoned) can be a Witneſs.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's Favour, this is quite contrary to the conſtant and general Opinion, and contrary to the conſtant Practice: For, my Lord, with your Lordſhip's Favour, When a man is pardon'd for any Crime, if a man can't ſay he is a Felon, or he is perjured, then he can't be reckoned ſo to any intent or purpoſe whatſoever.

L. C J. I told you before it is conſonant to all the Reaſon and Law in the World, that a Pardon ſhould ſtop mens mouths from reviling Speeches that ſignifie nothing; but it is one thing to ſay men ſhall not go reviling, that can have no conſequent good, but which tends to the breach of the Peace, and another thing to ſay he ſhall be Liber.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, when the King gives him a Pardon, it is as if he had never committed the Offence.

L. C. J. He may be Outlaw'd notwithſtanding the King's Pardon, and then it is not as if he had never committed the Offence.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. It reſtores him to wage Battle, and it makes him liber & legalis homo: For if a man may wage Battle, he is liber & legalis homo.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, if he be ſo, he ſhall be a Witneſs: For, my Lord, in the point of Perjury, a man that after a Conviction of Perjury had a Pardon, hath been admitted ſeveral times.

L. C. J. Was the Exception taken, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, and he rejected before he had a Pardon.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. How many men have been Witneſſes that have been convicted of Felonies, after the Kings have pardoned them?

Mr. Recorder. I will not adventure to ſay that there hath been a particular Objection made, and ſo that the Court hath had the Debate of it; but I will undertake to give your Lordſhip ſeveral inſtances of men that have been convicted, and the Judges ſitting there knew them to be ſo convicted, and did not take notice of it.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. I ſpeak of Witherington particularly.

Mr. Recorder. He was a Witneſs, tho' every man did know that Witherington was convicted. I beg your Lordſhips leaves to ſpeak it, that the Judges themſelves did know that he was convicted and had received Sentence of Death.

Sir Francis Winnington.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The conſtant Practices of the Judges is a mighty Concluſion.

L. C. J. What think you, Mr. Attorney, if a man be convicted of Felony, and afterwards hath a general Pardon, is he a Witneſs?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes truly, my Lord, it ſignifies the ſame thing, my Lord, as to be a Freeman again.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. He cannot be of a Jury if he be attainted of Felony; and the Reaſon is, becauſe he is not probus & legalis homo; and why he ſhould not as well be of a Jury as a Witneſs I cannot underſtand.

Mr. At. Gen. There is a great deal of difference, my Lord, a great many men may be admitted to be Witneſſes, that cannot be admitted to be Jurymen.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Shew me any man that is excluded from a Jury and admitted to be a Witneſs, except in the caſe of Kindred.

Mr. At. Gen. An hundred.

L. C. J. Shew me any man who being of a Jury was excluded, and yet made a Witneſs.

Mr. At. Gen. A Villain was not admitted to be a Juryman, but a Villain was always to be a Witneſs, and that was a point of Infamy.

L. C. J. What Infamy was contained in being a Villain?

Mr. At. Gen. He was a Criminal, he was not liber homo.

L. C. J. But tho' he be not a Freeman, he may be an honeſt man.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord Hobart ſays, A Pardon takes away the Guilt.

L. C. J. It takes away Guilt ſo far as he ſhall never be queſtioned; but it does not ſet a man as if he had never offended. It cannot in reaſon be ſaid, a man guilty of Perjury is as innocent as if he had never been perjured.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſay, if a man be pardoned, he is as if he were not guilty.

L. C. J. If I were in my Lord Caſtlemaine's Caſe, I would ſubmit it; but when he hath given his Teſtimony, my Lord ſhall have liberty to give in the Records againſt him of what Crimes he hath committed.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I do confeſs indeed, that my Lord Hales, in his little Book Of the Pleas of the Crown, ſaith, That a man that hath had the Benefit of his Clergy is reſtored to his Credit.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. If that Caſe be allowed, it is a plain Caſe; for there is no man can wage Battle, but he that is liber & legalis homo.

Mr. Recorder. A man broke Priſon, and therefore he could not wage Battle; he replies, the King hath pardoned me that Felony, and thereupon he is admitted to wage Battle.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Where there is no Judgment given in the Caſe, and the King doth pardon a man, that doth make a very great difference.

Mr. Recorder. In the Caſe of Witherington, my Lord Chief Juſtice did look upon the Records, and afterwards ſaid he was a good Witneſs, and was admitted.

Priſ. If you have Law by you, I muſt conſent.

L. C. J. Then you muſt conſent.

Mr. Recorder. There are ſeveral Perſons who have had Pardons after Robberies, and we are forced to make uſe of ſome of theſe Fellows.

L. C. J. Before Conviction.

Mr. Recorder. No, after Conviction, my Lord, I have known a Priſoner at the Bar, when my Lords the Judges have been there, to be a Witneſs; and if the Court had made any doubt, it would would have been a Queſtion before this time of day.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, if you pleaſe, Mr. Dangerfield may be Sworn, if your Lordſhip pleaſes.

L. C. J. My Lord ſhall have the Benefit of excepting againſt his Credibility.

Then Mr. Juſtice Raymond went down to the Court of Common Pleas, to know their Opinion.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Have you any other Witneſs in the mean time?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, he is a principal Witneſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Beſides the common practice, here is a Book that ſays he ſhall wage Battle.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. That is, when there is a Pardon before Conviction.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But here, my Lord, he ſays the Reatum is taken away, and then it takes away his Diſabilities too. The difference can be nothing here before Conviction, and after, becauſe before Conviction there is a Diſability, before Conviction he is diſabled from waging Battle: So that that makes no difference before Conviction, and other Caſes after Conviction, and the Diſability is taken away by the Pardon, and he is reſtored to be a Freeman.

L. C. J. There is a Diſability upon Preſumption, tho' not upon Conviction.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is the ſame legal impediment in the one as in the other; but his Credit is left to the Breaſt of the Jury.

Mr. Recorder. When a Pardon comes, it takes away not only Pœnam, but Reatum; and the Reaſon my Lord Hobart gives.

L. C. J. Nay, give your Reaſon.

Mr. Recorder. For Felony is contra coronam & dignitatem, is a Fault againſt the King; and when the King pardons it it, ceaſes. And in another place it is ſaid, It pardons all Diſabilities incident to him.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. That is before Conviction ſtill.

L. C. J. Don't my Lord Cook tell you expreſly, That the taking a Pardon doth not prove any Offence? You take a Pardon, it ought not to be concluded that you are guilty; but the proper Concluſion of a wiſe man is, That you would be ſafe. It can't be thought that every man that hath a Pardon in England is guilty of all thoſe Offences that are there pardoned.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. There is a difference between a general Pardon and a particular Pardon: When a man doth accept of a ſpecial Pardon, it muſt be intended that he hath ſome conſciouſneſs of Guilt, or elſe he would not take it; but he that is included in a general Pardon may be clear, becauſe all men are included in it, unleſs ſome perſons particularly excepted; and the difference is taken in that very point, from accepting a general and a ſpecial Pardon.

L. C. J. That the acceptance of a general Pardon, doth not barely of it ſelf intend men to be guilty of the Crimes, is plain, and the Reaſon is moſt apparent; for beſides that men be ſafe, ſo there be times that give a Reaſon why men ſhould have a Pardon, becauſe no man knows when he is ſafe; Perjury ſo abounds that no man can ſay he is ſafe, and that is a Reaſon, why men ſhould be very willing to accept of Pardons.

Cl. of Cr. Here's my Lord Hales's Book about the Pleas of the Crown.

Mr. Recorder. He ſays, When the King hath diſcharged and pardoned him, he hath cleared the perſon of the Crime and Infamy.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. It is ſo no doubt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May we paſs upon theſe Authorities?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Sir Francis, we are not willing to go about it till it be concluded; for that purpoſe we have deſired my Brother Raymond to know the Judges Opinions of the Common Pleas.

Mr. Recorder. He doth expreſly ſay, It hath reſtored him to his Credit; and in Witherington's Caſe he did call for the very Records.

Mr. At. Gen. If it reſtore him to his Credit, I hope it ſhall not blemiſh him ſo much when he is ſworn, that he ſhall not be believed.

L. C. J. We won't have any Prepoſſeſſion in that caſe, his Crimes ſhall be all taken notice of; is it fit to have men guilty of all ſorts of Villanies, and not to obſerve it?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. In that very Caſe my Lord Hobart ſays, A man may ſay of a pardoned man, he was a Felon, tho' he cannot ſay now he is a Felon; and now what can be objected to this Caſe?

Mr. Recorder. Things may be objected againſt a perſon, and his Credit left to the Jury; but the Queſtion now is, Whether he ſhall be a Witneſs or no?

L. C. J. We have men grown ſo inſolent, they behave themſelves with that vile inſolence, that now they take upon them to ſpeak againſt whole Societies of men; as if ſo be there were any thing in them that ſhould render them better than their former Lives or Natures. Humility becomes penitents, and no wicked man is ſuppoſed to be a penitent that hath not that; but theſe carry it with that inſolency, as if they were not concerned themſelves, when God knows the beſt of them diſcover what they do, by being but parties themſelves.

[Mr. Juſtice Raymond returned from the Court of Common Pleas.

L. C. J. I will tell you what my Brethrens Opinions are; he hath put it to them on both Accounts, That he was convicted of Felony and burnt in the Hand for it, that he was Outlaw'd for Felony, and hath a general Pardon. They ſay they are of Opinion, That a general Pardon would not reſtore him to be a Witneſs after an Outlawry for Felony, becauſe of the intereſt that the King's Subjects have in him. But they ſay further, That where a man comes to be burnt in the Hand, there they look upon that as a kind of a more general Diſcharge than the Pardon alone would amount to, if he had not been burnt in the Hand. They ſay, If he had been convicted of Felony and not burnt in the Hand, the Pardon would not have ſet him upright; but being convicted and burnt in the Hand, they ſuppoſe he is a Witneſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Dangerfield.

L. C. J. The very Attainder is taken away, and ſo all is gone.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, Mr. Dangerfield, are you Sworn?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell what you know of my L. Caſtlemaine.

L. C. J. I perceive my Brethrens Opinion is, That if a man were convicted of Perjury, if there be no Burning in the Hand in the caſe, that a Pardon could not ſet him upright, becauſe of the Intereſt of the People in the King.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, Mr. Dangerfield, are you ſworn?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Then pray ſay what do you know of my L. Caſtlemaine?

Mr. Dangerfield. About this time Twelvemonth, my Lady Powis ſent me with a Letter for the Priſoner at the Bar, my L. Caſtlemaine.

L. C. J. Don't you know him?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, my Lord, this is the Perſon. And, my Lord, the Contents of that Letter I know not: But his Lordſhip made me ſtay till he wrote an Anſwer, and the Contents of the Anſwer, my Lord, were to this effect: For I return'd with the Anſwer, to the Lady Powis, and ſhe opened and read it while I was preſent.

L. C. J. Aloud?

Mr. Dangerfield. Aloud, my Lord.

L. C. J. To you.

Mr. Dangerfield. To me.

L. C. J. Who was there?

Mr. Dangerfield. Mrs. Cellier was there beſides. And the Contents of this Letter were, This Perſon I like well, and though he be no Schollar, he will ſerve to inſtruct the Youths as he ſhall be directed. By the Youths were meant the St. Omer's Witneſſes.

L. C. J. How do you know?

Mr. Dangerfield. Becauſe I know my Lord was employed for that purpoſe. I know his Lordſhip did uſe to inſtruct the Youths; and it was a common ſaying among them, when one of them was out of his Part, they uſed to ſay, I muſt go to my Lord Caſtlemaine.

L. C. J. What Part?

Mr. Dangerfield. That which they were to ſay, and one of them did ſay, I am out of my Leſſon, I muſt go to my Lord Caſtlemaine.

L. C. J. When did he ſay ſo?

Mr. Dangerfield. Before the Tryal, my Lord, and my L. Caſtlemaine went along with them to the Tryal, and his Lordſhip complained of ſome ill Uſage that the Witneſſes received there. His Lordſhip was one of the Perſons that imployed me to get Lane out of the Gate-houſe, my Lord, and his Lordſhip ſent me to a Sollicitor of his, whoſe Name was Mr. Lawſon (the Perſon is now in Court) to take an Account how far he had proceeded in this Affair. I did take an Account, and I proceeded in it afterwards and got him diſcharged.

L. C. J. How came you into my Lord's Acquaintance?

Mr. Dangerfield. That was the firſt time, when my Lady Powis ſent me with that Letter, my Lord. A pretty while after this, in the Month of July, I went to wait upon his Lordſhip at his Houſe in Charing-Croſs, the ſame place where I found his Lordſhip before; and I was to take his Advice about ſome Letters that came from one Nevil alias Paine. Thoſe Letters and Liſt of Names I ſhewed his Lordſhip, and he gave his Approbation of them, and deſired good ſtore of Copies might be writ: For it was of conſequence, and ought not to be neglected. And ask'd me, Are there working Perſons employ'd in that Buſineſs? And ſaid he, Encourage them, and I will pay my Part. So my Lord, after there were a great Number of Copies writ of theſe Letters, I writ a Letter to my L. Caſtlemaine, to let his Lordſhip know that the People had finiſh'd their Work, and that there was ſomething more to be done as a Gratuity; and then his Lordſhip in anſwer to this Meſſenger (who is here alſo in Court) with a Letter his Lordſhip ſent Forty Shillings for his Part. And Mrs. Cellier told me ſhe received Forty Shillings and diſpoſed of it to the Uſe intended; now, my Lord, the Contents of theſe Letters were to the ſame Effect with thoſe Letters and looſe Papers which I conveyed into Collonel Manſel's Chamber; and theſe all tended to the promoting the Sham-plot, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray tell me what was the Subject of theſe Letters; what was the Subſtance of them.

Mr. Dangerfield. To the promoting the Sham-plot, my Lord.

L. C. J. That is a General no body knows what to make of.

Mr. Dangerfield. I will give your Lordſhip an Account in particular: The Contents of many of them were to this purpoſe.

L. C. J. Were they not all alike?

Mr. Dangerfield. The Copies were the ſame, and there were ſo many Originals to draw Copies from.

L. C. J. Were not the Originals all to the ſame Purpoſe?

Mr. Dangerfield. Agreeable in Point of Senſe.

L. C. J. Pray tell us the Purpoſe of them?

Mr. Dangerfield. The Purpoſe was, That ſo many Letters ſhould be convey'd into the Houſes of ſeveral Perſons of Quality in this Kingdom, that were called Presbyterians: For that was the Notion, that all Perſons, that were not for the immediate promoting of the Catholick Intereſt, lay under; becauſe they looked upon that Notion to be moſt obnoxious.

L. C. J. Who and where?

Mr. Dangerfield. In general, my Lord.

L. C. J. In general, where?

Mr. Dangerfield. By my Lady Powis and the Lords in the Tower.

L. C. J. Were you by when the Lords in the Tower did agree to it?

Mr. Dangerfield. When my L. Petre and my L. Arundel did.

L. C. J. What did they agree to?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, the thing is this, after they received an Account from one Mr. Paine, I brought a Billet from that Paine; wherein was contain'd a Ground or Scheme of the Presbyterian-Plot; ſo from thence it derived its firſt Name, my Lord: So that when I came to diſcourſe with the Lords in the Tower about it, they call'd it the Presbyterian-Plot; and Mrs. Cellier and the Lady Powis ſaid, This is a Notion that will do the Buſineſs, as it is moſt obnoxious, and as beſt to our purpoſe.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How far was my Lord Caſtlemaine concern'd in this?

Mr. Dangerfield. I have not heard his Lordſhip ſpeak of it under that Notion.

L. C. J. Pray let us hear what you can ſay againſt my L. Caſtlemaine.

Mr. Dangerfield. Now, my Lord, ſome conſiderable time after I had gotten Lane out of Priſon, I was imploy'd by ſeveral other Perſons, his Lordſhip was one, and he ſent me to his Lordſhip's Sollicitor, that is now in Court.

A

A pretty while after this, and the Letters and Liſts of Names, containing Matter to the ſame effect as I told you before, as thoſe in Manſel's Chamber, and all tending to the Credit of the Sham-plot, or the Presbyterian-plot. Now, my Lord, a pretty while after this, in Auguſt, as near as I can remember; about the middle of Auguſt, I went to wait upon his Lordſhip, the very next day after I had been treated withal in the Tower to kill the King, whom God preſerve, my Lord; and his Lordſhip had a Servant then in the Room, and he ſent his Servant down Stairs, and looked upon me with a very Auſtere Countenance: Said he, Why would you offer to refuſe the Buſineſs for which you were taken out of Priſon?

L. C. J. To you?

Mr. Dangerfield. To me, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who was by?

Mr. Dangerfield. No body but his Lordſhip and my ſelf; for he ſent his Servant out before: So he asked me, Why I would offer to refuſe the Buſineſs I was taken out of Priſon for? I asked his Lordſhip, What that was? Said he, Was not you at the Tower yeſterday? Yes, my Lord, I was. Would your Lordſhip have me kill the King, I ſuppoſe that's the Buſineſs? Yes, that is, ſaid he. Upon which my Lord fell into ſuch a Fury, that I was forc'd rudely to leave the Room, and went down Stairs. I think at the ſame time his Lordſhip was writing the Compendium of the late Plot; for there I ſaw ſome Words in a Paragraph that lay upon the Table, which I afterwards ſaw in that Book. There was Ink ſet upon the Table, and open in his Lordſhip's hand. And his Lordſhip did uſe in his Diſcourſe to call his Majeſty Tyrant.

L. C. J. Have you heard him? In what Company?

Mr. Dangerfield. In his familiar Diſcourſe. As to ask when his Majeſty will return from Windſor? Says he, When the Tyrant pleaſes. And I remember I heard his Lordſhip mention the word Tyrant to Mrs. Cellier at Powis-houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. How came that Diſcourſe about killing the King? What was the Occaſion of that Diſcourſe?

L. C. J. Had you refuſed it to my Lord?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, my Lord, I refuſed.

L. C. J. What did you ſay to him?

Mr. Dangerfield. I ſaid any body but my King, my Lord.

L. C. J. He ſaid, Why did you refuſe to do that for which you were taken out of Priſon? What is that, my Lord? Was not you at the Tower yeſterday? Why won't you do it? What is it, my Lord? Is it to kill the King? I ſuppoſe that it is, ſaith he, that your Lordſhip intends. Yes ſays he, That is it, why won't you do it? That is what he ſays.

Mr. At. Gen. That is the Evidence we give.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You ſay he was very violent?

L. C. J. Was you ever in his Company afterwards?

Mr. Dangerfield. No, not after that, my Lord, that I know of.

L. C. J. What kind of Fury did he ſhew to you at that time?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, he was in a great Rage, as his Lordſhip is very cholerick; he was buſtling about, and I knew not what he intended to do, and I was unwilling to ſtand the Teſt of his Anger. His Lordſhip ſeemed by his look to be meditating Revenge.

L. C. J. How?

Mr. Dangerfield. I ſay this, After his Lordſhip had ſent his Servant out of the Room, ſaid he, Why would you offer to refuſe the Buſineſs for which you were taken out of Priſon? Said he, Were not you at the Tower yeſterday? Said I, Yes, my Lord, I was; Would you have me kill the King? Is that the Buſineſs? Yes, that it is ſaid my Lord very angrily.

Priſ. When did you go to the Tower? Was this the next day after it?

Mr. Dangerfield. The next day after it.

Priſ. Mr. Dangerfield, Pray let me ask you one Queſtion. Did not I threaten to kill you, or have ſome of my Servants kill you, if you came unto me again?

Mr. Dangerfield. One time his Lordſhip ſaw me at my Lady Powis's Houſe, and he ſhewed me a very particular Favour. I ſpeak it in the Preſence of Almighty God, nothing out of Revenge, nor for any ſort of Intereſt.

Priſ. Was I never angry with you but at that time?

Mr. Dangerfield. No, my Lord, I know not of any other time that your Lordſhip was angry.

L. C. J. Now what ſay you, my Lord?

Priſ. The firſt thing I deſire to do, is, Here are two Gentlemen give in Evidence againſt me, the one is Mr. Otes, the other Mr. Dangerfield. Mr. Otes ſays, That he in Spain did ſee ſeveral Letters from me: That when he came over into England, he brought a Letter from Spain to me, that that Letter was given to the Provincial, and the Provincial (he ſuppoſes) gave it me. Now, my Lord, I only deſire this, that the firſt thing that ſhall be done, is, that you will pleaſe to call Mr. Parker, who will ſhew you what a kind of man Mr. Otes is. And I am glad, ſince you ſay that Mr. Dangerfield is a good Witneſs, that I can prove that every word he ſays is a Lie. And ſo begin with Mr. Otes.

Priſ. I would offer you a Record, a Record of ſome particular Actions from Haſtings.

L. C. J. Read the Record.

The Record read.

L. C. J. What uſe can you make of this?

Priſ. My Lord, the Caſe is only this, My Lord, I will tell you, here is Mr. Otes, this is only to ſhew what kind of man this Mr. Otes is. Mr. Otes he comes and accuſes a man at Haſtings for Buggery, there he is Indicted and comes to his Tryal, and then he is found Innocent: Now, my Lord, I ſent for this Mr. Parker, to tell your Lordſhip what kind of man this Mr. Otes was, and for that purpoſe ſhew the whole Proceeding.

L. C. J. My Lord, you ſhall have all the Juſtice in the World; but we muſt have right done to the King's Evidence. You have brought in a thing, whereby all you can make againſt Mr. Otes is this, That he was the Proſecutor of a man for the Crime of Buggery, and is ſuppoſed to have taken his Oath there, and notwithſtanding the Jury would not believe him, and found the man not Guilty.

Priſ. My Lord, I come to ſhew you the Motives how the Jury came to clear him, that is, by proving this man was in another place at that time, and ſatisfied the Court and Jury, that he was from Eleven a-Clock or ſooner, till Eight or Ten a-Clock with them in Company; where it was only the malice that was between Otes and Parker; and ſeveral Witneſſes that were in the place where he ſaid the Buggery was committed, ſaid that he was not there; and the Witneſſes poſitively ſaid they were with him, and all looked upon Mr. Otes as a deteſtable man, and ſent him out of the Court.

L. C. J. Do you prove this by any but Parker?

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. This ought not to be admitted; for if it be, Mr. Otes ſtands here to anſwer all the Faults that ever he committed.

L. C. J. Here is the Caſe; Suppoſing it be true now, that Mr. Otes proſecuted a man for Felony, and he gave Teſtimony, ſuppoſing it ſhould be ſo, and yet the Jury acquitted him; what uſe can you make of it? You can make no inference; it is a thing we muſt allow all the Juries in England: For there is Witneſs generally given on both ſides; and when there are for the Plaintiff, the Defendant's Evidence are all perjured; and when for the Defendant, the Plaintiff's Evidence are perjured.

Priſ. My Lord, this is the Inference. Thus much I make of it, that this Parker is innocent. Otes ſwears poſitively he did ſo, the other ſwears poſitively this man was not there; to ſhew the malice Otes had againſt him.

L. C. J. My Lord, you can go no further than you have gone. The Reſult of all is, that the Jury found him Not Guilty; for what Grounds no man can come to ſay, but the Jurymen themſelves. No man can tell what prevailed with the Jury to find him Not Guilty, that is in their own Conſciences, and theſe are things that cannot be examined. His Jury, notwithſtanding Mr. Otes was the only Proſecutor, they found him Not Guilty, and it amounts to nothing.

Priſ. My Lord, there is another thing: While this man was in Priſon, what does Otes do, but comes here to London, accuſes the Father, who was a conſiderable man in the Town, a Juſtice of the Peace, and Mayor the year before; accuſes him becauſe he ſhould not aſſiſt his Son; accuſes him before the King of ſpeaking ſcandalous words; then he gets him by a Meſſenger brought up before the Council: The King was preſent at the Hearing, and there it was proved to the King, as the Order of Council ſhews, that he was an honeſt man, and ſo the Council ſent Otes away with the greateſt contempt, and freed the other man.

L. C. J. Was this before the Plot was diſcovered?

Priſ. Yes, my Lord, in purſuance of it.

L. C. J. You ſaid it was that he ſhould not help his Son, his Son was not free.

Priſ. No, he was in Priſon, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord may think hard if he hath not ſome competent liberty; but he muſt keep to the Buſineſs. You ſay, that notwithſtanding he hath the Opinion of the Court, that the Jury muſt take notice; then the Jury muſt take notice it ſignifies nothing.

Priſ. Very well. Having told you this, I deſire you would be pleaſed to take notice, after Otes was thus forced to run away from Haſtings, here it ſeems he was converted to be a Papiſt, by a perſon whom Mr. Otes hath ſince converted to be a Proteſtant; and you ſhall ſee what an Account this Gentleman will give of him.

L. C. J. What is his Name?

Priſ. Hutchinſon.

L. C. J. What will you do againſt him?

Priſ. Several things, my Lord.

L. C. J. You muſt not do it: If you are able to diſprove Mr. Otes in any of theſe particulars, you may do it. If you alledge Teſtimony againſt the particular matter he hath Sworn, you will do very well; but pray, my Lord, keep to that.

Priſ. I will, my Lord; I will ſubmit any thing to your Lordſhip's Commands; and therefore, my Lord, I will tell you for what Reaſon I ſent for this man, to tell you how Mr. Otes went to Spain, and how he lived in Spain.

L. C. J. If you can ſhew the Jury any Reaſon why they ſhould not believe his Evidence, that will be very proper.

L. C. J. What is your Name?

Hutchinſon. My Name is Hutchinſon.

Priſ. Mr. Hutchinſon, pray ſay what you have to ſay, and not follow Mr. Otes's method: I only ask you this Queſtion, Sir, Whether you did convert this man, that is, reconcile him to the Church of Rome?

Hutchinſon. Yes, my Lord, that I did.

L. C. J. You ought not to ask him ſuch Queſtions, you bring him in danger of his Life; you are not to ask him ſuch Queſtions.

Mr. Recorder. Let us ſee the Statute-Book.

Cl. of Cr. It is High Treaſon.

L. C. J. You thought this had been meritorious now, and it is High Treaſon.

Mr. Recorder. This it is to abound in a man's own Senſe. We muſt beg your Lordſhip's Advice in this.

L. C. J. Are you a Proteſtant now?

Hutchinſon. Yes, my Lord.

Priſ. He was a Prieſt, and confeſſes his Error.

L. C. J. Did you know Otes firſt in Spain?

Hutchinſon. No, my Lord, I knew him firſt here; and we were in Company, and I told him, He could not be a true Prieſt, ſince he was of the Church of England.

Mr. At. Gen. He offers ſuch things as are not Evidence.

L. C. J. Pray what do you know of his Employment in Spain?

Hutchinſon. I received Letters from him when he was in Spain. He went over to ſtudy Philoſophy and Divinity there, and I ſaw his Recommendations to the Rector of Liege.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him?

Hutchinſon. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee him before he made this Diſturbance.

L. C. J. What Diſturbance? Do you know? What Diſcourſe had you with him?

Hutchinſon. I employ'd him in writing for me,

L. C. J. Writing what?

Hutchinſon. In writing certain things againſt the Corruption of the Church of Rome. He had 10 s. I gave him, and this was before the Diſcovery he made (as he pretends) of the Plot. And he told me he would ſuffer no more for Conſcience-ſake: It is an hard thing, ſaid he, Mr. Berry, for a Man to want Bread; upon which I gave him 10 s.

L. C. J. He ſays, Having been formerly with Mr. Otes, he employ'd him to tranſcribe many things for him, and Mr. Otes ſaid to him, He was reſolved no more to ſuffer for Conſcience ſake. How, ſaith he, not ſo. Oh but Mr. Berry, ſaid he, it is a very ſad thing to want Bread. And upon that, he ſays, he gave him 10 s. for his Pains in writing.

Hutchinſon. And hereupon, my Lord, in May was Twelvemonth he ſent for me, when I heard he he had done ſome more miſchief; and I went to him, my Lord.

L. C. J. That was after the Diſcovery?

Hutchinſon. Yes, my Lord, upon that he was very kind to me, and gave me 20 s. Said he, Mr. Berry, you have been civil to me, and you ſhall never want any thing ſo long as I have it. Said I, Mr. Otes, are theſe things true that you ſwear againſt the Jeſuits? Said he, As I hope for Salvation they are. And that was the trueſt word he ſpake theſe 3 years. Then, ſaid I, Mr. Otes, anſwer me this only one thing. There are an hundred and twenty perſons that ſaw you every day, and dined and ſupped with you at St. Omers, and theſe you have recommended to me for vertuous people, and I know them to be ſo. He ſaid, They are Outlaw'd men.

L. C. J. What did Mr. Otes ſay more?

Hutchinſon. He was with me frequently, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. He paid you your Angel well when he gave you 20 s.

Hutchinſon. Mr. Otes, Speak the Truth: There is a God in Heaven.

Dr. Otes. Shall I be allowed to ſatisfie the Court as to this Evidence? I will give the Court a very good Account.

L. C. J. The Subſtance is this; That you were poor. Is it true that he gave you 10 s?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I believe I might not have much money among them.

L. C. J. And you ſaid, You would ſuffer no more for Conſcience ſake?

Dr. Otes. That is not ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. And, That it is an hard thing to want Bread?

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I never wanted Bread.

Hutchinſon. But you ſaid ſo to me, Mr. Otes.

Mr. At. Gen. Hark, Mr. Hutchinſon——

Dr. Otes. To ſhew the invalidity of this Evidence, my Lord, the Biſhop of London hath turned him out of his Living at Barkin.

L. C. J. What is that?

Dr. Otes. To ſhew that he is not fit to be truſted.

L. C. J. Why you have never a Living.

Dr. Otes. Yes I have, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where?

Dr. Otes. In Kent, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long have you had it?

Dr. Otes. I was reſtored to it laſt Summer.

Mr. Recorder. He ſays that he had Diſcourſe with him concerning his Prieſthood; Whether Mr. Otes thought himſelf to be a good Prieſt: that is, as he was made by the Order of the Church of England?

Mr. At. Gen. He ſays, He converted Mr. Otes to be a Papiſt.

Dr. Otes. And I have a Charge of High Treaſon againſt that man, for ſeducing me from my Religion, my Lord; I will ſwear he turned me to the Church of Rome, and I deſire it may be Recorded.

Dr. D. I have one thing to tell your Lordſhip, the man is mad, he is diſtracted.

L. C. J. This Doctor of Divinity is a very honeſt man, he will tell you.

Dr. D. He was my Curate at Barkin, and my Lord of London having ſome information againſt the manner of his preaching, ſent me word to Rippon he would provide me another Curate; on Saturday laſt, dining with him, my Lord told me he was diſtracted.

Mr. Recorder. His Behaviour is a very concurrent Teſtimony.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. I appeal to my Lord, if I did not tell him, as he came into the Court, that he was a diſtracted man.

L. C. J. Call another Witneſs.

Priſ. Here's a Gentleman was his School-fellow at Valladolid. I ask you, Mr. Armſtrong, Whether you knew any thing of Mr. Otes there?

L. C. J. How long had he been there?

Armſtrong. He was three months there before me.

L. C. J. How long was he there in all?

Armſtrong. A matter of a month.

L. C. J. Was he not there four months?

Armſtrong. Yes, a matter of four months in all.

L. C. J. He ſays, he had been there three months before he came, and a month after he came; and that then he was but a common Scholar.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I will ſatisfie the Court when they queſtion me.

L. C. J. In what would you ſatisfie us?

Dr. Otes. About being a Scholar. I was ready to commence when they came; but being they were Strangers in the Town, not being Town-Scholars, and not undertaking Philoſophical Dictates the Fathers did pray me to ſhew them the way to School; and I went with them two or three times.

L. C. J. Call another, my Lord.

Priſ. Mr. Palmer and Mr. Dorrington.

L. C. J. Did you know Mr. Otes at St. Omers?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord, and he was an ordinary Scholar there, and din'd and ſupp'd with us.

L. C. J. You ſaid he din'd at another Table.

Palmer. Yes, my Lord, he did dine at a Table by himſelf, but it was at the ſame time.

Dr. Otes. Had I Scholars Commons? Pray, my Lord, ask them that.

Palmer. He had the ſame Commons that we had; but they had a Reſpect for him as he was an ancienter man, and that was the Reaſon that he had more freedom than the reſt.

Priſ. My Lord, he ſays he came from St. Omers at the Conſult: Pray, Sir, who did you come along with? Did you come with Hilſley?

Dr. Otes. Hilſley came with me in the Pacquet-Boat.

Priſ. Call Mr. Hilſley and Osbourne——My Lord, this Gentleman: I would bring nothing to offend your Lordſhip, or nothing that hath been old, if it had not ſome new inference from it; therefore, my Lord, this is the reaſon that I ſent for Mr. Hilſley. Mr. Hilſley, did you come with Mr. Otes in April in the Pacquet-Boat?

Hilſley. No, my Lord.

Priſ. You left him at St. Omers?

Hilſley, Yes, my Lord.

Priſ. Now, my Lord, I have ſeveral Witneſſes to prove this. And pray, Mr. Osbourne, tell my Lord what he ſaid to you.

Osbourne. My Lord, about the latter end of April I heard Mr. Hilſley was in Town; I went to ſee him, and one time at a Coffee-houſe about the Turnſtile we fell in Diſcourſe.

L. C. J. My Lord, you ſay you have two Perſons of Quality: I will tell you, my Lord, what you ſhall expect; I will not be for one, and not for t'other; but be equal as near as I can. If he comes only to teſtifie what Hilſley told him, it ſignifies nothing.

and

Priſ. I do depend upon Hilſley; but this is that Hilſley told him, That there was one Otes at St. Omers.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence; nor can Ladies of Quality prove by their own Experience what Mr. Hilſley affirms, That Otes came not over with him.

Priſ. My Lord, they can tell; and one Lady, a Proteſtant, that talking with this Gentleman before the Plot —

L. C. J. This is only Diſcourſe what another man ſays; if Mr. Otes himſelf ſhould have ſaid ſo, then indeed it is proper: But to ſhew you this, it is impoſſible, ſuppoſing they ſpeak truth; that is, if they do witneſs what they do not, That long before they heard of the Name of Otes, this Gentleman ſhould tell them, one Otes was left at St. Omers; it ſignifies nothing.

Priſ. Does not that confirm Mr. Hilſley's Teſtimony?

L. C. J. No, indeed.

Priſ. I only refer this to you, my Lord; Hilſley ſays, in April he did leave Otes, and here are four or five Witneſſes that Hilſley told them ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. All that my Lord ſays, is this, That he did leave Mr. Otes at St. Omers. If it be objected, They are Catholicks, as they call them; Says my Lord, Hilſley did tell this Story before there was any Plot. Why ſhould he tell them ſo? It is not in favour of that Religion that he ſpeaks; but the time of teſtifying ſuch a thing, ſhews he ſpeaks true. This is all.

Priſ. This is the inference; this is only to corroborate and ſhew you the Credit of his Teſtimony.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. It may be a miſtake tho'; and it is of no more force than what he ſays now.

Mr. At. Gen. They were all miſtaken in that matter.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, he did leave me at St. Omers, but I overtook him at Calais.

L. C. J. Will you ſwear it, Mr. Otes?

Dr. Otes. I ſay, upon my Oath I did it.

L. C. J. It were a great matter if you had any body to prove, that this Gentleman came alone; but that is ſtill but one man's Teſtimony.

Priſ. But here is confirmation to his Evidence, that he could not invent it.

Mr. At. Gen. You had 16 once, but the contrary was proved and believed, and ſo it may be again.

Priſ. Call Mr. Gregſon and Mr. Rigby. Mr. Gregſon, were not you Landlord to Mr. Otes before the Plot was diſcovered? How long before the Plot did he lie at your Houſe?

L. C. J. What time?

Gregſon. A Week before Eaſter, 77.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. When did he go away from you, Sir?

Gregſon. The Sunday after Eaſter day.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. When did you ſee him again?

Gregſon. He came to me about All Saints.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. The ſame Year?

Gregſon. Yes.

Dr. Otes. Who paid for my Quarters? Pray ask him that, my Lord.

Gregſon. He paid for it himſelf.

Dr. Otes. Did not Mr. Fenwick pay for it?

Gregſon. He did after you came from St. Omers.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, when I came laſt from St. Omers, I went directly to his Houſe.

Priſ. Was not he in a poor condition?

Gregſon. He was then indifferently poor.

Priſ. My Lord, this is only to prove his condition.

Dr. Otes. My Lord, I had only what the Jeſuits allowed me.

L. C. J. You had nothing but what they allowed you?

Dr. Otes. Nothing elſe, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. They allowed you a very ſcanty living.

Priſ. Call Mr. Littcott. Mr. Littcott, Do you know any thing about a Divorce?

L. C. J. What ſhould he know?

Priſ. Pray, my Lord, don't diſcourage me.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. But you muſt not ask things that are not to the purpoſe.

Littcott. My Lord, it was morally impoſſible there ſhould be a Divorce.

L. C. J. Was there any endeavour by my Lord concerning it?

Littcott. There was no ſuch Deſign.

L. C. J. How was that? But pray mind, you will be morally not believed elſe: Do you know my Lord uſed any endeavours, in order to obtain a Divorce?

Mr. Recorder. That is all that he ſays, He never knew any thing.

Priſ. I only ſay this, my Lord, Mr. Otes comes here and ſays, that he heard me ſay, that I did ſpend a great deal of money. Now if I ſatisfie the Court that I never ſpent a Farthing towards a Divorce——

L. C. J. If he had ſaid, your Lordſhip laid out ſums of money, then it had been an Anſwer to that, if you could prove you had not.

Priſ. You know I ſtand here accuſed for a great Crime; pray give me leave.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. If it were a matter of moment we would.

Priſ. Pray, my Lord, hear me: Here's a man ſays, I ſpent a great deal of money about a Divorce; I come to tell your Lordſhip, that this very man, before your Lordſhips, and alſo before the King, and if your Lordſhips have forgot it, I will ſhew you Witneſſes that he ſpake it before the King, and before the Houſe of Commons, that I did actually ſue out a Divorce: Now I will ſhew, my Lord, that I neither could nor did go about it.

L. C. J. We are not to take notice of that now. If he did ſay a falſe thing before the Houſe of Commons, we cannot take notice of it now; for we cannot go to try whether he ſaid ſo, and whether that be true or falſe.

Priſ. I humbly beg, my Lord, if this man that is upon his Oath hath ſworn before the King that he did actually ſee the Divorce, and I prove that it was impoſſible that he ſhould ſee the Divorce, becauſe it was impoſſible to get a Divorce——

L. C. J. What then?

Mr. Juſt. Raymond You muſt not be permitted to prove that, it is not pertinent to the Queſtion.

Priſ. My Lords, with humble Submiſſion to you, he hath told me this before your Lordſhips, that that I ſpent a great deal of money about a Divorce.

L. C. J. My Lord, you will be ſatisfied, when we have acquainted you what the ordinary Proceedings of a Court of Juſtice are in Matters of this Nature; what is, and what is not to be admitted. If you ſhould come to prove Mr. Otes had falſly ſworn a thing in another Court, and five or ſix Witneſſes ſhall come and ſay it is not true; we are not to hearken to it. The Reaſon is this, firſt you muſt have him perjured, and we are not now to try, whether that thing ſworn in another place be true or falſe? Becauſe that is the way to accuſe whom you pleaſe; and that may make a man a Liar, that cannot imagine this will be put to him: And ſo no man's Teſtimony that comes to be a Witneſs, ſhall leave himſelf ſafe. And this is another Caſe, If he ſwore in another place what is contradictory to what he ſays now; then it is proper. If you could prove that he had ſworn in another place that he never ſaw you, it is very proper: But now to us he ſays, That he doth not remember whether ever he had ſeen a Divorce, or that you had ſued out a Divorce. All that he remembers, is, That you ſaid, you had expended a great deal of Money about a Divorce, and this is all he teſtifies here.

Priſ. My Lord, my Evidence againſt Mr. Otes is this, That he waves what he ſaid before, when I came to ask him, and ſays, I don't remember. Now, my Lord, if he lies in one thing he may in another.

Mr Juſt. Raymond. No man can remember all the things that ever he did in his Life.

Priſ. I have Witneſſes to appeal to, to witneſs every thing; and I repreſent it here to you, that I would withal my heart have indicted him of Perjury, but for Mr. Attorney General: For I imployed Two to attend the Clerk of the Peace for Copies of the Indictments againſt Mr. Langhorn and Mr. Ireland; they did come to the Clerk of the Peace, ſaith the Clerk of the Peace, I can't do it without Mr. Attorney's Authority. My Lord, ſaith he, I would give them you with all my heart, but I muſt have leave from the Table.

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, I told you, I would not give it you without you had an Order from the King, and the Council did not think fit to give it you.

Priſ. I think this is a little pertinent.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How doth any thing that your Lordſhip excepts againſt in this Gentleman's Teſtimony contradict it ſelf? All that you accuſe him of, is, That Mr. Otes had ſaid he heard you ſay, you had ſpent a great deal of Money about a Divorce.

Priſ. I only ſhew, if you are pleaſed to hear it, that he reported to the King that he actually ſaw the Divorce.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. That agrees well enough with what he ſays now.

Priſ. He ſaid ſo in your Lordſhip's Hearing.

L. C. J. I don't remember it, if I did I would ſpeak of it; I don't remember it upon my word.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. I proteſt I don't remember a word.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. In the Court, did he ſay it?

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. Here we are all three that were preſent, I proteſt I don't remember it; but as to the Buſineſs of the Divorce, I might look upon it as impertinent, and ſo poſſibly might not mind what he ſaid.

Priſ. I only offer this to you, and if your Lordſhips command me to deſiſt, I will deſiſt.

Dr. Otes. I deſire my Evidence to prove that I was in Town.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. Pray, Mr. Otes, you are an Evidence, you muſt be govern'd by Mr. Attorney.

L. C. J. It would be very fit, Mr. Attorney, to prove that Mr. Otes did come over with Hilſley in the Pacquet-Boat.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. Mr. Otes, I remember very well gave an Account of his coming over, ſaid he, I did come over with ſuch and ſuch Perſons, and among the reſt was Mr. Hilſley. This is only to prove that he was at the Conſult.

Mr. At. Gen. We can prove it.

Records produced againſt Mr. Dangerfield.

L. C. J. Here is, That he was burnt in the Hand, and Out-lawed for Felony, Pilloried for Cheating, twice Pilloried, and ſee whether he was Whip'd or no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know nothing of the Pillory.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. Here was a Record of being burnt in the hand, and a Record for putting away falſe Guineas.

L. C. J. For that he was to ſtand in the Pillory.

Cl. of Cr. Here is one Record for another Shilling gilt.

L. C. J. Was that in the Pillory too?

Mr. At. Gen. He was fined Fifty Pounds.

Cl. of Cr. Here are Three in Salisbury for three ſeveral Guineas, and he was adjudged to the Pillory for them all.

Mr. At. Gen. It was all at one Aſſizes, my Lord.

L. C. J. My Brother Try'd him.

Cl. of Cr. He was Try'd before Mr. Juſtice Jones, and to ſtand in the Pillory for all three.

L. C. J. What have you elſe to ſay?

Priſ. Call Mrs. Cellier and Mr. Dowdal.

L. C. J. What is your Name, Sir?

Dowdal. My Name is Bennet Dowdal.

L. C. J. What have you to ſay to him, my Lord?

Priſ. Mr. Dowdal, the Caſe is this, Mr. Dangerfield tells me I was angry with him at ſuch a time for a Buſineſs at my Houſe; Was I not angry with him at Powis's Houſe for going to the Lords in the Tower?

Mr. At. Gen. Then he did go about it?

Dowdal. Mrs. Cellier ſpake to me to ſpeak to Mr. Dangerfield not to be troubled at your Anger.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. When was this?

Dowdal. After the Jeſuites died.

Priſ. He proves this, That Mrs. Cellier ſpake to him to pacifie Mr. Dangerfield, and Dangerfield did tell him I was angry with him for going in my Name to the Lords.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. He ſays no ſuch thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. You muſt not ask him what Mrs. Cellier ſaid.

Mrs. Cellier. This day Twelve-month he and I had been employ'd in writing Copies of ſome Letters, and I ſent him to my Lord to know if he would go ſomething towards the Printing them, and he went from him to the Lords in the Tower. In an hour and half after, my Lord came to me very angry: Mrs. Cellier, ſaid he, I thought you would not forfeit your Diſcretion to ſend ſuch a Raſcal to me; if you ſend him to me again I will bid my Servants kick him. And, ſaid I to Mr. Dangerfield, you are not to note that; for he is a very good Man, and may be angry one time and pleaſed another; and I would have ſent him another time, and ſaid he, Pray Madam, don't ſend me thither, I would rather go an hundred Miles of your Errand.

L. C. J. Dangerfield, that Diſcourſe you had with my Lord, was it before the Jeſuites dy'd or after?

Mr. Dangerfield. What Diſcourſe?

L. C. J. When you diſcours'd about killing the King.

Mr. Dangerfield. No, my Lord, Two Months after.

L. C. J. When was the time that theſe words were ſpoken?

Mr. Dangerfield. When his Lordſhip was in that Paſſion.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, it was about the middle of Auguſt.

L. C. J. Was you ever in his Company after?

Mr. Dangerfield. No, my Lord, I ſaw him once at Powis's Houſe.

L. C. J. Had he ever been angry before?

Mr. Dangerfield. No not till this time, my Lord.

L. C. J. Here Mrs. Cellier witneſſes, that this Day twelvemonth, my Lord was extremely angry, inſomuch, that when ſhe would have had you go on an Errand, you would not.

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, that time I had been with my L. Caſtlemaine, I went home to Mrs. Cellier's Houſe, which I did then call my home, and ſaid I, my L. Caſtlemaine is moſt violently angry with me.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Dangerfield. This was the latter end of Auguſt.

L. C. J. But ſhe talks of this time Twelvemonth.

Mr. Dangerfield. It is no ſuch thing, my Lord.

Mrs. Cellier. I ſaid, Pray carry this Letter to my L. Caſtlemaine: Pray excuſe me, ſaid he, I had rather go an hundred Miles than go by his Door.

L. C. J. Whereas Dangerfield ſays, He had this Diſcourſe in Auguſt, Mrs. Cellier ſays in June or July, this day Twelve-month particularly ſhe gave him a Letter, and he ſaid, Pray excuſe me, I would go an Hundred Miles for you; but I would not go into my Lord's Company again if I could help it.

Priſ. My Lord, Mr. Dowdal can tell it.

L. C. J. Did he acknowledge to you my Lord's Anger in the beginning of July?

Dowdal. It was within a Week after the Jeſuits died.

L. C. J. I don't know that.

Dowdal. It was about the Twenty firſt of June.

L. C. J. Here are two Witneſſes, one ſays in June or the beginning of July; ſays Mrs. Cellier, this Day Twelve month he came and told me my Lord was extreamly angry with him. And ſhe would afterwards have had him carried a Letter: But he ſaid, Pray excuſe me, I would go an Hundred Miles, but he would not go again to him if he could help it. And Dowdal ſays he told him about that time of my Lord's Anger with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Hold your Tongue, Mr. Dangerfield.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. What Jeſuits?

Dowdal. The Five Jeſuits.

Priſ. If you pleaſe, my Lords, I would only tell you this. My Lords, you ſee that theſe two Witneſſes teſtifie, that I was angry with Mr. Dangerfield, in June, my Lords, I only ſay this to you, that when I was examin'd at the Council before the King of this Particular, my Lord Chancellour ask'd him the Particulars of it, and he did confeſs this thing which I now prove. Now my Lords, I inferr this, if I was ſo angry with him for offering to go to the Tower, when he went to the Tower in my Name——

L. C. J. That they have ſaid, that you were very angry.

Dowdal. Dangerfield told me ſo, that he was angry about his going to the Tower in my Lord's Name unknown to him.

L. C. J. Here are two Witneſſes to prove, that my Lord was angry with him for going to the Tower in his Name, and they both teſtifie he was extreamly high and refuſed to carry a Letter to my Lord; and yet he ſays in Auguſt following he had this Diſcourſe.

Priſ. I have now only one thing to ſay, what hath paſs'd between Mr. Otes and Mr. Dangerfield.

L. C. J. Do it as near as you can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have ſome other Evidence to anſwer this.

Mr. At. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we will call two or three Witneſſes to prove the Point. Firſt, to prove this laſt thing, that we have been in my Lord's Company later than my Lord ſpeaks of.

L. C. J. He ſays Auguſt.

Mr. At. Gen. We will prove after that time that is the time that pinches us.

Priſ. My Lady Powis is in Court, will you hear her?

Lady Powis. My Lord, I never did ſend a Letter by Mr. Dangerfield to any body in my life, nor I never read a Letter in Mr. Dangerfield's preſence, nor never had him ſo much in my company to read a Letter or any Tittle to him.

L. C. J. I will tell you Gentlemen, what he ſays, Mr. Dangerfield ſwears he carried a Letter from my Lady Powis to my Lord Caſtlemaine, and there was an Anſwer brought back, and that that Anſwer of my Lord Caſtlemaine's was read before him, and (you will do well to call Mrs. Cellier in again) my Lady Powis doth deny that ſhe ever ſent a Letter by him to my Lord Caſtlemaine, or any body elſe, by him in her life; or that ſhe ever communicated any Letter to him: This is apt Evidence, this is the Truth of of it; for it anſwers directly to what he ſays againſt my Lord Caſtlemaine.

Sir Richard Barker.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir Richard Barker, can you give an Account of Otes? When was Mr. Otes in Town? What time that you know of?

Sir R. Barker. My Lord, I remember we were once upon this before your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. In 78?

Sir R. Barker. Yes, my Lord, the Evidence that I gave, my Lord, was only this, that my Servants told me that Mr. Otes had been at my Houſe:

Houſe: It was before Whitſontide, in May 78.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him then? When was it you ſaw him?

Sir R. Barker. My Lord, I ſaw him after.

L. C. J. How long after?

Sir R. Barker. My Lord, it was about the latter end of June.

L. C. J. He ſays to his own Knowledge he ſaw him in June.

Mr. At. Gen. But we have his Servants here too, Phillip Page, and Cecily Mayo.

L. C. J. Do you hear, Mrs. Cellier, was there any Letter ſent by my L. Caſtlemaine to my Lady Powis, that was read before you and Dangerfield?

Mrs. Cellier, No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Here are two Witneſſes, my Lady ſays there is no ſuch thing, and Mrs. Cellier ſays it.

Priſ. There is another thing, that is, The teaching the Scholars at St. Omer's, that I taught the Scholars their Leſſons.

—Turner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform my Lord and the Jury, what time it was you ſaw Mr. Dangerfield at my L. Caſtlemaine's.

L. C. J. What Month can you charge your ſelf to ſay, you ſaw Dangerfield in my L. Caſtlemaine's Company?

Turner. I can't ſay juſt the time.

L. C. J. Might it be Auguſt?

Turner. I can't well tell, I think it might be about July.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. Why do ye think ſo?

L. C. J. You are not asked to accuſe your ſelf in any thing, but when you ſaw them together.

Turner. I was coming down Stairs, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. You don't tell when it was.

L. C. J. Tell us whether you can tell or no: If you are doubtful, ſay you are doubtful; but ſpeak the truth.

Turner. I can't be poſitive.

L. C. J. It might be in June, or July, or Auguſt, but you think July?

Turner. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The ſooner it is after that the Evidence is, the better againſt it.

Mr. At. Gen. Madam, I think your Ladiſhip ſays you never ſent a Letter by Dangerfield?

Lady Powis. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Nor did you never receive any Notes from him?

Lady Powis. I have received ſome Notes from Mrs. Cellier, which were his Writing.

L. C. J. But did you ever receive a Letter from my L. Caſtlemaine?

Lady Powis, Never, my Lord.

—Woodman.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. What do you ſay, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. Heark you, Woodman, were you ſent with any Letter?

Woodman. To whom?

Mr. At. Gen. To my L. Caſtlemaine, or any body?

Woodman. I was ſent with one Letter, it was Mrs. Cellier's, my Lord.

L. C. J. To whom?

Woodman. To my L. Caſtlemaine; as I remember, my Lord, I took it from Mrs. Cellier's Daughter.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever receive any money of my L. Caſtlemaine?

Woodman. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was it? How much was it?

Woodman. About three Pounds, or thirty Shillings, I believe.

L. C. J. How do you believe it?

Woodman. To the beſt of my Thoughts it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it for Dangerfield?

Woodman. My Lord I don't know that.

L. C. J. Have you any more?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I have this to ſay to prove Dr. Otes was in London in April 78.

L. C. J. He doth not deny but he might be here too.

Priſ. I don't diſpute it, my Lord, I have only this one word more. It is not of Treaſon, but it is againſt my Reputation; becauſe this man, before your Lordſhip, I think hath accuſed me of it; and I think, my Lord, I ſhall give you very good Satisfaction: That is, that the Boys that came from St. Omer's were not inſtructed and taught by me. Now if you pleaſe, my Lord, to give me leave to ſhew it, I have done. Look, my Lord, the thing that I can ſay, is this, Mr. Littcott.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. You ſee he ſaid it was morally impoſſible.

Priſ. Pray my Lords.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. I will undertake you will ſay it is time loſt.

L. C. J. I would ſtay ſome time to obſerve to the Jury what I have taken notice of with all my heart, but I ſhould be gone.

Priſ. I have done, my Lord, I would not ſay any thing to diſguſt any body.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, I will deliver my Obſervations in this Cauſe as I would in any Cauſe, to the beſt of my Underſtanding, and I will make thoſe Obſervations that are as natural as I know how to do; and proper for you to take notice of. It is in vain to diſpute what my Lord ſtands indicted of: It is for attempting to murder the King, and change our Government and our Religion. To prove this, there have been two Witneſſes only that are material, and that is Mr. Otes in the firſt place, and Mr. Otes his Evidence, the Sum of it is to to be reduced——

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, do you ſtand up to ſpeak any thing?

Mr. At. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, we will ſum up the Evidence for the King, not to offend your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. If you would be ſhort, Mr. Attorney, we would not hinder you of any thing.

Mr. At. Gen. I will be very ſhort.

If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, My L. Caſtlemaine is here charged with High Treaſon. The Proof that we have againſt him is by two Witneſſes, that is, Dr. Otes and Mr. Dangerfield. Mr. Otes he doth ſwear this, namely, That after the Conſult (for I will bring it in ſhort) that after the Conſult that was for killing the King and altering the Government, my L. Caſtlemaine being acquainted with it at Mr. Fenwick's Chamber, did hope it good Succeſs, and that he ſhould come to be reveng'd. Mr. Dangerfield he hath prov'd, That being treated with to kill the King, and having refuſed to do it, my L. Caſtlemaine was very angry with him for it, and ſaid, Why won't you do that for which you were taken out of Priſon? Here are two Witneſſes expreſs. What is ſaid againſt Mr. Otes ſignifies nothing. As to Mr. Dangerfield, there are ſome Exceptions, which we muſt confeſs to be true; but he is a Witneſs, and my Lord, ſuch matters are to be expected to be proved by ſuch Witneſſes: For if a man will diſcover Robberies, he muſt go to ſuch Perſons as do ſuch things; and if Treaſons, it muſt be among them that have been employ'd in ſuch things. Tho' he were a diſhoneſt man before, yet he may be honeſt now: He was never guilty of any Treaſon but as he was employ'd amongſt them. There are ſome Witneſſes brought to encounter him, and one is my Lady Powis, who, as he ſays, ſent him with a Letter to my Lord Caſtlemaine; but ſhe ſays ſhe did never ſend a Letter by him: And others ſay, he would never come at my Lord Caſtlemaine after he was angry, which was in June. Now for that, Gentlemen, you do hear Turner ſay, That in July or Auguſt, for he can't tell which, he thinks it might be July, he ſaw Dangerfield at my L. Caſtlemaine's; ſo that That encounters that Evidence.

L. C. J. If Mr. Attorney had not interrupted me, I would not have left out any thing of this nature, for I would be certainly careful where the King's Life lies at ſtake: I would be ſure to preſerve my Sovereign above all things; and therefore no man ought to think that I ſhould be partial in a Cauſe wherein our Religion, and the Life of the King and the Government is in danger. But I muſt ſay on the other ſide, That there ſhould be good competent Proofs of theſe things againſt thoſe accuſed, becauſe their Lives and Fortunes, and Honours, and all are at ſtake. And ſo, Gentlemen, we ſhall diſcharge our Conſciences to the beſt of our Underſtandings, and deal uprightly on both hands.

For the Caſe it ſtands thus: It is truly obſerv'd by Mr. Attorney, That there are but two material Witneſſes to the Charge of this Indictment, that is to ſay, Mr. Otes and Mr. Dangerfield. Mr. Otes his Teſtimony is in two things, the one cloſe, the other is more remote. That more remote is, That he had a Letter to ſend to my L. Caſtlemaine, which he gave to the Provincial to ſend it, and as he ſays, he ſaw a Letter ſubſcribed Caſtlemaine, and that afterwards by ſeeing him write a Superſcription, he could recollect the Character ſo well, that he believed that to be his Hand which he ſaw in Spain among the Jeſuits or the Fathers, as they call them there, to whom they communicated that Letter; wherein he mentioned the general Deſign, that is, the bringing in Popery, which is the bringing in the Catholick Religion, as they call it. That is more remote. He ſays, there were Letters paſt between 'em, wherein my Lord approved of ſome things and diſapproved of others, which related to the Deſign; by which, ſays Mr. Otes, we meant the whole Matter and Tranſaction of killing the King; and that doth appear by that Letter he ſaw of my L. Caſtlemaine's, for that annexes to Deſign the advancing the Catholick Religion. The firſt time he ſaw him he did not know who he was, and there, at Wild-houſe, he ſays, That my L. Caſtlemaine ſhould drop out ſome Words which were ſuſpicious, and one thing, as if he underſtood ſomething of this matter that they had in agitation.

But more particularly he ſays, That when he came to Fenwick's Chamber, there was the great matter. They talked before but of the Deſign in general, at Wild-houſe; but afterwards meeting in Lincolns-Inn Fields, where he was told who he was, they went to Fenwick's Chamber, where they fell a diſcourſing about ſeveral things that related to the Concern, and at laſt they fell upon the matter in hand, and ſaid, They were glad to ſee the Fathers ſo unanimous in this matter: I asked about what matter? He ſaid, The killing of the King and bringing in Popery; to which, he ſays, that my Lord ſhould make anſwer, He wiſhed them good Succeſs in their Deſign, and that then he ſhould be revenged. This is the Subſtance of what Mr. Otes ſays: Againſt whoſe Teſtimony, I muſt tell you, there hath been but little. There is but little thrown upon Mr. Otes by way of Diſgrace and Infamy; for that Verdict that the Jury found againſt his Evidence, it is not material, for then every man muſt be accuſed when the Jury does not go acording to the Teſtimony he gives. It is not to be denied, but there is ſomething ſaid againſt him in another particular, and that is his coming over from St. Omers; where he ſays that Mr. Hilſley came over with him in the Pacquet Boat, but Mr. Hilſley denies it; Mr. Otes would have ſalved it, by ſaying he left him at St. Omers: 'Tis true, ſays Mr. Otes, but I overtook him afterwards; but he ſays to the point, that he came not with him. Now it is not to be denied on the other hand, but Mr. Otes might be here, and my Lord of Caſtlemaine ſeems to admit it, and it is probable enough Mr. Otes might be here. This is all I remember in reference to Mr. Otes. You muſt weigh well with your ſelves how probable or not probable what he does ſwear is. But I muſt tell the Jury they are to weigh the natures of people among themſelves, as they carry probability or not, or elſe the confidence of a Swearer ſhall take away any man's Life whatſoever. And to that that Mr. Otes ſays firſt, I underſtand not how he ſhould be ſo free Mr. Otes being a Stranger to him, when he knew not my Lord, and doth not know, whether my Lord knew him or no. But he ſays, my Lord muſt needs ſee the Jeſuits truſted him, and that might make him more confident: That afterwards going to Fenwick's Houſe, he ſpoke broader, in plain Engliſh. They were talking of a Deſign to kill the King and bring in the Catholick Religion; and Mr. Otes ſays, he wiſh'd 'em good Succeſs in the Deſign, and that then he ſhould be revenged. How far this Oath is to be taken or not, I muſt leave to your conſideration.

The next is Mr. Dangerfield, for nothing infamous is proved againſt Mr. Otes. * Dangerfield is a man of whom there is enough. You ſee what Crimes there are, for it is the Duty of every Judge, and I can't ſee how he can diſcharge his Conſcience, and the Duty he owes to the Government, in reſpect of his Oath and Place, if he doth not make thoſe juſt Obſervations to the Jury which are done in all Caſes: That is to ſay, when men have contracted great Crimes upon themſelves, tho' by Law they may be Witneſſes; yet it hath always been obſerved, and their Credit left to them to conſider of. You ſee how many Crimes they have produced, a matter of ſix great enormous Crimes; and by them you will ſee how far you ought to conſider his Teſtimony. Had Mr. Dangerfield been guilty only of being concerned in the Treaſon, and come in as a Witneſs, I ſhould have thought him a very competent Witneſs, for that is Mr. Otes's Caſe; but they prove Crimes of another ſort and nature, and whether the man of a ſudden be become a Saint, by being become a Witneſs, I leave leave that to you to conſider, and how far you are ſatisfied in the main.

The next thing is the Oppoſition to his Teſtimony. He hath ſworn that he carried a Letter from my Lady Powis to my Lord Caſtlemaine, and an Anſwer returned back from my Lord to her, and that my Lady Powis did read it in the preſence of Mrs. Cellier and him. Of this my Lady Powis hath been asked (it is true they are not upon their Oaths, but that is not their fault, the Law will not allow it) and my Lady Powis hath affirmed to it, as much as lay upon her to do, that ſhe never ſent a Letter by Mr. Dangerfield to my Lord Caſtlemaine, nor any body elſe. And whereas he ſays Mrs. Cellier was preſent, ſhe ſays, ſhe knows of no ſuch Letter, nor was any read in her Company. And this is a contradicting his Evidence, ſuppoſing him to be a man otherwiſe untouch'd. And whereas Dangerfield ſays, that in Auguſt he was with my Lord, and he ſaid, How chance you would not do that thing for which you were brought out of Priſon? What? Would you have me kill the King? Yes, ſaith he, that it is. And my Lord ſpeaking very angrily and very roughly, made him think it time to withdraw out of his Company, and never come into his Company more; and that this was the time of his Anger, and no other time, my Lord rather complementing him, as he would ſay, with friendly Salutations. But they produce Witneſſes againſt this. Says Mrs. Cellier, This Day Twelvemonth; and ſays t'other, about a Week after the Jeſuits were executed, which was about the beginning of July, ſaith ſhe, I would have you carry a Letter to my L. Caſtlemaine; Saith he, I would not do that, I would go 100 miles upon another Errand, but I would not go to him. Another Witneſs ſays, my Lord was mighty angry with him, and told him the cauſe, becauſe he went in his Name to the Lords in the Tower. Firſt, This contradicts what he ſaid, as if there had been no Anger before. The next is, That it is very improbable that my Lord ſhould be angry with him ſo much, that my Lord ſhould be very angry with him for going in his Name to the Tower, and afterwards for his refuſing to kill the King; when he ſaid, Why did you not do that you came out of Priſon for? What, my Lord, to kill the King? Yes, that. This is an Argument in oppoſition to his Teſtimony.

The next is a Conſideration for his Teſtimony. Turner ſays in anſwer to that, in July he takes it, but can't charge himſelf whether June, or July or Auguſt, but he himſelf thinks July, that he ſaw him at the L. Caſtlemaine's Houſe. And the King's Counſel would gather from that, there could not be ſuch an unwillingneſs to go before that time, it being after the time they ſpeak of that this man ſaw him there. Whether or no it was in June, or July, or Auguſt, is ſomething uncertain. So that I have repeated, as near as I can, all that is ſubſtantial on either part; and I have, according to the beſt of my Underſtanding, dealt fairly on both ſides, and obſerved to you what hath been ſworn againſt my Lord, and what hath been ſaid in contradiction to what they ſwear, and what appears upon Record; as to Dangerfield.

There is a great deal of difference between Mr. Otes's Teſtimony and Mr. Dangerfield's; for you may believe one, when you may perchance not believe another. There are not thoſe things caſt upon Mr. Otes that are upon Mr. Dangerfield. Now I muſt tell you, tho' they have produced two, if you believe but one, I think (if ſo be my Brethrens Opinions be otherwiſe, I would be very willingly contradicted in this matter) if two Witneſſes are produced, both ſpeaking materially to the thing, the one is believed and the other not; Whether upon theſe two Witneſſes the Jury can find a Perſon Guilty, or no? I am of Opinion, it is but one Witneſs, if you don't believe one; and I am ſure one is not ſufficient to find one Guilty: And therefore if ſo be you are of another Opinion, let us deal fairly and above-board, that it may appear we deal rightly between the King and his Subjects, and ſo preſerve men that are accuſed and not guilty.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I think in the firſt place, my Lord hath very faithfully delivered the Evidence; and I do think it neceſſary, in a Caſe of Treaſon, That there muſt be Two Witneſſes believ'd by the Jury.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. I never heard any man queſtion it. If the Law ſays, there muſt be two Witneſſes produced, it ſays, They muſt be Both believed.

L. C. J. Now you have our Senſe of it.

[The Jury went from the Bar, and returned.

Cl. of Cr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. Roger Palmer, Eſq; Earl of Caſtlemaine in the Kingdom of Ireland, Hold up thy Hand, look upon the Jury.

Cl. of Cr. Is Roger Palmer, Eſq; Earl of Caſtlemaine in the Kingdom of Ireland, Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Jury. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. This is your Verdict, You ſay he is Not Guilty, ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

THE

THE TRYAL OF JOHN GILES.

THE Seſſions began on Wedneſday the Seventh Day of July, 1680. the Ninth Day Mr. John Giles was brought to the Bar to be tried; and there pretended that he had Witneſſes at Monmouth, who could teſtifie very material things for him, and therefore pray'd the Court to put off his Tryal until the next Seſſions. Then the Court asked him his Witneſſes Names, and what they could ſay? Which he then declared to the Court. Upon which Mr. Arnold being preſent, and Proſecutor (Tam pro Domino Rege, quam pro ſeipſo) the Court asked his Conſent, and what he could ſay, why the Tryal ſhould not be put off; that ſo all the World might hereafter ſay, That Mr. Giles had all the Favour that he could reaſonably deſire, and what the Court could in Juſtice ſhew him, and that no manner of Excuſe might be left him.

After which, Mr. Arnold, in a very pertinent Speech, declared part of the Fact, and alſo of the Proceedings before his Wounding, as it had occurred between him and Mr. Herbert; and of his favourable and juſt Proceedings againſt Mr. Herbert, and alſo againſt John Giles, after the Fact was committed; and declared that Giles had ſufficient notice of his Tryal; but notwithſtanding he did ſubmit himſelf to the Judgment of the Court.

Thereupon the Court adviſing a minute or two's ſpace, it was ordered, That the Court ſhould be Adjourned until the Wedneſday following; by which time Mr. Giles might ſend to Monmouth, and have what Witneſſes brought up he could get.

And the Day appointed being come, and the Court being ſat, Proclamation was made according to Cuſtom. Then the following Jury were called and Sworn, viz.

Chriſtopher Plucknet,	Jur'	James Partridge,
William Dodd,		Lawrence Wood,
Anthony Nurſe,		John Bradſhaw,
John Burton,		William Withers,
Nathan Goodwin,		Edward Proby,
George Wood,		Richard Bromfield.

Who according to the Form of Law, were charged to enquire, Whether the Priſoner were Guilty of the following Indictment, upon which he had been Arraigned, and had pleaded Not Guilty?

Cl. of Cr. The Jurors of our Lord the King, upon their Oaths, do preſent, That John Giles, late of the Pariſh of St. Dunſtan in the Weſt, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman, not having God before his Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, contriving and maliciouſly, by a moſt wicked Conſpiracy, with divers other Malefactors to the Jurors unknown, forethought and had, intending one John Arnold, Eſq; a faithful Subject to the King, and one of the Juſtices of the Peace for the County of Monmouth, inhumanly to maim, wound, kill and murther, the Fifteenth of April, in the Thirty Second Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. with the ſaid Malefactors unknown, at the Pariſh of St. Dunſtan in the Weſt aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, in and upon him the ſaid John Arnold, then and there being in the Peace of God and the King, unlawfully, voluntarily, and of his malice fore-thought, with Force and Arms, that is to ſay, with Swords, Staves and Knives, of deſign, and by lying in wait, did make an Aſſault; and him the ſaid John Arnold, did then and there beat, wound, maim, and evilly intreat, and the Throat and Face of him the ſaid John Arnold, did grievouſly cut with a certain Knife, alſo divers almoſt mortal Wounds then and there to the ſaid John Arnold, that is to ſay, one Wound of the depth of ſeven inches in his Body, between his Belly and his left Pap, two Wounds upon his Breaſt, and two Wounds in his left Arm, with certain Swords, did then and there give and impoſe, ſo that it was deſpaired of the ſaid John Arnold's Life, and other Enormities then and there unto him did bring, to the great danger of the ſaid John Arnold, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Mr. Gibbs.

Mr. Gibbs. Gentlemen, this is an Indictment againſt John Giles, the Priſoner at the Bar, for aſſaulting and intending to diſpatch and murder John Arnold, one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace, on the 15*th* Day of April. This John Giles and ſeveral others, did intend to kill Mr. Arnold, and ſet upon him in Jackanapes's-Lane; threw him down, and endeavoured to thruſt their Swords into him, but finding no Penetration there, they kneeled upon him, and with a Knife endeavoured to cut his Throat, and in one place made a very large Gaſh, and cut his Face; he endeavouring to keep them from his Throat, they gave him a Wound in his Side Seven Inches deep, between his Belly and left Pap. They gave him ſeveral other Wounds. To this he has pleaded not Guilty.

Mr. Holt. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel for the King, and the Indictment hath repreſented to you the moſt Horrid, Vile and Barbarous Aſſault that has been almoſt ever committed, and that any man has heard of; and which I think ſcarce any thing in Hiſtory can parallel. It was, Gentlemen, in its Nature moſt cruel, by the giving him ſo many Wounds as are ſet forth in the Indictment; having firſt way-laid and ſurprized him near a place, and at ſuch a time, as was convenient for the Execution of their wicked Deſign. This Mr. Arnold having occaſion to go through Bell-yard, between the Hours of Ten and Eleven of the Clock at Night, at the End of Jackanapes's-lane, he was ſuddenly ſeized by two Men, and by them halled into the Lane, where they gave him ſeveral Wounds, and uſed him in a moſt barbarous manner. And this did not ariſe from any private Difference or Animoſity, that they could conceive againſt Mr. Arnold; but from a Cauſe more general, that is, the Proſecution of the horrid Popiſh-Plot; againſt which, Mr. Arnold, as became him, and according to the Duty of his Office, he being a Juſtice of the Peace, was a very zealous Perſon. Gentlemen, in the firſt place we will call Mr. Arnold, who ſhall plainly prove that this Priſoner at the Bar, was one of the Three Aſſaſſines; and he proves it by a miraculous Providence: For juſt before they ſeized upon him, a Woman in Bell-yard held out a Candle, which gave Mr. Arnold an Opportunity to ſee the Priſoner at the Bar, and did perfectly diſcern him. Gentlemen, though this is enough, conſidering the Integrity and Reputation of the Perſon; yet we ſhall fortifie his Evidence by ſtrong and undeniable Circumſtances, Circumſtances that do particularly relate to this matter. In the firſt place, Gentlemen, the very Day that this Fact was done, this Perſon, though he had a good Sword by his ſide, yet he did inquire where he might buy a more convenient Sword, and did deſire to know where he might have a Rapier, which was thought more convenient for this Deſign, and the very next Day after this Fact, though Mr. Arnold's having Armour on was a Secret which no Perſon but Mr. Walcup, a Juſtice of the Peace, and Mr. Arnold himſelf knew; yet this ſame Giles could ſay, Arnold had Armour on; and if Arnold had not had Armour on, his Buſineſs had been done. And after this Fact was committed, this Giles goes into Glouceſterſhire, and being purſued by a guilty Conſcience, he durſt not ſtay there, for he was afraid, as he ſaid himſelf, of being apprehended for aſſaſſinating Mr. Arnold. After this, Gentlemen, he came to one Darcy a Cutler in Monmouthſhire, with his Sword which was broken, and deſired him to mend his Sword. How now, ſays he, how came this Sword to be broken? Have you been fighing with the Devil? No, ſays he, I have been fighting with damn'd Arnold. And at the very ſame time when theſe Villains thought they had effected their bloody Purpoſe, and gave Mr. Arnold his Diſpatch, one of them ſaid to him, Now Villain, if thou haſt any Life in thee, pray for the Soul of Captain Evans; which Evans was a Prieſt executed in Wales, upon Mr. Arnold's Proſecution, at whoſe Execution this Giles was preſent, and dip'd his Handkerchief in his Blood. Now, Gentlemen, conſidering all this, which we will make plain to you by Mr. Arnold, and all theſe Circumſtances; I ſuppoſe you will have ſufficient Evidence to find him guilty.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Indictment has been opened, and the Matter of it, that baſe Attempt made upon Mr. Arnold, that was a Juſtice of the Peace in Monmouthſhire, that is ſhewed in the Indictment. But I muſt crave your Lordſhip's leave, that I may more particularly open this Caſe. This is a Caſe, Gentlemen, of very great Conſequence, and though it more immediately concerns Mr. Arnold, yet it highly concerns every man preſent; you of the Jury, and I; nay, every other Freeman of England, which ought to be protected by the Laws, muſt needs be concerned at ſo great a Violation of them, and cannot but ſet our Faces againſt ſuch villainous and barbarous Attempts as theſe, wherein there did not want the good Will of the Actors to make it a moſt barbarous and bloody Murder. In the Courſe of our Evidence, and the Method we will take to proceed in, it will be neceſſary to do theſe three things. Firſt of all, we ſhall acquaint you with that which we apprehend to be the Reaſon and Occaſion of this horrid Fact. Next we ſhall tell you what that Fact was. And in the laſt place, enquire how far this Defendant is guilty thereof.

For the Firſt, give me leave to acquaint you with what we apprehend to be the true Reaſon of this Aſſaſſination, 'tis notorious to moſt men, but eſpecially to the County of Monmouth, where Mr. Arnold was a Juſtice of Peace; how active and diligent, how faithful and vigorous a man he has been in the Diſcharge of his Duty to his King and Countrey, in putting the Laws in execution againſt the Papiſts, and endeavouring to ſuppreſs Popery: This was the Ground of their Malice, as you will find by the Evidence, and by the ſeveral Threats that he had before this Act was done. But more particularly there was this Occaſion, there was one whom they call'd Captain Evans, but indeed was Father Evans a Popiſh Prieſt; this man in Monmouth was taken by Mr. Arnold, and was proſecuted according to Law and convicted. I mention this Circumſtance, becauſe our Evidence will refer to it, and that you will ſee out of the Actors own mouths, if we may believe the Actors in this bloody Tragedy when they did the Fact: This Proſecution of Father, Captain Evans, was no ſmall Occaſion of their Villany which they acted upon Mr. Arnold. Theſe were the Grounds of their Malice, Gentlemen, and what happened to Mr. Arnold was the Effect. And I do the rather mention this particular, that you may know what ſort of People theſe were that practiſed this Villany upon Mr. Arnold, for it will be a neceſſary Circumſtance in our Proof againſt this Priſoner at the Bar, to ſhew that he is one of that bloody Tribe.

Gentlemen, the next thing is to ſhew what this Fact was, and how it happened. Mr. Arnold had a Controverſie with one Mr. Herbert, another Juſtice of the Peace in Monmouthſhire; that Cauſe between them was to be heard before the King and Council the next day after this Fact was committed: I mention Mr. Herbert, but I hope he is more a Gentleman than to be concern'd in ſuch a Villany. We will not at this give any Evidence that relates to him: For truly I believe this could only be the Contrivance of a Jeſuit and the Practice of bigotted Papiſts. But thus it happen'd. Mr. Arnold going to attend his Counſel upon this Occaſion, to prepare himſelf for this Hearing that was to be before the King and Council; in Bell-yard there he is Set upon, there he is Wounded, there he is Murder'd, as theſe Aſſaſſines thought. And this Mr. Arnold will prove to you when he comes to give his Evidence. This to the Fact.

Gentlemen, the next is, now to conſider how far this man at the Bar is guilty of it; and for that, Gentlemen, we will give you Evidence of ſeveral ſorts:

1. The poſitive Proof of Mr. Arnold himſelf, who, as Mr. Holt has obſerv'd before, almoſt by a Miracle, diſcover'd the Defendant's Face; for a Light accidentally coming out of one of the neighbouring Houſes, and the Defendant looking at Mr. Arnold, to ſee whether he was the Man they wanted, immediately upon that he was aſſaulted and carried into Jackanapes's-lane, and was wounded in ſeveral places. This Gentlemen, is plain, and will be poſitively prov'd; and then when this man was taken upon Suſpicion, and was carried before a Juſtice of Peace, and Mr. Arnold was ſent for, though Mr. Arnold had no private Intimation, no kind of Knowledge before-hand of Giles's being taken, and there were ſeveral men ſtood beſides this man, yet though he had never ſeen him before, but at the time when the Fact was done, Mr. Arnold immediately charged him with the Fact, and as ſoon as he heard him ſpeak he knew his Voice. This was ſo plain upon Giles, that he had not the Power, though he might have had the Confidence, at that time to deny it: But inſtead of a Denial, ſaid, The matter could but amount to an Aſſault and Battery. In the next place we have Evidence from the Defendant's own Mouth, which in a Caſe of this Nature ought to weigh as much as can be, and I think is as much as the Nature of the thing is capable of. This man the very next day after Mr. Arnold had been thus aſſaulted, diſcourſing with one Philips by Name, and relating the Buſineſs which happened to Mr. Arnold, and before he could know he had Armour on, as we will prove from the Circumſtance of the Time (what does Giles ſay?) Says he, Damn him, Rot him, Mr. Arnold, ſaid he, had Armour on: And, this, Gentlemen, could not be known by him at that time, if he had not been a Party in this baſe Attempt. And there is a Circumſtance that goes yet beyond this, which I would have you obſerve, that when Mr. Arnold was aſſaſſinated, when they made their Attempt, in the very Act were theſe words uſed, Damn him, Rot him, he has Armour on. Theſe very words were ſpoken then, and upon that they fell to cut his Throat. We have this Circumſtance more; he had broken his Sword, and went to a Cutler, one Darcy by Name; this man was a Papiſt, and ſays he, Where haſt thou been Giles, fighting with the Devil? No, it was with damn'd Arnold. This we will prove to you: Theſe are Evidences that are poſitive.

Some other Witneſſes we have, that will be very material to prove to you what ſort of man the Defendant is. That he has declared there is no Plot; that thoſe that believe it, are Rogues; and if ever any of the Lords in the Tower ſhould Suffer, this Nation ſhould feel a bloodier War than ever it had done; by which you may ſee his bloody Nature. Gentlemen, beſides this we ſhall prove (according to their Cuſtom of Shaming) that he has from time to time pretended as if Mr. Arnold had done this Buſineſs himſelf, or ſome of his Friends, to revive the Plot. A very fine Contrivance indeed! for a Perſon to ſtab himſelf and cut his own Throat, to revive the Plot. Theſe things we will make out clearly to you: And I muſt tell you it is a notorious Crime, ſuch a Fact as has no Precedent: There's no Remembrance in Hiſtory, that I know of, of ſuch barbarous Attempts, except in the Caſe of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, who was moſt barbarouſly murder'd by this ſort of Men. And this Caſe, Gentlemen, differs from that only in this, that there they accompliſh'd their Villany upon him: But the Providence of God ſaved Mr. Arnold's Life, and I hope to as good purpoſe: For as Providence ordered that to confirm the Truth of the Popiſh Plot; ſo this Aſſaſſination of Mr. Arnold muſt convince all mankind (not concern'd in the Plot it ſelf) that this damn'd Popiſh Plot ſtill continues, and that 'tis high time for all honeſt men, as much as in them lies, to endeavour to ſuppreſs it. You, Gentlemen, will do your Duty in finding this man Guilty (if the Evidence we give ſatisfies your Conſciences that he is ſo, elſe God forbid) and then I doubt not but the Court will do their Duty, in putting ſuch an examplary Puniſhment upon this Villain, that may deter the like barbarous and bloody Attempts for the future.

Mr. Arnold Sworn.

Mr. Thompſon. Pray Mr. Arnold give an Account of this Buſineſs.

Mr. Arnold. My Lord, I was ordered by the King and Council to attend upon them the next Day after this Villany befel me. I was upon the 15*th* Day of April in my Chamber in the Afternoon, and my L. Chandois, and ſeveral other Perſons came to my Chamber, and one Evans, one of the Meſſengers belonging to the Council, came to give me Notice that my Hearing (which I was inform'd was to be at Four in the Afternoon) was ordered to be at Ten in the Morning, which was the Reaſon I ſent my Servants out to give Notice of this Alteration to my Witneſſes and Counſel. And though I had reſolv'd not to ſtir out that Night, I went out with the Company to the Devil Tavern, where we were, and ſtaid till about Ten, or paſt; and juſt as we were breaking up, I recollected that that I had ſome Buſineſs with Mr. Phillips, who is a Counſellor at Law, and lives near the end of Bell Yard. I deſired the Company to ſtay and I would come to them in a moment. I went to the Room where ſeveral Servants were, and called to ſome of them to go with me; for ſeveral of my Friends and Neighbours being in Town, I very often took their Servants with me, when mine were buſie or out of the way. As I went croſs Fleetſtreet, I did ſee two men in Campaign Cloaks follow me, and I thought them to be Servants belonging to ſome of my Company, who had followed me on my calling; and as I came into Bell Yard, one of them went faſter than I went, and got before me, and turned and looked earneſtly in my Face, and I went by him, when a Woman ſtanding in a Door about the middle of Bell Yard with a Candle in her Hand, I looked in his Face, and that Perſon was the Priſoner at the Bar; and when his Companion or Companions came up to him, I heard them laugh aloud; I took no notice but went on, and went as far as to that Houſe.

Sir George Jeffries. Mr. Recorder. You knew him before, Mr. Arnold?

Mr. Arnold. I did not know him ſo well before as to know his Face. At the Kennel at the end of Jackanapes-lane, I looking down to find the Kennel, a Cloak was thrown over my Head, then I found very rough Hands upon my Shoulders, and they ran me into Jackanapes-lane, juſt croſs the Lane againſt the oppoſite Wall, and they run my Head ſo hard I think they broke it; I drew my Sword before, but before I could uſe it I was ſtruck, and immediately upon that one of them ſtruck me; then I apprehended what it was, but could not turn to make any Defence. I received a ſecond Blow and fell, and the firſt thing I was ſenſible of was a very ſharp quick thruſt in my ſide, and the point at that thruſt ran into my Belly; then I recovering began to make what defence I could. With a broad Sword I was run thro' my Arms, and with a ſmall Weapon I was run thro' in another place of my Arm. I had ſeveral other Wounds; one of them ſet his Foot hard upon my Breaſt, and kept me down, and he was, as I conceive, run into the Leg by one of his Companions; for I heard him ſay, Damme, Thou haſt ſpoiled my Leg. They laughed all the while and were exceeding merry. I had then on a pair of Bodice of Whalebone, notwithſtanding which I had four or five Wounds in my Body thro' them, for they were not Proof, but they imagin'd they were, finding their Swords double ſometimes, and then ſaid one of them, Damme, he has Armour on, Cut his Throat. Immediately one kneeled down, and gave me ſeveral Cuts in the lower part of the Face, and I did what I could to defend my ſelf, but they have given me ſome indelible marks, Characters that will never be obliterated while I live, and I am afraid I ſhall never be my ſelf again, by reaſon of the Bruiſes in my Head and Breaſt. By a Candle in a Window, I conceive in Sir Timothy Baldwin's Houſe, and ſome Women in his Yard, gave them the firſt diſturbance, and a Boy coming by with a Link the ſame time, I both ſaw the Face of the Priſoner at the Bar again, and remember'd I ſaw him in the Lane juſt before. They then pulled the Cloak from off me, aod I ſeeing the Light, and being eaſed of the weight, I ſtrained all my ſtrength and cried out, and then ſome Company came in, who are here to prove it; but ſeeing me all Blood and Dirt, they ſtood gazing on me a time, but at laſt took me up and carried me into the Sugar-Loaf, and from thence I was carried to my Lodging, where all the Company I left came to me, and a Surgeon was ſent for, who is alſo here to prove his knowledge of the Condition he found me in. And when they went away, they did not ſteal away as other Malefactors uſe to do, but clapt their Swords cloſe to their Bodies and went away laughing aloud; but as they were going, one of them ſaid theſe Words, Now you Dog pray for, or pray again for the Soul of Captain Evans. Captain Evans was a Jeſuit, and was Executed at Cardiffe for being a Prieſt; and I have been informed by ſeveral Perſons of good Quality, that when the Under-Sheriff came to give him Notice, that he had a Warrant for his ſpeedy Execution, the ſaid Evans being in a Game at Tennis, ſaid, God damme, I will play out my Set firſt.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Arnold, I would know one thing: Will you undertake to Swear poſitively, that this Perſon was one of the Perſons who ſtept before you? Will you take it upon your Oath, That that Perſon, the Priſoner at the Bar, went before you?

Mr. Arnold. I will take it upon my Oath, as far as a man can do, for one man, 'tis poſſible, may be like another both by his Voice and his Face; I can Swear I believe he is the man.

Mr. Thompſon. You are ſatisfied upon the firſt ſight that you had of him in the Countrey, that he was the man.

Mr. Arnold. Yes, Sir; and he can tell you that by a very good Token, for I had like to have run him thro'.

Mr. Recorder. We muſt not expect that there can be exact and poſitive Proof; for men that commit Offences of this impudent Nature, don't uſually call Witneſſes to be preſent to ſee them done; therefore we would come as near as we can to Circumſtances, whereby a Fact of ſuch a Nature is to be proved. Mr. Arnold, Do you believe that the Priſoner at the Bar was one of the Perſons that went before you in Bell Yard?

Mr. Arnold. Upon my Conſcience I do believe he was the man.

Mr. Recorder. What a Clock was it?

Mr. Arnold. About Eleven a Clock, or between Ten and Eleven.

Mr. Recorder. When the Link came there, was there Three? And do you believe by the light you had by the Link, that that was one of the Perſons that was there?

Mr. Arnold. I ſaw his Face and Habit, and believe he was.

Mr. Recorder. What Habit had he on?

Mr. Arnold. He had a grey Cloak, a Campaign Cloak and a Coat, I think lin'd with Red. It is impoſſible to give an Account of every particular under thoſe Circumſtances I was in.

Mr. Recorder. It is not to be expected that a man under your Circumſtances ſhould be extraordinary preciſe in Circumſtances; therefore it is I asked you, that according to the beſt of your Apprehenſion, you might acquaint the Court with thoſe Circumſtances that may be remembred by the Jury, that they may ſee there be no injury done to the Priſoner at the Bar, but that Right be done on both ſides, and that in every Circumſtance.

Mr. Holt. Now, Sir, we will call Mr. Phillips, with whom he had this Diſcourſe the next Day.

Mr. Recorder. Will the Priſoner ask him any Queſtions?

Priſoner. Truly Mr. Arnold knew me in Monmouthſhire, and knew me as well as any man in the City.

Mr. Recorder. Did you not very well know him?

Mr. Arnold. It is very poſſible I might ſee him and often at Aſſizes and Seſſions; but not to know him, nor did ever know whether his Name were Giles, or what it was. Your Lordſhip ſees many Perſons here, and often, and its poſſible do not know them; he lives I think a dozen miles from me.

Priſ. That's a wonder; if it pleaſe you, Sir, my Wife is a near Relation to you, both by Father and Mother, and I have ſpoken with you in your Chamber.

Mr. Arnold. 'Tis poſſible ſhe may, but I do not know it.

Stephen Phillips.

Mr. Holt. Pray Mr. Phillips give an Account of what Diſcourſe you had with Giles the day after the Buſineſs was done.

Mr. Phillips. We went to the Tavern, and drank two or three Bottles of Wine, and we had ſome Diſcourſe concerning Mr. Arnold; it was about Eight or Nine a Clock in the Evening the next Day, ſome Diſcourſe happened concerning his miſerable Condition, and how he was hurt, and of that nature.

Mr. Recorder. How many was there in Company?

Mr. Phillips. One or two more.

Mr. Recorder. What Houſe?

Mr. Phillips. At the Crown Tavern in Newſtreet in Covent Garden; and among the reſt, Mr. Giles was talking of it, and ſaid he, God damn him, God rot him, he had Armour on; the Word was, God damn him, or, God rot him, he had Armour on, they ſay.

Mr. Holt. What time of Night was that?

Mr. Phillips. As near as I can remember, it was about Eight or Nine the next day in the Evening.

Mr. Thompſon. The very Words that Mr. Arnold Swears when they went to cut his Throat.

Priſ. My Lord, if you pleaſe, there was Mr. Phillips and another; and I ſpake nothing but what I heard as News, that they had killed him if he had not on Armour.

Mr. Recorder. For that matter, Mr. Giles, you ſhall have your time, and you may call up other Witneſſes, but the Gentleman poſitively Swears you ſaid theſe Words; and if ſo, I'll aſſure you it does not look as if you were a-kin to him, or your Wife either.

Walter Watkins.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Watkins, What did you hear that Giles ſhould ſay in Glouceſterſhire about this Buſineſs?

Mr. Thompſon. What ſaid he about this Buſineſs of Mr. Arnold?

Mr. Watkins. My Lord, all I can ſay is this: I being at the ſtating ſome Accounts between Mr. John Giles and Mr. Richmond; I asked Mr. Giles for ſome Horſehair to make a Fiſhing-line: Mr. Giles replied, That he had left very good Hair for me at a Farrier's in Glouceſter; for he and Mr. Herbert Jones made ſuch haſte through the Town of Glouceſter, that they did not call for the Horſehair. I asked Mr. Giles what was the occaſion of his haſte? Said he, For fear we ſhould be ſtopt in our Journey, as ſuſpected to be concerned in Mr. Arnold's Buſineſs.

Mr. Recorder. What time was that?

Mr. Watkins. About the 5*th* of May.

George Richmond.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Richmond, What can you ſay concerning this thing?

Mr. Richmond. I deſired Mr. Giles to meet me, that we might even our Accounts; and upon the 5*th* of May laſt he met me, and I deſired Mr. Watkins to be preſent as a Witneſs.

Mr. Recorder. Where was it?

Mr. Richmond. At Uske. And as we were making up the Account, ſaid Mr. Watkins to Mr. Giles, Where is the Horſehair you promiſed me to make Fiſhing lines? Giles replied, He left very good Horſehair at a Farrier's in Glouceſter: And he asked him, Why he left it? He ſaid, He made haſte for fear of being taken and ſtop'd for Mr. Arnold's Buſineſs. I cannot ſay whether he called him Eſq; Arnold, or Mr. Arnold, or what; he ſeldom uſed to give him ſo good words.

Walter Powel.

Mr. Holt. What do you know concerning Giles his being at the Cutler's?

Mr. Powel. If it pleaſe you, Sir, I was at the Cutler's.

Mr. Recorder. Name the Time when, and the Place where.

Powel. The 5*th* of May, at a Place call'd Uske in Monmouthſhire, Mr. Giles and I we came there; and Mr. Giles asked Peter Darcy, Whether he would mend him that Sword or no? But Mr. Darcy had ſome Buſineſs that he could not get time to mend it that morning, but would do it in the afternoon. Says Darcy, Where have you been, you have been hot at it? What have you been fighting with the Devil? No, ſaid he, with damned Arnold.

Mr. Recorder. What did you ſay when the Cutler asked him, Whether he had been fighting with the Devil? And he ſaid again, No, not with the Devil, but with damn'd Arnold.

Powel. Peter Darcy ſaid he muſt not ſpeak ſuch words; and Giles's Wife pluck'd him by the Coat, and bid him hold his Tongue.

Mr. Darnal. Who was by?

Powel. There was one Peter Darcy.

Mr. Darnal. Was one John Jones there?

Powel. I think there was another indeed by the Apprentice.

Mr. Recorder. There was the Apprentice, but he does not know his Name, and Darcy, and Giles and his Wife.

William Richmond.

Mr. Holt. What did you hear Giles ſay about the Rapier?

W. Rich-

W. Richmond. He asked me in the Afternoon before Mr. Arnold was hurt, Where he might buy a very good Rapier? I told him I could not tell. He then had a good Back-Sword in the Houſe.

Mr. Gibbs. Tell the Court what Acquaintance Giles had with Father Lewis the Jeſuit, ſince executed.

W. Richmond. My Lord, He told me he would go to the Executioner, and perſuade him not to execute Mr. Lewis, but I had the Executioner lock'd up, and I would not ſuffer him; but I did ſee him very active at the Execution dipping Cloths in Lewis's Blood.

Mr. Thompſon. What do you ſay as to his coming to his Lodging?

W. Richmond. We went to ſeveral places that day, and at Eight or Nine, or between Eight and Nine, we came to the Kings Arms in St. Martins-lane, and I left him at the Kitchin Fire, and went up into the Chamber, and drank a conſiderable quantity of Drink; and as near as I can gueſs, it was between Twelve and One a Clock before he came to his Bed; for after I was going to Bed, about one of the Clock I heard John Giles come up the Stairs, and bid me good Night; he called at my Door juſt as I was pulling off my Breeches to go into Bed.

Mr. Recorder. What time was this?

W. Richmond. As near as I can gueſs it was between Twelve and One, or very near One.

Mr. Recorder. At what Houſe was it?

W. Richmond. The Kings Arms in St. Martins-lane.

Mr. Recorder. What did you ſay when the maid was making the Bed?

W. Richmond. I asked her who it was for? And ſhe ſaid, for a man that was not willing to lie with any body.

Mr. Recorder. What time did you come to the Houſe?

W. Richmond. About Nine.

Mr. Recorder. Did you ſtay in that Houſe till that time?

W. Richmond. I lay in the Houſe, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. You were not out of the Houſe all the while?

W. Richmond. No, Sir, I was not out of it.

Mr. Recorder. And you are ſure that you did not ſee him again till he came to your Door going to Bed?

W. Richmond. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. What time was that?

W. Richmond. Nigh One.

Mr. Thompſon. You ſee the Contradiction between this, and what this Fellow ſays upon his Examination; where he ſays he was a-bed at Nine a Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Where did you go at that time?

W. Richmond. We went to Long-lane, to one Philpot's, and ſhe told us her Husband was gone to Exerciſe at the next Church; I do not know the Church's Name, and there we went and looked upon the Soldiers, but did not ſee him: we came back to his Houſe again, and the Gentlewoman gave us a Tankard of Beer or Ale. And after that we went back, and we had a mind to make ſport with a Countrey Fellow we had with us, and went into Whetſtone's Park, from thence we went to the Helmet in Drury-lane.

Mr. Recorder. You went to Whetſtone's Park, and what did you ſpend there?

W. Richmond. Sixpence, and he paid it.

Mr. Recorder. Whither did you go from thence?

W. Richmond. Into Drury-lane.

Mr. Recorder. How long did you ſtay in Drury-lane?

W. Richmond. It was not long, Sir, about an Hour.

Mr. Recorder. Where after that?

W. Richmond. From thence to the Peacock, and ſtaid till Eight or Nine.

Mr. Recorder. Who did you meet withal between your going from the Helmet in Drury-lane to the Peacock?

W. Richmond. We met with one Powel, and another, and one Elizabeth Edwards.

Mr. Recorder. What did you drink there?

W. Richmond. We did drink both Ale and Brandy.

Mr. Recorder. Well ſaid: How long did you ſtay there?

W. Richmond. We ſtaid there a pretty while, an Hour or more, or two Hours.

Mr. Recorder. What time of Night was it that you went from thence?

W. Richmond. About Eight or Nine.

Mr. Recorder. And then you went to your Lodgings?

W. Richmond. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. Did you drink at the Kings Arms?

W. Richmond. No, we drank not all together.

Mr. Recorder. And there you ſtaid till Twelve or One a Clock?

W. Richmond. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. But can you remember, as near as you can gueſs, what time was it you ſaw this maid making of the Bed?

W. Richmond. I cannot ſay poſitively, but I judge it was about Twelve a Clock.

Mr. Thompſon. As to that Circumſtance of his coming home at Twelve at Night, deſire Mr. Arnold to give an Account of his Examination, what time of Night he came to his Lodging.

Mr. Holt. Do you believe that is John Giles's Hand?

Mr. Recorder. That is a Copy.

Mr. Arnold. He did confeſs before a Juſtice of the Peace, that he was at his Lodging at Ten a Clock: This I heard him ſay, and I believe he won't deny it; and I heard him own this Examination, my man will prove it.

Giles. Deny it? Yes I will deny it, there was no ſuch word ſaid: I did ſay, Mr. Arnold, I went to Bed then.

Mr. At. Gen. The Jury muſt take notice of this; That upon his Examination he ſays, he came home by Nine; which is before the thing was done: But by Proof he did not come in till Twelve, which was after the thing was done. Sir Creſwel Levins.

Mr. Holt. We will give you now, Gentlemen, an Account of this man's Principles.

Mr. Recorder. This is the Buſineſs: Richmond ſays, They came together to their Lodging before Night, but he left him at the Kitchin Fire, and went into another Room to drink with ſome Company; and this Mr. Richmond ſays, his Bed was not made till Twelve a Clock, and that he himſelf went to Bed about One of the Clock, and that he heard the Priſoner at the Bar, while he was pulling off his Breeches, call to him, and therefore he took notice of that as a Circumſtance, that he does particularly remember he did not go to Bed till that time; and he ſays he did not ſtir from that place after Nine a Clock.

Mr. Thompſon. There is a Contradiction in that.

Mr. Recorder. There is no Contradiction: The other Witneſs ſays that he came along with him at Nine a Clock.

Mr. Thompſon. I will tell you where this is a Contradiction.

Mr. At. Gen. He ſays he came to the Houſe at Nine a Clock, but he came not to Bed till after One.

Mr. Recorder. The Evidence does not go ſo far: Richmond ſays they came to the King's-Arms, and left him in the Kitchin at Nine a Clock, and he went into his Chamber and ſtaid up till One, and all that time he did not come to Bed.

Mr. Thompſon. So far it lies upon him to give an Account where he was between Nine and Twelve.

Bridges.

Mr. Holt. Heark you, Sir, have you had any Diſcourſe with Giles concerning the Plot, and concerning the Lords in the Tower? And what did he ſay to you?

Mr. Bridges. I had ſome Diſcourſe with him concerning the Papiſts, he ſaid that it was the beſt Religion, and that thoſe that were not of that Religion ſhould be damn'd: I alledg'd againſt him, and told him the contrary: I thought not. Can it be ſuch a Religion, ſaid I, that will act ſuch things againſt the King and the Government? Says he, If any ſays there is ſuch a Plot againſt the King or the Government, he is a Rogue and a Thief.

Mr. Holt. What did he ſay of the Lords in the Tower?

Bridges. Nothing more.

Giles. How long ago was this?

Mr. Recorder. When was this?

Bridges. This was, my Lord, about a Twelve-month ago.

Mr. Thompſon. Did he ſpeak any thing to you further concerning the Plot?

Bridges. Not further.

Giles. My Lord, I beſeech you I may ſpeak to this man. Do you hear, Sir, Were not theſe the Words that I ſaid when you charged me to be a Papiſt, That I knew of no Popiſh Plot, and they that ſaid I was a Papiſt, or knew any thing of the Plot, were Rogues or Whores, or worſe.

Bridges. You ſaid thus, That the Papiſts were the beſt Religion, and that thoſe that were not of that Religion were damn'd.

Giles. Have not you been a Papiſt, Sir?

Bridges. I am not now.

Giles. Will you ſay that I am a Papiſt?

Bridges. I ſay you defended it ſo much I thought you were. Said I, I wonder it being ſuch a good Religion, that they would offer to act ſuch a thing againſt the King and Government. Said he, He that ſays this Plot is acted by the Papiſts, is a Rogue and a Thief.

Giles. How long ago is this?

Bridges. A Twelve-month ago; you remember it well enough; you remember when you ſent for me to the George.

Walter Moor.

Mr. Holt. What Diſcourſe have you had with him concerning the Plot?

Mr. Thompſon. What has he ſaid about it?

Moor. He ſaid, If the Lords in the Tower were Executed, there would be a greater War than ever was in England; and ſwore that if theſe Lords were put to death, it would coſt more Blood than ever was ſpilt. And I asked him again, Why they ſhould not be put to death if they ſhould deſerve it? For if a poor man had done ſuch a Fault, he would be hanged out of the way preſently. He ſaid again, They did not deſerve it, for there was no Plot at all.

Giles. Pray, Sir, Who was with you when you ſay I ſaid theſe Words?

Moor. I was at George Taylor's Houſe.

Giles. Did not you ſay that George Taylor diſcourſed this with you?

Mr. Thompſon. Is this the man that ſpake it, upon your Oath?

Moor. Yes, this was the man.

Giles. What did Taylor ſay to you? Do you think my Lord, I would ſay ſuch a thing to ſuch a man as this is?

Mr. Recorder. Do you hear Mr. Giles, for that matter is not the Queſtion, the man has ſworn it, except the Jury know of their own Knowledge that the man is perjured, he is not ſo as to me.

Moor. It is the firſt time that I ever took an Oath.

Mr. Reynold.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Reynold, What have you heard Giles ſay concerning Mr. Arnold?

Reynold. Sir, I was in Company with John Giles and another, and we had Diſcourſe concerning one Arnold, and John Giles ſaid——

Mr. Recorder. What was that?

Reynold. I being in Company with him, we fell in Diſcourſe about Juſtice Arnold, how he was wounded.

Mr. Recorder. Where was it?

Reynold. In Monmouthſhire, at Langoone, the ſecond Day of May: John Giles anſwered us, That he could not ſee but he wounded himſelf.

Mr. Recorder. What Day did you ſay?

Reynold. The Second Day of May.

Mr. Recorder. He did diſcourſe the 5*th* Day of May at Uske, I would fain know when he came through Glouceſter.

Mr. Thompſon. What did he ſay about Mr. Arnold?

Reynold. He thought that he wounded himſelf, ſays his Wife, How could he wound himſelf in his Arms? Said he, It was himſelf or ſome of his Friends.

Mr. Recorder. Or ſome of his Relations.

Reynold. Some of his Friends.

Mr. Hobbs.

Mr. Thompſon. Mr. Hobbs, Pray tell how you found Mr. Arnold when he was wounded.

Mr. Hobbs. I found Mr. Arnold bleeding.

Mr. Thompſon. Tell what Wounds there were.

Mr. Hobbs. Two in his Arm, Two others upon the Face, another upon the Throat, which bled very much; another two upon the Breaſt, and one in the Belly.

Mr. Thompſon. What Depth might that be?

Mr. Hobbs. Two Inches and an half long.

Mr. Thompſon. Where elſe?

Mr. Hobbs. There was another upon his Breaſt.

Mr. Thompſon. What Depth?

Mr. Hobbs. They were not very deep, but there was one upon the Belly Six Inches and an half; there was Two through his Arm, and a Wound and ſeveral Bruiſes in his Head.

Mr.

Mr. Thompſon. This is likely to be a fine Contrivance, that he ſhould do it himſelf, as likely as that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey put his own Sword through his Body after his Neck was broke. A great Shout given.

Lord Mayor. Do you believe a man could wound himſelf ſo?

Mr. Hobbs. No, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. I believe a man could do it, but I believe a man would not do it himſelf.

Fifteen or Sixteen Witneſſes more for the King, that were attending in the Court were not examin'd, the Court being in ſome Haſte, and the King's Counſel not preſſing to have them examin'd, there being ſo full Evidence: Nor was there one word replied to the Priſoner's Witneſſes, they being all either frivolous or contradictory.

Mr. Darnal. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for Giles the Priſoner at the Bar, and I muſt needs ſay there has been a ſtrong Evidence given againſt him, and if I were ſure he was concern'd in this barbarous Attempt upon Mr. Arnold, I would not open my mouth in this Cauſe: But if my Brief be true, I make no queſtion but to ſatisfie your Lordſhip and the Jury, nay and Mr. Arnold himſelf, that he had no hand in this bloody Action.

And Firſt, my Lord, in Anſwer to the Evidence that hath been given, there have been ſworn among others, Mr. Richmond, Mr. Phillips, and one Powel. Firſt, as to Phillips's Evidence of what paſſed in diſcourſe at the Crown Tavern in Covent Garden; we have a Witneſs here who was preſent at the ſame time, that will give you an Account of the whole Diſcourſe, and that there were no ſuch Words ſaid by Giles in relation to Mr. Arnold, As damn him, he had Armour on; and as to the Evidence given by Watkins, of what paſs'd at Uske, about Mr. Herbert Jones's and the Priſoner's making ſuch Speed through Glouceſter, we have Witneſſes here my Lord, that will ſatisfie your Lordſhip and the Jury, that when they came to Glouceſter, though it was at the time of the General Quarter-Seſſions, yet they ſtaid there four or five Hours, at a Publick-Houſe without the leaſt Sign of their Apprehenſion of any Purſuit; which ſhews the Improbability of any ſuch Diſcourſe at Uske: And my Lord, as to the Evidence of Powel of what was ſaid in Darcies the Cutler's Shop at Uske; we have, my Lord, a Witneſs here that was preſent at that time, who will give your Lordſhip and the Jury an Account, that the words ſaid then by the Priſoner, did much differ from what Mr. Powel ſwears; beſides the Improbability that any man ſhould be ſo weak to publiſh himſelf guilty of ſuch a Crime as this in this manner; after his Majeſty's Proclamation out, with the Promiſe of ſo great a Reward to any man that would make a Diſcovery of this horrid Action: So far, my Lord, we ſhall anſwer the Evidence that hath been given, but to ſatisfie your Lordſhip and the Jury, that it was impoſſible the Priſoner at the Bar could be concern'd in this foul Action, we ſhall prove to your Lordſhip, That upon the 15*th* of April, upon the Evening of which Day this bloody Attempt was made upon Mr. Arnold, the Priſoner at the Bar came firſt to Town; and we ſhall prove that he came to Town but at One a Clock that Day. We ſhall prove further, if my Brief be true, by Five or Six ſubſtantial Witneſſes, againſt whom there can be no Exception, how and where he imploy'd himſelf all that Day, from the Minute that he came to Town: And that when he return'd to his Inn, about Nine a Clock at Night, the Maid of the Inn lock'd his Chamber Door after he was a-Bed, and kept the Key of the Chamber all Night. And, my Lord, if all this be clearly prov'd, I make no doubt but your Lordſhip and the Jury and all Perſons here, will be ſatisfied that the Priſoner at the Bar is not guilty of this Indictment. My Lord we will firſt begin with Mr. Philpot.

Mr. Philpot.

Mr. Darnal. Mr. Philpot, Pray do you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what Diſcourſe paſt between you and Giles at the Crown Tavern in Covent-Garden.

Mr. Philpot. We drank one Bottle of Clarret, Mr. Phillips came in when the Bottle was almoſt ended. But by and by ſome Friends came in, and they aked him what News, Sir? Said he, I hear of no News but a cruel Aſſaſſination upon Mr. Arnold, but for my part I am ſorry for it: But ſaid he, if any thing ſhould be upon Mr. Arnold, it is a very ſtrange thing.

Mr. Darnal. Were you there all the time, Sir?

Mr. Philpot. Yes, Sir, all the time.

Mr. Darnal. And you heard no other Diſcourſe?

Mr. Philpot. No, he did not ſay damn him, nor ſink him, for I hate ſuch Company.

Mr. Holt. Mr. John Philpot, Where do you live?

Mr. Philpot. In Long-lane.

Mr. Holt. What Sign do you live at?

Mr. Philpot. At the Crown.

Mr. Holt. What Trade are you?

Mr. Philpot. A Saleſman.

Mr. Darnal. Now we will go on to the Diſcourſe at Uske, about their paſſing with ſuch ſpeed through Glouceſter.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Darnal, they do not pretend you were in great Fear, but they ſay you ſaid ſo. It is not the Queſtion, Whether you did ſtay long at Glouceſter or no? But the Queſtion is, Whether you told this man ſo? Becauſe the man asked you, Why you would leave the Hair at the Farrier's in order to a Fiſhing-line? Truly I was in great Haſte, for fear I ſhould be taken up about the Buſineſs of Mr. Arnold.

Mr. Darnal. It is very true, and therefore we bring this Evidence to ſhew the Improbability that we ſhould ſay any ſuch thing, when it was falſe, and eſpecially when it was to accuſe our ſelves of a Crime.

Herbert Jones Mayor of Monmouth.

Mr. Darnal. Mr. Jones, Pray give an Account to the Jury of your paſſing through Glouceſter, and how long you ſtaid there.

Mr. Jones. My Lord, I came with the Priſoner.

Mr. Recorder. What Day did you come thro' Glouceſter?

Mr. Jones. I cannot poſitively tell you the Day: We went out of Town upon Friday, we came to Glouceſter either Wedneſday or Friday, and there we went to the Old Bear in Glouceſter, and there ſtaid an hour before we went to Dinner; it it was a publick time, the Quarterly Seſſions, and ſeveral People came to us to hear the News; we told them, and were as ſorry for it as any Perſons could be, and did confeſs it a very ill thing. We went from the Old Bear after we had dined to the New Bear, and drank ſeveral pints of Syder. I believe, by the Oath I have taken, we were ſeveral hours in the Town.

Mr. Milburn. Do you know Mr. Arnold is acquainted with Mr. Giles?

Mr. Jones. I do believe Mr. Arnold has great reaſon to be acquainted with Giles.

Mr. Thompſon. Yes now he has.

Mr. Milburn. Was he chief Conſtable?

Mr. Jones. Yes, he was; and certainly Mr. Arnold in reaſon would take notice of the chief Conſtable.

Mr. Milbourn. Mr. Herbert Jones, I am informed that you know this Gentleman goes to Church and receives the Sacrament. Give an Account what Religion he is of.

Mr. Jones. Always a Proteſtant; I ſaw him at Church within this half year.

Giles. I can ſhew a Certificate of my going to Church ſince I came to Town.

Mr. Recorder. There are many People that can go to Church to ſerve their turn.

Giles. And, my Lord, I have taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy.

Mr. Thompſon. An excellent Proteſtant to diſcourſe ſo of the Plot, I muſt needs ſay that.

John Jones, the Cutler's Apprentice.

Mr. Recorder. How old are you?

Jones. Between 15 and 16.

Mr. Recorder. Hark you, Do you know the danger of forſwearing your ſelf?

Jones. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. What is it?

Jones. I am in danger of Everlaſting Fire.

Mr. Recorder. Very well.

Mr. Darnal. My Lord, this is the Apprentice to the Cutler, in whoſe Shop Powel ſays we had ſuch Diſcourſe: Jones, pray tell my Lord and the Jury, Whether you were by when one Walter Powel came into your maſter's Shop, when he and Giles were talking about Giles's Sword?

Jones. Sir, John Giles came in the morning and brought a Sword, my maſter was not within, and he told me, Give this Sword to your maſter to be mended; ſo I took the Sword and laid it up till my maſter came in: When he came in, I told my maſter of it; and when he came again this Walter Powel was in the Shop: Said Giles to my maſter, Did you mend my Sword? Says he: Says my maſter, Mr. Giles, How came your Sword broke? Have you been fighting with the Devil? No, ſays he, for he never met with Arnold.

People. Hiſs 'm hiſs.

Mr. Recorder. It does not become the Decency and Gravity of a Court of Juſtice, to be humming and hiſſing when Facts are Trying of this great Concernment.

Mr. Milburn. It was the common Diſcourſe there, That Mr. Arnold had been Aſſaulted.

Mr. Recorder. You have been in a great Combat; have you been fighting with the Devil? What did he ſay to that?

Jones. He never met with Arnold, my maſter asked him, Mr. Giles, Have you been in ſome Battle or other? Have you been fighting with the Devil? No, Sir, For I never met with Arnold.

Mr. Recorder. You did not hear his Wife bid him hold his Tongue?

Jones. No, Sir.

Mr. Thompſon. Did he tell you how he did break his Sword?

Jones. No, Sir.

Giles. My Lord, here is Mr. Philpot can tell, that I was ſitting down in a Chair, and broke off a piece of the Guard.

Mr. Thompſon. You will do well to prove it, Sir.

Mr. Milburn. Was there any Diſcourſe in the Countrey about Mr. Arnold?

Mr. Recorder. Did they not talk any thing about killing the Devil?

Jones. No, Sir.

Mr. Darnal. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, we will call Witneſſes to give an Account when we came to Town, and where we were all that day; and we will call the maid that lock'd the Chamber-door after we were in Bed, on the ſame Night when this Fact was committed.

John Howel.

Mr. Darnal. John Howel, Pray tell my Lord and the Jury when Giles came to Town?

Howel. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I came to Town and John Giles together.

Mr. Recorder. What time of Day was it?

Howel. It was Twelve a Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Who is thy maſter?

Howel. William Richmond.

Mr. Darnal. What time of Night was it, Friend, when you heard him call to your maſter, and bid him good Night.

Howel. About 11 or 12 a Clock.

Mr. Milburn. You ſay about 9 you were at your Lodging with him? Did your Party company with him?

Howel. Yes, Sir, we did.

Mr. Thompſon. Where did you go at that time?

Howel. We went into the Chamber, and drank two Pints of Brandy.

Mr. Thompſon. What time of Night was that?

Mr. Recorder. After two pints of Brandy, I wonder how he can remember any thing.

Ann Beron.

Mr. Milburn. Tell what time of the Night Giles came in; where you were in his company; what time of Night it was?

Mr. Recorder. Speak as loud as thou wouldſt do if thou wer't at home: When was this?

Ann. The Thurſday after Eaſter.

Mr. Recorder. The Thurſday in Eaſter Week, or the Thurſday in the next Week?

Ann. The Thurſday in Eaſter Week; we were never out of company; when he came home to his Lodging I believe it was near 10 a Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Where was your Lodging, at the King's Arms?

Ann. At the King's Arms.

Mr. Recorder. Good Woman, Did you go with him to Whetſtone's Park?

Ann. No not I.

Mr. Recorder. Were you with him at the Artillery Ground?

Ann. No not I.

Mr. Recorder. Were you with him in Drury-lane?

Ann. No not I

Mr. Recorder. He did go out of your company at all?

Ann.

Ann. Yes, about 10 a Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Woman you muſt be miſtaken; he came to Town at 12 or 1, and might be in thy company: but it is plain he went to a Broker's in Long lane, and ſo to the Artillery Ground at Cripplegate, for I gueſs it might be ſo; then they went to Whetſtones Park, and ſpent Sixpence, and after that they went into Drury lane.

Priſ. My, Lord, ſhe don't ſay ſhe was with us all the while; but we came to an Houſe where ſhe was, and ſeveral other People our Neighbours.

Mr. Recorder. She ſays you did go out ſome time: Now ſee whether I miſtake you.

Ann. Yes you do miſtake me.

Mr. Recorder. He went out, did he?

Ann. Yes, he went out after we came into the City, he and ſome others, and then they came back to me again in 2 or 3 hours.

Mr. Recorder. Then you were 2 or 3 hours at Dinner. Now I ask you, After they came back, was you with him all the while?

Ann. Yes that I was.

Mr. Recorder. Where was it?

Ann. At the Peacock.

Mr. Recorder. That is the place in Drury Lane.

Ann. No, indeed, it is in Covent Garden.

Mr. Darnal. When did he go to Bed, do you know that upon your Oath?

Ann. We were in the Inn between 9 and 10 a Clock, nearer 10 than 9, and I ſaw him ſitting taking a Pipe of Tobacco.

Mr. Darnal. What time was that?

Ann. A little after 10 I believe.

Mr. Thompſon. He ſat there till he was called away to do his Buſineſs.

Elizabeth Crook.

Mr. Darnal. Elizabeth Crook, Pray do you tell my Lord and the Jury about what time Giles went to Bed?

Crook. Indeed Sir, he went to Bed between 10 and 11.

Mr. Darnal. How long was it that he came to his Lodging before that? Can you ſay how long he was in the houſe before he went to Bed?

Crook. I asked him, if I ſhould take away his Candle; he ſaid he would put his Candle out, but I might lock him in and take the Key, but I did not do it.

Mr. Thompſon. Did he go to Bed as ſoon as he came in?

Crook. No, I think he did not.

Mr. Recorder. You made the Bed, did not you?

Crook. I did.

Mr. Recorder. Upon your Oath, what time of Night was it?

Crook. I think it was nearer 11 than 10.

Mr. Recorder. Did you make the Bed after he went into it? What time did you make the Bed, upon your Oath?

Crook. I made the Bed about 10 a Clock.

Mr. Recorder. I ask you, Do you remember Richmond came in to you, and asked you any thing about making the Bed? Do you remember he was in the Chamber?

Crook. In whoſe Chamber?

Mr. Recorder. Did Richmond come in when you were making the Bed?

Crook. He was not there that I knew of.

Richmond. Was not I in the Chamber when you made the Bed?

Crook. No, I don't remember you.

Richmond. My Lord, when this maid went to make the Bed, I went into the Room after her, and had ſome diſcourſe with her, we leaned together upon the Window, and I told her I was in love with her; I told her, if ſhe liked of it, I would marry her the next morning; I did it to make merry, for indeed I am a married man.

Mr. Recorder. What time of night was it?

Richmond. About 12 a Clock.

Mr. Recorder. If you forget your other Sweethearts, can you remember this? Do you remember now he was there?

Crook. I remember he was there.

Priſ. Mr. Arnold, pray do not laugh at my Witneſſes and make may-games at them, it is not the part of a Gentleman.

Richmond. And ſhe told me, that he would lie by himſelf, tho' the Houſe was very full.

Mr. Recorder. Do you remember any ſuch Diſcourſe?

Crook. I do remember that Mr. Richmond did come in.

King's Counſel. What time of night was it that he was making love to you?

Crook. I think about 10 a Clock.

King's Counſel. Time paſſed merrily away with you then.

Richmond. It was 12 a Clock.

Crook. Why do you ſay ſo? Our Houſe was all quiet preſently after 11.

Richmond. Why will you ſay ſo? Were not we ſinging and roaring together?

Mr. Recorder. Come don't be angry, you were not angry when you were making love together?

Richmond. I am not angry indeed Sir.

Edward James.

Mr. Milburn. Tell my Lord what time of night Giles came into his Lodging, and where it was?

James. It was in Eaſter Week he came in, and ſo were drinking at the King's Arms in St. Martins Lane, and from Dinner, and from 9 a Clock.

Mr. Recorder. How! You did not dine there, you dined at the Peacock.

James. Yes we dined there, but from 9 a Clock we were there till 12.

Mr. Recorder. How do you know?

James. I was there with him.

Mr. Recorder. After 12 a Clock you ſay you left him?

James. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. Where did you leave him?

James. In the Kitchin.

Mr. Recorder. Are you ſure?

James. Yes, my Lord, I am ſure of it.

Mr. Recorder. I ask you, becauſe I have an unhappy memory: You are ſure it was 12 a Clock when you ſaw him in the Kitchin, and here is a maid ſaw him go to Bed at 11.

Mr. Recorder. Have you any more? You know the matter that was the occaſion of the Diſpute t'other day: I would not by any means, that in a Cauſe of this publick Concern, there ſhould be any pretence for any to ſay they were ſurprized; therefore call as many Witneſſes as you pleaſe.

Robin

Robin Gibbon.

Mr. Milburn. What can you ſay when Mr. Giles came into his Lodging?

Gibbon. It was about Ten a Clock. I gave his Horſe about half a Peck of Oats.

Mr. Milburn. Where?

Gibbon. At the King's Arms in Martin's-Lane.

Mr. Milburn. Do you know how long he ſtaid before he went to Bed?

Gibbon. No Sir, I cannot tell.

Mr. Thompſon. He ſpeaks honeſtly, this Man.

Mr. Recorder. Have you any more?

Giles. There is another, a Tranſlator, my Counſel knows his Name.

John Chadwick.

Mr. Recorder. What is your Name, Sir?

Chadwick. John Chadwick.

Mr. Recorder. Go on.

Chadwick. I ſay this John Giles was at my Houſe between Eight and Nine a Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Where is your Houſe?

Chadwick. My Houſe is——

Mr. Recorder. Can you ſay any more to it?

Mr. Chadwick. No.

Elizabeth.

Mr. Recorder. What have you to ſay?

Elizabeth. Sir, I went with Mr. Giles home, and it was between Nine and Ten a Clock, and I ſaw him in his Lodging, and I ſaw him in the Morning.

Elizabeth Crook.

Mr. Recorder. Are you ſure he went to bed when you made it?

Crook. It was between Ten and Eleven a Clock.

Mr. Thompſon. You ſee how they contradict one another.

Mr. Recorder. Is your Name James?

James. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. You ſay you are certain you left him in the Kitchin at Twelve?

James. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. But here is one that ſays he went to bed by Eleven.

James. O Lord, no Sir.

Mr. Holt. Theſe are your own Witneſſes, Mr. Giles.

Mr. Thompſon. You ſee how they contradict one another.

Peter Powel.

Powel. My Lord, I met ſome of my Countreymen about an hour before Night.

Mr. Thompſon. What Day?

Powel. About Thurſday, Sir.

Mr. Thompſon. What Week was it in?

Powel. I believe in Eaſter Week, and I heard them ſay that Mr. Arnold was come to Town, and Mr. Herbert and he was to have an Hearing the next Day.

Mr. Recorder. How long was you in his Company?

Powel. I had been in my Friend's Company about an Hour before he came, and we ſtaid till near Nine or thereabouts, and then we parted, and I never ſaw him afterwards, till laſt Monday was Seven-night.

Roger How.

Mr. Recorder. What ſay you?

How. Mr. Giles was in my Company, and ſtaid till about Nine a Clock, or thereabouts, and then we went away, and I ſaw him no more for that Night.

Mr. Recorder. Have you any more?

Giles. No.

Then Sir George Jefferies the Recorder, gave Directions to the Jury to this Effect.

Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence has been very long, and I know you have taken particular Care to write down and take Notice of all the Circumſtances that have been offer'd to you in this Caſe: According to the beſt of my Memory, I ſhall refreſh yours with ſuch of them as I apprehend to be moſt material in this Cauſe; and if any thing happen to be omitted, others will ſupply it.

In the firſt place I am to take Notice, and I think I am bound to do it, in diſcharge of my own Conſcience and of my Duty to the Court, that certainly if the Priſoner at the Bar be guilty of the Offence of which he now ſtands indicted; the Puniſhment that we can inflict upon him, cannot be proportionable to the Offence: For the Offence is too great for any Puniſhment that the Law can inflict, for men are not preſumed to be guilty of ſuch Actions as this; and therefore the Law has not proportioned Puniſhments to them, becauſe it preſumes no man to be guilty of ſo baſe and barbarous an Action as this; and becauſe it never could be preſumed that any man would be guilty of ſuch Offences, therefore the Law has not provided Puniſhments proportionable to them. But this is not your Queſtion, the Queſtion before you is, Whether this Man be Guilty or not Guilty? That there was a Popiſh Plot, no man ſure doubts at this time of day. Certainly there can be none here under ſo ſtrange an Infatuation, as in the leaſt to doubt but that there was a Plot; eſpecially, when ſo many Perſons upon full and clear Evidence and Tryals, have been Convicted as Inſtruments in that bloody Tragedy. But you are not to make uſe of theſe things by way of Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar: But only in the general to premiſe ſome things by way of Introduction to their particular Evidence, and I muſt plainly tell you (for it is fit it ſhould be mention'd) that if any Villany can come near that horrid Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, this does; and I am ſorry with all my heart, that within the Government of the City of London, or ſo near it, there ſhould be ſuch a barbarous Attempt as this made and concealed ſo long. It would not be ſtrange to hear of ſuch Villanies committed in other Popiſh Countries: But for the Honour and Credit of that Religion which I hope we ſhall maintain with our Lives, that is, the Proteſtant Religion, I ſay in a Proteſtant Countrey, where the Proteſtant Religion is profeſs'd, I never heard of ſuch a barbarous Act committed before this one; becauſe our Principles of our Religion will not allow us to commit ſuch Villanies by any Diſpenſation whatſoever. Juſtice and Truth, and Righteouſneſs, are the things that our Religion teaches us. God Almighty, and our bleſſed Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Chriſt, by whom alone all Mankind muſt be ſaved, have commanded the contrary.

Their Religion may diſpenſe with ſuch villanous Actions; but this I can ſay in vindication of ours, ours cannot do it; nay, it would be no Religion if it could.

In the next place, Gentlemen, all Circumſtances of Time and Place, of Men and Things, ſhould be taken notice of; for dark Caſes muſt be made appear by Circumſtances: For as I hinted before, no body calls Witneſſes when they do ſuch Facts and Works of Darkneſs, the Works of the Devil, that is the Father of all ſuch Works. I do not mean the Devil, Mr. Arnold, but I mean they are the Works of the Devil: Belzebub himſelf, the Prince of Devils, can be only an Inſtrument and an Agent in Affairs of this Nature.

Another thing that is fit to be taken Notice of by you, is this, That by way of Circumſtance, whatever has been ſaid one way or another, relating to the Plot, relating to the Buſineſs of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, is not to be taken notice of, as Evidence againſt the Priſoner. You ſhall have a Faithful Account of what has been ſaid by every Witneſs, both for and againſt him; for Right is to be done. Our Law comes even to a Proverb, We muſt give the Devil his due; we muſt give every body right. You know that this Buſineſs was deferr'd, that the Priſoner at the Bar might be left without all manner of Excuſe; for if innocent, all Mankind would be glad to have him cleared; if guilty, every honeſt Man would have him convicted. Now this being premiſed, the Evidences againſt the Priſoner are ſeveral, and I will as far as I can, give you an Account of them. And Firſt of all, It is not doubted but Mr. Arnold has behaved himſelf like an honeſt man, and as every honeſt man ought to do for the Intereſt of his Religion; for there is no man can do too much, if he does it legally for the Preſervation of his Religion; of that Religion which he is bound to rely upon for the Salvation of his immortal Soul. Now, ſays Mr. Arnold, in the firſt place he gives an honeſt Account of his being one Night, one Thurſday Night in Eaſter Week, at the Devil Tavern, about Nine or Ten a Clock with ſome Friends, and he went out between Ten and Eleven a Clock, and his own Servant not being there; he did intend to call ſome other Servants by. But as it happened, he went away without them, and he perceiv'd Two men in Campaign Cloaks follow him into Bell-Yard. He does take it upon his Oath, that about the middle of the Lane, there happen'd to be a Candle coming out, and one of theſe two, that he did ſo obſerve to dog him, having a Campaign Cloak upon him, and likewiſe a Coat lin'd with Red, he did obſerve came before him; and he doth take it upon his Oath, that he does believe the Priſoner at the Bar to be that very man that ſo came before him; he does ſay that he had a perfect ſight of him, and he does ſay that the Reaſon why he ſhould believe him to be the man, is, that he does remember his Face, and knew his Voice. He tells you likewiſe that there were Perſons caſt a Cloak over his head, ran him into Jackanapes's-Lane, fell upon him, bruiſed his Head, and wounded him in ſeveral places; particularly he mentions that there was at the ſame time, ſaid by one of them, Pray for the Soul of Captain Evans; and at the ſame time, which is a wonderful Circumſtance, Damn the Dog, he has got Armour on, cut his Throat. He ſays that one man held him up by the Chin, having ſeveral Paſſes made at him, and he ſays he had ſomething or other to preſerve him; but notwithſtanding that, he was run into the ſide, there were three men, he does tell you, and that one overtook him in Bell-Yard, and he continues to ſwear it was the Priſoner at the Bar, according to the beſt of his Underſtanding and Conſcience; he ſays it was he, and he diſcover'd him by the ſight of a Candle. Beſides this, which is a material Circumſtance, ſome other Perſons being brought to Mr. Arnold about it, Mr. Arnold did not tax them; but did poſitively tax that Perſon to be one of the Perſons. But he tells you he ſuffer'd by Paſſion, as I cannot blame any man for being in a Paſſion at ſuch a time. But his Witneſſes determine the thing, that that is the Man, and he did poſitively ſay it, his Memory being better ſettled than he could at firſt pretend to; but however, he gives that for another Evidence, that he was not deceived in the Perſon. This is the Subſtance, as I remember, I would not do any Injury to the Priſoner, by repeating any thing that has not been ſaid; nor would I do any Injury to the Evidence for the King, in omitting any thing that occurs to me. The next is one Phillips, and he tells you that the next Day being Friday, about Six or Seven a Clock at Night, he happen'd to be in company with him at an Houſe in Covent-Garden, and having ſome Diſcourſe concerning Arnold, and concerning that bloody, baſe, and foul Attempt that was made upon him, he was ſo far from having the Bowels of an Engliſhman, or any thing of Chriſtianity in him, that he does ſay he broke out into this extravagant Expreſſion, Damn him, Rot him, he had Armour on: Damn him, Rot him, he had Armour on: I ſpeak it twice over, becauſe Mr. Arnold tells you that the Perſons during the Fact was committing, ſaid, Damme Cut his Throat, he has Armour on. The next Perſon comes and tells you, at a certain Place in Monmouthſhire upon the 5th of May following, that he went with one of the Richmonds to this Giles, and had ſome Diſcourſe: Says he, How chance you have not been as good as your word, about providing me Horſehair to make Fiſhing-lines, and you promiſed to leave it at a Farrier's in Glouceſter? How chance it was not ſo? He immediately adds, We were in ſuch extraordinary Haſte, becauſe we thought we were purſued about the Buſineſs of Arnold. And that he gives as the Reaſon why he did not ſtay at Glouceſter. If in caſe it had not been ſo, why ſhould he come and tell him he could not ſtay about the Buſineſs of the Hair, becauſe he was like to be purſued about the Buſineſs of Arnold? The next thing, Gentlemen, is concerning one Powel; Powel, he tells you, that he being at one Darcy's Houſe, a Roman Catholick, that is a Sword-Cutler that lives, I think, likewiſe at Uske. And it ſeems the Priſoner at the Bar came to him to have his Sword mended. By the way I ſhould have told you that the Priſoner at the Bar, before the Fact was done, did enquire at a Place where he might have a good Rapier: That was before the Fact was done. The Witneſs ſpake of it laſt, which was the Occaſion that I did not give it you in order. He asked where he might have a good Rapier?

But now to come to Darcy, Darcy having been very familiar with him, inquired, Wherefore, having had his Sword ſo lately, he ſhould have it to mend already? Have you, ſaid he, been fighting with the Devil? Immediately upon that he ſwears the Priſoner return'd, No, but with damned Arnold. And upon that his Wife pluck'd him by the Coat, and bid him hold his Tongue. I think that is the Subſtance of what he ſwears. He ſays there were by at that time the Priſoner at the Bar, the Apprentice to this Darcy, and a Woman that is the Priſoner's Wife.

William Richmond he comes and gives you a further Account, that he being in his Company; he tells you, they went to ſome place in the City to inquire after their Friends, and afterwards went to the Artillery to ſee the Exerciſe, then to Long lane, from thence to Whetſtone's-Park, and afterwards to Drury-lane; and that about Nine a Clock at Night they came to their Inn, and he left Giles taking a Pipe of Tobacco in the Kitchin, and went up into his Chamber with ſome other People drinking and making merry; and he does poſitively ſay that between Eleven and Twelve a Clock at Night, he ſaw the Servant Maid come up into the Room, and did ſee ſhe was making the Bed; that he ſeem'd to be a little ſurprized that any body ſhould make a Bed at that time of Night, which occaſioned him to go in to her, and ask her the Queſtion. The Anſwer that he had was very material, that ſhe ſaid, There is a Gentleman below that I muſt make this Bed for, he does not deſire to have any body lie with him. That was the Anſwer the Maid gave. There was, he ſays, ſome little talk of Love between him and the Maid, and that he poſitively ſays was near upon Twelve a Clock. He ſays that after this, he went into his own Chamber, and continued in his own Chamber till nigh One, and about One, being pulling off his Breeches, the Priſoner at the Bar came and knocked at his Chamber-door and ſpake to him, and that was near one a Clock at Night. But it is plain, during that time the Priſoner was not in his Chamber, if you believe him, nor indeed is there any Account given of the Priſoner from Nine a Clock till near One, till he knock'd at his Door, as he was pulling off his Breeches and going to Bed. As to the Anſwers that are given by the Witneſſes of the other ſide, I ſhall give you them, when I deſcend to give the Teſtimonies of the other ſide.

To give you yet this further Teſtimony, ſay they, We do not only give you this Teſtimony that he is guilty of this Fact, but we do give you an Account of him, that he is very likely to do ſuch a thing; for he is an ill Man in himſelf. As on the other ſide, no man can give a better Teſtimony to himſelf in Matters that are dark and obſcure, than the Teſtimony of his Converſation, that he is upright in his Converſation, and therefore cannot be thought guilty of ſo baſe an Action: So, they think they give a good Evidence againſt him, that he is an ill man in himſelf; and therefore becauſe he is an ill man, he may be guilty of ſuch a thing. And to prove that, they call up theſe Witneſſes.

Firſt of all, one Bridges comes and gives you an Account, that diſcourſing with him concerning the Papiſts, he damn'd the Plot, and ſaid that all were Raſcals that were not Papiſts; and if in caſe that the Lords that were in the Tower ſhould happen to ſuffer, it would be a bloody Day, and it would make bloodier Work in England than ever was known: Which ſhews he is a bloody ill man. The Priſoner ask'd him, If he were not a Papiſt? It's likely he was a Papiſt before, or he would not have truſted him ſo. And this is one Circumſtance to prove that he is an ill man, that he hath given out ſuch and ſuch Expreſſions.

There is another, one Reynolds, who comes and gives you an Account of his having ſome Diſcourſe with him afterwards about this Buſineſs of Mr. Arnold, that the Priſoner talked ſlightly of it, and ſaid that he might do it himſelf.

This, Gentlemen, I take in general to be the Subſtance of what has been offer'd for the King. If there be any thing elſe that doth not occur to my Memory, if it doth to yours, you will do well to conſider of it.

Say the Counſel for the Defendant, and that every man of the Long Robe ought to ſay, that if the Perſon, which is the Priſoner at the Bar, were guilty of ſuch a barbarous thing as this, no man would offer to open his Mouth. And therefore they offer Evidence for their Client as they are inſtructed to offer to you, and you are to try whether their Client be guilty.

Say they, You firſt call one Phillips to give an Account, and as to what Phillips ſays about the Buſineſs in Covent-Garden, about Damn him, and Rot him, they bring one that was there all the time, and ſays he, I was by all the time, and I heard no ſuch Words. So far was he from making any particular Reflections upon Mr. Arnold, that he cried it was a very horrible, a very barbarous thing. Nay, ſays he, to give Credit to this Teſtimony of his, I never uſe to keep company with them that uſe ſuch Words, as, Damn him, and Rot him, as he ſays.

The next Witneſs, is Mr. Herbert Jones, he comes and tells you, I went with him from London, I went with him to Glouceſter, I ſtaid at an Inn call'd the Old-Bear, and ſtaid and din'd with him there. I went after that to the New-Bear, we went thither and drank Cyder together; and this was very publick: for ſeveral Perſons that liv'd in the Town came to us and enquired after the Buſineſs of Arnold; and if in caſe we had been under any ſuch Jealouſie as that was, we would not have ſtaid ſo long, as, ſays he, we did. Say they on the other ſide, we do not ſay that you did not ſtay in Glouceſter; but, ſay they, by way of Objection againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, we ſay that you your ſelf, on the Fifth of May, ſaid, in Anſwer to the Perſon that came to ask you, Why you had not brought the Hair, that he might go a Fiſhing? You ſaid, we durſt not ſtay, for fear of Purſuit upon the Account of Mr. Arnold. This you your ſelf ſaid, and by ſaying ſo, you have contracted that Guilt in point of Circumſtance, which is objected by us againſt you. This is the Anſwer given to that that Mr. Jones ſays.

The next Perſon that comes to give you an Account, is one John Jones, who is the Apprentice: Says he, you bring a Witneſs againſt me that I ſaid ſuch a thing at Uske, at Darcy's the Sword-Cutler's, and you ſay the Apprentice was by: And he gives you this Evidence: Says he, I was by at ſuch a time as the man ſpeaks of, and being by at that time, I do very well remember, that there was a Diſcourſe concerning ing ſome great Conflict that Mr. Giles had been in, and that Giles's Wife was by, and ſo was the other Perſon that gave the Evidence, that ſuch a Diſcourſe there was of fighting with the Devil; but now he inverts the ſaying of t'other man, and ſays that he ſhould ſay, He never met with Arnold the Devil. The one anſwers, when the thing was asked him, Whether he had been fighting with the Devil? No, not with the Devil, but with Arnold. The other ſwears, He did not meet with the Devil Arnold. He tells you likewiſe, his Wife did not pull him by the Cloaths, and bid him hold his Tongue.

The next Witneſs is Howel; and he gives you an Account that he came with him to Town: He gives you an Account how he ſtaid with him, and came along with him till 9 a Clock at Night; for he does not pretend to give you an Account after 9.

Then comes Crook: And Crook, that is the maid Servant, ſhe ſays, I cannot poſitively tell you when he came in, but I will poſitively ſay, that I made his Bed about 10, and before 11 I asked him about his Candle; he bid me lock the Door and he would put out the Candle himſelf, and ſhe went away and left the Candle. And that is very material; for the Time this Fact was committed was between 10 and 11; this is what the maid ſays: Now there is this Anſwer to what ſhe ſwears. She firſt of all forgot that ever Richmond, that ſpeaks concerning the Breeches and other Circumſtances, that ever he was there at all; but you hear he has refreſhed her memory with a Love-Story, that he was in the Room, and ſhe does agree in theſe very Circumſtances he ſpeaks of; ſo that that gives Credit to the Teſtimony of Richmond, and puts a Diſparagement upon her Teſtimony, ſince ſhe could be ſo exceeding forgetful, as not to remember ſuch a Circumſtance.

The next is an old Woman: And ſhe ſwears point blank ſhe was with him moſt part of the Day; and that ſhe was with him at Dinner, and was with him till 9 of the Clock at Night, and then went to Bed. And tho' ſhe ſeemed to differ and blunder in ſome part of her Teſtimony, becauſe ſhe knew nothing of his going into Long-lane, and other places; however ſhe gives an Account about the time of 9 a Clock, that ſhe left him in the Kitchin, and then ſhe went to Bed.

The next Witneſs is James: And James doth poſitively ſwear, That he was drinking with him in the Kitchin till paſt 12 a Clock at Night; but that cannot be true, if the Wench that made the Bed ſwear true; for ſhe ſwears ſhe made the Bed before 10, and he went to Bed before 11; ſo that he could not be a-bed before 11 if he ſwears true; aud he could not be in the Kitchin at 12 a Clock, if ſhe ſwears true.

Gentlemen, Richmond's man he gives you no further an Account than what runs ſquare to his maſter's Teſtimony; That he left him at 9 a Clock at Night, and he heard him call at his maſter's Chamber about 12, and ſo they punctually agree. But he gives no manner of Account where he was between 9 and 12, between which Hours this Fact was done.

Next, Gentlemen, there have been ſome more Witneſſes called for the Priſoner at the Bar, who give you an Account where he was before ſuch time as he came to his Lodging. Now it is not denied on either ſide, but that he might be till within Night at that Houſe they ſpeak of; but the Account that is deſired to be given of this matter, is to know where he was between 9 a Clock and 12, when this Fact was committed.

Theſe, Gentlemen, according as it occurs to me, are the ſubſtantial parts of the Evidence, both on the one ſide and the other. The matter therefore reſolves it ſelf within this narrow compaſs; If upon what you have heard from Mr. Arnold, attended with the reſt of the Circumſtances that you have heard ſworn by the Witneſſes, you do believe the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty; for he might be at his Lodging at 9 a Clock, and he might be at his Lodging at 12 or 1, and yet he might do this Fact: For it is certain it was not a ſudden matter, for it was a thing done preparedly; and therefore you muſt not expect that men that are guilty of ſuch barbarous Deſigns as this, will lay their Deſigns open. To be ſure, whoever it was did this Fact upon Mr. Arnold, they would do it ſo as to make themſelves appear as innocent as could be. It is not a matter to be relied on, that becauſe this man was innocent in St. Martins Lane, therefore he did not do this thing in Bell Yard.

There is another Circumſtance againſt the Priſoner at the Bar; That he ſhould imagine, notwithſtanding all this, that Mr. Arnold had wounded himſelf: But when he found that that was not very probable, that a man could wound himſelf ſo, by reaſon of ſeveral places that he received his Wounds in; he would have it, that tho' he did not do it himſelf, yet ſome of his Friends might. Indeed if he be guilty, ſome of his Relations might do it, but certainly he was no Friend that did it. It is againſt Nature for any man to believe, that any Perſon ſhould put himſelf to ſo much trouble; if he had a mind to diſpatch himſelf, he might have done it with much more eaſe, and not have put himſelf to that trouble; for men, when they have a mind to do the Buſineſs, they do not uſe to take ſuch a deal of pains to ſtab themſelves here and there.

Thus, Gentlemen, the Evidence being very long, and the Circumſtances very many, things may occur to you that do not at preſent to me. Yet I muſt tell you again, in a matter of publick Example, the Proof ought to be very great, to convict a man of ſuch an Offence; but you muſt not expect it ſhould be ſo clear, as in a matter of Right between man and man, and of things that are done in the Face of the Sun. It was done in the Dark: The Devil that ſet 'em a-work, does fill them with cunning enough to keep this Attempt as concealed as may be: And therefore Circumſtances of this Nature muſt be wonderfully conſidered; an Account of which Mr. Arnold himſelf gives you, and he does believe in his Conſcience the Priſoner at the Bar to be the Man.

The Jury withdrew, and having debated together about half an hour, returned, and brought the Priſoner in Guilty. Which done, the Court Adjourned till the Saturday following, the 17th of July: At which time the Court being ſate, John Giles was brought to the Bar; to whom the Right Worſhipful Sir George Jefferies delivered himſelf to this Effect:

Mr. Recorder. You the Priſoner at the Bar, you have been indicted for a very vile Offence; an Offence in its Nature that deſerves a greater

Puniſhment than the Law can inflict upon any ſuch Offences. There is a Jury has Convicted you of this Crime, againſt whom, had you had any Objection, you might have made your Challenge. And now you ſtand convicted here, it is only the Duty of the Court to pronounce that Judgment againſt you, which they think may be reaſonable to inflict upon ſuch an Offender. For I muſt needs ſay, it was one of the baſeſt and moſt barbarous Actions that mankind could poſſibly be guilty of: An Action of ſo much filth and baſeneſs, that the Law could not foreſee any man could be guilty of, and therefore hath not made Proviſion for a Puniſhment proportionable to it. But inaſmuch as we underſtand by Mr. Arnold you have a Charge of Children, therefore the Court takes ſome conſideration: Not that they think to extend any mercy to you for your own ſake, but a regard they think they are bound to have for thoſe that have not offended. But we ought to have a care to let the World know, we do not intend only a Puniſhment to the Offender, but by that to terrifie all other People from being guilty of ſuch extraordinary Villanies. And becauſe they will have regard to your Poſterity, therefore they do not think fit to put ſo great a Fine upon you as this Fact does deſerve. But on the other ſide, they have thought fit you ſhould be made an Example of, and that you ſhould ſuffer as great a Corporal Puniſhment as the Law will allow. And therefore in the Name of the Court I do pronounce this to be your Sentence:

That you be put in the Pillory towards Lincolns-Inn Fields, as near the Place where this barbarous Fact was committed as may be: And there you are to ſtand from the Hour of Twelve till One, one Day, at Noon-day. And on another Day, from the Hour of Twelve till One, over-againſt Grays-Inn in Holbourn. And another Day, between the ſame Hours, juſt by the May-Pole in the Strand. Theſe three ſeveral Days you are to ſtand in the Pillory, and to have a Paper put upon your Hat, whereby it ſhall be ſignified, the Offence of which you ſtand Convicted. And next, to deter all others from committing the like, the Court does think fit likewiſe to Award, That you ſhould pay to the King the Sum of Five Hundred Pounds; and that you be committed in Execution, till ſuch time as you pay that Money. And becauſe it is both to be a Puniſhment to you, and a Terror to all other ſuch Villains, you are to find Sureties for your Good Behaviour during Life.

Sentence being pronounced, and the Priſoner removed from the Bar, Richard Cavenaugh was brought to the Bar, and prayed to be diſcharged: But was by Mr. Arnold charged with threatning one Philip Staneright, one of the King's Witneſſes: For which reaſon, and for that alſo a new Evidence was come in againſt the ſaid Cavenaugh, with ſome farther Charge relating to Mr. Arnold's Buſineſs, the Court thought fit, for want of Bail, to continue him a Priſoner.

Then Mr. Herbert appeared, and prayed to be diſcharged from his Recognizance to appear at the Old-Bailey: But being accuſed by a Woman for calling her Whore, Jade, and very ill names, and holding up his Staff at her, and threatning to beat her for being a Witneſs againſt his Friend Giles; as alſo for taking away her Horſe as ſhe was going to the Mill, and the reaſon was, becauſe ſhe was to be a Witneſs in London againſt Giles. But ſhe being a married Woman, and none appearing that would be bound to proſecute him for it, he was not bound over to anſwer it, till another Complaint came in againſt him, which was immediately made by Mr. Ballard and another Gentleman; who charged Mr. Herbert, That in Whitſon Week laſt, upon a Diſcourſe for chuſing Knights of the Shire for Monmouth, and the ſaying of one in the Company, That it was thought Mr. Arnold would ſtand for it; Mr. Herbert ſhould make anſwer, I will circumciſe the other ſide of his Cheek firſt, or, he muſt have the other ſide of his Cheek circumciſed firſt. Upon which the Court ordered he ſhould not be diſcharged, but remain bound upon the former Recognizance to appear there next Seſſions. And the Recorder gave him ſeveral ſharp Reprehenſions for his malicious and unmanly Words and Proceedings. This being the ſecond of the King's Witneſſes, and a Woman, that he had barbarouſly treated; ſtill paſſionately giving the Reaſon, that they were Witneſſes againſt his Friend John Giles, as it was proved on Oath before the Court by ſeveral Witneſſes.

Then Sir Thomas Allen acquainted the Court, that a Gentleman had informed him the day before, that Mr. Herbert told him, That Mr. Arnold wounded himſelf and cut his own Throat; which the Court looked upon as an high effect of a malicious Ingratitude; Mr. Arnold having beſought his Majeſty, when Mr. Herbert was in Newgate, to have his Releaſe. Mr. Arnold replied, That Mr. Herbert had been more ungrateful to his Majeſty, who had graciouſly pardoned him greater Offences, and lately; for he had ſpoken worſe of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government than he had done of him, as it had been proved before his Majeſty, and of which he believed his Majeſty was well ſatisfied. The Court told Mr. Herbert he was a ſhame to all Engliſhmen; and bound him by Recognizance to appear and anſwer this Offence at the King's Bench Bar the firſt Day of the next Term.

THE TRYAL OF ELIZABETH CELLIER,

At the King's-Bench Bar, on Friday June the 11*th*, 1680.

INDICTMENT.

THE Jurors for our Lord the King do preſent, that Elizabeth Cellier, Wife of Peter Cellier, late of the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middleſex, Gent. ſtands Indicted, for that ſhe as a falſe Traytoreſs againſt our moſt Illuſtrious and Excellent Prince, King Charles II. her natural Lord, not having God before her Eyes, not weighing the Duty of her Allegiance, but by the Inſtigation of the Devil moved and ſeduced, and the Cordial Love and true due natural Obedience which all faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King towards him ſhould bear, and of right are bound to bear; utterly withdrawing, and deviſing, and with all her Might intending the Peace and common Tranquility of this Kingdom to diſturb, and to bring and put our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction; and the true Worſhip of God in this Realm by the Law Eſtabliſhed and Uſed, to Alter to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome, to move and ſtir up War againſt the King in this Kingdom, and to ſubvert the Government of this Realm, the Firſt Day of November, in the Thirty firſt Year of the ſaid King's Reign, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes aforeſaid, with divers other falſe Traitors unknown, traiterouſly did compaſs, imagine, and intend the Killing, Death and final Deſtruction of our ſaid Lord the King, and to change, alter, and utterly to ſubvert the ancient Government of this Realm, and to depoſe, and wholly to deprive him the ſaid King of his Crown and Government of this Kingdom, and to extirpate the true Religion within this Realm eſtabliſhed; and to fulfil and accompliſh the ſame moſt wicked Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes, the ſame Elizabeth Cellier, and other falſe Traitors unknown, the ſaid Firſt Day of November, in the Thirty firſt Year aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Clements Danes aforeſaid, adviſedly deviliſhly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly aſſembled, united, and gathered themſelves together, and then, and there, deviliſhly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, cunningly, and traiterouſly conſulted and agreed to bring the ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction, and to depoſe and deprive him of his Crown and Government, and ſo introduce and eſtabliſh the Romiſh Religion in this Kingdom, and the ſooner to fulfil and effect the ſame moſt wicked Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes, the ſaid Elizabeth Cellier, and other unknown Traitors then and there did contribute, pay, and expend divers great Sums of Money to ſeveral unknown Perſons, to procure them traiterouſly to kill the ſaid King, and introduce the Romiſh Religion into this Realm, and for the better concealing of the Treaſons aforeſaid, the ſaid Elizabeth Cellier then and there did pay and expend to divers other Perſons unknown, divers other Sums of Money, falſly to impoſe the ſaid Treaſons upon ſome other Perſons unknown, againſt the Duty of her Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown, and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided, &c.

John Gadbury Sworn.

L. C. J. Mr. Gadbury, What do you know concerning this Plot? Sir William Scroggs.

Mr. Gadbury. I know nothing of it, neither one way, nor another.

L. C. J. Do you know of any Contrivance of Mrs. Cellier's to kill the King?

Mr. Gadbury. No, rather the contrary.

L. C. J. Do you know of any Attempts to change the Government?

Mr. Gadbury. I will tell your Lordſhip what I do know, if theſe Gentlemen will not be too nimble for me. I have ſuffer'd a great deal of Prejudice of late in relation to a Plot, as if I had known of a Plot; but God is my Witneſs, I know of none, unleſs it were a Plot to bring Sir Robert Peyton over to the King's Intereſt. That Plot I had ſome Concern in, and had ſome Knowledge of Mrs. Cellier's Concern in it; but ſhe was ſo far from doing any thing againſt the King's Intereſt, that ſhe was willing to bring over with him the Three Gentlemen turn'd out of Commiſſion when Sir Robert was. So that how ſhe could be acting for the King, and againſt the King at the ſame time, I do not underſtand.

L.

L. C. J. Mr. Gadbury, you are a Man of Learning, pray will you give your Teſtimony of the things that you know in relation to Mrs. Cellier.

Mr. Gadbury. Mrs. Cellier was not committed upon my Accuſation, therefore, I hoped ſhe might have been tryed without my Teſtimony. But when I was in danger of my Life, when I lay in the Gate-houſe, Mrs. Cellier was reported to be a Third Witneſs againſt me, and then I raked up every Triſle; but if I had thought it Treaſon, I would have diſcover'd it before. And as to that particular Buſineſs concerning Mr. Smith, that Smith ſome time ſince did come to me, being my old Acquaintance, to ask my Advice in his Affairs, and he had then an Affair of ſo great moment, that it was neceſſary to ask my Advice in it, which was to go to the Lords in the Tower. I asked him what to do? Saith he, I can ſay enough againſt Dr. Otes to ſerve them, and take off his Evidence, and asked me if he ſhould do it. By no means, Mr. Smith, ſaid I. Mrs. Cellier afterwards told me, this Smith, and one Phillips were willing to tell ſome Stories or other of Mr. Otes and Mr. Bedloe, and I told her this very Story; ſaith ſhe, you being acquainted with him, it is poſſible you may do ſome good upon him, and ſaith ſhe, I had as lieve as Ten Guineas that you could do it.

L. C. J. That is, when that you adviſed Mr. Smith not to meddle with any thing againſt Dr. Otes.

Mr. Gadbury. She ſaid, ſhe did not care if ſhe had been at the Charge of Ten Guineas, if he would be honeſt and diſcover the Truth. And, my Lord, ſhe did ſay ſhe had heard Mr. Dangerfield talk of a Nonconformiſts Plot that would off the Popiſh Plot.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay, that ſhe had heard Dangerfield ſay there was a Nonconformiſts Plot, and that he was to have a Commiſſion among them? And did ſhe ſay, that ſhe had heard him ſay, that he hoped under the Colour of that the Popiſh Plot would go on? Or did ſhe ſay it of her own accord, that ſhe hoped that would carry on the Popiſh Plot?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, I cannot remember Particulars.

L. C. J. There is a great deal of difference between Dangerfield's ſaying it, and her ſaying it.

Mr. Gadbury. I have no reaſon to ſpare her: But I am unwilling to ſpeak any thing that is contrary to Truth though ſhe hath done me the greateſt Injury in the World.

L. C. J. How came you to talk of a Nonconformiſts Plot?

Mr. Gadbury. It was only common Diſcourſe as it was at Coffee-Houſes.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. Had you heard of it before ſhe ſpake of it, that you ſay it was common?

Mr. Gadbury. No, not till ſhe ſpake of it.

L. C. J. Did Mrs. Cellier tell you of any Popiſh Prieſts or Jeſuits coming hither from beyond the Seas?

Mr. Gadbury. Upon the going over of one Clay, I think ſhe did ſay ſhe heard there were ſome more coming over.

L. C. J. What to do?

Mr. Gadbury. God knows what.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſpeak of any Plot or Contrivance to kill the King?

Mr. Gadbury. No, ſhe was always an Enemy to Plots, or elſe I would not have kept her company.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay there were, or that ſhe heard there were ſeveral Prieſts and Jeſuits coming over?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, I think ſhe ſaid ſhe heard it. And I have ſaid ſeveral times to her, the Popiſh Plotters would be deſtroyed: But ſhe anſwered, ſhe was afraid the Nation would be deſtroyed firſt.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay ſhe was afraid of it, or that the Nation would be deſtroyed firſt? I ask you once more, we muſt try People according to their Oaths. By the Oath you have taken, when you ſaid you thought the Popiſh Plotters would be deſtroyed, what Anſwer did ſhe make?

Mr. Gadbury. She ſaid ſhe was afraid the Nation would be ſo; becauſe ſhe ſaid, abundance of the beſt of the Nation went into other Nations, to weaken our Nation, and ſpend their Money, and therefore ſhe was afraid the Nation would be deſtroyed before them.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had you with Mrs. Cellier paſſing through Weſtminſter-Abby?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, my Memory hath been exceedingly bruiſed; but I remember, my Lord, as I was going through the Abby in a rainy Afternoon, ſhe ſaid, this Abby was formerly filled with Benedictine-Monks, or ſomething to that purpoſe, and, ſaith ſhe, what if it ſhould be ſo again?

L. C. J. Are you a Proteſtant or a Papiſt?

Mr. Gadbury. A Proteſtant, my Lord.

L. C. J. He talks as like a Papiſt as can be, was it, what if it ſhould be filled?

Mr. Gadbury. She ſaid, what if it ſhould be again.

L. C. J. What did you ſay to that?

Mr. Gadbury. I only ſmiled to hear a Woman's Diſcourſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. You make all the Company laugh; What did ſhe ſay of the Temple?

Mr. Gadbury. That the Temple had been filled with Fryars too.

L. C. J. And what then? Did ſhe talk of filling it again?

Mr. Gadbury. Saith ſhe, this Place was filled with Benedictine-Monks, and the Temple with Fryars.

L. C. J. This may do well enough: But what did ſhe ſay elſe concerning the Temple?

Mr. Gadbury. Nothing, my Lord.

Mr. Serjeant Maynard ſaid ſomething to him here, which was not heard, but Mr. Gadbury replied.

Mr. Gadbury. Mr. Serjeant, I was none of the Tribe of Forty One.

Here Mr. Gadbury was going to read in his Paper; but the Court told him that would not be allowed; but he might refreſh his Memory with it.

L. C. J. Now tell me what ſhe ſaid: Mr. Gadbury, keep it in your Hand.

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, ſhe put it by way of Interrogation to feel my Pulſe.

L. C. J. What did ſhe ſay elſe?

Mr. Gadbury. There was nothing but tranſient Diſcourſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. We muſt ask you what the Truth is, and you have looked upon your Paper. Now, conſider what you ſay, and conſider that you are

are upon a ſolemn Occaſion, and are to teſtifie it in the Preſence of God Almighty. I would have you tell plainly what it is, and neither to make it more, nor ſtifle it.

Mr. Gadbury. It was only tranſient Diſcourſe.

L. C. J. Say what it was. Was it, This Place was once filled with Benedictine Monks?

Mr. Gadbury. She ſaid that the Abby had been filled with Benedictine Monks, as the Temple had with Fryars.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Look upon your Paper.

L. C. J. You have looked upon the Paper, and pray tell us what ſhe ſaid. Did ſhe ſay, ſhe hoped to ſee this Place filled with Benedictines?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, I do not remember that Word Hope.

L. C. J. How long have you been acquainted with Mrs. Cellier?

Mr. Gadbury. Ten or a dozen years.

L. C. J. Did ſhe never ask you any Queſtions about the Life of the King?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, when the King was very ill at Windſor, and all People were fearful that he would die, ſhe did move the Queſtion to me.

L. C. J. What Queſtion?

Mr. Gadbury. To know, Whether I thought his Majeſty would live or die? But it was her fear that he would die.

L. C. J. Had you ſeen the King?

Mr. Gadbury. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. How then did ſhe expect you ſhould give her an Anſwer; from your Art?

Mr. Gadbury. From my Art, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did ſhe deſire you to conſult your Art, how long the King would live?

Mr. Gadbury. She did as I ſaid.

L. C. J. What did you ſay to that?

Mr. Gadbury. I would not tell her, becauſe he was my Sovereign.

L. C. J. What Anſwer did you make?

Mr. Gadbury. I told her I would not meddle with it.

L. C. J. She would have had you conſult your Art or Scheme, or whatever it is, to know whether the King would live or die?

Mr. Gadbury. It was ſomething of that.

L. C. J. And you ſaid you would not meddle nor make with it?

Mr. Gadbury. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. She deſired you to make a Scheme?

Mr. Gadbury. No, my Lord, I can't ſay ſhe mentioned a Scheme, but ſhe asked the Queſtion.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. What did ſhe ask elſe?

Mr. Gadbury. Only that Queſtion.

L. C. J. How often do you believe ſhe ſpake of it?

Mr. Gadbury. Never, my Lord, but when he was ill. I will not baffle any thing that may conduce to the Safety of the King and Kingdom.

L. C. J. Indeed it is very conducible to the Safety of the King and Kingdom, if any go about to deſtroy him, and with evil intentions to ask how long he will live, and you ought in Duty to God and your Sovereign to declare it. Did ſhe ever make any enquiries about the King's Death more than what you have ſaid?

Mr. Gadbury. No more, my Lord, and then ſhe was fearful he would die.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay ſhe would go to ſome body elſe?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, when ſhe perceived me ſhy, ſaith ſhe, I ſee you are afraid of me, I will go to ſome other Aſtrologer.

L. C. J. For what?

Mr. Gadbury. To ſatisfie her Curioſity, as a great many do.

L. C. J. What Curioſities did ſhe ask beſides this?

Mr. Gadbury. She would ask me ſometimes about the Condition of Bodies, Whether they would be proſperous in the World, and ſeveral other Queſtions.

L. C. J. Were you nice in theſe Curioſities?

Mr. Gadbury. Truly, my Lord, I was ſhy of meddling with any thing, when I heard there was a talk about Plots.

L. C. J. Was you nice to give her ſatisfaction according to her hopes concerning theſe things you call Curioſities, queſtioning whether one ſhould be well wed, how many Children ſhe ſhould have, &c. were you ſcrupulous in that?

Mr. Gadbury. I think I might not be nice in that very particular.

L. C. J. How came it then that ſhe would go to another Aſtrologer?

Mr. Gadbury. She asked me ſomething about Mr. Dangerfield.

L. C. J. For what?

Mr. Gadbury. How to get him out of Priſon.

L. C. J. Pray how came ſhe to ſay ſhe would go to another Aſtrologer? You were not ſhy to give her an Anſwer to theſe Queſtions?

Mr. Gadbury. It was ſomething about Mr. Dangerfield, my Lord, ſhe asked me ſomething about ſome Deeds or Papers which he was to ſearch for or ſeize, which concerned Mr. Bedloe.

L. C. J. She had better have gone to one of the Clerks than to a Conjurer for them. But why would ſhe go to another Aſtrologer?

Mr. Gadbury. Becauſe I was ſhy.

L. C. J. You were not ſhy in theſe things about Bedloe. Did ſhe not ſay, when you refuſed to meddle with the Death of the King, that ſhe would go to another Aſtrologer?

Mr. Gadbury. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you any thing for her at that time?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, I did calculate a Scheme, which ſince I found to be for Mr. Dangerfield, but I knew not for whom it was when I did it.

L. C. J. How! Can you apply one Scheme to any body?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, when Mrs. Cellier came to me, ſhe gave me the time of a Perſon's Nativity, and I ſet the Figure of the Heavens to that Sign, to know whether he were a Perſon fit to be truſted, her Husband being a French Merchant, to get in money.

L. C. J. For ought you know Dangerfield was a Woman, and the Queſtion was, Whether Dangerfield was with Child, and he happens to be a man — How did it fall out?

Mr. Gadbury. I have forgotten, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you know it was for Dangerfield?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, never before I came before the King and Council, neither did I know his Name before, for he went by the Name of Willoughby before.

L. C. J. What other Diſcourſe had you with her?

her? Did ſhe not at any time talk of Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Gadbury. She did ſay, ſhe had heard of ſome People that were to diſcourſe with Mr. Dugdale; ſhe had heard ſuch a thing, but I don't know whether ſhe knew any thing of it or no.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had you about that?

Mr. Gadbury. She told me there was a Woman to go down to Windſor to beg Mr. Dugdale's Pardon; for he was penitent for what he had ſaid in ſome Tryal or other.

L. C. J. Call another Witneſs.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Dangerfield, pray give the Court an Account of what you know of Mrs. Cellier, the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mrs. Cellier. My Lord, I except againſt that Witneſs.

L. C. J. Why ſo? You muſt ſhew ſome reaſon, and then we will do you Juſtice in God's Name.

Mrs. Cellier. If I can prove he was whip'd and tranſported, pilloried, perjured, &c. he is no Witneſs. The laſt time I was upon my Tryal, he threatned ſome of my Witneſſes, that if they would not ſwear as he would have them, he would kill them.

L. C. J. If you can ſhew any Record whereby he is convicted of any thing that can by Law take away his Teſtimony, do it.

Mrs. Cellier. He has been Indicted for Burglary.

L. C. J. (to Mr. Dangerfield) Was you indicted for Burglary?

Mr. Dangerfield. I will take it at their Proof.

Ralph Briſcoe, a Witneſs for the Defendant, Sworn.

L. C. J. Do you know Dangerfield?

Briſcoe. I remember one Thomas Dangerfield: I ſaw him burnt in the Hand at the Old Bailey.

L. C. J. Is this the ſame man?

Briſcoe. I do believe it is the ſame man; but I have not ſeen him theſe ſeveral years.

L. C. J. Let every body have their Right in God's Name. Have you any more?

Mrs. Cellier. My Lord, I can prove him perjured.

L. C. J. Have you any Records to ſhew he was perjured? Is he convinced?

Mrs. Cellier. No.

L. C. J. Then you can't do it.

Mrs. Cellier. My Lord, I can prove him guilty of Forgery.

L. C. J. If you don't produce the Record, you do nothing.

Mr. Recorder. That which ſhe calls Forgery is not that which the Law calls Forgery; it is counterfeiting Guineas.

L. C. J. Can you ſhew he forged any Deeds. If you can prove that he hath committed Forgery, and be not convicted, it is no Error.

L. C. J. Have you your Pardon? She hath proved the Conviction of Felony, prove your Pardon.

Mrs. Cellier. I have the Copies of ſeveral Records here in Court, which will be ſworn to.

To which Mr. Dangerfield pleaded his Majeſty's moſt gracious Pardon. To which Mrs. Cellier replied, That ſhe had a Copy of the ſaid Pardon in Court, but it did not extend to ſome of the Crimes for which he ſtood convicted; and then produced a Record, wherein it did appear he was Outlaw'd upon a Felony. Upon which the Court commanded Mr. Dangerfield to go and fetch his Pardon; in the interim examining ſeveral of the King's Witneſſes.

Thomas Williamſon Sworn.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee Dangerfield and Mrs. Cellier in Company?

Williamſon. No, my Lord, but I have been employ'd for Mrs. Cellier in ſeveral Buſineſſes of Charity to get Priſoners out. When Mr. Dangerfield was in Newgate, ſhe employ'd me to get him out.

L. C. J. Why was ſhe ſo kind to Dangerfield?

Williamſon. My Lord, I don't know that; but ſhe bid me get him out whoſoever ſtaid behind.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. Why ſhould ſhe get him out? Did ſhe tell you what ſhe would do with him when ſhe had him out?

Williamſon. No, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. We bring him for a Witneſs, that ſhe had a great kindneſs for Dangerfield.

Margaret Jenkens Sworn.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe have you heard between Dangerfield and Cellier?

Jenkens. I never ſaw them together but twice. It is a year ſince I came from them.

L. C. J. When you ſaw them at Dinner or Supper together, what other Company was there?

Jenkens. Her Husband was with her one time.

L. C. J. What did they talk about?

Jenkens. They were talking about the Priſoners that were condemned.

L. C. J. Where was it? At her Houſe?

Jenkens. No, at my Lady Powis's Houſe.

L. C. J. How came you there?

Jenkens. I carried Notes backwards and forwards.

L. C. J. Did you never hear no Diſcourſe about the Plot?

Jenkens. No.

Suſan Edwards Sworn.

Mr. Recorder. What intimacy have you known between Dangerfield and Mrs. Cellier?

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee them together?

Edwards. Yes, very often, my Lord. She ſaid, That the Popiſh Plot would turn to a Presbyterian Plot.

L. C. J. Who did ſhe ſay that to? To Dangerfield?

Edwards. No, my Lord, but I have heard him ſay thoſe words, and that he would make it his intereſt it ſhould be ſo.

L. C. J. What did you ſay to him, when he ſaid he muſt turn Rogue, and diſcover all their Plots?

Edwards. I ſaid, he would be no greater Rogue than he was before.

L. C. J. You were pretty nimble with him.

Edwards. He thought he ſhould be hanged.

L. C. J. For what?

Edwards. If he did not turn Rogue he thought he ſhould be hanged.

(Edwards to Mrs. Cellier) You were very often together in your Chamber.

Mrs. Cellier. Who gave you your Cloaths?

Edwards. Her Husband was gone to Church one one morning, and he was with her in her Chamber.

L. C. J. I can't see why you should prove this matter too far.

Mr. Recorder. Susan is a civil young Woman.

Edwards. She said she would do my business for me, and I go in danger of my life.

Bennet Dowdal Sworn.

L. C. J. What do you know of any intimacy between Dangerfield and Mrs. Cellier?

Dowdal. I have seen them together.

L. C. J. What did they talk about?

Dowdal. Mrs. Cellier proposed a match between Mrs. Mary Ayrey and I, and they used to talk of that when I was with them.

L. C. J. Did they talk of the Plot at any time?

Dowdal. No.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear them talk of the King?

Dowdal. No.

L. C. J. Have you any more?

Mr. Recorder. Not till Mr. Dangerfield comes.

L. C. J. (to Mrs. Cellier) Have you any Record to shew he was put in the Pillory?

Mrs. Cellier. Yes, my Lord.

Upon which the Copy of a Record from Salisbury was read, of his standing on the Pillory for uttering counterfeit Guineas: As also the Copy of a Record of an Outlawry for Felony.

L. C. J. What say you to this Outlawry?

Mr. Recorder. It is not the same Person.

L. C. J. We ought to be very careful in these Concerns, else we may do a Work this day may make all the Kingdom rue it. It is a sad thing that People of a vicious profligate Life, both before they came to Newgate, and all along in their life-time, should be suffered to be Witnesses to take away the Life of a Worm. I question whether he will come again, or no, he hath been gone a great while. Such are fit to be employ'd to find out, but hard to be believed when they find out.

L. C. J. Captain Richardson, is this the man that broke Chelmsford Gaol?

Capt. Richardson. My Lord, I can say nothing to that, but he was brought by an Habeas Corpus from thence to me.

L. C. J. Was he burnt in the Hand for Felony?

Capt. Richardson. Yes, my Lord, I believe he was.

L. C. J. He made me believe as tho' he would flie, I believe he is. We will not hood-wink our selves against such a Fellow as this, that is guilty of so notorious Crimes. A man of modesty after he hath been in the Pillory, would not look a man in the Face. It appears that after he hath been burnt in the Hand, he hath been Outlaw'd for Felony, and so it doth appear by Record.

After about half an hour's stay, Mr. Dangerfield returned and brought his Pardon; which was read, and the Word Felony omitted, and instead of Utlagaria qualiacunque pro Feloniis quibuscunque, there was only inserted, Omnia Maleficia & Utlagaria qualiacunque; which Omission had made the Pardon Defective, it being my Lord Chief Justice his Opinion, that the Word Utlagaria did only reach to Outlawries between Party and Party; by which his Evidence was wholly laid aside.

L. C. J. (to Mr. Dangerfield) Such Fellows as you are, Sirrah, shall know we are not afraid of you.

He produces us here a Pardon by the Name of Thomas Dangerfield of Waltham, and says, his Father and Kinsman are both of that Name and Place. Will you have him Sworn, Whether his Father or Cousin Thomas were ever convicted of Felony? It is notorious enough what a Fellow this is, he was in Chelmsford Goal. I will shake all such Fellows before I have done with them. Have you any more to say? Are there any Waltham men here?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, this is enough to discourage a man from ever entring into an honest Principle.

L. C. J. What? Do you with all the mischief that Hell hath in you think to brave it in a Court of Justice? I wonder at your impudence, that you dare look a Court of Justice in the Face, after having been made appear so notorious a Villain.

Mr. Just. Jones. Indeed, if he be the same man, he is not fit for a Witness.

L. C. J. And that he is the same man is very notorious. Come, Mrs. Cellier, what have you more to say?

Mrs. Cellier. Enough, my Lord.

L. C. J. You have said enough already. Come Gentlemen of the Jury, this is a plain Case; here is but one Witness in a Case of Treason, and that not direct; therefore lay your Heads together.

Which being done, they returned her Not Guilty: Upon which the Clerk of the Crown bid her down on her Knees, which she did, and cried, God bless the King and the Duke of York.

L. C. J. Where is Dangerfield? Is he gone? Call him.

Who being come, the Court asked if he had Bail for his good Behaviour?

Mr. Dangerfield. No, my Lord, but with the leave of the Court I will fetch some.

L. C. J. Let a Tipstaff go with him, and return before the Court rises.

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, that cannot be, for I can't return so soon.

L. C. J. Then let him be committed.

Which was accordingly done.

THE TRYAL OF HENRY CARR,

In Hillary-Term, 1679.

AN Information was brought in the Crown Office, againſt Henry Carr, which ſets forth, that a certain Plot of a traiterous Conſpiracy, was late had within this Kingdom of England, amongſt divers falſe Traitors of this Kingdom of England, to put to death, and murder our Lord King Charles II. and the Government of this Kingdom of England, and the ſincere Religion of God within this Kingdom of England, well and piouſly Eſtabliſhed, to deſtroy and ſubvert, and the Romiſh Religion, within this Kingdom of England to introduce; and that alſo divers Traitors for High Treaſon aforeſaid, were lawfully convicted and attainted, and other Perſons, for High Treaſon aforeſaid, were by due Courſe of Law tried and acquitted. Nevertheleſs, one Henry Carr of the Pariſh of St. Pulchre's, London, Gent. knowing well the Premiſes, but minding, and maliciouſly intending the Government of the Kingdom of England, and the Adminiſtration of Juſtice in the ſame Kingdom to ſcandalize, and to bring the ſame in Contempt.

The Firſt Day of Auguſt, in the Thirty firſt Year of our now Lord the King, at the Pariſh of St. Pulchre's, London, a certain falſe, ſcandalous and malicious Book, Entitled, The Weekly-Packet of Advice from Rome, or the Hiſtory of Popery; maliciouſly and unlawfully hath Printed, and cauſed to be Publiſhed: In which Book is contained among other things, as followeth. There is lately found out by an experienc'd Phyſician, an incomparable Medicament, call'd The Wonder-working Plaiſter, truly Catholick in Operation, ſomewhat of kin to the Jeſuit's Powder, but more effectual. The Vertues of it are ſtrange and various. It will make Juſtice Deaf as well as Blind, takes out Spots out of deepeſt Treaſons, more cleverly than Caſtle-Soap does common Stains. It alters a man's Conſtitution in two or three Days, more than the Virtuoſo's Transfuſion of Blood in ſeven Years. Is a great Alexipharmick, and helps Poiſons, and thoſe that uſe them. It miraculouſly exalts and purifies the Eye-ſight, and makes People behold nothing but Innocence in the blackeſt Malefactors. It is a mighty Cordial for a declining Cauſe, ſtifles a Plot as certainly as the Itch is deſtroyed by Butter and Brimſtone. In a word, it makes Fools Wiſe Men, and Wiſe Men Fools, and both of them Knaves. The Colour of this precious Balm is bright and dazling, and being apply'd privately to the Fiſt in decent manner, and a competent Doſe, infallibly performs all the ſaid Cures, and many others not fit here to be mention'd.

To the great Contempt of our Lord the King, and his Laws, to the great Scandal of the Government of our now Lord the King, and the Laws of this Kingdom of England, and the Adminiſtration of Juſtice in the ſame Kingdom; to the evil Example of all others in ſuch a Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

To which Information appeared in the Court of King's-Bench, Henry Carr, by his Attorny, Benedict Brown, the Eleventh of February, and having heard the Information aforeſaid, ſaid that he was not Guilty.

Iſſue being joyn'd, it was try'd by Writ of Niſi prius, at the Guild-Hall, before the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, upon the Second of July, 1680. where a Jury being ſummon'd, whoſe Names are as followeth,

Benjamin Thorogood.	Jeremiah Gregory.
Richard Blackbourn.	Nicholas Bondy.
Godfrey Richards.	George Day.
Leonard Bates.	Nicholas Dawes.
Philip Harman.	Richard Blaney.
Francis Breerwood.	Henry Averie.
Thomas Kemble.	Joſeph Hall.
William Longman.	William Bridges.
John Debman.	Thomas Lee.
Lewis Wilſon.	Richard White.
Henry Laſhoe.	Randal Dod.
Thomas Salter.	Richard Bowater.

Of all which only Four appear'd and were Sworn, viz.

Nicholas Bondy.	Henry Averie.
Leonard Bates.	Randal Dod.

Where-

Whereupon a Talis was prayed and granted, and then were ſworn and added to the principal Pannel, according to the Form of the Statute,

Nicholas Caplin.	James Wood.
Richard Cawtham.	Thomas Gilby.
Arthur Young.	John Odenſel.
William Yap.	Emanuel Coniers.

After which the Court proceeded, and the Recorder began to open the Offence, as follows.

Sir George Jefferies. Mr. Recorder. This Perſon among others, intending to ſcandalize the Government, hath cauſed a Book to be publiſhed, which I have here in my Hand, called, The Weekly Packet of Advice from Rome; there are ſome Papers beſides what are bound up together, that are continued on, which, my Lord, would not be amiſs for us that are of the King's Counſel to take notice of, not only for the Jury's Satisfaction, but likewiſe for the Satisfaction of this great Auditory, ſome whereof I know come to pick Advantage, and to know whether or no Raſcals may have Liberty to print what they pleaſe. Now all the Judges of England having been met together, to know whether any Perſon whatſoever may expoſe to the publick Knowledge any manner of Intelligence, or any Matter whatſoever that concerns the Publick: They give it in as their Reſolution, that no Perſon whatſoever could expoſe to the publick Knowledge any thing that concern'd the Affairs of the Publick without Licence from the King, or from ſuch Perſons as he thought fit to entruſt with that Affair. But ſuch is the Age that we live in, that a man that hath Wit enough to libel any man in the Government, thinks he hath Licence enough to expoſe that man to publick Knowledge alſo. And they do it under ſpecious Pretences, becauſe they think that any man may be expoſed to the publick Cenſure, that they can either call a Papiſt, or but popiſhly affected, and that man is either the one or the other, that is not agreeable to every Raſcally Humour that ſome People affect. I acknowledge, my Lord, that any man that will in a legal manner endeavour to ſuppreſs Popery, ought to be encouraged in his Endeavour, to the utmoſt, but if in caſe any man will be tranſported with Zeal, becauſe he is of a Party, and under pretence of endeavouring to ſuppreſs Popery, ſhould ſupport a Party, that man ought to be detected. The Author of this Packet of Advice from] Rome, or the Publiſher of it, Mr. Carr, that is now the Defendant, he thinks he can ſcratch the Itch of the Age, and that he may libel any man concern'd in the Government, if he can but call him a Papiſt or popiſhly affected; let a man be never ſo honeſt, let a man be never ſo much for the Support of that Religion that every honeſt man ought to ſupport, that is, the Proteſtant Religion as it is Eſtabliſh'd by Law, without going to Rome or Amſterdam for Aſſiſtance. I will not mention the Perſons that are concern'd in it, but I will apply my ſelf wholly to this Matter, that it is the Opinion of all the Judges of England, that it is the Law of the Land, that no Perſon ſhould offer to expoſe to publick Knowledge any thing that concerns the Government without the King's immediate Licence. Now we are to try whether this Perſon expoſed this thing to publick Knowledge, and that is Matter, Gentlemen, that you are to try. The other is the Buſineſs of the Court, we are to ſay whether, if we prove the Fact, this man is guilty of Puniſhment, and no doubt the Juſtice of the Nation will puniſh him. But when I ſee ſo many ſwarm about me, I am willing to hear what Proof there is.

Sir Francis Winnington. I am of Counſel for the Defendant, I only offer it to your Lordſhip, that the Information may be proved.

L. C. J. Here are two things we are to keep to, the Matter of Proof according to the Information, and accordingly are we to proceed as in common Juſtice we find the Caſe to be. I muſt ſay that for the Priſoner, he has behav'd himſelf with as much Modeſty as in Duty and Honeſty he ought, but I find that Sir Francis Winnington puts you upon proving.

Sir Francis Withins. My Lord, we will prove it.

L. C. J. Let them that are not of the Jury go forth, the Jury is no more to be corrupted than the Judge. Sir William Scroggs.

Sir Francis Withins. We muſt be allowed the firſt part, that there was a Plot.

L. C. J. The Jury may take that upon their Oaths, they know there was a Plot, the certaineſt of any thing of Fact that ever came before me.

Mr. Stevens, Printer.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Carr own he writ this Packet, had you any from him?

Printer. I had ſeveral from him.

L. C. J. Of whom elſe had you any?

Mr. Recorder. Beſides Carr.

L. C. J. You are upon your Oath, from whom ever had you any beſides?

Printer. I do not remember that I had any from any body elſe.

L. C. J. You printed them, did you?

Printer. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. And you know of none from any elſe, but by him or his Orders.

Printer. No, my Lord.

Sir Francis Winnington. Shew him the Paper. Can you ſwear upon your Oath, that Mr. Carr did ſend or deliver to you that very Paper?

Printer. I can't tell that any body elſe did ſend it.

L. C. J. We muſt do here, as we do in all Caſes, He ſaith, I had divers of theſe Papers from him, I printed them, and I know of none that ever was but by him or his Order.

Sir Fr. Winnington. He ſaith ſo, but, my Lord, the Information is to ſuch a particular Book, Entitled A Packet of Advice from Rome.

L. C. J. He ſays this in Anſwer to it, I can't charge my ſelf with this particular, to ſay poſitively I had it from him: But this I can ſay, we had ſeveral from him, and I know of none elſe, but all were by him or his Order.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Will your Lordſhip give me leave to ask him one Queſtion; Can you ſwear that any that came from him contained the very Matter in that Book? Was it the Matter or Words?

Mr. Recorder. Do you believe it?

Sir Fr. Winnington. Good Mr. Recorder let me alone. Can you ſay it is the very Matter contain'd in that Paper?

Printer. I can't ſay that.

L. C. J. It is not an eaſie matter for a Man to remember the Matter of a Paper that is writ on all ſides. He ſwears that they had ſeveral, and that they had none, tho' he printed them, from any but him or his Order. This Queſtion Sir Francis Winnington asks, Had you this particular Paper from him, he cannot ſwear it was the ſame he had from him, but he does ſwear all the Weekly Intelligences were from him or his Order; he does not ſwear for the Matter of this Book, which no Man will do: But he does ſwear that theſe Papers were always by him or his Orders, and that ſeveral were received from him.

Mr. Williams. I ask you upon your Oath, he brought it to you in Writing, did he not?

Printer. They came in Writing.

Mr. Williams. Have you any of theſe Papers to ſhew?

Printer. We did not regard them when they were printed.

L. C. J. His Cauſe ſhall be try'd very juſtly, and very indifferently.

Mr. Williams. Had you ever a Paper from Carr's Hand or no?

Printer. We had few from his own Hand.

Mr. Williams. Had you any?

Printer. I can't remember.

L. C. J. Had you any? You are upon your Oath.

Printer. My Lord, I can't remember.

L. C. J. Had you one, or two?

Printer. Indeed, my Lord, I can't remember. I can't ſay upon my Oath he ever brought one.

L. C. J. How then came you to ſay, you had ſeveral from him?

Printer. Ay, my Lord, from him, that is, by him or his Order.

L. C. J. Are you ſure it was by his Order?

Printer. I did conceive ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. Had he any Money?

Printer. From me?

L. C. J. Had he any Money from any body for printing any of theſe Papers, as you can remember?

Printer. I do ſuppoſe ſo, I have heard he had.

L. C. J. Did you give him any?

Printer. No, my Lord, I was not concern'd. The Publiſher, my Lord, was between him and me.

L. C. J. Who is that?

Printer. That is one Curtis.

L. C. J. Did Curtis pay him any Money?

Printer. I never ſaw him pay him any, my Lord.

L. C. J. Hath he owned at any time he had any Money?

Printer. My Lord, I never had any Occaſion for that Queſtion.

L. C. J. Have you talk'd with Carr?

Printer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now I ſhall have you: For I do believe you are an honeſt Man. Did Carr ever own himſelf to you to be the Author of this Book, or any of theſe Papers?

Printer. My Lord, as I ſaid in the other Caſe, ſo I ſay in this, I had no Occaſion to diſpute it, I took it for granted.

L. C. J. Have you ever heard him own it?

Printer. I have heard him deny it.

L. C. J. How did you come to take it for granted that he was the Author, when he did once deny, but never own'd it? Anſwer me that Queſtion, and thou ſhalt be a brave man.

Printer. My Lord, there was never Occaſion for that Diſcourſe.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, you muſt anſwer me in a Way agreeable to common Reaſon and Underſtanding. Why did you ſay juſt now you took it for granted that he was the Author, and yet you ſay he hath deny'd it, and never owned it? Why ſhould you then believe he was the Author?

Printer. I don't ſay, my Lord, he never own'd it.

L. C. J. What tricks we have in this World?

Mr. Recorder. I would ask the Gentleman, I will not quarrel with him at all, if he thinks not in his own Conſcience he has reaſon to quarrel with himſelf. Did he ever own it to you?

Printer. I don't remember he ever own'd it to me in ſo many Words.

L. C. J. Did he treat with you in theſe Circumſtances as if he were the Author?

Printer. Yes, my Lord, I grant that.

Mr. Recorder. But do you ſwear it is ſo? We don't care for your granting: I ask you upon your Oath, did you ever diſcourſe him as the Author of theſe Papers?

Printer. I ſuppoſed him to be the Author.

L. C. J. Did he deny it, or baulk when you diſcours'd him of this Matter?

Printer. My Lord, I muſt needs ſay as I ſaid before, it was taken for granted.

Mr. Williams. You had it in Writing, Where are thoſe Writings?

Printer. We ſeldom regard thoſe Writings.

L. C. J. It is hard to find the Author, it is not hard to find the Printer: But one Author found is better than twenty Printers found.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I will ask this man a Queſtion. Upon your Oath, Who brought you that Writing?

Printer. What Writing?

Mr. Williams. That by which it was Printed: Who brought you that Paper?

Printer. I don't remember particularly I had any of Mr. Carr himſelf.

Mr. Williams. Can you name the Perſon that brought this Paper, or any One Perſon that brought any one Paper?

Printer. There was a little Boy.

Mr. Williams. Whoſe Boy?

Printer. Mr. Carr's Boy.

Mr. Recorder. Now it is out.

Mr. Williams. Name the Boy.

Printer. I do not know his Name.

Mr. Williams. Can you name another, can you name any body elſe?

Printer. Truly, Sir, I don't remember any body elſe.

Mr. Williams. Now I will ask you one thing: Had you any Directions for the Printing this Paper?

L. C. J. To what purpoſe was this written Paper brought to you?

Printer. To be printed, my Lord.

Mr. Williams. Who gave Directions?

Printer. It was the Publiſher that chiefly directed me.

Mr. Wil-

Mr. Williams. Who was that?

Printer. I have named him.

Mr. Williams. Name him again.

Printer. Curtis.

Mr. Williams. Did Carr never direct you to Print this Paper?

Printer. He did not deal immediately with me.

Mr. Recorder. When the little Boy came, who did you take him to come from? From Mr. Carr, or Mr. Curtis?

Printer. From Mr. Carr.

L. C. J. He ſays he was Carr's Boy, and that he came from him: This I ſpeak to the Jury; and I promiſe you this, if my Life and Fortune were at ſtake, I would be Try'd by this Jury at the Bar, and would do in this, as in all Caſes. Mr. Carr is looked upon as the Author of this Book; that it either came from him, or by his Order, his Boy (he can remember no body elſe) did bring it. This is now remaining only: Are you ſure Mr. Carr ſent him? Saith he, We talked with Mr. Carr ſeveral times.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Thus it is, my Lord, in the Information, Malicioſe & illicite imprimi cauſavit & publicavit. Now I would only ask him a Queſtion, my Lord; Whether or no did Mr. Carr own to you, that he ſent the Boy to have it Printed?

Printer. No, Sir, I think not.

L. C. J. That is the ſame Queſtion asked before. Did Mr. Carr ever own it as his or no? Upon your Oath, Did Carr own this Pacquet to be his, when you diſcourſed with him about it?

Printer. My Lord, I humbly crave your leave to explain my ſelf. I mean by the Diſcourſe I had, common Converſation, as the drinking a Glaſs of Wine; but I know not that ever we diſcourſed upon this thing.

L. C. J. I mean ſo: When you talked about this matter, Did you take it, by his Diſcourſe, for granted, that he was the man that publiſhed it?

Printer. I took it for granted, becauſe I had it from him.

L. C. J. What ſay you to this? Have you blamed Carr for writing too ſharply in this Book againſt the Government?

Printer. My Lord, I do confeſs I have.

L. C. J. What Anſwer hath he made, when you blamed him for writing too ſharply, as you thought? Did he deny that he did it?

Printer. I don't remember that.

L. C. J. What ſort of Anſwer did he make to excuſe it? That he thought it not too ſharp; or did he ſay, I care not.

Printer. My Lord, I can't particularly ſay what Anſwer he made.

L. C. J. When you blamed him, by the Oath you have taken, upon that Blame of yours, did he deny he wrote it?

Printer. No, my Lord, I do not remember he did.

Mr. Williams. Did Carr at any time deny he was the Author or Publiſher of it?

Printer. He hath at ſome times.

Mr. Williams. What did he deny?

Printer. That he was the Author.

Mr. Williams. Of what Book?

Printer. Of the Pacquet.

L. C. J. Did he deny he was the Author of this particular Book for this Week, or deny it in general? Did he deny in general, that he was the Author of that Book that is called, The Pacquet of Advice?

Printer. I have heard him ſay ſometimes, that he was not the Author.

Mr. Recorder. And ſometimes what?

Printer. I have heard him ſay ſome time or other that he was not the Author.

Mr. Recorder. And what elſe?

The Printer's Servant.

Mr. Williams. Are you acquainted with Carr?

Man. I never had any Converſe with him.

Mr. Williams. Do you know any thing of the Pacquet of Advice?

Man. I know we have had Pacquets from him: I fetched ſome from him.

Mr. Williams. What, from his Hands?

Man. Yes.

Mr. Williams. What, from his own Hands?

Man. Yes, in pieces, no whole Sheets.

Printer. This is my Servant, I am not always there.

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, I would ask this man a Queſtion. This Printed Paper, that is put in the Information, Did he ever deliver that to you?

Man. I can't ſpeak particularly to any one.

Mr. Recorder. But generally to all?

L. C. J. Have you done?

Mr. Williams. I ask you a Queſtion?

L. C. J. If you could, Mr. Williams, ſhew me any Author beſides Mr. Carr, I would ſay ſomething.

Mr. Williams. Who brought you this Paper?

Man. Which Paper?

Mr. Williams. I don't ſpeak of this Paper particularly. Did Any bring any beſides Carr?

Man. Yes, his Boy.

Mr. Williams. Did any body elſe bring any from any place?

Man. No body elſe that I know of.

Mr. Williams. The Pacquet he brought you, had it been Printed before? I ask you upon your Oath, was it Printed before he brought it?

L. C. J. Did he bring Papers to Print that were never Printed?

Man. They were never Printed, that I know of.

Mr. Williams. Did he bring any to Print?

Man. I can't ſay he brought any.

Mr. Williams. Did Mr. Carr bring any?

Man. No, the Boy.

Mr. Williams. Who directed you to Print them? Did Carr direct you?

Man. I can't tell, I am a Servant in the Houſe.

L. C. J. I will aſſure you a Non eſt Factum can't paſs at this rate.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Who did you take to be the man that ſent you all the Pacquets?

Man. I very ſeldom took any, becauſe I was not always in ſight.

L. C. J. Who did you underſtand?

Man. I underſtood they came from Mr. Carr.

L. C. J. Have you any more? Read the Words in the Information.

Clerk. Friday the 1ſt of Auguſt, 1679. 'There is lately found out by an experienced Phyſician, an incomparable Medicament, called, The Wonder-working Plaiſter. Truly Catholick in Operation; ſomewhat of Kin to the Jeſuits Powder, but more effectual. The Vertues of it are ſtrange and various. It makes Juſtice deaf, as well as blind, and takes out Spots of the deepeſt Treaſon more cleverly than Caſtle Soap does common Stains. It alters alters a man's Conſtitution in 2 or 3 days, more than the Virtuoſi's Tranſfuſion of Blood in 7 years. 'Tis a great Alexipharmick, and helps Poiſons, and thoſe that uſe them. It miraculouſly exalts and purifies the Eye ſight, and makes People behold nothing but Innocency in the blackeſt malefactors. 'Tis a mighty Cordial for a declining Cauſe; it ſtifles a Plot as certainly as the Itch is deſtroyed by Butter and Brimſtone. In a word, it makes Fools Wiſe Men, and Wiſe Men Fools, and both of them Knaves. The Colour of this precious Balm is bright and dazling, and being applied privately to the Fiſt, in decent manner, and a competent Doſe, infallibly performs all the ſaid Cures, and many others, not fit here to be mentioned. Probatum eſt.

Sir Fr. Winnington. I am Counſel for the Defendant. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel in this Cauſe: And the Queſtion is, Whether or no we muſt take the Information as it lies? And truly, for the firſt part of it, whether there was a Plot or no, I do not intend to make Exceptions: for I believe there was one, and do intend to take it as in the Information. Gentlemen, We are to proceed now to this other Queſtion; which is, my Lord, Whether or no this Defendant, that is, Carr, did falſly and maliciouſly, and with deſign to ſcandalize the Government, cauſe to be printed and publiſhed this falſe Libel that is in the Information. Now truly, my Lord, we that are for the Defendant, ſay we are not guilty. My Lord, we very well know how penal a thing it is, for a man to be the Author of a Libel that relates to the Scandal of the Government. And, my Lord, whether this Defendant be guilty of this, or no, we muſt ſubmit that to your Lordſhip's and the Jury's Conſideration. They have produced 2 Witneſſes, that is to ſay, the Printer, and his Man. Now, my Lord, there hath been going out for ſome time, A Weekly Pacquet of Advice from Rome; and I did ask the Witneſſes (for the Information points at one Paragraph, and puts the Paragraph in hæc verba) I did ask him, whether or no he did ſend, or, whether the matter that he ſent, is that contained in this Information. That he could not Swear: But muſt be left in point of Evidence, it being, we allow, a very penal matter. The ſecond Witneſs, and the firſt Witneſs likewiſe, ſay, there was a Boy, but whether that Boy came by his Maſter's direction, he does not know. I ask'd him, if ever his maſter ſent the Boy; he does not know, he ſays, that he ſent him. But the laſt Witneſs ſays, divers were had from the Hands of Carr; but whether it was the thing that is now complained of, there is the Queſtion, and that is in the dark: For, by your Lordſhip's leave, I do not underſtand that ever this man was complained of to any publick Magiſtrate for writing this Book; for it was thought he was a Satyriſt againſt Popery, and thought to be very well lik'd on till this Fault was found with it; and it may be very juſtly, whether or no we be guilty of this, is uncertain: For we know, in the Age we live in, there are too many ſhams put upon men; and who knows, but that the Papiſts, that might have an ill will to this Mr. Carr, that hath been no Friend to them, might ſhuffle in this Paragraph, by that means to have Juſtice come upon him. I would not contrive againſt common Evidence, where a man is guilty to the Publick; but we know there are abundance of Artifices in this Age to abuſe men. For this purpoſe I hope your Lordſhip and the Jury will expect that you ſhould have poſitive Evidence againſt him. Now granting your Lordſhip ſhould have conjectural Evidence, that he did cauſe it to be printed and publiſhed, that this man did write it, is, I ſay, very uncertain, for there is no poſitive Evidence. What a man may have in his private Thoughts of it, is not enough: But, whether ſecundum allegata & probata, it ſhall be alledged and proved, that this man was the Author of it. Now, my Lord, I ſay, I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, I ſay, that as to the cauſing it to be Printed, or the cauſing it to be Publiſhed, or that this individual Paragraph was writ by him in order to its being Printed or Publiſhed, my Lord, I ſay, there is but remote and conjectural Evidence; and an angry Papiſt might contrive this way to have an innocent Proteſtant found guilty.

People. Hem——

L. C. J. You ſee what a Caſe we are in, Gentlemen, you ſee what a ſort of People we are got among. Go on Sir Francis.

Sir Fr. Winnington. With your Lordſhip's leave I have one thing to put to your Lordſhip. The Information ſays, falſe, illicite & malicioſe. I know there are ſome things that do imply malice in themſelves. Truly, my Lord, I am upon a tender Point, and know not how to expreſs my ſelf. I ſay, ſuppoſing it ſhould fall out, that this man writ this Book, and he might have ſome little Extravagancies in his Head in writing; Whether this man did it maliciouſly to ſcandalize the Government, as the Information ſays, is a Queſtion. Truly, my Lord, there is many an indiſcreet Act a man may be guilty of, that cannot be called a malicious Act; and that is the ſecond thing: There muſt be Evidence that this man did it maliciouſly, or that he did it with a deſign to ſcandalize the Government. If you be of Opinion, that it is otherwiſe, that is in your Lordſhip's Breaſt; we are of the Negative, and we ſay, we can't prove a Negative. But if you find him innocent, I ſuppoſe there will be no cauſe to complain of him afterwards, for he had no malice in his Heart.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, it can never be ſuppoſed that a good man, and a good Subject, ſhould do an ill Action. If he be a very good Subject, if he be upon a ſquare, in every reſpect, a Perſon that loves his King, and loves the Government in Church and in State; if he be ſuch a Perſon, he cannot be thought guilty: My Lord, we will prove him to be ſuch a man, and I hope the Gentlemen will believe us.

Call Mr. Sutton, Mr. Ayliffe, and Mr. Ambler.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Sutton, Do you know Mr. Carr?

Mr. Sutton. I know him very well.

Mr. Williams. How long ſince have you known him?

Mr. Sutton. Two or three years.

Mr. Williams. Does he go to Church or Meetings?

Mr. Sutton. He hath been with me at Church often.

Mr. Recorder. Does he receive the Sacrament according to the manner of the Church of England?

Mr. Sutton.

Mr. Sutton. I was never with him at the Sacrament.

Mr. Williams. Is he one of them you call Diſſenters?

L. C. J. Did he ever diſcourſe with you concerning this Book?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, I have often ſpoken to him.

L. C. J. Has he diſowned he was the Author?

Mr. Sutton. He has ſometimes.

L. C. J. How do you believe it was upon that Diſcourſe?

Mr. Sutton. I do not think he is able to write ſuch a Book.

L. C. J. That is not the Queſtion, anſwer me what I ask.

Mr. Sutton. It did ſeem ſomething like his writing methought.

L. C. J. Did it ſeem by his Anſwer to your Diſcourſe with him?

Mr. Recorder. Pray tell us, Did you look upon him to be the Author?

L. C. J. By the Diſcourſe you had with him, How did it appear upon that Diſcourſe? Pray tell us plainly and clearly, how do you think, by the Diſcourſe you had with him concerning this Pamphlet, whether he was the Author or no?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, about a year, or a year and an half ſince, I did ask him whether this Book were Licenced? He told me it was Licenſed by Mr. L'Eſtrange; but he did not tell me he was the Author.

L. C. J. How did it ſeem by his Diſcourſe?

Mr. Sutton. I did apprehend he might write it.

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, but the Queſtion is, whether he writ this Paragraph.

Mr. Ambler.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Ambler, pray do you acquaint my Lord, do you know Mr. Carr?

Mr. Ambler. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Mr. Ambler. Three years.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Of what Converſation is he, and how affected to the Government?

Mr. Ambler. He went to Church with me.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Do you look upon him as a man well affected to the Government? Do you think he would maliciouſly write any thing to ſcandalize the Government?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How do we know how Mr. Ambler underſtands the Government?

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Ambler. Had you any diſcourſe with him about the Pacquet of Advice?

Mr. Ambler. Never in my Life.

Mr. Recorder. Did you ever hear of the Book?

Mr. Ambler. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. Upon your Oath, Did you look upon him to be the Author?

Mr. Ambler. The common report was, that Mr. Carr was.

Mr. Ayliffe.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Ayliffe, Do you know Mr. Carr?

Mr. Ayliffe. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Is he a conformable man to the Government in Church and State? Does he go to hear Common-Prayer?

Mr. Ayliffe. I have ſeen him at Church, and at Divine Service.

Mr. Recorder. Did he behave himſelf reverently there?

Mr. Ayliffe. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Do you think he writ this?

Mr. Ayliffe. My Lord, I never asked him.

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, it ſeems he was accounted the Author of the Books; but whether of this particular one in the Information, we conceive not proved.

Mr. Recorder. If we ſhould not do right, we diſclaim that Service we owe to the Crown, and that reſpect we owe to the Government, as honeſt men, and as true Proteſtants, and as much againſt Papiſts as any men whatſoever. I ſhall endeavour to give the World Satisfaction, that this man is guilty of this Offence. My Lord, for any man to come and pretend that we muſt prove, that a man is malicious; or becauſe that a man writes againſt the Papiſts, he muſt never therefore be convicted of malice, ſurely is a ſtrange Argument: And I wonder to hear any man that pretends to Reaſon, men of Senſe, and Conſcience, and Underſtanding, ſo out of their common Senſe and Underſtanding, as to make that go as an Argument. Gentlemen, the things themſelves beſpeak their malice. For ſo we in our common Diſcourſe, when we bring our common Actions (of which you have heard a number) if in caſe any man call a man Thief, we ſay he does falſly, and maliciouſly, and ſcandalouſly call a man Thief: If we prove he called him Thief, the very thing does intimate he does it falſly, ſcandalouſly, and maliciouſly; therefore the thing it ſelf is a ſufficient indication of the Malice and Depravity of it. There's no man but may know in plain Engliſh what's the meaning of theſe Words; it is as plain as can be in the World: We muſt debauch our Underſtandings, and be as great Doltheads, as they would make all men that will be of their Party, if we don't plainly ſee into the meaning of theſe words, That Juſtice is to be bribed with Money. In the next place, Gentlemen, we do not come and ſay, that the Information lies againſt theſe very particular Words; that is a miſtake of the Information: But the Information is, That he did cauſe to be Printed and Publiſhed a Book, in which among others, there were ſuch Words as theſe; tho' if they had been the very Words themſelves, the very Words have been proved. Now, There is no better Proof under the Heavens, than the Proof we have offered. The Printer himſelf, he comes here and ſays, That Carr did acknowledge himſelf the Author, and he did generally publiſh the Book; I appeal if you do not believe it. This they would now come and excuſe; for they are glad to make a Raſcal of any of their Party, if they can but ſave a man that is Guilty. But things come out with much difficulty and much ſtraitneſs; and I muſt ſay, if ever any thing were an inſtance of Popery, then that man is one of the Jeſuited'ſt Fellows that ever was; for he does cant ſo like them, that a man can't tell how to govern himſelf. Who was it that ſhould write theſe things? Truly, he had diſcourſed with him about the matter. Who ſent the Boy? Do you know? Truly I can't tell: And wonderful great Snuffling and Canting before he comes to the Buſineſs. Beſides, what can there be more plain than the Proof-pieces before the Publiſhing? T'other man ſays, That he was the man that fetched Pieces ces from Carr's own Hand, and that he always looked upon it that all did come from Carr.

Now every man that knows any thing of Printing, knows this, that after it hath firſt taken the Preſs, it is always carried back again to the Author, to ſee whether it be done according to his Mind; and after that, it comes to the publick View. And that this man, Carr is the Author, Mr. Sutton and the reſt of his Witneſſes, if they ſpeak according to Conſcience, they themſelves looked upon this very man to be the Author. Their own Witneſſes looked upon it ſo. It was not only the private Opinion of theſe Men, but the general Report of all. So that, my Lord, had it not been neceſſary to the Support of the Government, I ſhould have ſcarce troubled my ſelf to give your Lordſhip and the Jury this Trouble. But I muſt ſay, and I do believe, that there is no man whatſoever, that ſtands to have Vices of this Nature convicted and puniſhed, but deſires the Proteſtant Religion may be ſupported to the utmoſt, and that Popery may be ſuppreſs'd. But I ſay, who ever it is, that after this Evidence, who is bound by his Oath to go according to Evidence, ſhall acquit this man, he muſt be a man of a humming Conſcience indeed.

Sir Fr. Winnington. I ſhall hint one thing to your Lordſhip in this Caſe: That it is an unlikely thing that a Papiſt ſhould ſet out this Packet at this time. For then my Lord, how came it to paſs, that Mr. Carr had none came out that Week; for his is a Weekly Intelligence. If Mr. Carr's had came out, and this likewiſe, there had been ſome Pretence for this: But ſince there came out but one, that the Papiſts ſet out this is unlikely. They have not pretended to bring in any body elſe as the Author; but their own Witneſſes ſay, and they themſelves ſay, he was looked upon as the Author. Thoſe things that are done againſt the Government, are never done in the Face of the Government.

L. C. J. Really, Gentlemen, I thought not that this had been a Cauſe of that Moment, that now I find it. For their very Diſturbance hath altered it from Mr. Carr's, to a publick Concern. The Noiſe which they make, this way that theſe People uſe, that with their Shouts and Noiſe attend the Cauſe, hath quite ſpoiled it. As in the Caſe of Harris. But thoſe People that did then attend him, leave following him in a Goal, for Five hundred Pounds, which may be Five Shillings a piece had diſcharged him of, if they had been as free of their Purſes as they are of their Noiſes and Acclamations: So that in Truth, they are only violent againſt the Government whilſt they can make Shouts and Noiſes, but if it comes once to deliver a man from a penal Sum, they will let him rot in Goal. For ſo Harris ſent to me, that his Party had all forſaken him, and no man would give him any thing. And this is for thoſe Hummers, thoſe brave Fellows that ſeem to eſpouſe a Cauſe, and yet leave their Party in diſtreſs: But let them go away with this, that they prove themſelves hereby Enemies to the Government, and falſe to that Intereſt, and Men that they ſeem to eſpouſe; that come only here to affront a Court of Juſtice with their Shouts and Noiſes, and will not relieve their Party: For this is the Complaint of Harris, and the Diſparagement of all men that come to eſpouſe it. This Cauſe, the Truth on't is, I did not look upon to be of this Nature and Moment, when it was open'd. For though there are in this very Paper upon which the Information is grounded, Words malicious and reflective enough; yet, they were not ſo apparently appropriated, that a man might obſerve an extraordinary Deſign in them. This I thought, but really, the Caſe is altered, even by thoſe Men. For, I'll tell you, Harris is poor, and his keeping in Priſon, is principally occaſioned, from the Manner of the Reception of his Puniſhment, which he calls, His Pardon. And therefore, theſe Fellows, theſe Hummers, let them all know, whenever they come to eſpouſe a Cauſe of publick Concern againſt the Government, they ſpoil it; and when they are taken, then they ruin one another. And this is like to be ſo, for none will help them with a Groat. And this is the Misfortune of that unfortunate Man Harris, that he hath no place of Mercy left him from the King, becauſe, he was attended with ſuch a Rabble, as theſe People are, that have made a Noiſe here, and yet, will give him no Help nor Aſſiſtance when he wants it. And, let them know, it hath turned this man's Cauſe into a publick Cauſe, becauſe, here are People that do eſpouſe it, and the Government is hereby concerned much more, than by any one Action that this Carr could have done. I have ſaid ſo much more of this, that I might ſhew you to what a ſad Cauſe this is brought, from what at firſt it was. For, if it had paſſed without ſuch a Noiſe, as you ſee how they expreſs themſelves, I ſhould not have thought much Matter in it; and though you had convicted him, I ſhould have thought a better Sentence might have ſerved the turn: But, they have undone Carr, if you find him guilty, and ſo, it's like to prove, when ever there is popular Attendance upon publick Cauſes that concern the Government.

The preſent Caſe, it ſtands thus. Mr. Carr, here is an Information brought againſt him for publiſhing a printed Pamphlet, call'd, The Packet of Advice from Rome, and in it there are recited ſome Particulars, which were obſerved to you before, which was not well done; but yet, not ſo inſolently done, as ſome perhaps do conceit. The Queſtion is, whether he was the Author or Publiſher of this. You hear, he is thought the Author, but ſay his Counſel, it is not plain, and that is true. But, it ſeems by their own Witneſſes, to any man's Underſtanding, that they look'd upon him as the Author. But then, is he the Author and Publiſher of this particular Book? I had rather, Mr. Carr, with all his Faults about him, and his Hummers, ſhould go away with Applauſe, and have him found not Guilty, than do him Wrong in one Circumſtance: For, I come to try Cauſes according to the Truth of Fact. I come not to plead on one ſide nor another. Nor to condemn men that are innocent; nor to acquit them if they be guilty. Now, it remains for you to conſider, what Proofs you have, as to this particular Book, againſt which the Information lies. And that's the Printer himſelf, who is one of the beſt ſorts of Evidence that can be had: For, you very well know, that Evidences of Fact are to be expected according to the Nature of the thing. That is, Forgery is not to be prov'd ſo plainly, as to expect Witneſſes, as you do at the Sealing of a Bond; for, Men do not call Witneſſes when they forge a thing. Therefore, in things of that Nature, we are fain to retreat to ſuch probable and conjectural Evidence as the Matter will bear. I believe ſome of you have been of Juries at the Old-Baily, and that even for Mens Lives, you have very often not a direct Proof of the Fact, of the Act, or of the actual Killing; but yet, you have ſuch Evidence by Preſumption, as ſeems reaſonable to Conſcience. If, there be a known Caſe in Mens Lives, certainly, that ſhould govern in Offences, and eſpecially, when Offences are of a nature that reflects upon the Government. As for thoſe Words, Illicite, malicioſe, unlawful; for that I muſt recite what Mr. Recorder told you of at firſt, what all the Judges of England have declared under their Hands. The Words I remember, are theſe, when by the King's Command, we were to give in our Opinion, what was to be done in Point of the Regulation of the Preſs. We did all ſubſcribe, that to Print, or Publiſh any News Books or Pamphlets of News whatſoever, is illegal; that, it is a manifeſt Intent to the Breach of the Peace, and they may be proceeded againſt by Law for an illegal thing. Suppoſe now, that this thing is not ſcandalous, what then? If there had been no Reflection in this Book at all, yet it is illicite, and the Author ought to be convicted for it. And that is for a publick Notice to all all People, and eſpecially Printers and Bookſellers, that they ought to print no Book, or Pamphlet of News whatſoever, without Authority. So as he is to be convicted for it as a thing illicite done, not having Authority. And I will aſſure you, if you find any of thoſe Papers, I ſhall be more merciful in the Conſideration of their Puniſhment, if it be inoffenſive. But, if ſo be they will undertake to print News fooliſhly, they ought to be puniſhed, and ſhall be puniſhed, if they do it without Authority, though there is nothing reflecting on the Government, as an unlawful thing. The Reaſon is plain. So fond are Men in theſe days, that when they will deny their Children a penny for Bread, they will lay it out for a Pamphlet. And it did ſo ſwarm, and the Temptations were ſo great, that no man could keep two pence in his Pocket becauſe of the News. But ſtill, they never repented of laying out their Money, till they found there was nothing againſt the Government. This is not worth a Farthing, there is nothing of Treaſon in it, we will not give a Farthing for it. Therefore this Book, if it be made by him to be publiſh'd, it is unlawful, whether it be malicious or not. Now for the Matter, the ſubject Matter. What, doth Carr think he hath too much Wit to fool us that are to try the Malice? It was ſillily writ, if he did not believe we underſtood it, and that were very intolerable in us; I hope, I ſpeak plain That is, the ſort of Books that he writ, it muſt be with an Intent People ſhould know what Reflections he made, and ſhall all Mankind know, and ſhall they that try the Cauſe not know it? If you find him guilty, and ſay what he is guilty of, we will judge whether the thing imports Malice or no. Sir Francis Winnington hath told you, there are ſome things, that do neceſſarily imply Malice in them. If this thing doth not imply it, then the Judges will go according to Sentence, if it doth, ſo that it concerns not you one Farthing, whether malicious, or not malicious, that's plain. Now, there remains only one thing, that is, whether or no he was the Publiſher of this Book? For that we have this Evidence. The Printer tells you, he was the Perſon that they looked upon to be the Author of this Book, that he ſent this Book to be printed by his Boy. The Printer ſaith, that he often diſcours'd with him, and he took it for granted. His Boy brought it. To what purpoſe? To be printed. The Printer's Servant ſays, they looked upon him as the Author, and I have fetched Sheet by Sheet, ſeveral Sheets from his own Hand. I will do right in the Caſe, be it what it will, let him eſcape or not. Say his Counſel, Had you this particular Paper from him? I urge this as clearly, as their own Counſel have objected. For that you muſt conſider, whether he is the Author of the Book. You muſt take Evidence in this Caſe, as you do all the Year long; that is, in other Caſes, where you know there is an abſolute Certainty, that the thing is ſo: For humane Frailty muſt be allowed; that is, you may be miſtaken. For, you do not ſwear, nor are you bound to ſwear here, that he was the Publiſher of this Book; but, if you find him guilty, you only ſwear, you believe it ſo. God help Juries, if ſo be, in matter of Fact, they ſhould promiſe otherwiſe. They can't ſwear it. Now, the Queſtion is, whether you have Evidence enough here to ſwear he was the Publiſher: For this is the main thing, to prove that he is ſo. Now the Printer tells you that he knew the man; that he had frequent Converſe with him about it, and that he took it for granted. Now conſider, when a man talks at this rate, he does not ſay he was, but that he took it for granted, he does not as much as ſay he is. They will own he writ ſeveral Sheets of this Book; then, why not all this Book? Now, we come to the more principle Matter of Fact, according to Reaſon, and the probable Evidence of things. That this Perſon is taken to be the Author, and that it was his Boy that brought theſe Papers to be Printed. If you can't ſay he ſent him, you can give no Verdict while you live, if you expect that. The Printer ſays, he hath been often diſcourſing with him, that his Boy brought them, and that he knew no other Perſon in the World that had any Pretenſions to be the Author, and if he were the Author, no doubt, but he is the Publiſher. Whether or no any body elſe had an hand in this, we don't know. If you are ſatisfied in your Conſciences, that you believe he is not the Author, you muſt acquit him. If you are ſatisfied it is not he, you muſt find him not guilty. So that as you are honeſt Men and wiſe, as I believe you are; if you believe he was not the Publiſher of this Pamphlet, that he did not ſend his Boy to have it Printed, but that he came of his own Head, you muſt find him not guilty.

The Jury went from the Bar, and nigh an hour after returned, and brought him in Guilty.

L. C. J. You have done like honeſt Men.

Mr. Recorder. They have done like honeſt Men.

Cl. of Assize. Thomas Thwing, hold up thy Hand. Mary Pressicks, hold up thy Hand.

[Which being done.]

Cl. of Assize. This understand ye, That these Gentlemen that are now to be Sworn, are Returned by the Sheriff of this County, to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you for your Lives: Therefore if you will Challenge any of them, you are to Challenge them as they come to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

Cl. of

In the calling of the Jury, after ſeveral Challenges made, and ſome of the Jury Sworn, Thwing ſpoke thus:

Thwing. My Lord, I ſhall willingly ſtand to the other Jury.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What Jury?

Thwing. My Lady Tempeſt's Jury.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Oh, your Servant; you either are very fooliſh, or take me to be ſo.

The Jury being Sworn.

Cl. of Aſſize. Cryer, Count theſe.

Cryer. Twelve good men and true, ſtand together and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Aſſize. Thomas Thwing, hold up thy Hand. [which he did.] Mary Preſſicks, hold up thy Hand, [which ſhe did.] Gentlemen, you of the Jury that are Sworn, look upon the Priſoners and hearken to their Charge: You ſhall underſtand that they ſtand Indicted by the Names of Thomas Thwing, &c. and Mary Preſſicks, &c. Prout in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment they have been Arraign'd, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Tryal have put themſelves upon their Countrey, which Countrey you are, &c.

Then Proclamation was made for Evidence, and the Indictment being opened, and the Treaſons therein aggravated by the King's Counſel; Mr. Baron Atkyns came into the Court to aſſiſt in the Tryal.

The Witneſſes were called; Robert Bolron was firſt Sworn.

Bolron. My Lord, in the Year 1674. I came to live with Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, and was Steward of his Coal-pits; and in 1675 I turned Prieſt; and about January, 1676. Mr. Thwing, Father Ruſhton, and ſeveral others came to my Houſe at Shippon, and did there examine me how I ſtood affected to the Roman Catholick Religion, and whether I was reſolved to venture my Life and Eſtate in it, if there were any occaſion; to which I agreed, and was reſolved to obey my Ghoſtly Father in all things.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben taking notice of a Gentleman near the Priſoners, demanded, What is that Gentleman? We are all beſet; he was one of the Jury yeſterday. He being removed, Bolron proceeded.

Bolron. Father Ruſhton my Confeſſor gave me the Oath of Secrecy; and in the year 1677, Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, Sir Miles Stapleton, Mr. Thwing, the Priſoner, and ſeveral other Perſons, met at Barnbow hall, Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne's Houſe; and there they agreed, That in hopes the Plot of killing the King would take effect, they would erect a Nunnery at Dolebank; but the real intention was to have it at Heworth, within a mile of York, after the King was killed, and to avoid ſuſpicion, my Lady Tempeſt told them, ſhe would let them have Broughton for the preſent.

It was there agreed, that the King ſhould be killed: And Mr. Thwing ſaid, that if they miſſed this opportunity, they ſhould never have the like again, and the effecting of it would be very beneficial to the Church of Rome.

Note, That upon Sir T. Gaſcoyne's Tryal it appeared in his Almanack, that he had made this Memorial there with his own hand (viz.) The 15*th of* Apr. 1676. Memorand. acquaint Mr. T. Thwing with the whole Deſign.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Repeat it in the ſame Words.

Bolron. He ſaid, If we miſs this opportunity of killing the King, we ſhall never have the like again; and Mr. Thwing was to be the Confeſſor of the Nunnery for the preſent.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Where were theſe Words ſpoken?

Mr. Bolron. In the old Dining Room.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Who were preſent?

Mr. Bolron. Sir Miles Stapleton, Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, my Lady Tempeſt, Mr. Thwing, Mr. Ruſhton and ſome others.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was it agreed that the King ſhould be killed?

Mr. Bolron. It was, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Conſider ſeriouſly, you ſpeak in the preſence of God, and of a great Aſſembly; and that a Perſon's Life is at ſtake: Tell it again, what were the Words?

Mr. Bolron. It was agreed that the King ſhould be killed, and that it was for the good of the Catholick Religion; and I paid 10 l. to Mr. Ruſhton, in Mr. Thwing's preſence, towards killing the King, and ſaw a Liſt in Mr. Ruſhton's and Mr. Thwing's Hands, of the Names of ſeveral that engaged for promoting the Roman Catholick Religion; which was to be by killing the King.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Was it a Liſt of thoſe that were to kill the King?

Mr. Bolron. The Liſt I ſaw was of money raiſed to kill the King.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What was the Title of that Liſt?

Mr. Bolron. A Liſt of the Names of the Actors and Contributors, engaged in the Deſign of promoting the Roman Catholick Religion, and alſo of eſtabliſhing a Nunnery; which was raiſing money for the killing of the King. And beſides the 10 l. I paid towards it, I paid 5 l. to have my Soul pray'd for. Thwing told me afterwards at my Houſe, that in Yorkſhire, Lancaſhire and Darbyſhire, ſhire, 30000 l. was raiſed for the killing of the King; and that the Liſt was ſent beyond Sea.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What can you ſay againſt the Woman?

Mr. Bolron. Mrs. Preſſicks told me, That in 1678, preſently after the Plot was diſcovered, ſhe being in London, did hear a Woman cry after her, Stop the Papiſt, ſtop the Plotter; but ſhe got away, and afterwards durſt not appear publickly in London. I had Diſcourſe with her at my Houſe about the Plot; and ſhe told me, That Father Harcourt was her Confeſſor, and firſt engaged her in it; and that Pickering told her, that he was to have killed the King, and ſhe ſaid ſhe was ſorry he did not do it; and that Otes and Bedloe were two Rogues, and the Plot had not been diſcovered but for them, who were the cauſe of ſo much miſchief: And ſhe further told me, that the Gun wherewith he was to have killed the King, was found with Pickering, and ſhe did believe that was the cauſe of his loſing his Life: And ſhe ſaid, The King was an Aſs and not fit to govern; that what money the Parliament gave him he ſpent upon Whores and Concubines.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, is this all you have againſt her?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He hath done; you may croſs-examine him if you will.

Thwing. Who was at your Houſe when I was there?

Mr. Bolron. Father Ruſhton.

Thwing. How often was I there?

Mr. Bolron. Several times, I know not how often.

Thwing. When was it you accuſed me firſt of the Plot?

Mr. Bolron. When I went to the Council I accuſed him.

Thwing. He did not accuſe me of the Plot in ſeveral months.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Come, Mr. Mowbray, tell your knowledge.

Mr. Mowbray was Sworn.

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, what I have to ſay is only againſt Mr. Thwing. At an Aſſembly of divers Prieſts at Barmbow-hall, amongſt the reſt, there were Father Ruſhton and Mr. Thwing; and there they determined to kill the King.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. When was this?

Mr. Mowbray. This was near Michaelmas, 1676, and they declared it was not only lawful, but meritorious to do it: They alſo declared, That London and York were to be fired; and that Force was to be made uſe of againſt the King, and all other Hereticks that ſhould oppoſe the advancement of their Religion: And Mr. Thwing and Ruſhton declared, the King was an Heretick and Excommunicated by the Pope, and hadn't kept his Promiſe with the Jeſuits to bring in their Religion, and therefore deſerved to be killed, and it was not only lawful but meritorious ſo to do.

Mr. Belwood, of Counſel for the King. Was there not a Liſt?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, a Liſt of thoſe engaged in the Deſign of killing the King, and of promoting the Catholick Religion: And it was declared the King ſhould be killed, becauſe he hadn't kept his Promiſe made to the Jeſuits when he was beyond Sea.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did the Priſoner declare it?

Mr. Mowbray. Mr. Thwing declared it, and Ruſhton and he managed it.

Thwing. Who was there?

Mr. Mowbray. It was at Father Ruſhton's Chamber that I ſaw you, and there was another Thwing there, and alſo Addiſon a Prieſt.

Thwing. I went once or twice a year to Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne's, and thought it my Duty to wait on him, and that I might without offence do it, he being my Unkle.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. No, the Offence is Plotting.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Mr. Thwing, do you know Ruſhton?

Thwing. Yes, but I had no great Acquaintance with him.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Mr. Mowbray, how came you to be intruſted in ſo great a Buſineſs?

Mr. Mowbray. I aſſiſted Father Ruſhton at the Altar at Maſs; and ſo came into great Favour with him, and was permitted to be in his Chamber when the Prieſts were in private with him.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Mr. Mowbray, did you take an Oath of Secrecy?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, I took it from Father Ruſhton.

Thwing. How long ſince did you change your Religion?

Mr. Mowbray. Preſently after the Plot broke out.

Thwing. Who were you examined before firſt of all?

Mr. Mowbray. Before Mr. Lowther, and Mr. Tindal.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did you at the firſt accuſe him?

Mr. Mowbray. I only charged Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne, Eſq; Gaſcoyne, my Lady Tempeſt, Sir Miles Stapleton, and Father Ruſhton in my firſt; and in my ſecond Depoſition I accuſed Mr. Thwing, and that was before Juſtice Warcup.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Did Thwing abſcond at the firſt?

Mr. Mowbray. He was apprehended at the ſame time Sir T. Gaſcoyne was apprehended, and at his Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, what ſay you to Mary Preſſicks?

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, I have nothing to ſay againſt her.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Mr. Thwing, you have heard the Evidence, what do you ſay for your ſelf?

Thwing. I ſhall produce Witneſſes I was never with him at Barmbow: Firſt I ſhall ſhew he never mentioned me when he firſt mentioned the Plot; and he never ſaid any thing againſt me, when he accuſed Sir T. Gaſcoyne before Mr. Lowther and Mr. Tindal.

But Mr. Bonithen, of Counſel for the King, offering other Witneſſes for the King againſt Mrs. Preſſicks, they were called, viz. Mrs. Bolron ſen. Mrs. Bolron jun. and John Hutchinſon.

Mrs. Bolron ſen. Sworn.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What do you know of Preſſicks, the Priſoner at the Bar?

Mrs.

Mrs. Bolron ſen. My Lord, ſhe ſaid ſhe knew of the Plot, and that Pickering was to have killed the King.

Mr. Bonithon. Do you mean ſhoot the King?

Mrs. Bolron ſen. Yes, I do.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Where did ſhe tell you this?

Mrs. Bolron ſen. At Shippon, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. At his Houſe? [pointing to Mr. Bolron.

Mrs. Bolron ſen. Yes, and ſhe ſaid that ſhe was very ſorry that Pickering did not do it, and that he had done it if it had not been for Otes and Bedloe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was this the very ſame time that Mr. Bolron ſpeaks of?

Mrs. Bolron ſen. Yes, my Lord; and ſhe ſaid, There would never be quiet in England until the Roman Catholicks had got the upper hand, and there was not a Proteſtant left in England: And ſhe ſaid, The King ſpent his money amongſt his Concubines, and his other Women, ſo that he was not worthy to be King, and ſhe hoped an Army of Catholicks would be raiſed to ſet up Popery.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. That is indeed the Principle of the Papiſts, and according to it; within 40 years paſt they murdered 200000 innocent Proteſtants in Ireland. Did ſhe ſay it often?

Mrs. Bolron ſen. Yes, ſeveral times, more than once or twice.

Mrs. Bolron jun. was then Sworn, and examined.

Mrs. Bolron jun. I heard her ſay, There was a Conſpiracy carrying on about altering the Government, and eſtabliſhing the Roman Catholick Religion.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Where heard you this?

Mrs. Bolron jun. In my Husband's Houſe.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. And what were her hopes in the Conſpiracy?

Mrs. Bolron jun. My Lord, I cannot tell.

Mrs. Preſſicks. I ask Mr. Bolron when we had this Diſcourſe?

Mr. Bolron. At ſeveral times; about Candlemas, 1678. and at Eaſter and Whitſontide, and ſeveral times after the Plot was diſcovered, we diſcourſed it ſeveral times at the Porch at my Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Who was preſent?

Mr. Bolron. My Grandmother.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Where was it, old Woman, that you heard theſe words?

Mrs. Bolron ſen. At Shippon, in the Hall-porch, my Lord.

Mrs. Preſſicks. Had we any Diſcourſe about Sir Thomas?

Mrs. Bolron ſen. None.

John Hutchinſon was then Sworn.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Do you know any thing concerning Mrs. Preſſicks?

Hutchinſon. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, I came to Mr. Bolron's Houſe, and Mrs. Preſſicks asked me what News in our Countrey, and what became of the Papiſts? I told her ſome had given Bond, and ſome were gone to Priſon: Then ſhe ſaid, We ſhall never be at peace until we're all of the Roman Catholick Religion; for the King is an Heretick, and ſpends more money upon his Whores than upon his Queen, and we ſhall never be at quiet until the D. of York is King.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What ſay you to this? You have ſeen him?

Mrs. Preſſicks. I never ſaw him but twice there.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Where was ſhe when ſhe ſaid this?

Hutchinſon. She firſt talked with me in the Kitchin, and at the Hall-door, as ſhe was juſt going into the Parlour; ſhe told me, That we ſhould never be at quiet until the Duke of York was made King.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Mr. Bolron, when came ſhe to your Houſe?

Mr. Bolron. She came to our Houſe about Chriſtmas, and ſtaid about ſix months there.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Six months in your Houſe! Then you are well enough acquainted with her.

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did you charge Mr. Thwing before the Juſtice?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I gave Juſtice Tindal only a ſhort Note, That Sir Th. Gaſcoyne promiſed me 1000 l. to kill the King: But what I had to ſay againſt Thwing, I gave to the King and Council.

Thwing. My Lord, this is Malice to Sir Th. Gaſcoyne's Family, to which I am related, it is out of Revenge.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It was a Family-Quarrel then?

Thwing. Yes, my Lord, this I can prove by ſeveral Witneſſes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Call your Witneſſes then.

Thwing. Nathaniel Wilſon.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Mr. Babington, why don't you appear, we know well enough that you are Sollicitor in the Cauſe; call your Witneſſes.

Then Nathaniel Wilſon was examined.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come, what is it you have to ſay?

Wilſon. I went to Bolron to look on a Cow that he had gifted for his Couſin Bargues, and deſir'd to have the Cow away, but he would not let me have her without paying for her Gift; ſo I tender'd him his money, and we went to talk in the Houſe, and Bolron ſent for a Groat's worth of Ale, and asked me, if I could tell any thing of Father Ruſhton, and I told him I could not; and he bid me keep his Secrets, and he would give me more than I could Addle (that is, Earn) in 7 years: And he ſaid, unleſs he could ſhed the Blood of ſome of them, he ſhould get nothing.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. When was this?

Wilſon. This was about next Michaelmas a Twelvemonth.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. This is quite other than you told yeſterday.

[Wilſon was a Witneſs the day before for the Lady Tempeſt.]

Wilſon. I had not time.

Thwing. I deſire to know, Whether Bolron named me to Mr. Lowther as a Plotter?

Then Mr. Lowther was called.

Mr. Lowther. I do not remember that Mr. Bolron named Mr. Thwing to me when he was before me.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. When did he come to make the Diſcovery to you? Give an Account of it.

Mr. Lowther. I think it was the 24*th* or 25*th* of June, 1679. that he came to me; and he told me he had ſome Secrets to impart to me: And he began to tell me a ſtory of the Jeſuits and Prieſts, what they deſigned againſt the Government, becauſe the King did not keep his Word with them when he was beyond Sea: And then I called for my man and a Bible to take his Examination, and ſaid, Pray Friend be very careful what you do, for here your own Concern is at ſtake, as well as the Lives and Fortunes of the Gentlemen you ſpeak againſt; and upon that he began to be very fearful and timorous, and looked pale: Whereupon I asked him, What that Fear was for? It is, ſaid he, becauſe I have concealed it ſo long; and if that were upon you, it may be you would be as fearful as I am. Then I was going to take his Information, and he ſaid, I have done it before to Mr. Tindal: Why came you to me then, ſaid I? He ſaid, Mr. Tindal deſired it: Well, ſaid I, Mr. Tindal and I are to meet to morrow, and we will do it joyntly.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did he ſay he told you all he knew?

Mr. Lowther. He did not name Thwing, but ſaid he ſhould recollect more, and would go to London and give it in to the King and Council: And then I ſaid, Why may not we take it here, as well as trouble them at London?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It may be he thought it better to do it there.

Mrs. Preſſicks. He did not accuſe me before Mr. Lowther.

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I did, and had a Warrant to take her.

Mr. Lowther. She was taken the ſame Day Sir Th. Gaſcoyne was taken.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. We will be juſt between you.

Then the Priſoners called Obadiah Moor.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come, tell your knowledge in this Buſineſs.

Moor. I ſay, that Mr. Bolron ſaid, That Sir Th. Gaſcoyne was not concerned in the Plot, nor none of his Family; and that he believed there was no Plot.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. When was this?

Moor. This was about Candlemas was Twelvemonths.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He was then a Papiſt: But did he not tell you otherwiſe afterwards?

Moor. In Auguſt after he told me he had but equivocated with me in what he ſaid before, and that there was a real Plot; and if he had ſwore a thouſand Lies he could have been forgiven them.

Then Stephen Thompſon was called and examined.

Thompſon. Mr. Bolron was Servant to Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne, and being in his Debt Sir Thomas did Arreſt him, and he agreed with Sir Thomas to give him 60*l.* and got me to be bound with him: And when the Plot came out, I thought Bolron being his Servant, might know whether Sir Thomas had any Hand in it; and if ſo, that we were in no danger of being ſued; and I inquired of Bolron, and he ſaid, Sir Thomas was as Sackleſs of it as the Child that was unborn: And on Holy Thurſday I went to him, and got him out on the backſide to Sir Thomas's, and all along he told me, if he ſued him he would do him a greater miſchief: And I pleaded earneſtly with Sir Thomas not to ſue the Bond, and he ſaid he would have his money, but would ſtay a Fortnight, and I prevailed with him to give 3 Weeks time, that Bolron might go to ſell his Houſe at Newcaſtle, and in that time he went to London and accuſed him of Treaſon: And as to Mrs. Preſſicks, I ask'd his Grandmother what ſhe could ſay againſt her, and ſhe ſaid, Alas, alas, I can ſay nothing to it, but Bolron ſaid ſhe muſt ſay ſo and ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What mean you Friend by ſo and ſo.

Thompſon. It was about Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and that the King was an Whoremaſter, and ſuch things.

Then Zachary Thorpe was called and examined.

Thorpe. I met with Mr. Bolron in Long Acre before the laſt Aſſizes, and asked him concerning Sir Th. Gaſcoyne, my Countreyman, and he ſaid he was cleared, but God damn the Jury they were Rogues: Then he asked me if I had read Harris's Intelligence of that Day, and I told him, yes: And he then asked me if I had ſeen his Wife's Name in it? He then told me, that he was going down to the Aſſizes at York, againſt my Lady Tempeſt, and ſaid, God damn me I will ruin 'em, if one thing will not do it, another ſhall.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What are you? God damn me comes very nimbly out of your mouth.

Thorpe. I live at the White Hart in Charterhouſe Lane, with the Gentleman of the Houſe, I married his Daughter.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And draw Pots of Ale, that's your Trade: How comes Bolron to talk thus to you, is he ſo mad a Fellow to talk thus to every one, this is not likely that he ſhould thus accuſe himſelf to you: Your Father in Law is a poor Alehouſekeeper?

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Are not you a Papiſt?

Thorpe. No, my Lord, a Proteſtant of the Church of England.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Have you never been in Newgate? Your Lane is full of ſuch People, and your Houſe ſuſpected.

Thorpe. No, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come, have you done?

Thorpe. Bolron came to my Lodgings at the Plough on Holborn Hill, before the laſt Aſſizes, and told me, if I would ſwear that Peter Shipton knew no harm by Bolron, he would do any thing for me.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. This is a Fable, for Bolron bound Shipton over at the Seſſions before the laſt Aſſizes.

Bolron. Yes, my Lord, it was for ſcandalous Words againſt his Majeſty.

Thorpe. He asked me what Shipton was, I anſwered, he is an honeſt man for ought that I know: I have taken his own Bond, ſaid Bolron, but I will have him from Court to Court, I will teach him to meddle with me.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How came he to ſpeak to thee?

Thorpe. I know not why, but it was his Diſcourſe to me.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What Acquaintance was there between you?

Thorpe. I have ſeen him ſeveral times in Yorkſhire.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You live in Charter-houſe-lane, how came you together in Long-Acre?

Thorpe. I met him accidentally in the Street.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It is a wonderful thing, that he ſhould meet one in the Street with whom he had very ſmall Acquaintance, and diſcover ſuch things to him, as he did to you.

Then William Hardwick was examined.

Hardwick. I was to carry Mrs. Preſſick's before Juſtice Lowther, and Bolron's Wife ſaid ſhe was ſorry for it, for ſhe believed her to be an honeſt Woman, and had been a good Neighbour amongſt them.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Who was ſorry?

Hardwick. Mrs. Bolron.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What did Bolron himſelf ſay?

Hardwick. He ſaid nothing to me, he was in another Room with his Grandmother.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben taking notice of Thwing's ſpeaking to Mr. Hobart, demanded what he ſaid.

Hobart. My Lord, he ask'd me, whether Bolron did not ſay that Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne offer'd him a 1000 l. I only ſay that he ſwore at Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne's Tryal.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How doth it appear, what he ſwore there?

Bolron. I acquainted Mr. Lowther, and Mr. Tindal with it.

Mary Walker was called.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Mary Walker, what do you ſay?

Mary Walker. Robert Bolron came after Mr. Thwing was taken Priſoner, to my Miſtreſſes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Who is your Miſtreſs?

Mary Walker. Mrs. Laſſell's; and he ask'd me, if I knew Mr. Thwing to be a Prieſt, and I told him, No, my Lord; he told me that if I would ſwear that he was a Prieſt, he would give me 10 l. for he would be reveng'd of him for Sir T. Gaſcoyne's Cauſe; for he was near of kin to him, and he proffered me 10 l. again.

Bolron. Where were you, you were not here Yeſterday?

Mary Walker. I was in the Court yeſterday.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Where ſpoke he this?

Mary Walker. At Mrs. Laſſel's.

Sir Tho. Stringer. My Lord, he was then ſearching for Prieſts at that Houſe, and it is improbable that he ſhould endeavour at that time to ſuborn Thwing's Siſter's Servant.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Is Mrs. Laſſell's of kin to Mr. Thwing?

Walker. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Who can believe he would come to Thwing's Siſter's Houſe, to ſuborn her Servant to be a Witneſs againſt Mr. Thwing?

Walker. Yes, my Lord, I have Witneſs of it, both a Man and a Woman.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Where are they?

Walker. In Town.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. That makes it more improbable that he would offer you 10 l. in the Preſence of two Witneſſes to ſwear that Mr. Thwing was a Prieſt.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Let us ask her a Queſtion. Whether are you a Papiſt or no?

Walker. Yes, I am a Catholick.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Since it muſt be probable, that he would ask you ſuch a thing, and knew you to be a Papiſt; Is Thwing a Prieſt or no?

Walker. No marry is he not.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Have you not heard him ſay Maſs?

Walker. No, if I were to dye.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Indeed you are an excellent Witneſs.

Mr. Legget one of the King's Meſſengers produced as a Witneſs by the Priſoners, was next examined.

Mr. Legget. In Auguſt laſt, Mr. Bolron told me he would call his Grandmother in and examine her before me, and he then ask'd her, if ſhe did not ſay, that ſhe knew ſuch and ſuch things, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe could not tell, but if ſhe did, 'twas true.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What was it he ask'd her?

Legget. About Harcourt, and I know not what, I took little Notice of it, it ſeem'd to be a thing ſo idle, that I went away: And meeting me afterwards, ſaid, You thought my Grandmother knew nothing, but at the Bar, when Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne was tried, they ſaid they never heard one ſwear a thing more plainly.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Legget, did not you deſire Money yeſterday of the Clerk of the Aſſizes as a Witneſs for the King?

Legget. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did you ſo? You are a fine Fellow.

Then one William Bacchus was examin'd.

Bacchus. All that I can ſay, is, that I ſerved a Warrant upon Mrs. Bolron to go before Eſq; Lowther, and Bolron's Wife and Grandmother ſaid, they could ſay nothing againſt Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne, nor any of the Family.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, they ſay nothing againſt them now, but what did ſhe ſay againſt Mrs. Preſſicks?

Bacchus. She ſaid that Mary Preſſicks ſhould ſay that the King was an Whorematter, and maintained his Whores better than he did the Queen.

Cuthbert Hamſworth was then call'd.

Hamſworth being produced as a Witneſs for Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne owned that he had been a Papiſt.

Hamſworth. My Lord, Robert Bolron did ſwear Revenge againſt my Lady Tempeſt for proſecuting a Suit againſt him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What is that to the matter in hand: Do you know that he ſwore Revenge againſt Thwing and Preſſicks?

Hamſworth. No, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns (to the Priſoners.) What have you more to ſay?

Thwing. My Lord, he ſaith, I was at Barnbow-Hall, 1677. I have Witneſſes to prove otherwiſe.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Call them then.

George Twiſley Groom to Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne.

Twiſley. Mr. Thwing was never at our Houſe above a Night or two in the Year.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Whoſe Houſe is yours?

Twiſley. Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne's

Mr. Juſt Dolben. He was there but a Night or two at a time.

Twiſley. No, and pleaſe your Lordſhip.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben But was he there in 1677?

Twiſley. About a Year or two ſince, I ſaw him there.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben But how often in a Twelve-month's time?

Twiſley. Not above once or twice.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Did you never go out of your Maſter's Houſe in 1677?

Twiſley. I have, my Lord, but I was there both Night and Morning.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. How do you know but he might be there in the time that you were not there?

Bolron. And pleaſe your Lordſhip, this man was but the Groom.

Twiſley. I was the Groom, my Lord, and took the Horſes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But were you never abſent?

Twiſley. No, my Lord, and he wasn't there above once or twice in the Year.

Thwing. Ask him what Company was then there?

Twiſley. No Company at all, my Lord, when he was there.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was not he there about Eaſter?

Twiſley. No, not that I know of.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What time of the Year was he there?

Twiſley. About Michaelmas, not Eaſter.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. How came you to take ſuch particular Notice at what time men come, did you take an Account of all the Gentlemen that came to Sir Thomas's Houſe, how often there, and when they came?

Twiſley. There were none that ſtayed any time when they came thither.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What time of the Year was he there?

Twiſley. It was a Month before Michaelmas.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You bring Witneſſes to ſtretch things even to Impoſſibilities.

Bolron. He was drunk, my Lord, at Leeds the ſame Night the Conſult was.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Will you ſpeak Truth before Almighty God?

Twiſley. Yes.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Pray then are you a Papiſt?

Twiſley. No.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Were you never a Papiſt?

Twiſley. Yes.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Have you heard Maſs at Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne's when you were a Papiſt?

Twiſley. No.

Sir Tho. Stringer. That's very ſtrange, that you lived there and never heard Maſs, and yet were a Papiſt.

Twiſley. Yes, I heard Maſs in his Houſe, but not by this man.

Sir Tho. Stringer. How long have been turned Proteſtant?

Twiſley. About two Years.

Thwing. Thomas Areton, did you ever ſee me at Barnbow-Hall?

Areton. I have nothing for nor againſt him, I never ſaw him before in my life.

Thwing. Mr. Mowbray hath declared he never knew any thing of the Plot.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. To whom did he declare it?

Thwing. There is Witneſs of it, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Call them.

Thwing. He accuſed not me of the Plot.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. He was no Proteſtant then.

Thwing. I never knew any thing of the Plot till I came from London.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, if you have any more Witneſſes, call them.

Thwing. Mr. Cooper.

Joſeph Cooper. I have nothing to ſay in this Buſineſs about this Gentleman, it is concerning Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne.

Thwing. Yes, he declared before theſe Witneſſes he knew nothing of the Plot.

Cooper. We were coming from Atherton Fair, and my Father began to diſcourſe with Mr. Mowbray, and ask'd him, if he knew any thing of the Plot that Sir Thomas was called to London for, he ſaid, he knew nothing of the Plot, and he thought Sir Thomas was guilty of no ſuch thing, for if he had, he ſhould have known it as ſoon as Bolron, and he was a Rogue and a Knave, for ſaying any ſuch thing.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. When was this?

Cooper. It was about this time Twelve-month.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Were you upon the Road then?

Cooper. Yes.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Had Mowbray then made any Diſcovery of the Plot?

Cooper. Yes, that was the Reaſon we ask'd him about it.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Yeſterday (upon Lady Tempeſt's Tryal) you ſaid, that Mowbray had not then made any Diſcovery.

Cooper. Yes, my Lord, I mean Bolron.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Really methinks you that are Prieſts ſhould be more dexterous, my Lady Tempeſt managed her Buſineſs much better, and had her Witneſſes in more readineſs.

Thwing. My Lord, I call upon the Witneſſes and they will not come in, I cannot help it.

Edward Cooper ſenior, was then call'd.

Edward Cooper. I know nothing; I met Mr. Mowbray coming from Atherton Fair, and he ſaid he thought Sir Thomas was not guilty of the Plot.

Thwing. Mr. Mowbray declared for 8 or 10 months together in 77 he knew nothing of the Plot; call Mr. Hobart.

Hobart. I know nothing of it.

Thwing. I am innocent, I know nothing as I hope for Salvation.

Then Iſabel Heyward, a Girl that lived with Bolron as a Servant, was called.

Iſabel Heyward. My Maſter and Miſtreſs fell out about going to London, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would not go, and he ſaid he would make her go, and ſhe ſaid, if he did ſhe would ſwear that what he had ſworn againſt Mrs Preſſicks, was out of Malice.

Alice Dawſon was next Examined.

Alice Dawſon. The Day after New-years Day was Twelve-month, Mrs. Bolron ſaid ſhe was ſorry for nothing, but that her Husband had meddled with Mrs. Preſſicks.

Then

Then Mrs. Preſſicks called for John Pepper.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What do you ſay to him, Miſtreſs?

Preſſicks. I ask about my going to Parlington at Whitſuntide.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. No, it was at Candlemas, and they ſaid it was Cold Weather to ſit in the Hall-Porch.

Preſſicks. It was alſo ſaid at Whitſuntide.

John Pepper. About Whitſun-Munday (my Lord) I went to Barnbow, and met there with Mr. Preſſicks, and Mrs. Preſſicks; and he deſired me to tarry and carry his Wife to Mrs. Harriſon's at Parlington, and ſhe and I went down to Shipton, and carry'd her from Bolron's on Whitſun-Monday and ſtay'd till Thurſday.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And what is all this to the purpoſe, ſhe was however as it was ſworn againſt her at Shippon at Whitſuntide.

Pepper. This is all I can ſay, my Lord.

Zachary Thorpe was again called by Thwing.

Thorpe. Bolron ſaid he was going to ſwear againſt my Lady Tempeſt, and if one thing would not do another ſhould, and would have had me to give Evidence againſt Shipton.

Mrs. Baynes (Mother to Mr. Bolron) called.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What do you ſay, Mrs. Baynes?

Mrs. Baynes. Indeed, my Lord, I know nothing of this, I know not Thorpe, Shipton I know, and he told me that if he had not fallen into my Lord of Shrewsbury's Service, he and Thorpe would have turned Highway-men.

Mr. Babington called by Preſſicks.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Can you ſay any thing for Mrs. Preſſicks?

Babington. I can ſay nothing, but what I ſaid yeſterday concerning Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Can you ſay any thing for Preſſicks?

Babington. No, my Lord, I can ſay nothing for Mrs. Preſſicks; yes, thus much I muſt ſay, that when I came to have the Writings ſealed by Bolron, his Wife refuſed to ſeal them without delivering up of the Bonds. I told her, it would be an additional Security to Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne; he ſaid he did believe, that Mr. Preſſicks and his Wife were his Enemies, and that they did inſtigate Sir Thomas to ſue him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben (to Thwing.) Come, what have you more to ſay?

Thwing. I have no Witneſſes to call, but I hope it will be conſidered what kind of Witneſſes theſe are, what Lives they have led, they bring me in amongſt the reſt, we are all of a Family; I hope, my Lord, you will conſider that thoſe ill men that will, may take away an honeſt man's Life unjuſtly.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. I hear no body ſpeak againſt their Lives, and this I muſt tell you, till men be convicted of ſome Crime that may diſable them, you cannot take away their Teſtimony.

Thwing. My Lord, Witneſſes ſhould be men of Credit and Reputation.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. The Jury is to conſider of that.

Look you, Gentlemen, theſe two Priſoners ſtand indicted of High Treaſon, and it is for ſpiring the Death of the King, and other heinous Crimes; as deſigning the Subverting the Government, and bringing in the Popiſh Religion.

Now the Witneſſes that have been produc'd againſt Mr. Thwing, are Bolron and Mowbray; and againſt Preſſicks, Mr. Bolron, Mrs. Bolron ſen. and jun. and one Hutchinſon, and the Evidence againſt Thwing, is one thing, and againſt the Woman quite another; there is no Evidence againſt her but what they heard her ſay others were to do, there is no Evidence of any Action of hers, or that ſhe was preſent at any Conſultation, nor acting any thing there, but that ſhe ſaid ſo and ſo. Now Mr. Bolron and his Grandmother do both ſay that ſhe ſaid, Pickering was to have killed the King, and that ſhe was ſorry that he did not do it. That the Gun with which he ſhould have done it, was found, and ſhe was afraid that was the Cauſe of his Death, and they all ſay ſhe ſaid, that it would be never well with England, till the Catholicks had got the upper Hand, and the Duke of York were King. Now I muſt tell you, that my Opinion is, that a bare ſaying of this doth not amount to High Treaſon, unleſs you do believe from theſe words, that ſhe knew otherwiſe than by Hearſay, that Pickering was to have kill'd the King, and that ſhe was Privy and Conſenting to the Deſign of killing the King, then ſhe is guilty of Treaſon, but if ſhe only knew it by Hearſay, the bare Knowledge and concealing of it will make her guilty of Miſpriſon of Treaſon; but knowing of it barely by Report doth not make her guilty of High Treaſon. My Brother will tell you his Opinion herein. Now for Mr. Thwing, the Evidence againſt him is very home, for they both ſwear againſt him, one to one Meeting, and the other to another, that he was preſent at their Conſultation to kill the King, ſubvert the Government, and to bring in the Popiſh Religion; that he did agree at the meeting to the killing of the King, they do both ſwear, and this they ſay was at Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne's, and that at the ſeveral Meetings there was a Liſt produced, but Bolron ſaith, that the Liſt when he was preſent was a Liſt of thoſe that were engaged towards the carrying on of the Nunnery; that which the other ſpeaks of, was a Liſt of thoſe that were engaged about the killing the King, about the whole Deſign which was to be effected by killing the King, this he ſwears, that Thwing did produce this Liſt; and Mowbray ſaith, that three or four Prieſts were preſent at that time, and that Thwing ſaid, the King was an Heretick, and excommunicated by the Pope, and that it was not only lawful but meritorious to kill him. So that admitting this Evidence be true, it is a full Evidence of High Treaſon againſt him; here is an imagining the Death of the King, and here is an Overt-Act, here is a ſetting Hands to it; ſo that if this be true, Thwing is guilty of High Treaſon. Now againſt this they have produced many Witneſſes, and none of them doth go about to prove this impoſſible, but only improbable, but one that is a Groom of Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne's, who ſaith, he was but once or twice that Year there, and not at Eaſter, but about Michaelmas, is that enough to anſwer the Teſtimony of theſe two Men, Gentlemen? For a Groom to take upon him, to ſay two Years after, who was at his Maſter's Houſe, and how often, and what time of the Year, is to me a very ſtrange thing; unleſs it were one that never uſed to come there: But this man, he ſaith, did uſe to come there, but that I muſt leave to you. The reſt of the Witneſſes were the ſame that were examined yeſterday. Firſt, they inſiſt concerning Mr. Lowther, they ſay, that when Mr. Bolron firſt went to Mr. Lowther, he ſaid nothing of Mr. Thwing, but it appears, he ſaid then, that afterwards he might remember more; then the man was under a great Conſternation, and told him, the great and dangerous Conſequences of having ſo long concealed it, was the occaſion of that diſorder upon him, but he ſaid, he ſhould remember more afterwards, and ſo he did: The reſt of the Witneſſes do all go to this purpoſe, That either Bolron or Mowbray ſhould tell them at one time or other, they did know nothing of the Plot, nor againſt Sir Th. Gaſcoyne; and ſome of them ſay, That it is out of malice to Sir Thomas's Family; for ſo Thwing would have it, he being his Nephew, that the malice ſhould reach to Mr. Thwing, that they would have it; and ſomething to the ſame purpoſe they do offer againſt Mr. Mowbray. Now here is one Walker, that ſwears, That Bolron asked her if ſhe knew Thwing to be a Prieſt, and offered her 10 l. to ſwear him a Prieſt; ſhe is a Servant of one Mrs. Laſſels, Mr. Thwing's Siſter, he came to Mrs. Laſſels to ſearch for Prieſts; it is ſomething ſtrange, that he ſhould offer to perſuade her to ſwear againſt Thwing, who was Servant to his own Siſter, and at the time when he came to ſearch for Prieſts; the Truth of it is, the thing doth depend purely upon the Credit of Witneſſes. The King's Witneſſes are upon their Oaths; but, on the other hand, the others are not on their Oaths; but Credit is to be given to what they ſay; if you conſider their Evidence, and do find a clearneſs in their Teſtimony, which you muſt weigh, for certainly he that ſolemnly, in the Preſence of God, will ſay a falſe thing, will alſo dare to ſwear it; how far their Principles will carry them I know not, I can ſee nothing but Bolron and Mowbray are good Witneſſes; I do not ſee but what they ſay is coherent, and that they ſpeak the Truth; and if you believe what they ſay to be true, then Thwing is Guilty of High Treaſon: But if you do not believe what they ſay is true, but out of malice, you muſt acquit him. They do object, the other Juries did not believe Bolron and Mowbray; the Caſe with the Priſoners at the Bar is not the ſame with theirs; but you are to give your Verdict according to the Evidence that you have heard, and according to your Conſciences.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Gentlemen of the Jury, I ſhall be very ſhort. The Crimes that are laid in this Indictment, and charged upon theſe Perſons, are, the deſigning to take away the King's Life, ſubverting the Government, and introducing Popery; you obſerve the Nature of the Evidence which hath been given againſt the Priſoners. And firſt, I ſhall ſpeak but one word concerning Mary Preſſicks: I do fully agree with what my Brother hath ſaid; you do take notice, that the Evidence that hath been given againſt her, hath been what came out of her own mouth; the Witneſſes are Mr. Bolron and his Grandmother, and likewiſe one Hutchinſon: Mr. Bolron ſaith ſhe did tell him, that Harcourt was her Confeſſor, and that he had engaged her in the Plot; ſhe likewiſe told him, that Pickering was to kill the King, that the Gun was found with him, and was the cauſe of his Death; this is ſome Evidence of High Treaſon, I muſt leave it to you of what weight it is, and how far by this you will conclude her privy to the Plot; it is true, were ſhe an Actor in it, it is plain ſhe is guilty of High Treaſon. As to what Hutchinſon ſaid, that ſhe told him, We ſhould never be at peace till we were all of the Roman Catholick Religion, and the Duke of York was made King, that will not amount to High Treaſon: This I take to be the Sum of the Evidence againſt her. Then as to Mr. Thwing, there are two Witneſſes that have ſworn againſt him, that is Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray: Bolron tells you, that in 1677, there came to him ſeveral Prieſts, to his Houſe at Shipton; and amongſt the reſt Thwing the Priſoner, who asked him, how he ſtood affected to the Roman Catholick Religion? And he then expreſs'd his Zeal for it, and they thought him a Perſon fit to impart their Secrets to: Then he ſaith, that in 1677, there was a meeting at Barnbow-Hall, which is Sir Th. Gaſcoyne's Houſe, and at that meeting there were Sir Th. Gaſcoyne. Eſq; Gaſcoyne, Sir Miles Stapleton, and amongſt the reſt this Priſoner Thwing; and that there was a Conſult held at that time, and Deſign of killing the King; and that this Perſon did agree to it, and declared, that if they ſhould miſs that Opportunity they ſhould never have ſuch another; and that it was for the good of the Roman Catholick Religion. The next was Mowbray; and he ſaith to the ſame effect: That in 1676, Thwing and others declared they did deſign to kill the King, for he was an Heretick, and Excommunicated, and had not kept his Word with the Jeſuits, and therefore they thought it not only lawful, but a meritorious Act: And this is what both Bolron and Mowbray do teſtifie, this they ſwear poſitively againſt the Priſoner; if you believe what they have ſworn to be true, I muſt declare that it will amount to High Treaſon. You are likewiſe to conſider the Evidence he hath produced for himſelf: The Law, 'tis true, does not allow us to give them an Oath, yet if they be Perſons of Credit and Honeſty, it is Evidence which you are to conſider of. The Priſoner hath call'd ſeveral Witneſſes: The firſt was Nath. Wilſon; I ſhall not repeat what he ſaith, being of no import. Thwing ſaith, Mr. Bolron was before Mr. Lowther and Mr. Tindal, two Juſtices of Peace, who did take his Oath; and then he ſaid he did not accuſe him of the Plot at that time, and by that would infer, that he would have ſaid what he had againſt him, as well then as now, if he had had any thing whereof to accuſe him: But Bolron anſwers, He did declare to theſe two Gentlemen, he was not able at that time to recollect his whole knowledge, but gave it in afterwards to the King and Council. The next are Moor and Thorpe: The Effect of their Evidence is to ſtrike at the Reputation of Bolron, that it was an Act of malice and revenge: For they ſay, that Bolron told them, That Sir Thomas was innocent, and knew nothing of the Plot. Thorpe ſaith, he met with Bolron in Long Acre, and that he told him, him, That tho' Sir Thomas were quitted he would ruin ſome of them. I ſay, theſe things, if true, are ſome Evidence of a malicious Proſecution: But it ſeems ſomething improbable, that Bolron ſhould ſo openly make a diſcovery of himſelf, when it appears he was not greatly acquainted with them, eſpecially with Thorpe. There are ſeveral other Witneſſes that ſpeak much to the ſame purpoſe. Gentlemen, in matters of Fact, which depend upon the Teſtimony of Witneſſes, the Credit of the Witneſſes is greatly to be conſidered; if you believe what Bolron and Mowbray have both poſitively Sworn, the Treaſon is plain; you muſt take all the parts of your Evidence together, you muſt weigh all the Circumſtances, you muſt, as I ſaid before, conſider the Credit of the Witneſſes of the one ſide and of the other, and by theſe ſteps you will be the better guided in the giving of your Verdict. I muſt leave it to you, and I pray God direct you therein.

The Jury having withdrawn, after ſome Conſultation together, brought in their Verdict, that Thomas Thwing was Guilty, and Mary Preſſicks Not Guilty.

Auguſt the 2*d*, 1680. Thomas Thwing being brought to the Bar, the Clerk ſpoke thus:

Clerk. Thomas Thwing, Hold up thy Hand: Thou haſt been Indicted, That thou as a falſe Traytor didſt conſpire the Death of the King, &c. and thereof haſt been found Guilty: What canſt thou ſay wherefore Judgment of Death ſhould not be pronounced againſt thee?

Thwing. My Lord, as I am now upon my Life, I know nothing of theſe things, in the leaſt, that theſe men have ſworn againſt me: And on the other ſide, I ſay, that before Sir Th. Gaſcoyne had his Tryal, theſe men ſaid nothing againſt me, ſo I hope your Lordſhip will take it into conſideration.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. For your Innocency, the Gentlemen of the Jury are Judges of that, and they have found you Guilty, ſo that it is not in my power either to acquit or condemn you; I am only to paſs Sentence according to that Conviction. If you have any thing to ſay wherefore Judgment ſhould not be pronounced, I am ready to hear you.

Thwing. All that I can ſay is to declare my Innocency, and that theſe men are of no Credit and Reputation. It is very hard I ſhould be Guilty, and none of the reſt that were Arraigned for the ſame Crimes.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. No, it is not impoſſible; it is poſſible you may be guilty and the reſt innocent.

Thwing. For my part I told your Lordſhip, that I wa but once or twice in a year at Sir Th. Gaſcoyne's, being my Unkle, and I do proteſt I know nothing of the Conſult theſe men do charge me with.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You ſay one thing, they ſwear another, and for ought I know they are honeſt men; they are lawful men, and not convicted in the main; for I do believe there were many great and dangerous Conſults held at Sir Th. Gaſcoyne's by ſeveral Perſons, and that there have been many horrid and treaſonable things acted there. You have been indicted for High Treaſon, the higheſt Treaſon that ever any Subject was guilty of, for attempting to kill the King, for reſolving ſo to do upon deliberate Advice and Conſultation; and this for no other end or purpoſe, but that you might have your Religion ſet up, for that was your Deſign, to change this Religion here, and to ſettle Popery in England; and the better to bring that to paſs, you thought to take away the King's Life, knowing you could not otherwiſe accompliſh it. You are, I am ſatisfied, a Prieſt of the Romiſh Church; therefore all that I can ſay to you in reference to your future State you will not value, for you account me an Heretick as you do the King, and I am content to be ſo eſteemed in ſo good Company, therefore I ſhall wave it. As you are a Gentleman I will give ſome Reſpect to you, and will not paſs Sentence on you among the reſt of the Priſoners that are found Guilty of Felony and Murder, but will do it by your ſelf.

The Law doth command the Court, and the Court doth award, That you be carried from hence to the Place from whence you came, that is the Priſon, and from thence you are to be drawn to the place of Execution: You are there to be hanged by the Neck, you are to be cut down before you are dead, and your Intrails are to be taken out of your Body, and thrown into the Fire before your Face, and your Head is to be parted from your Body, and your Body ſeparated into four Quarters, And your Head and your Quarters are to be diſpoſed according to the King's Pleaſure. And the Lord have mercy on your Soul.

Thwing. Innocens ego ſum.

A Reprieve being obtained for him, he remained Condemned in the Caſtle of York till the 23*d of* October, when, according to the Sentence, he was drawn, hanged and quartered at York.

ELIZABETH CELLIER.

Cl. of Cr. MR S. Cellier, look to your Challenges, for the Jury that is to be Sworn is to paſs upon you.

Cellier. Am I for my Life?

Cl. of Cr. No, but look to your Challenges.

Ld Mayor. But if you Challenge, you muſt give a Reaſon for it, Mrs. Cellier.

Cl. of Cr. Swear John Ainger.

Cl. of Cr. Swear Richard Boys.

Cellier. I Challenge him.

Ld Mayor. Mrs. Cellier, you muſt ſhew a Cauſe for your Challenge.

Cellier. I did not know that, my Lord.

Mr. Baron Weſton. You can Challenge none in this Caſe without a Cauſe.

Cellier. My Lord, I did not know that: Then I agree he ſhall be Sworn.

[Which was done.]

Then the reſt of the Jury without any more Challenges, were Sworn; and they were all as follows:

John Ainger, Richard Boys, John Stephens, Thomas Phelps, Gilbert Urwin, Edward Allanſon, Richard Liveing, John Coggs, Henry Hodgſden, John Barnard, Edward Low, James Southern. — Jur'

Then Proclamation was made in common Form for Information; and the Clerk Charged the Jury thus:

Cl. of Cr. You Gentlemen that are Sworn, Elizabeth Cellier ſtands Indicted by the Name of Elizabeth Cellier, Wife of Peter Cellier, of the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. For that ſhe being of the Popiſh Religion, not having the Fear of God before her Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, falſly and maliciouſly endeavouring and intending our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second that now is, and the Government of this Kingdom of England, as alſo the true Proteſtant Religion, within this Kingdom of England by Law Eſtabliſhed, to bring to hatred and contempt; and alſo to bring ſcandal and infamy upon divers Perſons produced as Witneſſes, that gave Evidence on the part and behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt her the ſaid Elizabeth Cellier, and other Perſons indicted of High Treaſon the Firſt of September, in the Thirty Second Year of our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second that now is, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly did write and publiſh, and did cauſe to be writ, imprinted and publiſhed, a ſcandalous Libel, Intituled, Malice Defeated: Or, a brief Relation of the Accuſation and Deliverance of Elizabeth Cellier: Wherein her Proceedings, both before and during her Confinement, are particularly related, and the Myſtery of the Meal-Tub fully diſcovered: Together with an Abſtract of her Arraignment and Tryal; Written by her ſelf for the ſatisfaction of all Lovers of undiſguiſed Truth. In which ſaid Libel are contained theſe falſe, feigned, ſcandalous Words and Figures following, to wit: 'I hope 'it will not ſeem ſtrange to any honeſt and 'loyal Perſon of what way or Religion ſoever, 'that I being born and bred up under Proteſtant Parents, ſhould now openly profeſs my 'ſelf of another Church (meaning the Church 'of Rome) for my Education being in thoſe 'Times, when my own Parents and Relations, 'for their conſtant and faithful Affection to the

'King

'King and Royal Family, were perſecuted, the 'King himſelf murdered, the Biſhops and Church 'deſtroyed, the whole loyal Party, merely 'for being ſo, oppreſſed and ruined; and all, 'as was pretended by the Authors of theſe Vil-'lanies, for their being Papiſts and Idolaters, 'the conſtant Character given by them to the 'King and his Friends to make them odious, 'they aſſuming to themſelves only the Name of 'Proteſtants, making that the Glorious Title 'by which they pretended Right to all things: 'Theſe ſorts of Proceedings, as I grew in Un-'derſtanding, produced in me more and more 'Horror of the Party that committed them, 'and put me on inquiry into that Religion to 'which they pretended the greateſt Antipathy; 'wherein, I thank God, my innate Loyalty 'not only confirmed, but incouraged me. 'And let Calumny ſay what it will, I never 'heard from any Papiſts, as they call them, 'Prieſt, nor Lay-man, but that they and I, and 'all true Catholicks owe our Lives to the De-'fence of our Lawful King, which our preſent 'Sovereign Charles II. is, whom God long 'and happily preſerve ſo. Theſe ſorts of Do-'ctrines agreeing to my publick Morals, and 'no way, as ever I was taught, contradicting 'my private ones, commending at the ſame 'time to me Charity and Devotion; I without 'any Scruple have hitherto followed, glorying 'to my ſelf to be in Communion with thoſe 'who were the humble Inſtruments of his Ma-'jeſty's happy Preſervation from the fatal Bat-'tle at Worceſter; and who, though poor, no 'Temptation could invite to betray him to 'thoſe who by a pretended Proteſtant Principle, 'ſought his innocent Blood. Theſe Truths, I 'hope, may ſatisfie an indifferent Perſon in my 'firſt Change, nor can they wonder at my 'continuance therein, notwithſtanding the 'horrid Crimes of Treaſon and Murder laid to 'the Charge of ſome Perſons, conſiderable for 'their Quality and Fortunes in that Party: 'For, when I reflected who were the Witneſ-'ſes, and what unlikely things they depoſed, 'and obſerved that many of the chiefeſt Stick-'lers for the Plot, were thoſe or the Sons of 'thoſe, that acted the principal Parts in the 'laſt Tragedy, which Hiſtory told me too had 'the Prologue of a pretended Popiſh Plot; I 'ſay, theſe things made me doubtful of the 'whole, and the more I ſearched for Truth, 'the more I doubted that the old Enemies of 'the Crown were again at work for its De-'ſtruction. I being fully confirm'd in this, 'thought it my Duty through all ſorts of Ha-'zards, to relieve the poor impriſoned Ca-'tholicks, who in great Numbers were lock'd 'up in Goals, ſtarving for want of Bread: 'And this I did ſome Months before I ever 'ſaw the Counteſs of Powis, or any of thoſe 'honourable Perſons that were accuſed, or 'receiving of one penny of their Money di-'rectly or indirectly, till about the latter End 'of January (78.)' And in another Part of the ſaid Libel are contained theſe falſe feigned and ſcandalous Words and Figures following; to wit, 'About this time I went daily to the 'Priſons to perform thoſe Offices of Charity I 'was obliged to, and on Thurſday, January the '9*th* (78.) I dined in Newgate in the Room 'call'd the Caſtle, on th: Maſter's ſide Debtors, 'and about Four in the Afternoon I came 'down into the Lodge with Five Women, of 'of which Three were Proteſtants, and we 'all heard terrible Groans and Squeeks, which 'came out of the Dungeon call'd the Con-demn'd Hole. I ask'd Harris the Turn-Key what 'doleful Cry it was. He ſaid it was a Woman 'in Labour. I bid him put us into the Room 'to her; and we would help her. But he drove 'us away very rudely, both out of the Lodge 'and from the Door. We went behind the 'Gate and there liſtned, and ſoon found that it 'was the Voice of a ſtrong Man in Torture, 'and heard as we thought between his Groans 'the winding up of ſome Engine. Theſe 'Cries ſtopp'd the Paſſengers under the 'Gate, and we ſix went to the Turner's Shop 'without the Gate, and ſtood there amazed 'with the Horror and Dread of what we heard, 'when one of the Officers of the Priſon came 'out in great Haſte, ſeeming to run from the 'Noiſe. One of us catch'd hold of him, ſay-'ing, Oh! What are they doing in the Priſon? 'Officer. I dare not tell you, Miſtreſs. 'Tis a 'Man upon the Rack: I'll lay my Life on't. 'Officer. It is ſomething like it. Cellier. Who is 'it, Prance? Officer. Pray, Madam do not ask 'me, for I dare not tell you. But it is that I 'am not able to hear any longer. Pray let me 'go. With that he ran away towards Holbourn 'as faſt as he could. We heard theſe Groans 'perfectly to the end of the Old Baily. They 'continued till near ſeven of the Clock, and 'then a Perſon in the Habit of a Miniſter, of 'middle Stature, Grey-hair'd, accompanied with 'two other Men, went into the Lodge. The 'Priſoners were lock'd up, and the outward 'Door of the Lodge alſo, at which I ſet a Per-'ſon to ſtand, and obſerve what ſhe could, and 'a Priſoner loaded with Irons was brought into 'the Lodge, and examined a long time. And 'the Priſoners, that came down as low as 'they could, heard the Perſon examined, with 'great Vehemency ſay often, I know nothing 'of it, I am innocent, he forced me to bely 'my ſelf, What would you have me ſay? Will 'you murder me becauſe I will not bely my 'ſelf and others? Several other ſuch like Ex-'preſſions they heard ſpoken as by one in great 'Agony. About Four of the Clock next 'Morning, the Priſoners that lay in a Place a-'bove the Hole heard the ſame Cry again two 'Hours, and on Saturday Morning again, and 'about Eight a Clock that Morning a Perſon I 'imploy'd to ſpie out the Truth of that Affair, 'did ſee the Turn-keys carrying a Bed into the 'Hole. She asked who it was for; they told 'her it was for Prance who was gone mad, and 'had tore his Bed in pieces. That Night the 'Examiners came again, and after an Hour's 'Conference Prance was led away to the Preſs-Yard. This, and many things of the like Na-'ture, made me very inquiſitive to know what 'paſs'd in the Priſon. Soon after this Francis 'Corral a Coach-man that had been put into 'Newgate upon Suſpicion of carrying away Sir 'Edmondbury Godfrey's Body, and lay there thir-'teen Weeks and three Days in great Miſery, 'got out. I went to ſee him, and found him a 'ſad Spectacle, having the Fleſh worn away, 'and great Holes in both his Legs by the Weight 'of his Irons, and having been chained ſo long

'double,

'double, that he could not ſtand upright, he 'told me much of his hard and cruel Uſage, as 'that he had been ſqueez'd and haſped into a 'thing like a Trough, in a Dungeon under 'Ground; which put him to inexpreſſible Tor-'ment, inſomuch that he ſwooned, and that a 'Perſon in the Habit of a Miniſter ſtood by 'all the while. That a Duke beat him, pull'd 'him by the Hair, and ſet his drawn Sword 'to his Breaſt three times, and ſwore he would 'run him through; and another great Lord laid 'down a Heap of Gold, and told him it was 'Five hundred Pounds, and that he ſhould have 'it all, and be taken into the aforeſaid Duke's 'Houſe, if he would confeſs what they would 'have him; and one F. a Vintner, that lives 'at the Sign of the Half moon in Ch-ſi, by whoſe 'Contrivance he was accus'd, took him aſide, 'and bid him name ſome Perſon, and ſay, 'they imploy'd him to take up the dead Body 'in Somerſet Yard, and gave him Money for ſo 'doing; that if he would do this, both F. and 'he ſhould have Money enough. He alſo told 'me, that he was kept from Thurſday till Sunday 'without Victuals or Drink, having his Hands 'every Night chain'd behind him, and being 'all this time lock'd to a Staple which was 'driven into the Floor, with a Chain not a-'bove a Yard long: That in this great Ex-'tremity, he was forced to drink his own 'Water; and that the Jaylor beat his Wife, 'becauſe ſhe brought Victuals, and prayed that 'he might have it, and threw Milk on the 'Ground, and bid her be gone, and not look 'at him.' And in another Part of the ſaid Libel is contained (amongſt other things) theſe falſe, feigned, and ſcandalous Words and Figures following, to wit, 'My Arraignment '(which in Confidence of my own Innocency 'I continually preſs'd for) not but that I knew 'the Danger, as to this Life, of encountring 'the Devil in the worſt of his Inſtruments, 'which are Perjurors encouraged to that de-'gree as that profligated Wretch' (meaning 'Thomas Dangerfield produced as a Witneſs againſt her for High Treaſon) 'was, and hath been 'ſince his being expos'd to the World in his 'true Colours, both at mine, and another's 'Trial.' And in another part of the ſaid Li-bel are contained theſe falſe, feigned, and ſcandalous Words and Figures following. 'Nor have I ſince received any thing towards 'my Loſſes, or the leaſt Civility from any of 'them, whilſt Dangerfield (meaning the ſaid Tho. 'Dangerfield) when made a Priſoner for appa-'rent recorded Rogueries was viſited by, and 'from Perſons of conſiderable Quality, with 'great Sums of Gold and Silver, to encourage 'him in the new Villanies he had undertaken, 'not againſt me alone, but Perſons in whoſe 'Safety, all good Men, as well Proteſtants, as 'others in the Three Kingdoms, are concerned.' And in another part of the ſaid Libel called, 'A Poſtſcript to the Impartial Readers,' are contained theſe falſe, feigned, and ſcandalous Words following, to wit, 'And whenſoever his 'Majeſty pleaſes to make is as ſafe and honou-'rable, as it is apparent it hath been gainful, 'and meritorious to do the contrary; there 'will not want Witneſſes to teſtifie the Truth 'of more than I have written, and Perſons that 'are above being made the Hangman's Hounds 'for Weekly Penſions, or any other Conſidera-'tions whatſoever,' to the evil and dangerous Example of all others in the like Caſe offend-ing, and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.' Upon this Indictment ſhe hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded, Not Guilty, and for her Trial hath put her ſelf upon the Coun-try, which Country you are, ſo your Iſſue is to try whether ſhe be guilty of this Offence, in Manner and Form wherein ſhe ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty. If you find her Guilty, you are to ſay ſo; and if you find her Not Guilty, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evi-dence.

Then Robert Dormer Eſquire, of Lincoln's-Inn, opened the Indictment thus.

Mr. Dormer. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury. Elizabeth Cellier the Gentlewoman at the Bar, the Wife of Peter Cellier of the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middleſex Gentleman, ſtands indicted of being the Author and Publiſher of a Libel Intituled, Malice Defeated, or a brief Relation of the Accuſation and Deliverance of Elizabeth Cellier. You have heard the Indictment read, wherein ſome Clauſes of this Libel are recited in the Words they were written, and in Mrs. Cellier's own Words, and in other Words, I will not un-dertake to repeat them to you.

Gentlemen, this is a Libel ſo complicated and general, that within this Book are contained as many Libels of ſeveral Natures, and againſt different Perſons and Orders of Men as there are Paragraphs, his Majeſty, the Proteſtant Religion, our Laws, Government, Magiſtrates, Councellours of State, Courts of Judicature, the King's Evidence, and the Publick Juſtice of this Kingdom are all aſperſed and defamed, by the Virulency and Malice of this Woman's Pen.

She hath charged upon the Principles of our Religion, the Murder of his late Majeſty, and the greateſt Impieties that ever were commit-ted.

She accuſeth all that have done their Duties, or been active in the Diſcovery of the preſent Popiſh Plot, to be Enemies of the Crown, and to be acting over again the Tragedy of our late Civil War.

She chargeth our Laws with Cruelties, as in-human as they are falſe, in permitting Priſo-ners to ſtarve under their Confinement, in ad-mitting of Racks and Tortures to be uſed, and that for the worſt Purpoſes, thereby to extort Perjuries and falſe Evidences againſt the Inno-cent; to which ſhe would make Perſons of the beſt Quality of our Nobility, Magiſtracy, and Clergy, Privies, and Parties.

She libels the King's Evidences under the Characters of the Devil's Inſtruments, and the Hangman's Hounds; and defames his Majeſty's Government, in ſaying, it is not ſafe to ſpeak Truth, but meritorious and gainful to do the contrary.

She will appear to you to be ſo Criminal, that nothing can aggravate her Offences, unleſs the Impudence of the Delinquent, who hath ſet her Name to almoſt every Page of this ſcandalous Libel; and ſince the Indictment hath been depending, Owned, Publiſhed, and put a value on her ſelf for being the Author of ſo excellent a Book.

pen-

To the Indictment ſhe hath pleaded Not Guilty, if the King's Evidence prove the Charge, you are to find her Guilty.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Gentlemen, the Charge is but this: Firſt, She is Charged with the ſetting forth this Book; in the next place, there are ſeveral Clauſes in that Book which ſhe is particularly Charged with. Now that which the Evidence will prove muſt be, firſt, That the Book was Owned by her, and Publiſhed by her; and then, That theſe particulars charged in the Indictment were in the Book; and then you will receive the Directions of the Court of what Nature the Proofs are. Go on to the Evidence, that is your Work, fall to your Proof.

Mr. Dormer. My Lord, we will call our Witneſſes. William Downing, John Penny, and Robert Stevens. [Who appeared and were Sworn]

Mr. Dormer. Will. Downing, Do you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of the Printing of this Libel (ſhew him the Libel) and who brought the Sheets to the Preſs?

Mr. Downing. My Lord, about the 22*d* or 23*d* of Auguſt ———

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Begin with Penny firſt. Pray what ſay you to that Book?

Mr. Penny. My Lord, I was bid to buy a Book of that Gentlewoman, and I did ſo. I asked for her by her Name.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. By what Name?

Mr. Penny. Mrs. Cellier.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Is that the Gentlewoman?

Mr. Penny. Yes, that is the Gentlewoman. And ſhe came out to me, and asked what my Errand was? I told her it was to have a Book: That you may have, ſaid ſhe, if you pleaſe. Madam ſaid I, What is the Price? Two Shillings, ſaid ſhe: Cannot I have them cheaper, ſaid I? No, ſaid ſhe, I ſell them to Shopkeepers for 18 s. a Dozen, and I muſt not ſell them under here. With that ſhe fetched me a Book, and I gave her 2 s. and when ſhe had done, ſhe gave me another little Paper.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. That is not in Iſſue, nor your Queſtion now. Did you ask her for the Book ſhe publiſhed and ſet out?

Mr. Penny. Yes; and ſhe did acknowledge that was her Book.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. What! She did own the Book ſhe ſold to you to be hers?

Mr. Penny. This is the Book I have in my Hand, and I marked every ſheet of it; and ſhe told me there was another little ſheet to be added to it; and if any Gentleman pleaſed to ſend it into the Countrey, that might be put up in a Letter to ſend by the Poſt.

Cellier. May I ask him a Queſtion?

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Tell me your Queſtion, and I'll ask it.

Cellier. I deſire to know if I ſaid any more, than you may have a Book, or there is a Book. And who asked for a Book?

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Did ſhe ſay any more than you may have a Book, or this is the Book that I have publiſhed?

Mr. Penny. When I got the Book and paid for it, I turned about again and asked her if it was her own? She told me it was; and more than that, if occaſion were ſhe could have put more in it.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Why Mrs Cellier, you did not deny this Book yeſterday; for you may remember when you did ſay, you wanted your Witneſſes, and if you could but have time to bring them, you would prove the Truth of it. We told you you had nothing to prove on this Iſſue of Not Guilty; but that ſome body elſe did publiſh the Book, and you did not. You owned you writ it your ſelf every word with your own Hand.

Cellier. My Lord, if I was a fooliſh vain Woman, and did ſeem to ſpeak ſome vain words about my ſelf which I did not underſtand the conſequence of, I hope a word vainly ſpoke by me, ſhall not be brought againſt me to convict me of a Crime.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Mrs. Cellier, you do not ſeem ſo negligent about your ſelf, that we may not believe what you ſay of your ſelf.

Cellier. But vain fooliſh words ſpoke in that nature, I hope ſhall be no Evidence againſt me.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. But however it is proved againſt you.

Cellier. Did I ſay I writ it?

Mr. Penny. You told me that was your Book.

Cellier. I told you? Pray, my Lord, put one Queſtion to him upon the Oath he hath taken: Did I ſay any more, than it was mine and I ſold it; not that I writ it, or was the Author of it?

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Mrs. Cellier, This is a Book that is intitled with your Name, and ſold by your ſelf. Now in any one's Judgment, this is both an owning of the Book, and publiſhing of the Book. When you ſold it, you gave it out as your Book, and it hath in the Title Page your Name as the Author of it.

Cellier. My Lord, if I could have produced my Witneſſes, I could have made my Defence; they have been at ſeveral places for them, they have been all about Town, and ſeveral ways, at Sir Joſeph Sheldon's, and a great many other places, and can find none of them.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. To what purpoſe ſhould your Witneſſes come?

Cellier. I ſhould with them have made my Defence.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. If you would have ſaid to us yeſterday, that you had Witneſſes to prove that any one elſe writ the Book, we would have put off the Tryal. But you ſaid you writ it every word of it your ſelf, and ſo owned the Iſſue: But now you pretend you want Witneſſes; to what purpoſe would you have them come?

Cellier. 'Tis not the Honour of the Bench, my Lord, to give Evidence; and I hope you won't take that advantage of my vain words.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. 'Tis the Honour of the Bench to repeat what you ſay: When you ask time to put off your Tryal, and the Court gives you Direction to what purpoſe Witneſſes may be uſed, and you renounce that and take the Fact upon your ſelf.

Cellier. But I hope that is no Evidence.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. It was ſpoke openly in the Court, every body heard it.

Cellier. I am ſurprized and have no Witneſſes.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. 'Tis eaſie to pretend that you want Witneſſes; but to what purpoſe would you have them?

Cellier.

Cellier. My Lord, I hope you will pleaſe to remember he ſwears, I only ſaid it was mine, not that I was the Author.

Sir Creſwel Levins. Mr. At. Gen. If you ſold it, that is a Publiſhing in Law, and is within the Indictment.

Cellier. But he did not ſay I writ it.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Pray, Mrs. Cellier, don't truſt your ſelf upon that: For he ſaid, after he had it he asked you, Is this your Book? You ſaid, yes, it is my Book, and if I had been aware I could have put a great deal more in it than I have done.

Cellier. But I did not ſay I writ it.

Mr. Penny. You ſaid, if it were to be writ again you could put more in it.

Cellier. I ſaid it was my Book, and ſo it was, becauſe it was in my poſſeſſion; but not that I writ it. This is my Fan, but it does not follow that I made it.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. But the Queſtion was concerning the Author of the Book.

Cellier. He did ask me no ſuch Queſtion. Did you ask me if I was the Author?

Mr. Penny. No, I did not.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. But what did you ask her?

Mr. Penny. I asked her, whether it were her Book.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. And did ſhe own it?

Mr. Penny. Yes, ſhe did.

Cellier. So it was mine, in poſſeſſion.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Did you mean by your Queſtion, Whether that Book was her's in Property, or ſhe were the Author and Publiſher of it?

Mr. Penny. I would know whether it was her's or no.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. But what was your intention in asking? Was it whether ſhe, or any other Perſon made it?

Mr. Penny. I don't know who made it, ſhe told me it was her's.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. But what was your meaning in it?

Mr. Penny. My intention was, for fear ſhe ſhould have given me ſome other Book, to know whether it was writ by her or no.

Cellier. My Lord, I am not to be judged by his meaning; but by his Queſtian and my Anſwer.

Mr. At. Gen. Did ſhe tell you ſhe ſold more of them?

Mr. Penny. I turned about when I had the Book, and ſaid I, can I have, if occaſion be, any more? She ſaid ſhe had but 4 or 500 left, and in a few days ſhe ſhould have more.

Mr. At. Gen. You told us, ſhe told you what ſhe ſold them for by the Dozen.

Mr. Penny. Yes, 18 s. the Dozen to the Shopkeepers.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Then ſet up Downing.

[Which was done.]

Pray look upon that Book and the Title of it.

[Which he did.]

Have you examined that Book?

Mr. Downing. Sir, I printed part of it.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. But have you examined that very Pamphlet?

Mr. Downing. Yes, I know it very well.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Did you print part of it?

Mr. Downing. Yes, I did.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Who brought it to you to be printed?

Mr. Downing. Mrs. Cellier.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. She her ſelf?

Mr. Downing. My Lord, about the 22*d* of Auguſt, a meſſenger came to me from Mrs. Cellier, to tell me ſhe had ſomething to be printed; and ſhe ſent for me to her Houſe, and I went to her Houſe in Arundel Buildings. She told me ſhe had a Book to print, and it was her own Caſe. I told her I was a ſtranger to her Concerns, if there was nothing in it that was Offenſive, I would print it. She told me there was nothing but the Truth, and I might ſafely do it. She ſaid ſhe had been publickly and wrongfully abuſed, and was reſolved to publiſh her Caſe, and would make the World ſenſible of the Wrong ſhe had ſuſtained. I was apt, upon the plauſibleneſs of her Diſcourſe to believe her; and ſo I agreed with her to have 10*s.* a Rheam for printing, and I was to print 4 Rheam of every ſheet. And having printed half the Book, the meſſenger found it a printing at my Houſe; and having thus found out the Preſs, he carried it before the Secretary, Sir Leoline Jenkins, who granted a Warrant to bring us both before him; and having taken our Examinations, we were bound to appear before the Privy-Council as ſoon as Notice ſhould be given us of it: And being diſcharged by the Council, we were bound to appear the firſt Day of next Term in the King's-Bench: Since which time ſhe hath printed t'other half of her Book at ſome other place. And whereas ſhe promiſed to indemnifie me from all Trouble and Charge, when I came to pay the Clerk of the Council his Fees, ſhe refuſed to pay them for me, and told me I had betray'd her; and ſo notwithſtanding her promiſe, I was obliged to pay the Fees my ſelf at the Council.

Mr. Dormer. Pray Sir who was it corrected the ſheets?

Mr. Downing. Sir, They were brought to her.

Mr. Dormer. Did ſhe read them and correct them?

Mr. Downing. Yes, ſhe looked over them.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Pray tell me how far it was you printed of the Book?

Mr. Downing. It was to Folio 22.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. All the Clauſes in the Indictment are contained in thoſe Pages.

Mr. Clare. All but the laſt in the Poſtſcript.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Have you read it over ſince?

Mr. Downing. So far, my Lord, I did print.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. You take it upon your Oath, That to the 22*d Folio* of that Book that was given in Evidence, was printed by you by her Direction.

Mr. Downing. Yes, I do.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Then ſet up Stevens.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Stevens. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I ſaw this Book a printing at Mr. Downing's, and reading ſome Paſſages in it, I asked him, Mr. Downing, do you know what you do? He ſaid, it is a Truth: Then I asked him who he did it for; he ſaid he did it for Mrs. Cellier; I bid him have a care that he did no more than what he could juſtifie: He deſired me that I would not hurt him, and I was loth to do a poor man wrong, but away I went to the Secretary; but I asked him before, what was become of the ſheets, he ſaid he carried them to Mrs. Cellier, ſaid I, did ſhe bring you the Copy, ſaid he, ſhe ſent ſent it ſometimes by one meſſenger, ſometimes by another, for ſhe ſent ſeveral: And when I came to her, ſhe did tell me it was her Book, and that ſhe kept a man to write it, and ſhe dictated it to another that ſat by her; and ſhe often owned it was her Book, and ſhe the Author of it.

Cellier. I never ſaid ſo in my Life.

Mr. Stevens. Mrs. Cellier, by the ſame Token, when you ſent for Bail you had occaſion to write a Note; and I ſaw you write it, and ſaid, I now find 'tis none of your hand-writing, by the difference between the Note and the Copy: Said ſhe, I know that well enough, but I keep a man in the Houſe to write it, and I dictated to him, and he wrote. And I have ſeen there one Grange, and one Sing, but Grange hath come to me ſeveral times about her's and other Buſineſs, and ſhe did tell me, ſhe did dictate the Book to that man, and paid him for writing it. Says ſhe, I am up very early every morning, and preparing and dictating things for the Preſs. She hath put out two ſheets ſince, and this Day at One a Clock ſhe hath invited the Mercuries and the Hawkers to come and receive a new Pamphlet.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Do you know her Hand-writing?

Mr. Stevens. I have not that Note by me.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Did you ſee the Copy?

Mr. Stevens. Some part of it I did ſee.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Was it any part of it of her Hand-writing?

Mr. Stevens. No, I believe it was none of her Hand.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Was it ſeveral Hands?

Mr. Stevens. I ſaw but one part of the Copy, and that was all of one Hand, but not her's, I believe. She ſaid, ſhe kept a man to write it, and ſhe had ſeveral other things to write to be printed.

Mr. Bar. Weſton Did ſhe ever before affirm her ſelf to be the Author of the Book?

Mr. Stevens. She did (if it pleaſe you) before the Secretary, and before the Council; and ſaid ſhe would anſwer it. And I have ſeen her likewiſe ſell ſeveral of them ſeveral days.

Mr. Dormer. Did ſhe deliver any of theſe Books that you know of?

Mr. Stevens. I have ſeen her deliver them out, ſeveral times before me my ſelf, ſhe can't deny it.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Compare the Book with the Indictment.

Mr. Dormer. Swear Mr. Fowler.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Bar. Weſton. What is that Fowler?

Mr. Dormer. Shew him the Book if you pleaſe.

[Which was done.]

Did you buy any of thoſe Books of Mrs. Cellier?

Mr. Fowler. I bought 2 of them. I went to her Houſe, and told her I had a Letter from a Friend out of Oxfordſhire, that deſired me to buy 2 of her Books.

Mr. Dormer. Is that the ſame in your Hand?

Mr. Fowler. 'Tis the ſame as I believe. Some Friends came to my Houſe, and told me, they had ſeen me notoriouſly in print; ſo I came to her, and told her I had a Letter out of Oxfordſhire for a Book or two of her's. Sir, ſays ſhe, I'll fetch you one preſently; ſhe comes again with them. Madam, ſays I, I believe you have forgotten me.

Cellier. I know you not, I never ſaw you in my Life before.

Mr. Fowler. No, I believe not, but yet you could put me in your Book.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Why, What is your Name?

Mr. Fowler. My Name is Fowler.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Where do you live?

Mr. Fowler. At the Half Moon Tavern in Cheapſide, when I am at Home.

Cellier. Your Name is not in the Book.

Mr. Clare. There is one F. that keeps the Half-Moon Tavern in Cheapſide.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. You ſwear you had 2 Books of her?

Mr. Fowler. Yes. Madam, ſays I, I ſee you are full of buſineſs, ſo I paid her 4 s. for them, and away I came.

Mr. Dormer. Then you had no Diſcourſe with her farther, who was the Author, had you?

Mr. Fowler. No not a Syllable farther. I had only occaſion to get a couple of books; for ſome Perſons of Quality had been at my Houſe, and told me my Name was in it, and were pleaſed to Joke with me about it, as particularly, Mr. Henry Killigrew came one Day to my Houſe and called me into the Room, ſays he you are notoriouſly in Print, and known to be Company for a great Duke, and great Lords, you ſhall Drink a Glaſs of Wine now with me, and ſo tells me the Story; and thereupon I went to her Houſe to buy a couple of books.

Mr. At. Gen. You are the man meant by the (F.).

Mr. Fowler. I keep the Half-Moon in Cheapſide.

Mr. At. Gen. There is ſomething ſuppoſed in this Book to be done by you at your going to a man in Priſon, is that true?

Mr. Fowler. That I ſuppoſe is cleared by an Oath from Corral the Coachman; but withal, I gave my Oath for it before my Lord Mayor my ſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, for the ſatisfaction of People, tell us what you know of the matter.

Mr. Fowler. The Subſtance of my Oath before my Lord Mayor was this: That I never was with any great People, as they tax me, in my Life, with any great Duke or Lord: That I never did ſee any of the things that they ſay there, that the Duke ſhould draw his Sword, and a Lord proffer 500 l. or I whiſper to the Coachman, That he ſhould name ſome great Perſons, and then he and I ſhould have money enough.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. But I come nearer to you with a Queſtion, Mr. Fowler.

Mr. Fowler. Yes, my Lord, if you pleaſe.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Was one Corral, a Coachman, apprehended for carrying away the dead body of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, at your motion and accuſation?

Mr. Fowler. As to that, I will tell you the occaſion of all our Diſcourſe, if it may not be too tedious. Upon the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, a Coachman was one day called to carry ſome Gentlemen that were in my Houſe; but they ſtaying a little longer than ordinary, he went away, and, as they ſay, drop'd them; thereupon another Coachman was called, which was this Corral mentioned in this Libel, and he went up to the Gentlemen into the Room, and they, to ingage him to ſtay, ſecured his Whip; he comes down and begs a Pipe of Tobacco of my Wife in the Bar: Ay, ſaid ſhe, thou lookeſt like a good honeſt Fellow, and I believe thou haſt no hand in the Plot (a caſual Word that was paſſant at that time) whereupon he begins to tell her, it was very well for him, for he had eſcaped that Danger: Four of them meeting him againſt St. Clements Church-Wall, and ſwearing damn them he ſhould ſtand, and do as they would have him; and he ſaw 4, and he ſaw Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Body in a Sedan, and he ſhamm'd upon them that he could not carry him, for that the Axletree of his Coach was broke. I was in a Room by the Bar, and I overheard the Fellow talk after this rate, I came out, and asked him, ſaid I, are you ſure of this? Then he tells me the ſame Story over again; whereupon I began to ask him, if he were maſter for himſelf, or drove for another; the Fellow being ſenſible he had been too laviſh in his Diſcourſe, pretends to light his Pipe in haſte, and to run out to ſee whether the Seats of his Coach were not ſtoln out, and I took a Candle with me, and went after him to take the Number of his Coach: By that time I got to the Door, he was driving away, tho' he had left his Whip with the Gentlemen as Security for his ſtay. I came in, ſet down the Number of his Coach in my Book, and drew up the ſubſtance of their Diſcourſe that happen'd between my Wife and him; and I was ſaying to my Wife I had a mind to ſtop this Fellow at the Gate, but it rained, and ſo I did not, only kept the Number of his Coach. The next day Captain Richardſon and the Secondary of the Compter were drinking a Glaſs of Wine at my Houſe, where I told them the Story, and they blamed me that I had not ſtopped him. Whereupon Captain Richardſon took the Number of his Coach, and the next day ſent his Janizaries abroad, and ſecured him, and kept him in Cuſtody for 2 or 3 days.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. When was this?

Mr. Fowler. Two or three days after the murder was publickly known of: I think it was Tueſday Night that this Fellow told me the ſtory, to the beſt of my remembrance; and the next day I told the Captain and the Secondary.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Was that the next Tueſday after the murder, or the Tueſday ſevennight?

Mr. Fowler. It was the Tueſday ſevennight after. They blamed me very much that I did not ſtop the Fellow: I told them how the thing was, and the Captain ſent his People abroad, and took the Coachman up by what marks I gave of him. The next day I was ordered to wait upon the Lords at Wallingford houſe, where was the Duke of Buckingham, my Lord Shaftsbury, the Marquis of Winchester, two other Lords, and Major Wildman the Secretary; where they Examined me upon this thing, and what I have declared to your Lordſhips, I declared then. And they brought the Fellow in Face to Face; and there he does confeſs the whole matter, and made a great whining and clutter, that John ſuch a One, a Coach-man, and Mrs. ſuch an One, a Strong-Water Woman, told him this, and that, and t'other. The Lords ſent for two of the Perſons he named, and both of them being brought before them, the Lords were very well ſatisfied, in that one of them keeps a Victualling-Houſe, and they were both of good Reputation, they were ſatisfied it was only a ſham, and that he only named them as the firſt Perſons that came into his mind. Getting nothing out of him, my Lord Duke of Buckingham told him, Sirrah, if you will confeſs, there ſhall be nothing of what the King hath promiſed, but it ſhall be made good to you, you ſhall be ſure of it, and you ſhall be protected. My Lord Shaftsbury told him the ſame; but withal, if he would not confeſs, and tell him who ſet him on Work, then nothing ſhould be ſevere enough for him; or Words to that effect.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Upon this Accuſation, was he ſent to Priſon?

Mr. Fowler. He was re-ordered to Priſon, and there continued ſeveral months.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Where? To what Priſon?

Mr. Fowler. To Newgate.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Were you ever in Newgate, and ſaw him?

Mr. Fowler. Never, not I.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Did you never ſee him but at this Chamber with the Lords, and at your own Tavern?

Mr. Fowler. Never.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. And you never were in Newgate in your Life with him?

Mr. Fowler. No, not I.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Were you ever in Newgate with him with my Lord Duke of Buckingham, or my Lord Shaftsbury, or any other Lord?

Mr. Fowler. No.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Or any other Duke whatſoever?

Mr. Fowler. No.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Or any Lord or Nobleman whatſoever?

Mr. Fowler. No, except 4 years ago with my Lord Petre.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. There is no danger of him. But as to this Affair, Were you ever with any?

Mr. Fowler. No.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Did you ſee any Sword drawn, or money offered?

Mr. Fowler. There was never any Sword drawn, nor money offered.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever ſee 500 l. laid down upon a Table?

Mr. Fowler. There was never any Sword drawn, nor money laid down.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. He anſwers that very fully; for he ſays he was never in Newgate with any Nobleman, but once with my Lord Petre 4 years ago, and if he was with any Nobleman, he is accuſed to be there in the preſence of a Duke, and another great Earl; and that the Duke drew his Sword, and the other Nobleman laid down a great deal of Gold, which he ſaid did amount to 500 l. and told him it ſhould be his, and that if he would accuſe ſome other Perſons, they would maintain him; and then he did draw the Fellow aſide and tell him, Can't you name ſome body? Then you and I may have money enough. This is the Accuſation of the Book: But now 'tis denied that ever he was in Newgate with any ſuch Perſons, which is conſequentially a Denial of the whole Charge.

Cellier.

Cellier. I did not write that this was true, but I writ that the Fellow told me ſo.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. We will ſee that in the Book in the firſt place. We have examined this thing by the by, and tho' 'tis a little out of the way, yet it may be ſatisfactory: Read the Book.

Cl. of Cr. Malice Defeated, &c.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Compare it with the Record, for ſhe ſhall have a fair Tryal by the Grace of God.

Then the ſeveral Clauſes recited in the Indictment were read over again by the Clerk out of the Book, and compared by the Judge with the Record.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Theſe are the Clauſes in the Book that are proved exactly upon you. Now I muſt tell you, becauſe this Book doth caſt a very great Infamy upon our Religion, and on the whole Government, it ought to be taken Notice of: For in the firſt place, to contrive to get a man into Priſon, and by Tortures to compel him even to commit Perjury: Then to hale another man to Priſon, and have him thus barbarouſly uſed, as to have Nobles to come to him, one with a Sword drawn, another with money in his Hand laying it down as a Temptation, and to force him to diſcover what he was not willing to confeſs; and then to lay Accuſation upon the King that he makes it a thing of ſafety to be the Hangman's Hounds, and to be Accuſers for Penſions, and ſhall aver, that when it is as free for her to ſpeak Truth, as it is meritorious for them to do otherwiſe, ſhe will diſcover ſuch and ſuch things, is a Slander that ought to receive a publick Rebuke: And to ſatisfie the World of the Untruth of it, I would have you prove, if Prance be here and the Coachman, what Uſage they received, to avert that publick Calumny that is caſt upon the Nation. For let Mrs. Cellier know, ſhe hath inſinuated, as tho' the murder of the late King was a ſufficient Ground to pervert her from Proteſtantiſm, which avowed ſuch Practices: When all the World knows, that at that time there were Proteſtants that were far better Subjects, and more Loyal, than ever any Papiſt was in the World, and as great Sufferers for their Oppoſition to that dreadful Villany, nay far more than the Papiſts can boaſt of for their Loyalty; whereas 'tis known they were Villains under-hand all the while, and thoſe that did incourage all that Roguery, and ſet that Faction on foot which brought things to that ill period they came to. Therefore you have ſet a fair Outſide upon a damnable Lie. And that the arranteſt rebelliouſeſt Rogues that ever lived under Heaven, are great Saints in compariſon of Proteſtants, no honeſt man will believe.

Cellier. I ſay, they called themſelves Proteſtants. I know the Proteſtants were great Sufferers for the King, and I my ſelf felt it; our Family, which were Proteſtants, were ſeveral times ſtript and plundered for their Loyalty. I grant all this.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Do you? Then you are an impudent lying Woman; or you had a villanous lying Prieſt, that inſtructed you to begin your Book with ſuch a baſe inſinuation againſt the beſt of Religions. But I have no more to ſay to that, for that is ſuch a viſible notorious Falſity to the knowledge of all Engliſhmen, and People of Underſtanding, that it needs no greater Conviction than the particular knowledge of thoſe men that lived in that time. Therefore for that Lie, let it go upon the publick infamy that attends on your Party, who are notorious Liars, and among whom Falſhood does ſo much abound.

Call Corral and Prance.

Mr. At. Gen. We will give that Satisfaction to the People: But the Jury are to know, that it does not at all concern the matter in iſſue: For when all that can be ſaid by them is declared, I muſt ſay, in point of Law, the Publiſhing of a Libel, tho' it be true, yet is a Crime, and deſerves Puniſhment.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. I told you ſo. But, Mr. Attorney, we are to ſet a Fine; and to inſtruct us for the ſetting of the Fine, it will be a ſatisfaction to the Court to diſprove the things ſhe alledges, if you have the Witneſſes ready, but if you are not ready with your Proof, let it alone.

Mr. At. Gen. They are ordered to be here, I only ſpeak that by the way. Swear Mr. Prance.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Mr. Prance, Pray were you tortured in Priſon?

Mr. Prance. No, I never ſaw any ſuch thing there in my Life.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. How were you uſed?

Mr. Prance. Very well, I had every thing that was fitting, Capt. Richardſon did take great care of me.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. The truth is, the very Book it ſelf implies a Contradiction. It ſays, There was one tortured in the Priſon, and the Roarings that they heard were like the Roarings of a ſtrong man in Torture: And yet, preſently after it ſays, that the Priſoner comes up in irons and is examined. Now could any one having been ſo lately on the Rack be able to walk, and come to be examined? Any man that knows what the Nature of a Rack is, knows alſo, that one that has been tortured there, would not be able to heave the irons upon his Legs, nor be able to ſtir or walk: But that is a thing not uſed amongſt us, it was ſome impudent lying Prieſt that durſt venture to broach ſuch a Calumny.

Cellier. I don't ſay it was, but it was ſo reported.

Mr. Prance. Dr. Lloyd was with me many times for half an hour together, and if any ſuch thing had been, he would have ſeen it.

Then Francis Corral was called, but he did not appear.

Capt. Richardſon. Corral they have got away, for I had him laſt Night, and he was ordered to be here to day, but here is his Wife.

[Who was Sworn.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Good Woman, were you ever with your Husband in Priſon?

Mrs. Corral. I was not ſuffered to come near him when he was of the Maſter's ſide.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. But when he was out of Priſon, How did he tell you he was uſed? Did he tell you he was compelled to drink his own Piſs?

Mrs. Corral. Sunday Morning it was before I ſaw him, nay, I did not ſee him then, but I was called to bring him Victuals, or he would have been ſtarved; nay, they ſaid he would be dead before I brought him. So I carry'd him Bread and things, and I did not ſee him then till almoſt a Fortnight after; and when I ſaw him he had great Fetters on, and I was amazed at them. They put in ſome Char-Coal there to warm him, it being very cold, and, ſaid I, Lord, what have you done, you have murdered ſome body ſure? But they ſaid, they put on thoſe things to keep his Legs warm.

Cellier. Were you ever beaten at any time for bringing your Husband Victuals?

Mrs. Corral. No indeed, I was never beaten, but they would not ſuffer me to ſee him on the Maſter's ſide.

Lord Mayor. Her Husband hath deny'd all upon Oath before me.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Was he ever hurt with Scrues, or any ſuch thing?

Cellier. Had he not Holes in his Legs?

Mrs. Corral. Yes, he had a great many; I did ſee Holes in his Legs.

Mr. Bar. Wetſton. Did you?

Mrs. Corral. I did ſee one, and I can bring them that brought Salve to heal it.

Captain Richardſon. There is never an Iron in the Houſe that I keep, that weighs Twelve Pound.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. They ſay, you have Irons call'd Sheers, that weigh 40 Pound.

Captain Richardſon. If there be one, I'll be hang'd for it before I go hence.

Cellier. I hope I ſhall be allow'd to make my Defence, and call my Witneſſes.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Yes, to be ſure.

Cellier. Did not you hear your Husband tell me, how heavily he was fettered and uſed? That he was chained to the Floor with a Chain not above a Yard long? And was forced to drink his own Water?

Mrs. Corral. Madam, he is not ſenſible many times what he does ſay.

Cellier. But did not you hear him tell me ſo?

Mrs. Corral. I can't remember.

Cellier. Did not you tell me, That Captain Richardſon drove you away, and would not let you give Victuals to your Husband?

Mr. Bar. Weſton. All this is but over and above, for the great Matter that ſticks upon your part, is the Death of Sir Edmunbury Godfrey, and you are pinch'd there with Prance's Evidence, and ſo you would make the World believe, that he was tortur'd into his Confeſſion, and was mad when he did it, that you may the better turn it off from your own Party, on ſome body elſe, on whom I don't know.

Cellier. Pray, my Lord, hear me one word; As to your ſaying, I do it to defend a Party, I profeſs I ſtand ſingly and alone; I have been ſo barbarouſly uſed by thoſe you call that Party, that the Proteſtants have been abundantly more kind to me than they. And I would not tell the leaſt Lye to do them any good Turn.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Then you are an happy Woman indeed, that are belov'd by both Parties, You have not been ſerviceable alike to both I am ſure, but that is no great matter; if ſo be the Proteſtants were ſo kind, you have requited them ill by ſuch a baſe Libel.

Cellier. I ſay nothing againſt them.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Can you ſay any thing that you did not make this Pamphlet?

Cellier. My Lord, I be'nt bound to accuſe my ſelf, I deſire it may be prov'd.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. I think it is fully prov'd.

Cellier. I cannot ſay any thing without my Witneſſes, I deſire I may call them.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Call whom you will.

Cellier. I deſire George Grange may be call'd.

[Who was ſworn.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. What can you ſay for Mrs. Cellier? Tell me what Queſtions you will ask him.

Cellier. I deſire to know whether I did not ſend him to find Witneſſes? Who he went for? What Anſwers they return'd? And where they be?

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Well, what Witneſſes were you ſent to look for?

Grange. I went to look for one Mrs. Sheldon, that lives in Sir Joſeph Sheldon's Houſe, and they told me ſhe was in Eſſex. I went to the Coach to ſend for her.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Why Scoggin looked for his Knife on the Houſe-top.

Mr. Stevens. This man did ſee her ſell theſe Books.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Who did you look for beſides?

Grange. One Mr. Curtis. And his Wife ſaid, She had not ſeen him ſince yeſterday Morning.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. What were they to prove?

Grange. Truly my Lord I don't know.

Mr. Dormer. By the Oath you have taken, Do you know ſhe hath ſold any of theſe Books?

Grange. Yes, I do know that ſhe hath ſold ſome of them.

Lord Mayor. There your own Witneſs, Mrs. Cellier, proves it againſt you.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Who would you have elſe?

Cellier. I deſire that Mary Smith may be called (which was done, but ſhe appeared not then.) I deſire John Clerke may be ſent for from the Goal.

Captain Richardſon. He is in Execution.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. For what?

Captain Richardſon. For Debt.

Mr. Bar. Weſton, 'Tis not out of the Rules of Priſon, you may bring him hither, and 'tis no Eſcape.

Captain Richardſon. If your Lordſhip orders it ſo, I will bring him.

Lord Mayor. She ſhould have brought an Habeas Corpus, if ſhe would have had him.

Mr. At. Gen. He muſt bring him through ſome part, I ſuppoſe, that is not within the Rules, and then it will be an Eſcape.

Cellier. I pray an Habeas Corpus to fetch him.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. You might have had one before.

Cellier. This is all becauſe I had no time to prepare for my Defence.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. You might have moved the Court for it; they granted you a Copy of your Indictment.

Cellier. I had it not till nine a Clock to day, and my Counſel could not inſpect it, nor ſpeak a word with me about it.

Lord

Lord Mayor. At what time ſhall we have done, if we dally after this rate?

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Have you any blank Habeas Corpus?

Cl. of Peace. It could not be ſeal'd, and beſides, they ſhould fetch it out of the Crown Office.

Cellier. I deſire to have him come, in order to the Defence of ſomething in my Book.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. What would he prove?

Cellier. That I have not belied the Government.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. In what?

Cellier. That he was ſheer'd with long Sheers, and unreaſonable Irons.

Mr. Collins. You cannot do your ſelf greater Wrong than by ſuch Talk as this.

Lord Mayor. You are not Indicted for your whole Book, but for only ſome part of it.

Cryer. Here is Mrs. Smith now, [Who was Sworn.

Cellier. What have you heard Corral the Coachman ſay, about his Uſage in Priſon?

Mr. Dormer. I think that Queſtion is not to be admitted.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. What is it you would have her asked?

Cellier. What ſhe heard the Coachman ſay, for I only ſay he told me ſo.

Mr. Dormer. I am in your Lordſhip's Judgment, I think it is not Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. She keeps the Coachman away, and now will tell you what he ſaid.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. That is no Evidence, for the Coachman might have been here, if you had not ſent him away.

Cellier. Let his Wife ſpeak that, becauſe ſhe can teſtifie I did not ſend him away.

Captain Richardſon. She gave them Money before, and told them ſhe would maintain them.

Cellier. You are not an Evidence againſt me, you are not ſworn.

Captain Richardſon. But this that I ſay is ſworn.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Call her.

Mr. At. Gen. Ask her a proper Queſtion to the Iſſue.

Cellier. I would know of her whether I kept her Husband away?

Mr At. Gen. It may be you did it without her Knowledge.

Cellier. Have I ſeen her Husband without her Knowledge?

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Go on with your Witneſſes.

Cellier. I deſire Mary Johnſon may be call'd.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. For what? What will ſhe prove?

Cellier. That ſhe was to ſee for Witneſſes in order to my Defence.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. But if they are not come, what ſignifies that?

Cellier. I have done then my Lord; for not having time to get my Witneſſes, I cannot make my Defence ſo fully, as elſe I ſhould have done: Only I deſire you to conſider I am a poor ignorant Woman, and have erred out of Ignorance: I thought nothing, but that I might publiſh what others had ſaid and told me, and ſo I have offended in Ignorance, if I have offended.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. I do verily believe there are more Wits than yours concerned in this Book, though you bear the Name, yet the Book is not the Effect of your Wit only, but you acknowledge enough. And you are to take notice, That the King hath ſet out a Proclamation, that no Books ſhall be printed without a Licenſe.

Cellier. I never heard it. I was under cloſe Confinement when the King ſet it out.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. No, I deny that, for you were enlarged the firſt Day of Trinity-Term, and the Proclamation came out towards the End.

Mr. At. Gen. She now does confeſs ſhe knows of it, becauſe ſhe ſpeaks of the time, and that was before her Book was written.

Cellier. May not my Counſel ſpeak for me, I deſire you would hear him.

Mr. Collins. I have nothing to ſay for her.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. He ſays he hath nothing to ſay for you.

Mr. Collins. And if you had ſaid leſs for your ſelf it had been better.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. The Queſtion is but Guilty or not Guilty, Whether you publiſhed this Libel or not; and if the Matter of the Indictment be proved, what can Counſel ſay, except you can diſprove the Witneſſes, that you did not the Fact?

Cellier. Well my Lord, then I beſeech you conſider me I am a Woman, and deal with me in Mercy, as well as Juſtice.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Mrs. Cellier, I have not been noted to be a Perſon that uſe any great Severity towards any body, no not towards any of your Party, but when I ſee ſo much Malice as is comprized in your Book, and have reaſon to ſuſpect, that this is not acted only by you, though you bear the Name of it, but ſome of your wicked Prieſts are the Authors of it, as I am ſure they are, then I think it is not ſevere that you, who ſtand at the Stake for all, muſt bear the Blame of all. If you will tell us who it was that ſet you on work, and aſſiſted you in this wicked Buſineſs, that will be ſomething towards the Mitigation of your Fine, but if you will take it on your ſelf, you muſt ſuffer the Conſequence.

Cellier. I beſeech you my Lord have ſome Compaſſion; His Majeſty acknowledged before the Council, that I had ſuffered for him; I ventured my Life through a Sea and an Army to ſerve him; I loſt my Father and my Brother both in a day for him; and if you have no Compaſſion for me, have ſome Commiſeration for my Loyal Parents that loſt their Eſtates for him.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. If you have done Service for his Majeſty, and thereby deſerved any thing of him, His Majeſty hath been ſo bountiful in the Diſpenſation of his Favour, that he would not fail to recompenſe you for it; but we are to proceed according to the Rules of Law.

Cellier. But pray have ſome Mercy in your Juſtice.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Gentlemen of the Jury; This Gentlewoman the Priſoner ſtands Indicted——

Jury.

Jury. We have not heard one word that hath been ſaid.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. No, that is ſtrange, I will acquaint you with as much of the Evidence as falls under my Information: It had been well if you had told us this before: The Buſineſs is this, She ſtands indicted here for Writing and Publiſhing of a very ſcandalous Libel. But pray did not you hear Penny prove that ſhe ſold it?

Jury. We heard the Three firſt Witneſſes.

Mr. At. Gen. There was the Proof of the Fact.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. The reſt of the Evidence was but a Compariſon of the Clauſes in the Book, with thoſe in the Indictment, which you are to have Direction from the Court in, that they do: She ſtands indicted for Publiſhing a Libel, and the Title of the Libel is, Malice Defeated, or a brief Relation of the Accuſation and Deliverance of Elizabeth Cellier. Now this Libel branches it ſelf out into ſeveral Parts; the firſt whereof is a very fine Inſinuation, as though her leaving the Proteſtant Religion, was, becauſe thoſe that murdered the King, and made that very great Subverſion that was made in the Government by the late long Parliament, and the Army that ſucceeded them, were Proteſtants——

Cellier. Pray my Lord, I ſay, called Proteſtants.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. By your favour, ſhe pretends it was by thoſe that were called Proteſtants, but if they were only thoſe that were called Proteſtants, and not Proteſtants, What Reaſon had ſhe to go off from the Proteſtant Religion, to turn Papiſt, when there was ſuch a Body of Loyal Proteſtants that did adhere to the Loyal Party? Therefore that was as villanous an Inſinuation as could be; as tho' the Proteſtant Religion did nouriſh and teach ſeditious Principles, which in the Conſequence of them, tended towards the Subverſion of the Government and Order, which certainly it does cheriſh in the higheſt Degree of any Religion in the World, and hath the moſt peaceable Principles in matters of Duty, both in Subjection to our Superiors, and of a charitable Deportment of Men one towards another: And the Practice of thoſe Principles hath been ſeen amongſt Proteſtants, eſpecially amongſt the Engliſh Proteſtants, as much as in any Nation of the World; this may be ſaid of it to this Day, for the Reputation of the Engliſh Nation, that there is more Fidelity, Honeſty, and generous Truſt amongſt them, than among all the Nations of the World beſides; ſo that if a Man were to go out of England, to any other Part of the World, he might very well uſe the Words of Demoſthenes, upon his going out of Athens, at his Baniſhment; Farewel beloved City, I am going into a World, where I ſhall not find ſuch Friends as I have had Enemies here; Friends in other places, will be no better than our Enemies here; the Carriage of Engliſh Men is ſo much beyond all others, except the Germans, who, I muſt confeſs, are famed for their Honeſty and Integrity one to another; but if you take the French, the Italian, the Spaniard, or any ſort of the Levantine People, they live like ſo many Wolves, eſpecially in thoſe Places where the Popiſh Religion is profeſs'd. Now after this Inſinuation, there is another part of the Book recited in the Indictment, There was an horrid barbarous Murder that was committed here, and which certainly did fix the Accuſation of the Plot fuller upon them, than all the Evidence that was given beſides: The Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, a Magiſtrate in doing of his Duty, was moſt barbarouſly murdered, and by whom, is Evidenced by one Prance: It hath been the whole Labour of the Party, to caſt this Murder upon other Perſons, and take it off themſelves; for they find if that Accuſation ſticks upon them, it is a thing of ſo hainous a Nature, that it will make the Popiſh Party odious to all Mankind. And therefore this they labour at mightily, and this Task ſhe hath taken on her ſelf; for knowing Prance to be a principal Witneſs, ſhe undertakes to let the World know, that Prance was tortured in Priſon, to inſinuate, that the Evidence he gave againſt thoſe Perſons that were Executed for this Murder, was extorted from him by ill and cruel Uſage: But you muſt firſt know, the Laws of the Land do not admit a Torture, and ſince Queen Elizabeth's time, there hath been nothing of that Kind ever done. The Truth is indeed, in the Twentieth Year of her Reign, Campion was juſt ſtretch'd upon the Rack, but yet not ſo but that he could walk; but when ſhe was told it was againſt the Law of the Land, to have any of her Subjects Racked, (though that was in an extraordinary Caſe, a World of Seminaries being ſent over to contrive her Death, and ſhe lived in continual Danger) yet, it was never done after to any one, neither in her Reign, who reigned Twenty five Years after, nor in King James's Reign, who reigned Twenty two Years after; nor in King Charles the Firſt's Reign, who reigned Twenty four Years after; and God in Heaven knows, there hath been no ſuch thing offered in this King's Reign, for I think we may ſay, we have lived under as lawful and merciful a Government as any People whatſoever, and have had as little Blood ſhed, and ſanguinary Executions as in any Nation under Heaven. Well, but (contrary to the Law in this Caſe) ſhe does ſuppoſe Extraordinary Ways were uſed to make Prance give this Evidence. She ſays, ſhe thought what ſhe firſt heard was the Noiſe of a Woman with Child, and that Harris the Turnkey did tell her it was a Woman in Labour, but when ſhe deſired to be let in to help her, he turned her away rudely; but liſtening, ſhe perceived it was the Groans of a ſtrong Man that muſt be in Torture: She asked ſome of the Goalers what was the matter? They told her, They durſt not tell her, but it was ſomething they could not endure; and they heard him cry, What would you have me confeſs? Would you have me bely my ſelf? I know nothing of it, and ſuch Words as theſe. Whereupon we have called Prance, and here, upon his Oath, he tells you, there was no ſuch matter: That he was uſed very kindly, had all things fiting, and under no Compulſion, ſo that this is an high high Libel againſt the Government. She ſays furthermore, there was one Corral, a Coachman that was impriſoned by the Means of one Fowler for the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, that there was a Nobleman a Duke, came to him in Priſon, and drew his Sword at him, and would have him confeſs, that another Nobleman laid down a Sum of Money, and ſaid it was Five hundred Pound, and told him, if he would confeſs, he ſhould have it; and that Fowler took him aſide, and bid him lay it upon ſome body elſe, and then he and Fowler ſhould have Money enough. Fowler being examined, and, upon his Oath, tells you, upon what Account he did charge Corral; he tells you, he was never with Corral in the Goal in his Life, and never was with him in the Preſence of any Duke or Nobleman but once in a Room, where Corral was brought to be examined, and then there was the Duke of Buckingham, the Marquiſs of Winchester (who I never heard was a Man of Cruelty, or harſh Nature) my Lord Shaftsbury, and Major Wildman, who was Secretary, but there was no ſuch cruel Uſage there, and he was never in the Priſon with ſuch Noblemen; and then the Conſequence is, that the whole Story is falſe. Corral it ſeems, my Lord Mayor ſays, hath been examined to this Point, and denies it all; and is kept out of the way, that he ſhould not give it in Evidence here: But if we had him here it were no great matter, for if there were any thing of this nature true, they are to proceed in a legal way againſt them that make theſe Tranſgreſſions of the Law, ſhe ought to have indicted the Perſons, for they are highly puniſhable for ſuch Extravagances as theſe are. But there is nothing done in that kind, but inſtead of that, ſhe hath defamed them all in a Libel, and ſhe is not contented to have done that neither, for ſhe hath defamed the King highly in his Government, and ſaid, ſhe could have written more. I paſs over the Buſineſs that concerns Dangerfield, wherein ſhe complains, that Dangerfield had more Friends, and was viſited more by Perſons of Quality, when ſhe had none came to her; every one is viſited according to the Intereſt they have in the World, and the Friends they make: I have nothing to ſay to that, there is not ſo much in it, but come to that part wherein ſhe ſcandalizes the King, which is this, ſhe ſays, Whenever his Majeſty ſhall pleaſe to make it as Safe, and Honourable, to ſpeak the Truth, as it is apparent, it hath been Gainful, and Meritorious to do the contrary, their Villany will not want Witneſſes to teſtifie the Truth of more than ſhe had Written.

So that ſhe ſuppoſes, that the King, by the countenancing of Lyes, and giving Penſions to Lyers, chokes the Truth, and makes it dangerous for thoſe that know the Truth, to divulge it to the World, which is a very vile Scandal upon the King and the Government. Theſe are the Matters of the Libel, and the things in Proof have been ſworn by Three Witneſſes; one proves, that he went to her to buy one of her Books, and he asked her for one, and ſhe gave him a Book which bears that Title Page that you hear in the Indictment, ſuperſcribed with her Name, and ſhe gives it as her Book. Now ſhe would evade it thus, that ſhe gave it as her's, not as though ſhe were the Author, but as if it were her's only in Property: But, can any ſuch thing be thought the Meaning of her Words? Or, can there be any greater Evidence that ſhe is the Author of the Book, than her publiſhing of it with her Name to it? But the Fellow goes further, and tells you, when he had the Book, he turned about, and asked her, if it were her Book? Yes, ſhe ſaid it was: And, ſaid ſhe, I could have writ a great deal more, if I would; ſo that her ſaying, ſhe could have writ more, implies, that ſhe writ that; and (more) is a Word of Compariſon, which always ſuppoſes the Poſitive Propoſition. The next is the Printer, who tells you, that he printed the firſt twenty two Folio's, within which, the greateſt part of this Charge, except only that laſt about the King, is contained. He tells you, that ſhe ſent for him, and employ'd him to Print it as her's; agreed with him for Ten Shillings a Ream for the Printing, and that he did Print the firſt Twenty two Leaves at her Requeſt, and as employ'd by her: Fowler tells you, he bought two of the Books of her; and theſe are the Witneſſes of the Publication of this Book. I muſt tell you this, the Clauſes in the Libel are truly ſet down in the Indictment, for I did examine them one by one. Now whether or no you can doubt ſhe was the Author of the Book, when in a manner ſhe did own it at the Publication, by ſelling it as her's, I leave to you, though I muſt tell you plainly, I leave it as that which is to me under the Notion of expreſs Evidence; but I muſt leave it to you as Judges of the Fact, and expect your Verdict in the Caſe.

Mr. At. Gen. There are three things in the Indictment; Firſt, That ſhe writ it: Secondly, That ſhe cauſed it to be Printed; and Thirdly, That ſhe cauſed it to be Publiſhed. Now, if you find any one of theſe, ſhe is guilty of ſo much at leaſt, though I think you have heard Evidence enough for all. She told me, it was her's, and ſaid, ſhe could have put more in; and the Selling the Book is a Publication. So that if you be not ſatisfied ſhe was the Author, yet if you are ſatisfied ſhe cauſed it to be Printed, or if you are not ſatisfied in that, yet if you are ſatisfied ſhe cauſed it to be Publiſhed, you are to find her guilty of ſo much.

Cellier. The Printer does not ſay I writ it.

Mr. At. Gen. But he does ſay you gave it him as your's, and to you the Sheets were ſent to be corrected.

Then the Jury deſired they might have the Book with them.

Mr. Clare. My Lord, The Jury wants the Book that was ſworn to.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. They can have no Papers, without Agreement, neither the Book, nor any Paper elſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Not unleſs ſhe will conſent to it. Mrs. Cellier, Will you conſent that they ſhall have the Book out with them?

[To which, after ſome Pauſe, ſhe anſwer'd, No.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Then they cannot have it by Law.

Then

Then the Jury withdrew for a little, and return'd.

Cl. of Cr. How ſay you, Is Elizabeth Cellier Guilty of the Writing, Printing, and Publiſhing of the Libel for which ſhe ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty. (At which there was a great Shout.) And the Verdict was Recorded.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. She muſt ſtand Committed to receive the Judgment of the Court.

Cellier. Will you give me leave to ſpeak a word now?

Mr. Bar. Weſton. I cannot give you any Judgment, for by the Cuſtom of the City, that is to be done by the Recorder or his Deputy, and ſo, what you will ſay to the Court, you muſt ſay to them, that will be on Munday when the Seſſions is done.

Cellier. What I would ſay is only this, That I am a Woman, and wherein I offended, I offended out of Ignorance, and did not know it was an Offence, and if the Offence be mine, let not others ſuffer for me. Have Mercy in Judgment, and conſider my Loyal Parents and Relations, and the Services they did his Majeſty; and let this Fault be wiped out by that Service and Duty I and they paid him; or at leaſtwiſe, let the Puniſhment for this Offence be mitigated, in Conſideration, that all my Life, ever ſince I had the firſt Uſe of Reaſon, I have been a Loyal Subject.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. Theſe are things that will be conſidered on Munday, but we can't take Conſideration of it now.

Cellier. I will go away then, and come again on Munday.

Mr. Bar. Weſton. No, you are to be committed till then.

And ſo the Keeper carried her back to Newgate, from whence on Munday the Thirteenth of September, ſhe was brought to the Bar to receive her Judgment, which Mr. Recorder gave thus,

Mr. Recorder. Mrs. Cellier, The Court Sir George Jefferies, doth think fit for Example ſake, that a Fine of One thouſand Pounds be put upon you; That you be Committed in Execution, till that Thouſand Pounds be paid: And becauſe a Pecuniary Mulct is not a ſufficient Recompence to Juſtice, which you have offended, the Court doth likewiſe pronounce againſt you, That you be put on the Pillory Three ſeveral Days, in three ſeveral publick Places: In the firſt place, in regard her braided Ware received its firſt Impreſſion and Vent at her own Houſe, it is thought fit that ſhe ſtand (as near her own Houſe as conveniently can be) between the Hours of Twelve and One, for an Hour's Space at the May-pole in the Strand, on the moſt Notorious Day, I think there is a Market near that Place, let it be on that Day. At another time that ſhe ſtand in Covent-Garden on a Publick Day, the like Space of time; a Third time, that ſhe ſtand at Charing Croſs on the moſt Publick Day, for the Space of an Hour. And in the next place, That ſhe find Sureties for the good Behaviour during her Life; and in every Place where ſhe ſhall ſtand on the Pillory, ſome Parcels of her Books, ſhall, in her own View, be burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman, and a Paper of the Cauſe to be put upon the Pillory.

Then the Court charged the Sheriff, That he take Care in every Place for a ſufficient Guard, that the Peace may be kept, and ſhe was returned to the Goal.

THE

The Tryal of WILLIAM Viſcount STAFFORD: Begun in Weſtminſter-Hall, November 30. 1680.

The Firſt Day.

WIlliam Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, William Lord Petre, and John Lord Bellaſis, having been formerly impeach'd in the Houſe of Lords, of High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Offences, by the Houſe of Commons, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England:

And the Houſe of Commons having ſent a Meſſage to the Lords, to acquaint them with the Reſolution of that Houſe, to proceed to the Tryal of thoſe Lords then in the Tower, and forthwith to begin with the ſaid Viſcount Stafford, and to deſire their Lordſhips to appoint a convenient Day for the Tryal of the ſaid Viſcount Stafford: their Lordſhips did thereupon appoint the 30th Day of November 1680, for his Tryal. And a Place in Weſtminſter-Hall having been for that purpoſe erected, the ſame was as followeth: viz. Therein were both Seats and Wool-packs, correſpondent in all Points to thoſe in the Houſe of Lords; as alſo a State plac'd at the upper end thereof, with a Cabinet for the King, and whom his Majeſty ſhould think fit to attend him there, on the Right Hand the State; and the like on the Left hand, for the Queen and her Followers; as alſo Galleries overhead for Ambaſſadors and others.

And to the end that the Commons might be fitted with Seats upon this great Occaſion, there were erected for them, on each ſide, divers Benches, on ſeveral Degrees, extending to the utmoſt Walls of the Hall.

At the lower end, the Bar, whereunto the Priſoners were to be brought, being plac'd, on the Right hand thereof was a Place rais'd about five foot, wherein the Witneſſes were to ſtand; and on the Left hand a convenient Room for thoſe particular Members of the Houſe of Commons, who were to manage the Evidence.

And the Right Honourable Heneage Lord Finch, Baron of Daventry, Lord High Chancellor of England, being by his Majeſty's Special Letters Patent, bearing date the 30th of November 1680, conſtituted Lord High Steward for that preſent Occaſion; upon Tueſday the ſaid 30th of November, the Lord High Steward was honourably attended from his Houſe in Queenſtreet by all the Judges of his Majeſty's Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall in their Robes; as alſo by Garter principal King of Arms, in his Majeſty's Coat of Arms, and the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black-Rod, unto whom his Majeſty had the Day before delivered the White Wand, to be carried before his Lordſhip: and about Nine of the clock in the Morning ſet forward in his Coach towards Weſtminſter, ſitting at the hinder end thereof, Garter and the Gentleman who bore the Great Seal ſitting both uncover'd at the other end; one of the Serjeants at Arms, with his Mace, being plac'd on the Right ſide the Coach, and the Uſher of the Black Rod, carrying the White Wand, on the Left ſide; the Judges and his Lordſhip's Gentlemen in ſeveral Coaches following after.

Being thus come to the Stairs-foot, aſcending to the Houſe of Peers, the Judges went up two and two together (the Juniors firſt); next the Lord High Steward's Gentlemen; after them the Serjeant at Arms with his Mace, and the Seal-Bearer; and laſtly, the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black Rod, bearing the White Wand: Garter, principal King of Arms, going on his Right hand.

Then his Lordſhip alone, his Train borne by one of his Gentlemen. In this manner entring the Houſe of Peers, he found all the Lords in their Scarlet Robes, alſo the Biſhops in their Rochets, and took his Place upon the uppermoſt Wool-ſack.

This done, and Prayers ended, his Commiſſion for Lord High Steward was read; and then the Biſhops receded, and the Lords adjourn'd themſelves into the new-erected Court in Weſtminſter-Hall.

All things being thus in readineſs, and a large Door-place broken thro the upper end of Weſtminſter-Hall, into that Room which was heretofore the Court of Wards:

Their Lordſhips paſs'd from their Houſe firſt into the Painted Chamber, then thro that call'd the Court of Requeſts; thence, turning on the Left hand into that call'd the Court of Wards; then entred at the Door, ſo broke down as aforeſaid, into Weſtminſter-Hall, and paſs'd thro a long Gallery, plac'd between the King's Bench and Chancery Courts, into this new-erected Court in Weſtminſter-Hall, and proceeded after this manner, viz.

Firſt, the Aſſiſtants to the Clerk of the Parliament.

Then the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and Clerk of the Parliament; after them the Maſters in Chancery two and two, and the King's Attorney-General alone.

Then the Judges of all the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall, by two and two.

Next to them Noblemens eldeſt Sons.

After them four Serjeants at Arms, bearing their Maces.

Next the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black Rod.

Then all the Noblemen, according to their reſpective Degrees, the Juniors firſt, viz. Barons, Viſcounts, Earls.

Great Officer, viz. Lord Chamberlain of the Houſhold.

Marquiſſes, Dukes.

Great Officers, Lord Privy Seal, Lord Preſident of the Council.

Then four more Serjeants at Arms, bearing their Maces.

After them, the Gentleman carrying the Great Seal.

Then one of his Majeſty's Gentlemen-Uſhers, Daily-waiters, carrying the White Wand; Garter, principal King of Arms, going on his Right hand.

Then the Lord High Steward alone, having his Train borne; and after him his Highneſs Rupert Duke of Cumberland, a Prince of the Blood.

This done, and the whole Houſe of Peers having taken their Places according to their Degrees, the Commons being alſo ſeated on each ſide, and the Managers in the Rooms appointed for them; the Commons being all bare, the Lord High Steward, after Obeiſance made towards the State, took his Place upon the uppermoſt Wool-ſack, and thereupon receiving the White Wand from Garter and the Gentleman-Uſher upon their Knees, deliver'd it to the Uſher of the Black Rod, who held it during the time of ſitting there. Having ſo done, his Lordſhip ſaid, Cryer, make Proclamation of Silence. Then the Crier, a Serjeant at Arms, made Proclamation thus: All manner of Perſons are ſtraitly commanded to keep ſilence upon pain of Impriſonment. God ſave the King.

Lord High Steward. Make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring the Priſoner to the Bar.

Cryer. O yes, O yes, O yes, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth thy Priſoner William Viſcount Stafford, upon Pain and Peril ſhall fall thereon. God ſave the King.

Whereupon the Lieutenant of the Tower brought the Priſoner to the Bar.

Uſher of the Black Rod. My Lord Stafford muſt kneel; which he did.

L. H. S. Riſe, my Lord.

Then he aroſe, and ſtood at the Bar, and the Lord High Steward ſpake to him as followeth:

My Lord Viſcount Stafford,

THE Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament have impeach'd your Lordſhip of High-Treaſon; and you are brought this Day to the Bar to be try'd upon that Impeachment: You are not try'd upon the Indictment of Treaſon found by the Grand Jury, tho there be that too in the Caſe; but you are proſecuted and purſued by the loud and dreadful Complaints of the Commons; and are to be try'd upon the Preſentment which hath been made by the Grand Inqueſt of the whole Nation.

In this ſo great and weighty Cauſe, you are to be judg'd by the whole Body of the Houſe of Peers, the higheſt and the nobleſt Court in this, or perhaps in any other part of the Chriſtian World.

Here you may be ſure no falſe Weights or Meaſures ever will or can be found: Here the Ballance will be exactly kept, and all the Grains of Allowance which your Caſe will bear, will certainly be put into the Scales.

But as it is impoſſible for my Lords to condemn the Innocent, ſo 'tis equally impoſſible that they ſhould clear the Guilty.

If therefore you have been agitated by a reſtleſs Zeal, to promote that which you call the Catholick Cauſe; if this Zeal have engag'd you in ſuch deep and black Deſigns as you are charg'd with, and this Charge ſhall be fully prov'd, then you muſt expect to reap what you have ſown; for every Work muſt and ought to receive the Wages that are due to it.

Hear therefore with Patience what ſhall be ſaid againſt you, for you ſhall have full Time and Scope to anſwer it; and when you come to make your Defence, you ſhall have a very fair and equal Hearing.

In the mean time, the beſt Entrance upon this Service will be, to begin with the reading of the Charge.

L. H. S. My Lord, if your Lordſhip find your ſelf infirm and unable to ſtand, your Lordſhip may have a Chair to eaſe your ſelf whilſt your Charge is reading. And a Chair was brought accordingly, and his Lordſhip ſat thereon.

Clerk of the Parliament, read the Charge.

Articles of Impeachment of High Treaſon, and other high Crimes and Offences, againſt William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, and Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, William Lord Petre, and John Lord Bellaſis, now Priſoners in the Tower of London.

'1. THat for many Years now laſt paſt, there 'hath been contriv'd and carried on by 'Papiſts a traitorous and execrable Conſpiracy and 'Plot within this Kingdom of England, and other 'Places, to alter, change, and ſubvert the antient 'Government and Laws of this Kingdom and Nation, and to ſuppreſs the true Religion therein 'eſtabliſh'd, and to extirpate and deſtroy the Profeſſors thereof; which ſaid Plot and Conſpiracy, 'contriv'd and carried on in divers Places, and 'by ſeveral Ways and Means, and by a great 'Number of Perſons of ſeveral Qualities and 'Degrees who acted therein, and intended thereby to execute and accompliſh the aforeſaid wicked and traitorous Deſigns and Purpoſes.

'2. That the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, William Lord Petre, and John Lord Bellaſis, together with Philip Howard, commonly called Cardinal of Norfolk, Thomas White, alias Whitebread, commonly called Provincial of the Jeſuits in England, Richard Strange, lately call'd Provincial of the Jeſuits in England, Vincent, commonly call'd Provincial of the Dominicans in England, James Corker, commonly call'd Preſident of the Benedictines, Sir John Warner, alias Clare, Baronet, William Harcourt, John Kenis, Nicholas Blundel, ——— Poole, Edward Mico, Thomas Bedingfield, alias Benefield, Faſil Langworth, Charles Peters, Richard Peters, John Conyers, Sir George Wakeman, Thomas Fenwick, Dominick Kelly, Fitzgerald, Evers, Sir Thomas Preſton, William Lovel, Jeſuits; Lord Baltimore, John Carrel, John Townley, Richard Langhorn, William Fogarty, Thomas Penny, Matthew Medbourn, Edward Coleman, William Ireland, John Grove, Thomas Pickering, John Smith, and divers other Jeſuits, Prieſts, Fryars, and other Perſons, as falſe Traytors to his Majeſty and this Kingdom, within the time aforeſaid, have traitorouſly conſulted, contrived, and acted to and for the accompliſhing of the ſaid wicked, pernicious and traitorous Deſigns; and for that end did moſt wickedly and traitorouſly agree, conſpire, and reſolve to impriſon, depoſe, and murder his ſacred Majeſty, and to deprive him of his Royal State, Crown and Dignity, and by malicious and adviſed Speaking, Writing, and otherwiſe, declar'd ſuch their Purpoſes and Intentions.

'And alſo to ſubject this Kingdom and Nation to the Pope, and to his Tyrannical Government.

'And

'And to ſeize and ſhare among themſelves the 'Eſtates and Inheritances of his Majeſty's Proteſ-'tant Subjects.

'And to erect and reſtore Abbeys, Monaſteries, 'and other Convents and Societies, which have 'been long ſince by the Laws of this Kingdom 'ſuppreſs'd for their Superſtition and Idolatry; 'and to deliver up and reſtore to them the Lands 'and Poſſeſſions now veſted in his Majeſty and his 'Subjects by the Laws and Statutes of this Realm: 'and alſo to found and erect new Monaſteries and 'Convents, and to remove and deprive all Proteſ-'tant Biſhops, and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons from 'their Offices, Benefices, and Preferment.

'And by this means to deſtroy his Majeſty's 'Perſon, extirpate the Proteſtant Religion, over-'throw the Rights, Liberties and Properties of 'all his Majeſty's good Subjects, ſubvert the law-'ful Government of this Kingdom, and ſubject the 'ſame to the Tyranny of the See of Rome.

'3. That the ſaid Conſpirators, and their Com-'plices and Confederates, traitorouſly had and held 'ſeveral Meetings, Aſſemblies, and Conſultations, 'wherein it was contriv'd and deſign'd among 'them, what Means ſhould be us'd, and what Per-'ſons and Inſtruments ſhould be employed, to mur-'der his Majeſty; and did then and there reſolve 'to effect it by poiſoning, ſhooting, ſtabbing, or 'ſome ſuch like ways and means; and offer'd 'Rewards and Promiſes of Advantage to ſeveral 'Perſons to execute the ſame, and hired and em-'ploy'd ſeveral wicked Perſons to go to Windſor, 'and other Places where his Majeſty did reſide, 'to murder and deſtroy his Majeſty: which ſaid 'Perſons, or ſome of them, accepted ſuch Re-'wards, and undertook the perpetrating thereof, 'and did actually go to the ſaid Places for that end 'and purpoſe.

'4. That the ſaid Conſpirators, the better to 'compaſs their traitorous Deſigns, have conſulted 'to raiſe, and have procur'd and rais'd Men, Mo-'ney, Horſes, Arms, and Ammunition, and alſo 'have made Application to, and treated and cor-'reſponded with the Pope, his Cardinals, Nun-'cio's, and Agents, and with other Foreign Mi-'niſters and Perſons, to raiſe and obtain Supplies 'of Men, Money, Arms and Ammunition, there-'with to make, levy and raiſe War, Rebellion and 'Tumults within this Kingdom, and to invade 'the ſame with foreign Forces, and to ſurprize, 'ſeize, and deſtroy his Majeſty's Navy, Forts, 'Magazines, and Places of Strength within this 'Kingdom; whereupon the Calamities of War, 'Murders of innocent Subjects, Men, Women and 'Children, Burnings, Rapines, Devaſtations, and 'other dreadful Miſeries and Miſchiefs muſt ine-'vitably have enſued, to the Ruin and Deſtruction 'of this Nation.

'5. And the ſaid Conſpirators have procur'd 'and accepted, and deliver'd out ſeveral Inſtru-'ments, Commiſſions and Powers, made and grant-'ed by or under the Pope, or other unlawful 'and uſurp'd Authority, to raiſe and diſpoſe of 'Men, Moneys, Arms, and other things neceſſary 'for their wicked and traitorous Deſigns: and 'namely, a Commiſſion for the ſaid Henry Lord 'Arundel of Wardour, to be Lord Chancellor of 'England; another Commiſſion to the ſaid William 'Earl of Powis to be Lord Treaſurer of England; 'another Commiſſion to the ſaid John Lord Bella-'ſis, to be General of the Army to be rais'd; an-'other Commiſſion to the ſaid William Lord Petre, 'to be Lieutenant-General of the ſaid Army; and 'a Power for the ſaid William Viſcount Stafford to 'be Paymaſter of the Army.

'6. That in order to encourage themſelves in 'proſecuting their ſaid wicked Plots, Conſpiracies, 'and Treaſons, and to hide and hinder the Diſco-'very of the ſame, and to ſecure themſelves from 'Juſtice and Puniſhment, the Conſpirators afore-'ſaid, their Complices and Confederates, have 'us'd many wicked and diabolical Practices, viz. 'they did cauſe their Prieſts to adminiſter to the 'ſaid Conſpirators an Oath of Secrecy, together 'with their Sacrament; and alſo did cauſe their 'ſaid Prieſts upon Confeſſions to give their Ab-'ſolutions, upon condition that they ſhould conceal 'the ſaid Conſpiracy.

'And when about the Month of September laſt, 'Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, a Juſtice of Peace, had 'according to the Duty of his Oath and Office 'taken ſeveral Examinations and Informations 'concerning the ſaid Conſpiracy and Plot, the 'ſaid Conſpirators, or ſome of them, by Advice, 'Aſſent, Counſel and Inſtigation of the reſt, did 'incite and procure divers Perſons to lie in wait 'and purſue the ſaid Sir Edmondbury Godfrey di-'vers Days, with intent to murder him; which 'at laſt was perpetrated and effected by them, '(for which ſaid horrid Crimes and Offences Ro-'bert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill have 'ſince been attainted, and Dominick Kelly and —— 'Girald, and others are fled for the ſame.) After 'which Murder, and before the Body was found, 'or the Murder known to any but the Complices 'therein, the ſaid Perſons falſly gave out, that 'he was alive, and privately married: And after 'the Body was found, diſpers'd a falſe and mali-'cious Report, that he had murder'd himſelf.

'Which ſaid Murder was committed with de-'ſign to ſtifle and ſuppreſs the Evidence he had 'taken and had knowledge of, and diſcourage and 'deter Magiſtrates and others from acting in fur-'ther Diſcovery of the ſaid Conſpiracy and Plot: 'For which end alſo the ſaid Sir Edmondbury 'Godfrey, while he was alive, was by them, their 'Complices and Favourers, threatned and diſcou-'rag'd in his Proceedings about the ſame.

'7. And of their further Malice, they have wic-'kedly contriv'd, by many falſe Suggeſtions, to lay 'the Imputation and Guilt of the aforeſaid hor-'rid and deteſtable Crimes upon the Proteſtants; 'that ſo thereby they might eſcape the Puniſhments 'they have juſtly deſerv'd, and expoſe the Pro-'teſtants to great Scandal, and ſubject them to 'Perſecution and Oppreſſion in all Kingdoms and 'Countries where the Romiſh Religion is received 'and profeſs'd.

'All which Treaſons, Crimes and Offences above-'mentioned were contriv'd, committed, perpe-'trated, acted and done by the ſaid William Earl 'of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, William Lord 'Petre, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, and John 'Lord Bellaſis, and other the Conſpirators afore-'ſaid, againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, his 'Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Laws and 'Statutes of this Kingdom.

'Of all which Treaſons, Crimes, and Offences, 'the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parlia-'ment aſſembled, do, in the Name of themſelves, 'and of all the Commons of England, impeach the 'ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Staf-'ford, William Lord Petre, Henry Lord Arundel of 'Wardour, and John Lord Bellaſis, and every of 'them.

'And the ſaid Commons by Proteſtation, ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter, any other Accuſations or Impeachments, againſt the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, William Lord Petre, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, and John Lord Bellaſis, and every of them: And alſo of replying to the Anſwers, which they, and every of them, ſhall make to the Premiſes, or any of them; or to any other Accuſation or Impeachment which ſhall be by them exhibited (as the Cauſe according to Courſe and Proceedings of Parliament ſhall require) do pray that the ſaid William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, William Lord Petre, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, and John Lord Bellaſis, and every of them, be put to anſwer all, and every the Premiſes: And that ſuch Proceedings Examinations, Tryals and Judgments, may be upon them, and every of them, had and uſed, as ſhall be agreeable to Law and Juſtice, and Courſe of Parliament.'

The Humble Anſwer of William Viſcount of Stafford, now Priſoner in his Majeſty's Tower of London, to the Impeachment of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors exhibited againſt him and others, to the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament, by the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes, in Parliament aſſembled, in the Name of themſelves, and of the Commons of England.

'THE ſaid Viſcount, ſaving to himſelf all Advantage and Benefit of Exceptions to the Generality, Incertainty and Inſufficiency of the ſaid Impeachment, moſt humbly beſeeching their Lordſhips thereof to take due notice, and thereunto at all times to have a juſt regard: He anſwereth and ſaith, That he is Not Guilty of all, or any of the Offences charged againſt him by the ſaid Impeachment; and for his Tryal humbly and willingly putteth himſelf upon his Peers; no ways doubting, but that by the Grace of God, and their Lordſhips impartial Juſtice, he ſhall make his Innocence appear. All which he moſt humbly ſubmitteth unto their Lordſhips further Conſideration.'

STAFFORD.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons be pleaſed to proceed.

Then Mr. Serjeant Maynard, one of the Committee appointed to manage the Evidence, began as followeth.

My Lords,

MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhips, by the Command of the Houſe of Commons, who have impoſed upon us this Task, we are here to proſecute this great Charge againſt the Priſoner, the Lord at the Bar. My Lords, there are two Parts that are in this great Charge; there is a General, which is the Subverſion of the whole Nation, the King himſelf to be murdered, the Proteſtant Religion to be ſuppreſſed, War to be introduc'd, and thoſe other things that are expreſſed in the Articles. This General is charged in particular upon this Lord; and, my Lords, it was in conſideration how far it was fit to meddle with this General at this particular Tryal: For if this Lord be guilty of ſuch Crimes, it will prove well enough that there was ſuch a Plot. But, my Lords, withal we did conſider when the firſt Diſcovery of this Plot was made, how afterwards it took cold, how Rumours were raiſed againſt it, how there were Endeavours to ſuppreſs the Belief of it; and therefore, my Lords, we do conceive that it is fit we ſhould firſt ſettle that, that there was a General Plot, a Plot of ſuch a Nature as the Articles expreſs.

Some Objections we thought there might be raiſed, becauſe it hath been ſo long in the World, ſome Years now ſince the Diſcovery of it, ſome Perſons, that is, ſome ten or eleven, proſecuted and attainted for it, and therefore that might have been ſatisfaction enough that ſuch a Plot there was; beſides, that there have been publick Declarations of the Particulars of it to the World. But being now to proceed before your Lordſhips in a judicial way, we did think fit, and we hope your Lordſhips will approve of it, to ſpend ſome time in the Proof of the General Plot, which we hope will be to the ſatisfaction of your Lordſhips, and the whole World; for we do not think that England only looks into this Day's Tryal, but the whole World one way or other, the whole Chriſtian World is concerned in it. My Lords, after the publication of theſe things (which were not judicial) how far your Lordſhips will believe them as Judges, we know not; we will prove it now, that their Policies and Contrivances may be laid open to the World: And firſt we offer it to your Lordſhips, becauſe we have made it part of the Charge. And ſecondly, we ſhall do it, becauſe we think your Lordſhips are not obliged to believe things that are in Print, till we prove them by Witneſſes judicially before you. But the main reaſon why we do it, is, becauſe we would touch upon thoſe Endeavours that have been uſed to make this ſeem as if it were a kind of State-Plot, I know not what to call it, a Chimera, an Imagination, and not a real thing. This they labour'd many ways to effect, but we ſhall prove that it is a ry real and a very true one.

When that Oates firſt made a diſcovery, it ſeems it had not that weight that we think now it will clearly have with your Lordſhips; and had not the Murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey follow'd in the neck of it, the World, as it was aſleep, would have lain ſo, but that awaked us.

My Lords, it fell out in this caſe as it did in another: when Catiline the Traitor was a great way off Rome, and four other Lords with him, Caſſius, Cethegus, and others, five in all; it came to paſs, that, as the great Orator that was at that time ſaid, Many were ſo ignorant that they would not think it; many were ſo unwiſe they would not believe it; ſome ſo ill that they would favour it; and ſome ſo much worſe that they did foſter it: but all of them in not believing, it gave ſtrength to the Conſpiracy and the Treaſon. And ſo it did here, for we look not upon our ſelves as diſcharged from the Treaſon when diſcover'd, but when prevented.

My Lords, another Reaſon to induce us into the Proof of the Main Plot is this; we do not look upon it as a particular Offence, as if one Lord was only to be queſtion'd, and appear before your Lordſhips judicially for it; he is indeed only before you at this time to receive his Tryal, and your Judgment: But, my Lords, This is a Treaſon of a Faction, and of a general Party in the Nation; 'tis not this or that Lord, but a great number: 'tis not this or that Lord that is mention'd in the Articles, but the Conſpiracy is of a great Faction. This

This do we think, and this makes us ſo earneſt to preſs the General before your Lordſhips, that we may give ſatisfaction to your Lordſhips and the World what this Plot hath been, and how carried on every where.

My Lords, The Conſequence of that is very great: For, my Lords, if there were a general Deſign, and a general Plot, as clearly there was; ſome were to act in Spain, and ſome in France, ſome in other Places, ſome in Ireland, Scotland, and England, and a great number of Jeſuits, (we have a matter of thirty in chaſe about this Buſineſs;) I ſay, my Lords, if it be ſo, if one Action be in one Place, and another in another; yet if there be a common Conſent to accompliſh this Plot, then what the one does, is the Act of all, and the Act of all is the Act of every one.

My Lords, The Perſons were many, and the Places and Times many they acted in, and the Deſigns which they were to accompliſh, and the Means wherewith they were to accompliſh them, were many too. Great and wicked were their Deſigns, to deſtroy our King, to take him out of the World; and why? upon hopes of better Times to them under him that ſhould ſucceed him. Another part of the Deſign, was to deſtroy, not this or that Man that ſtood in their way, but the whole Body of the Proteſtants here in England; not a Murder, but a Maſſacre and a Slaughter of all whoſoever they were that came near them, and none were to eſcape; for if any meant to flee, they would be ſure to cut them off: nay, not only to deſtroy our King, though that be the greateſt Offence that our Law can take hold of, but to deſtroy our Religion, and to deſtroy us becauſe of our Religion.

To accompliſh this, that we may open the Generals of it, Arms were to be provided, Men to be raiſed, an Army was formed in effect; and who to lead, and who to command, and who to pay. But, My Lords, not only were Arms to be had here among our ſelves, but a French Aid muſt be fetch'd in; Aſſiſtance from France muſt come too, Intelligences and Letters are written, and Correſpondencies had, and Aids promiſed by the Miniſters from thence.

My Lords, 'Tis a ſtrange thing that Engliſhmen ſhould contrive to have an Invaſion of Strangers upon their own Country; and ſurely they are the worſt Bigots in the World that were ſo zealous to deſtroy their own Nation: and they were not wiſe ſure to think, that if the French did come in, they ſhould continue great Lords or great Men; and yet thus it was in general. It is very ſtrange that it ſhould enter into the Heart of any Man to deſtroy ſo many Perſons. But, my Lords, if we look upon what did incourage them, and what confirmed them in this Deſign, and what they have publiſhed to the World about their Religion, we ſhall not wonder at it; ſince they tell us 'tis lawful to kill a Heretick King, and the King of England is an Heretick they ſay, and ſo declared, ſo that whoſoever would kill him did a lawful and a pious piece of Service to God: nay, not only ſo, but a meritorious and glorious one too, for which they may be canoniz'd for Saints.

My Lords, We find it is no new thing: Look into all the Nations where the Pope hath any Power, or a poſſibility of hope to gain a Power, nothing hath been able to ſtand in their way, but they have broken thro all the Bonds of Nature, and other Obligations to attain their Ends. Look into Spain, King Philip there removed his own Son, by what means the Story tells us, he was Heir apparent, but he was a Proteſtant; and there alſo the Father puts fire to his own Daughter, becauſe ſhe was a Proteſtant; there a Spaniard goes from Spain into Germany to murder, and did murder his Brother for no other cauſe but becauſe he was a Proteſtant. Leave Spain, and go into France; what Maſſacres have been committed there under the colour of a Marriage in Queen Elizabeth's time? And before that, how many hundred Albigenſes and Waldenſes have been put to the ſword for Religion? Come we to our own Country, and look into England what hath been done here, when Queen Elizabeth had a Succeſſor of another Religion, how many Attempts were there made upon her Perſon to bring that Succeſſor in? When King James came to the Crown, let us remember the Gunpowder-Treaſon, wherein all the Nation was to be deſtroy'd, King, Lords, and Commons together, and in Parliament aſſembled were then to be a Sacrifice, a Burnt-Offering, though they might call it a Peace-Offering; for theſe Gentlemen are for Sacrifices of Blood as Peace-Offerings, to reconcile us to the Pope. If this be made out, we think, their Principles having produced theſe Fruits in other Ages, we may believe they would do ſo now.

What has been ſaid as Hiſtory of former times, is not offered as Evidence of Fact to the preſent Caſe, but induces a Probability that what hath been done by ſuch Perſons may be done by them again. But, my Lords, we ſhall make it clear, and bring it home to this Lord, that he hath had his Head, his Tongue, his Hand, his Heart and his Purſe in this damnable and horrible Contrivance and Treaſon for the deſtroying of the King, the Government, our Religion and our Nation. We ſhall bring it home to him; but my Part is only to open the general Conſpiracy: And indeed, my Lords, it is an heavy Burden on my aged Shoulders, conſidering that the Winter of Infirmity and Age is growing ſo faſt upon me.

My Lords, The Particulars concerning this noble Lord, becauſe the Credit of it reſts on the Teſtimony only of one Man, viz. Mr. Oates, whoſe Teſtimony being taken by Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, a Juſtice of Peace, and kept in writing by him, then Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was way-laid, and murder'd by Men of the Popiſh Religion, thereby to ſuppreſs the Examination that he had taken.

This ſtartled and open'd the Eyes of the World to look about us for farther Diſcovery, leſt we ſhould be led as Oxen to the Slaughter, not knowing whither we went.

Afterwerd it pleaſed God to bring ſome of your Religion and Party to make farther diſcovery: Whereupon ſeveral Jeſuits, guilty of the Plot, were therefore proſecuted and brought to Judgment and Death.

After the Murder of Godfrey, ſeveral Fables were ſpread abroad, as if he were alive and married, as was declared to ſeveral Lords: others of the Party reported he had murder'd himſelf; but his Body being found, it was hard for the Party to invent or tell, whether he firſt ſtrangled himſelf, and then run himſelf through, or firſt run himſelf through, and then ſtrangled himſelf: That was a Dilemma to diſprove their Fables touching Godfrey's Murder.

It then fell out, that Mr. Bedlow came as a ſecond Diſcoverer, whoſe Teſtimony concurred with Oates; and then there being two Witneſſes, as is neceſſary in caſe of Treaſon, the Deſign was to take off Bedlow that there ſhould remain but one, one, a ſingle Witneſs: In order to which, Reading tempts Bedlow with Rewards to leſſen his former Teſtimony, and qualifies that which he had depoſed poſitively was but Matter of Hear-ſay; for which Reading, the Inſtrument in that Deſign and Attempt, was indicted and convicted by three Witneſſes, and ſuffered accordingly.

But then this Attempt upon Bedlow failing, the next Attempt was to take off Oates's Teſtimony, by charging him with an infamous Offence: for which purpoſe one Knox is imploy'd, who ſuborns Lane and Osborn, and they ſwore it againſt Oates; but on Re-examination confeſs the Subornation and Falſhood of their Deſign, and Knox and Lane are therefore indicted and found guilty.

Thus when the Treaſon was diſcover'd, the Murder of an Officer of Juſtice is made the Means to hide it; and then falſe and infamous Stories ſet on foot of that Officer to hide that Murder, and Perjury and Subornation the means to blaſt the Diſcoverers.

Theſe wicked and ill Practices we take to be a ſecond Proof of the Plot, both in general and particular, the Records of which Convictions are here before your Lordſhips ready to be proved: For, cui bono, none would do ſuch wicked Practices, but to hide a greater Sin; and worſe Deſigns if poſſible will be opened, and proved by one to whom that is particularly appointed.

My Lords, We ſpeak this that the World may receive Satisfaction; we will let our Evidence be all open and publick in the Face of the Sun, and ſhew, we go not about by private Subornations, though there are Endeavours to encounter us by ſuch.

My Lords, If we make out theſe things, here is Matter enuogh for the Satisfaction of the World, as to the general Contrivance. But, my Lords, as you ſit here as Judges of this Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, we muſt bring it down to particular Perſons, and we ſhall do it even to him, that thoſe things which were mention'd in general were his Contrivance at leaſt-wiſe, as a Man highly deeply guilty of conſpiring the King's Death; and in order to that, of raiſing an Army, and the other things that have been open'd.

My Lords, I beſeech you to pardon me, if I have troubled you too long: The Particulars were many, I have had little help to prepare it from any body but my ſelf, but I ſubmit my ſelf to your Lordſhips; and hope that what is wanting in me, will be ſupply'd by others that follow: and I alſo hope you will find no defect in our Evidence at all, whatſoever may have been in the opening of it.

Then Sir Francis Winnington, another of the Committee appointed for the Management of the Evidence, began as followeth.

My Lords,

I Shall begin where Mr. Serjeant Maynard ended, and confine my ſelf to this Caſe, as it ſtands before you, and to open the particular Evidence relating to the Lord, the now Priſoner at the Bar.

My Lords, I look upon the Cauſe of this Day to be the Cauſe of the Proteſtant Religion; and I doubt not but that Plot, which has alarmed all Chriſtendom, will be ſo clearly made out in this Tryal, that the moſt malicious of our Enemies will henceforth want Confidence to deny it.

That the Religion of the Papiſts does countenance and encourage the murdering of Princes, the maſſacring of ſuch as they miſ-call Hereticks, and the committing of all ſorts of Impiety, in order to promote their Superſtitions, and Idolatries, has been mention'd by the Gentleman who ſpoke before me; and I ſhould miſpend time to ſay more of a Truth ſo well known, in ſo great and ſo learned a Preſence: I will therefore directly apply my ſelf to the Buſineſs of the Day, to repreſent to your Lordſhips our Evidence of the Plot in general, and of the Guilt of this Lord at the Bar in particular.

In order to which, I ſhall crave your Lordſhips leave that I may uſe this Method.

Firſt, To ſhew what advantageous Opportunities the Papiſt had to enter into, and undertake this great and deteſtable Conſpiracy.

Secondly, To prove the Reality of the Plot in general, which I look upon as a very eaſy Undertaking.

Thirdly, To ſtate the particular Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, by which he will appear to have been one of the principal Conſpirators in this horrid Deſign, to murder our Sovereign, (whom God preſerve) to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion, and to ſubvert totally the Government and fundamental Laws of this Kingdom.

My Lords, To ſhew what extraordinary Advantages the Papiſts had to enter upon this Conſpiracy, will very naturally lead us into our Proof of it; and therefore I ſhall ſpeak ſomewhat to that in the firſt place.

It is not unknown to your Lordſhips, or to any others who have in the leaſt degree enquired into Affairs, that his Majeſty has been ſo unhappy as that (unawares to him) ſome Miniſters, who have been Papiſts at the bottom, and others that have drove on their Intereſt, have crept into his Councils, and thereby gave great Opportunities to advance Popery.

'Tis moſt true, that as ſoon as theſe ill Miniſters were detected, and their ill Deſigns diſcovered, his Majeſty did diſcharge them: but to the misfortune of the King and his People, as ill Men have been recommended to ſucceed them, and came into their Places.

In the next place, my Lords, there did appear in ſome Men too eaſy and favourable a Diſpoſition towards the Papiſts. They were grown ſtrangely moderate towards theſe old Enemies of our Church and State. New Projects of reconciling us were ſet on foot, and Books were written to diſtinguiſh the Church of Rome from the Court of Rome. One of thoſe Books, which was printed the Year before the Diſcovery of the Plot, pretends, that there ought to be a Difference made between Papiſts of loyal and diſloyal Principles. This Book, as it was written more artificially than the reſt, and publiſhed in ſo critical and dangerous a Juncture, deſerves, and I doubt not in time will have, a particular Conſideration. 'Tis eaſy to believe how great Encouragement this muſt give to the Romaniſts, to ſee how very willing Men were to meet them, and how freely the Pen was drawn in their favour.

Another great Encouragement, my Lords, which the Papiſts had, was, That by the means of thoſe Miniſters who were ſecretly of their Faction, whenſoever his Majeſty was pleaſed to command the Laws made againſt them in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth and King James, to be put in due Execution, his good Intentions were fruſtrated, and the Severity of thoſe Laws was turned upon the Proteſtant Diſſenters. This was a Maſter-piece of Rome, not only to divert from themſelves the Edge of of thoſe Laws which were deſigned againſt them; but to turn them upon the Proteſtants, and to make them uſeful to advance the Romiſh Intereſt: And when they had thus divided and diſtracted us, then was the faireſt time for them to attempt to deſtroy us utterly, and to make ſharp their Weapons in order to a Maſſacre.

But, my Lords, that which gave the Papiſts the greateſt Encouragement to enter into this deteſtable Conſpiracy, was, that they had (to the great unhappineſs of this Kingdom and the Proteſtant Religion) the Expectation and Hopes of a Popiſh Succeſſor. This was an Opportunity not to be loſt. They had abundant Experience of his Majeſty's Firmneſs in the Proteſtant Religion, both during his Exile and ſince his happy Reſtoration, and how reſolutely he had kept that Promiſe which he made in his Letter from Breda, That neither the Unkindneſs of ſome Proteſtants, nor the Civilities of ſome Papiſts ſhould in the leaſt degree ſtartle him, or make him ſwerve from his Religion.

They therefore could have no hopes of arriving at their Point, the Re-eſtabliſhment of their Church, whilſt the King liv'd; and it was too great a hazard to expect his Majeſty's Death by the Courſe of Nature: and therefore, like true Papiſts, that would ſtick at no Wickedneſs to accompliſh their Deſigns, they threw off all Bonds of Loyalty and Allegiance, and reſolved to deſtroy our Sovereign, whoſe Life was the only Obſtacle in their way. This was the laſt and moſt wicked Part of their Plot, which tho it conſiſted of very many Parts, yet this was the principal; and our Evidence againſt the Lord at the Bar will chiefly run to this part of the Deſign.

I have only mention'd ſome of thoſe Encouragements which the World plainly ſaw the Papiſts had, before the Plot was detected: But ſince the diſcovery, it has been abundantly proved, that it had been carrying on for many years, and that ſo univerſally, that it is a wonderful thing it appear'd no ſooner.

My Lords, I come now to our Evidence: And tho it may ſeem unneceſſary to prove to your Lordſhips a general Plot of the Papiſts, who are ſo well ſatisfy'd of it already, and have more than once declared ſo to the World; yet becauſe it is the moſt natural Method for us, firſt to prove that there was a Conſpiracy, before we attempt to prove this Lord to have been one of the Conſpirators, we ſhall beg your leave as to that particular. And as we ſhall be careful not to take up too much of your Time, ſo we well know your Lordſhip will allow us all the Time neceſſary to give our Evidence.

We have many Records, things reduced to Judgment, whereby the Plot is moſt undoubtedly prov'd, and which are legal Evidences before your Lordſhips: The Attainders of ſeveral Jeſuits and Prieſts, the Attainder of Langhorn and of Coleman, whom I ſhould have named in the firſt place. We have alſo the Conviction of thoſe that were proſecuted for the Murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey; and there is a Conviction, tho not for the Murder, yet for cutting the Throat of Mr. Arnold. 'Tis true he is not dead, yet as to the Publick, I count him murdered by the Papiſts, tho he be alive in the World. My Lords, we have Convictions not only of Treaſons, Murders, and cutting of Throats, but of almoſt all other Villanies whatſoever: As of Attempts to ſuborn Witneſſes, and to ſcandalize the King's Evidence; and to that we ſhall produce the Record concerning Reading's Attempt upon Bedlow; that concerning the ſuborning of Knox and Lane to ſwear Buggery againſt Dr. Oates; and the Conviction of Tasborough and Price to corrupt Dugdale, a principal Witneſs as to this Plot.

I only mention theſe Particulars, my Lords; and certainly as you are a great Court of Record, you will take notice of them. It would be a hard thing perhaps to ſpend the time in reading all, ſince all of them are made to the known World already; but we ſhall in the Courſe of our Evidence produce them, and you may read ſuch of them as you pleaſe. All the Uſe we make of them, is for the Proof of the general Plot, which is requiſite to be done; for it will be hard to believe the Priſoner guilty of the Plot, if there were no ſuch Plot at all.

My Lords, We ſhall make appear to you things which have not yet been brought into Judgment. In the Year 76. we ſhall prove by a Witneſs that was then abroad, and diſcourſed with Anderton, Campion, Green, and ſeveral other Prieſts and Jeſuits, that they did acquaint him that there would be great Alteration in England e'er long; that the King was a Heretick and excommunicated, and might be deſtroy'd; and this Doctrine they continually and induſtriouſly preached. And they further ſaid, If once the King were removed, (who alone ſtood in the way) their Religion muſt needs flouriſh; for this reaſon, as the Witneſſes will ſpeak, that the Duke of York was on their ſide.

My Lords, We ſhall prove, that they had in England Men no leſs induſtrious amongſt them, ſome whereof have been executed: Gavan by name, who made it his buſineſs to go up and down in ſeveral Counties of this Kingdom, to prove by Scripture, Councils, and Examples, That it was a lawful Undertaking to kill his Majeſty. Theſe things I name, as neceſſary in order to introduce our particular Evidence; I am unwilling to dwell longer upon this Point of the general Plot. I ſhall produce the Records, and produce our ſeveral Witneſſes, Mr. Oates and others, that will give you a full and plain Account of it.

My Lords, Having done with the general Plot, I come now to open the particular Evidence againſt my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar. As to him, my Lords, our Evidence ſtands not upon Conjectures, or upon mere Probability, becauſe this Lord is (as we well know) a zealous Papiſt, and hath owned himſelf ſo; but we have expreſs particular Proofs againſt his Perſon. My Lords, we have one Witneſs to produce to your Lordſhips, who will prove, that in September 78. there was a Conſult of ſome Prieſts, and other Conſpirators, at Tixal in Staffordſhire, my Lord Aſton's Houſe, for killing of the King, where my Lord Stafford was preſent. And by a Diſcourſe in the ſame Month, we ſhall prove what Reaſons this Lord did give, why he and their Party undertook the murdering of the King, becauſe, he ſaid, that he and many Catholick Families had no Recompence for their Loyalty; but if any thing fell, it was diſpos'd of to Rebels and Traitors. This he reſented deeply; but above all, the Obligation of his Conſcience, and of his Religion perſuaded him to it, and confirmed him in his Reſolution to go on in this horrid Deſign.

My Lords, We will go further, and prove that this Lord offer'd 500 l. out of his own Purſe to carry on the Plot, and particularly this part of it, for killing the King. We ſhall produce to your Lordſhips a Witneſs to whom he made this

Offer,

Offer, as looking upon him to be a faithful Man, and having receiv'd ſo great a Character of him from one Evers a Prieſt, that he thought he might ſafely communicate the Matter to him; and the Argument he urg'd to perſuade the Witneſs, beſides the 500 l. which he ſaid upon his Application to Harcourt and Ireland they ſhould pay him, was this, That others as well as he were employ'd in the ſame Deſign; that it was the only way to eſtabliſh the Romiſh Religion in England; that he would lay an everlaſting Obligation upon all the Perſons of that Perſuaſion, and that he ſhould not only have his Pardon, but be canoniz'd for it.

My Lords, This is the Subſtance of the Teſtimony of the firſt Witneſs which we ſhall produce againſt my Lord Stafford; and that is ſo expreſs, as I think it can hardly be anſwer'd.

My Lords, Our next Witneſs ſays thus; (for I ſhall but open the Subſtance of what they ſay:) In June or July 1678, there were ſeveral Letters from this Lord at the Bar to the Jeſuits in London, in which his Lordſhip did declare his Readineſs to ſerve them in their great Deſign: And in June (78) the latter end of the Month, my Lord Stafford came to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber in Drury-Lane, (he went not then by the Name of my Lord Stafford, but by the Name of Mr. Howard of Effingham) and there he did receive a Commiſſion from Fenwick to be Paymaſter-General of the Army which was to be rais'd for the carrying on the Plot. His Lordſhip told them he was then going into the Country, but he hop'd he ſhould ſoon hear from them, that they had done the Buſineſs, at leaſt that it would be done before his Lordſhip did return. To which Fenwick made anſwer, Your Lordſhip muſt look after the Buſineſs as well as other Perſons; and there will be need of ſome to countenance it in Town: thereupon the Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſaid, That they had been often deceiv'd by this Prince, and been patient with him, but they would bear no longer, but were now reſolv'd to do the Work without Delay, for their Patience was worn out. Several other particular Circumſtances the Witneſs will acquaint your Lordſhips withal, which I ſhall not take up your time with.

My Lords, We have a third Witneſs as conſiderable and particular as any of the reſt, one that liv'd three Years in the Lady Powis's Houſe, had his Education there, and was perſuaded by that Lady, and by one Morgan a Jeſuit, to become a Fryar, and to that end was ſent to Doway; but not liking to continue at Doway (he will tell you the Reaſon why) he eſcap'd to France, and at Paris came to his Brother, a Benedictine Monk there, who advis'd him to go for England. But whilſt he ſtaid at Paris, this Gentleman, by the means of his Brother and other Prieſts, grew into a great familiarity with my Lord Stafford, who was then in France, and who at laſt came to have ſuch a great Confidence in him, that his Lordſhip could not hold, but told him, that tho he had diſoblig'd all his Friends by going away from Doway, yet he had ſomething to propoſe to him, which would be a means to reconcile him to his Friends, and bring him into Preferment, and into the Friendſhip of all good Catholicks, whom he would oblige by it. The Gentleman was willing to embrace ſo happy an Opportunity, and deſired to know what it was could procure him ſo great a Good. My Lord Stafford, the Priſoner at the Bar, told him, It was a thing of very great Importance; and after having requir'd from him all poſſible Obligations of Secrecy, he told him plainly what great Benefits would accrue to himſelf, and what Advantage to the Catholick Cauſe, if he would make himſelf and the Nation happy, by undertaking to kill the King of England, who was an Heretick, and conſequently a Rebel to God Almighty. My Lord Stafford did believe the Witneſs did embrace this Propoſal warmly, and therefore directed him to prepare to go for England, and to go beforehand from Paris to Diep, where he would meet him, and go over with him. But it ſeems my Lord Stafford met with ſome Diverſion, for he did not keep his Word with him in coming; and ſo this Gentleman being diſappointed, went over without him: but fearing to be called upon to the ſame Service, he return'd back again ſuddenly, and went into the French Army.

My Lords, We ſhall produce theſe Witneſſes againſt the Lord at the Bar; and when they have prov'd to your Lordſhips what I have open'd, any one who was not acquainted with the Popiſh Party, would believe they would be at a loſs how to acquit themſelves from this Charge. All manner of foul and indirect Practices have been uſed by them to terrify, to corrupt, and to ſcandalize our Witneſſes; all manner of Objections have been made to our Evidence. If the Witneſs does not come up to ſpeak directly to every Point, we are told, he ſays nothing at all: if he ſpeaks directly, they cry, he is not to be believ'd. Thus they have a ready Anſwer to every Witneſs that has been or ever ſhall be produced, either that he ſays nothing material, or that nothing that he ſays ought to have any Credit.

But we doubt not by this Tryal before your Lordſhips, if we cannot ſtop their Mouths, at leaſt to convince all the World beſides of the Reality of this Plot.

It will be no wonder if their Confidence goes on ſtill to frame Cavils: They are us'd to ſcandalize the Government, and they cannot give it over. How often has his Majeſty under his Great Seal publiſh'd and declar'd this Conſpiracy? How often has he preſs'd his Parliaments to go on to bring the Conſpirators to Puniſhment? And at the Opening of this very Parliament, he ſays plainly, That he does not believe himſelf ſafe from their Deſigns. Your Lordſhips alſo have voted the unqueſtionable Truth of the Plot, and ſo have the Commons; yet theſe Men are ſo hardy as ſtill to deny the plaineſt Truth, ſo confirm'd as this hath been.

Nay, my Lords, their Malice goes yet farther, for they have been ſo bold as to whiſper up and down, and induſtriouſly to ſpread Reports, before the Tryal, as if this Lord at the Bar, and the reſt who are impeach'd, ſhould certainly be acquitted. We do hope to be able to detect the Authors of this great Scandal; and the Commons doubt not of your Lordſhips Concurrence to aſſiſt them in bringing them to their deſerved Puniſhment. This is ſure the firſt time that ever any ſort of Men preſum'd to reflect upon the Juſtice of this high and noble Court. Your Anceſtors, my Lords, did by their Honour, Courage and Juſtice, preſerve our Anceſtors; the Advantage of which we, who are deſcended from them, do now enjoy: and we ſhall never have occaſion to doubt in the leaſt, but that your Lordſhips will tread in their Steps. You have in your hands a great Opportunity to make your Zeal for Truth and for the Proteſtant Religion famous to Poſterity. No Artifice or Malice can create the leaſt Jealouſy in us, that ever your Lordſhips ſhould ſhew any Partiality or Injuſtice to the Commons of England. To your Judgment this Cauſe is ſubmitted; mitted; and when we have your Judgment, we doubt not but we ſhall drive Popery out of this Engliſh World.

My Lords, We ſhall go on to the Proof of our Cauſe; and I hope this will be a happy Day to us and the whole Proteſtant Intereſt.

Then Mr. Treby, alſo one of the Committee appointed for the Management of the Evidence, began as followeth:

My Lords,

THeſe two learned Gentlemen have fully diſcharg'd their Province.

I ſhall proceed to call our Witneſſes to give their Teſtimony.

But before we produce them, your Lordſhips will be pleas'd to take notice, that our Evidence will conſiſt of two Parts, General and Particular; the General, to ſhew the Univerſal Conſpiracy; the Particular, to ſhew what ſpecial Part this noble Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, had in it.

And tho in the firſt Part my Lord Stafford may not be particularly nam'd, yet that Evidence will be pertinent and proper for us to give in this Tryal of my Lord Stafford; for we charge him not with the private Treaſon, wherein he with his immediate Complices only might be concern'd, but it is a Treaſon of the Popiſh Faction, or at leaſt, the principal and active Papiſts.

We lay it in our Articles of Impeachment, That there was an execrable Plot contriv'd and carried on by Papiſts, and that the Conſpirators acted divers Parts, and in divers Places, beyond Sea as well as here. It was a Treaſon that did beſtride two Lands: England, indeed was the Thing aim'd at; the Deſtruction of the Religion, Government and Liberty of England, was the End: but the Means and Inſtruments were not collected here only, but part of them were to be brought in from abroad.

This is an Enterprize too extenſive to be entirely managed by a ſingle Nobleman: And tho we look upon my Lord Stafford as a great Malefactor, yet we cannot think him ſo great a Man, as to be able within his own Sphere to compaſs this whole Deſign.

Should we not take this Courſe of Evidence, firſt to prove the general Plot, it might be a great and juſt Objection in my Lord's Mouth to ſay, You charge me with a Deſign of ſubverting the Kingdom, how is that poſſible to be undertaken by me, and thoſe I have had opportunity to converſe and confederate with? A mighty part of the Catholick World had need to be engaged for ſuch a purpoſe.

My Lords, If this would be a material Objection from this Lord, then will it be requiſite for us to obviate and prevent the Objection, by ſhewing, firſt, that there was ſuch a grand and univerſal Deſign of Papiſts, in which this Lord was to co-operate for his diſtinct Share; tho perhaps when we deſcend to our particular Evidence, it will appear, that his Part hath been great, and manag'd with Malice as great as any.

My Lords, We ſhall begin with a Witneſs, a Gentleman whoſe Education has given him the Opportunity of knowing the Inſide of their Affairs; and we preſume he will give you a ſatisfactory Account: His Name is Mr. John Smith.

L. H. S. What do you call him to, Gentlemen?

Mr. Treby. To the general Plot, my Lords.

Lord Strafford. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I know not who he is, nor his Name; I humbly beſeech your Lordſhips, that this Witneſs, whoever he be, and all the reſt that have any thing to witneſs againſt me, may look upon me face to face, according to the Words of the Statute. I humbly beſeech your Lordſhips to grant me this, which I take to be according to Law; and that each may give his Evidence alone, and that both againſt me and for me one may not know what the other ſays.

L. H. S. My Lord, You ſhall have all the fair Proceedings that can be.

L. Staff. The Law ſays my Accuſers muſt look me face to face. I deſire to have the Words read.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip may ſee him where he ſtands up.

Then Mr. Smith turn'd, and look'd upon my Lord Stafford.

L. Staff. I do ſee him, but I don't know him.

L. H. S. Swear him.

Clerk. The Evidence that you ſhall give in the Tryal of William Viſcount Stafford, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; ſo help you God, and the Contents of this Book.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip obſerves he is not brought as a particular Witneſs againſt your Lordſhip, but to prove the general Deſign of your Party.

L. Staff. 'Tis ſtill concerning me.

L. H. S. Look upon my Lord Stafford (which he did;) and now tell your Evidence.

Mr. Treby. This is Mr. Smith, my Lords. And that which we would examine this Witneſs to, is, the general Deſign of the Plot; what Knowledge he hath had of it here or beyond Sea: the Gentleman is able to underſtand the general Queſtion.

Mr. Smith. My Lords, I remember very well, when I went firſt into France, I came acquainted with Abbot Montague, Father Gaſcoyne, and ſeveral other Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, who often diſcourſed with me, and told me, if I would make myſelf a Catholick, I ſhould have an Employment amongſt them there, and afterwards in England; for they did not doubt but the Popiſh Religion would come in very ſoon. Upon which I ask'd his Lordſhip the Abbot one day, what Reaſon he had to believe it? He told me two Reaſons: firſt, that they did not doubt but to procure a Toleration of Religion, by which they ſhould bring it in without Noiſe; and ſecondly, that the Gentry that went abroad did obſerve the Novelty of their own Religion, and the Antiquity of theirs, and the Advantages that were to be had by it. Theſe Reaſons Abbot Montague gave me. There was one Father Bennet and others that told me the chief Reaſon was, their Party was very ſtrong in England, and in a few Years they would bring it in right or wrong. All this would not prevail with me to turn Papiſt, and I liv'd among them ſeveral Years. At laſt I had a deſign to go to Rome; and as I went I had a deſign to go to Provence, (and ſo into Italy) where there was one Cardinal Grimaldi coming thro the Town, and the Jeſuits having a great School there, I was curious to go to the School, and they were very deſirous I ſhould tarry for ſome time in the Town: I did, and they made much of me, and told me much to the ſame ſubſtance, what Aſſurances they had of their Religion coming into England. At laſt they had a deſire I ſhould diſcourſe with the Cardinal, which I did, and he made much of me, and he it was that perverted me to the Romiſh Religion. Upon this, the Cardinal ſhewed me a pair of Hangings that were in his Houſe, which he ſaid did belong to the Queen-Mother, and were bought in Paris; and he told me he was acquainted with many of the Nobility in England, and that he had great aſſurance the Popiſh Religion would prevail; and he told me there was but one in the way, and tho that Man was a good-natur'd Man, yet they could not ſo far prevail upon him; but that to accompliſh their Deſigns, they muſt take him out of the way. But at laſt I left this Place, and went to Rome, where I liv'd ſome Years in the Engliſh Jeſuits College there; and when I had liv'd there five Years, I came to be Prefect of ſeveral Rooms there, which are the Scholars Lodgings and Places of Study. I have heard it there often diſputed in their own College, both preach'd and privately exhorted, that the King of England was an Heretick, and that there was no King really reigning, and whoever took him out of the way, would do a meritorious Action.

L. H. S. Who was that that ſaid ſo?

Mr. Treby. Name the Perſons.

Mr. Smith. Father Anderton, Rector of the College, who was a very good Scholar; Father Mumford, and one Father Campion, but chiefly one Father Southwell, one of the chief of the Jeſuits. And I doubting of the Truth of that Opinion, they did ſhew me ſeveral of their Books there, and directed me to ſome Paſſages of Mariana, Vaſquez and Bellarmine, which I have ſince publiſh'd to the World, wherein they did aſſert it as a true Doctrine, and as Chriſtian Doctrine, what the Fathers told me; and this was never condemn'd at Rome. Beſides, my Lords, when I was coming from Rome, with my Faculty and Licence ſign'd by Cardinal Barberino, who generally conducts, or cauſes to be conducted all Papiſts to take their Leave of the Pope; and before we came away, (for there were five or ſix of us together) for a whole Month theſe Fathers were exhorting of us, That we were not oblig'd to obey the King of England, and that in all private Confeſſions we were to inſtruct all Perſons that we thought were capable of any Deſign, that they ſhould uſe all their Endeavours for promoting the Popiſh Religion. I coming into England, made my Application to Dr. Perrot, who belonged to the Portugal Ambaſſador, and was chief of the Popiſh Clergy in England. I was kept there ſome Months, to ſay Maſs in his Chappel; and afterwards I was ſent into the North, where there were abundance of Jeſuits and Fryars, to one Mr. Jeniſon's Houſe, where knowing the Principles of theſe People, I made it my Buſineſs to rout theſe Jeſuits away, eſpecially out of Mr. Jeniſon's Houſe, who had a Kinſman of his own that was a Jeſuit, and us'd to ſerve him in his Houſe, and great Complaint was made againſt me: And there was one Mr. Smith, otherwiſe Serjeant, in the North, who gave me Intimation of it, and to whom I wrote to ſatisfy him and the Clergy of the Grounds and Reaſons why I routed them away; which, if he be in England now, he can juſtify. Upon this, I receiv'd a ſmart Letter, as a kind of a Reprimand for my doing ſo; and he told me, that tho they did agree with me in Doctrine, yet they would endeavour what they could to bring in the Popiſh Religion, and tax'd me ſharply for appearing againſt it. I told him how the Jeſuits perverted the Duke of York; and that by that means they would be the chief Men in England, tho there were none of their Order till Queen Elizabeth's time. Beſides, my Lords, in Rome I ſaw Coleman's Letters, and read them once a month, as I believe; wherein he gave us intelligence of ſeveral Paſſages that happen'd in Court; how the Duke, and the Queen, and the chief of the Nobility were of their ſide; how they carried Matters ſeveral times: the ways my Lord Clifford did uſe, and Sir William Godolphin, to effect the Work; and that they did not queſtion but they ſhould get my Lord Treaſurer Danby on their ſide too. This was in Coleman's Letters; and he had ſo much Allowance for his Intelligence. Theſe Letters of his I read ſeveral times in the College. My Lords, afterwards, when I came from Rome, I ſaw Abbot Montague again, and he ſaid he was very glad to ſee me, and that I was a Prieſt. Well, but ſaid I, what am I the better? where is the Employment you promis'd me when I ſhould come into England? He told me I ſhould have it very ſoon, and he was glad that I had not made myſelf a Jeſuit: and he recommended me to Dr. Goffe, Confeſſor to the Queen-Mother, who ſaid he would do any thing in the world for me, and he did not doubt but he ſhould get a Preferment for me; which Dr. Goffe is now living. Truly when I came into England, I found all the Popiſh Clergy of England, that I diſcourſed with, of the ſame Opinion, that they did not doubt but the Romiſh Religion would ſoon come in. And beſides, in the North there was gathering of Money, in which I was order'd to be one of the chief Men; but I was againſt it. I told them I would do nothing in it; I thought it was illegal to ſend any Money beyond Sea: They told me it was Charity, only to repair the College at Doway. I told them it was ſtrange that there ſhould be ſo much Money rais'd only to repair one College, which would ſerve three or four Colleges; and I perſuaded Mr. Jeniſon, and all other Perſons I had to do with, not to meddle with it. As to this raiſing of the Money, I conceive it may be infer'd, it was for ſome other private Buſineſs, and I believe, was for the carrying on the Deſign. As for the Gentleman at the Bar, my Lord Stafford, I know nothing of my own particular Knowledge, but only this, There was one Thomas Smith, Sir Edward Smith's Brother, that liv'd at a place not far off the place where I liv'd, who was one that contributed in paying the Money that was then collecting: he was the Man that writ a Letter up to my Lord Stafford, to complain of two or three Juſtices of the Peace that were active againſt Popery; upon which there was one that was turn'd out, that I think is now of the Honourable Houſe of Commons —

Mr. Treby. Name him.

Mr. Smith. Sir Henry Calverly. The other was not turn'd out. So I ask'd Smith, when I was lately in the Country, about it; for I heard a Rumour, that there was a Letter of this Mr. Smith's found in my Lord Stafford's Chamber, and I was told it by a Parliament-Man, one Colonel Tempeſt. So, ſaid I to him, now you will be concern'd in the Plot. No, ſaid he, I care not for that Letter, it will ſignify nothing; for my Lord won't keep by him any thing of any moment. I ask'd him what he knew about my Lord. He told me he writ another Letter to my Lord, to know whether he would make a Conveyance of his Eſtate away, and whether he apprehended they were in danger: And he told me, his Lordſhip's Anſwer was, That ſeveral did ſo, but he would not; for he expected ſome ſudden Change or Alteration. I ask'd him what Change or Alteration he underſtood by it. Sir, ſaid he, what can be underſtood by it, but an Alteration of the Government and Religion? I am ſure, ſaid he, my Lord is ſo wiſe a Man, that he would would not write ſo without ſome ground. This is all I can ſay to the Gentleman at the Bar; and this is true by the Oath I have taken.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I did obſerve Mr. Smith in the Beginning of his Teſtimony (ſpeaking of the Diſcourſe he had at Rome) ſaid, they told him there was one in the way; I preſume 'tis not uneaſy to conjecture who was that one.

L. H. S. It was ſurely the King.

Mr. Treby. But we would rather have it explain'd by himſelf.

Mr. Smith. Father Anderton and Father Southwell did ſay that the King was a good Man, but he was not for their turn, and he was the only Man that ſtood in the way.

Mr. Treby. Did they name the King?

Mr. Smith. Yes, it was the common Diſcourſe all over the Country.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I deſire Mr. Smith in the next place may give an account of the Methods they were to uſe to accompliſh this Deſign, the firing of the City, and the reſt.

Mr. Smith. As to the Burning of London, I heard nothing beyond Seas at all but this; it was diſcourſed that the Papiſts did it, and the like, but they deny'd it, and they ſaid it came accidentally in a Baker's Houſe: but this I have often heard them ſay, that it was no great matter if it had been all burnt.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any more Queſtions yet?

Mr. Treby. No, we have done with him.

L. H. S. Have you concluded your Evidence, Sir?

Mr. Smith. Yes.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, will your Lordſhip ask him any Queſtions?

L. Staff. I deſire to know how long ago it was, my Lord, ſince he was made a Prieſt.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, with your Lordſhip's leave no Man is bound to anſwer a Queſtion whereby he ſhall accuſe himſelf; therefore under favour the Queſtion is ſomewhat harſh, and we demand your Judgment in it.

L. H. S. What is the Queſtion your Lordſhip would have ask'd him?

L. Staff. I will not ask it ſince 'tis an Offence; but did not he ſay he ſaid Maſs? pray how long ago was that?

L. H. S. I will ask him a Queſtion. Are not you a Proteſtant?

Mr. Smith. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. How long have you been ſo?

Mr. Smith. I have been a Proteſtant near upon two Years.

L. H. S How long ago before were you perverted?

Mr. Smith. Some ſix or ſeven Years.

L. H. S. That is nine Years. That was, I ſuppoſe, about 71.

Mr. Smith. I was always bred a Proteſtant, and was ſo abroad till I went towards Rome.

L. H. S. It is not criminal to have been a Prieſt, if he have conform'd.

L. Staff. I have no more to ſay to him.

L. H. S. Have you any more Queſtions to ask him?

L. Staff. No; I never ſaw him before; he may be as honeſt a Gentleman for ought I know as any one here.

Mr. Treby. Then, if your Lordſhips have no more Queſtions to ask him, he may withdraw. My Lords, the next Witneſs we produce is to the General ſtill, and that is Mr. Stephen Dugdale.

L. Staff. Is he only to ſpeak to the General, or to me?

Mr. Treby. To the General; we ſhall tell your Lordſhip when we come to the Particular.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, with your Lordſhips favour, we have open'd our Caſe, firſt, that we would go on with the General; while we are upon that Head, we will only call thoſe that ſpeak to the General, but it may happen that one Witneſs may ſpeak to both; but we ſhall divide his Teſtimony when we come to obſerve upon it.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I take leave to acquaint your Lordſhips, that Mr. Dugdale hath but a low Voice, and your Lordſhips will not hear him without a Command of Silence: which was done by Proclamation, and Mr. Dugdale ſworn.

Mr. Treby. Mr. Dugdale, take notice, we call you now only to the general part of the Plot, what Diſcourſes you have heard from Prieſts in general concerning any part of the Plot: And you are not to give your particular Evidence againſt this noble Lord, my Lord Stafford, till we call you thereunto.

L. H. S. What ſay you, Sir?

Mr. Dugdale. About fifteen or ſixteen Years I have been acquainted, that there was a Deſign carrying on for the bringing in the Romiſh Religion. I have at ſeveral times, by the means of my ghoſtly Father, that was Mr. Evers, been acquainted that there were ſeveral Lords and ſeveral Prieſts in ſeveral Places in England that were to carry it on; that is, they were to have Money and Arms ready, for thoſe that wanted, againſt the Death of the King. I have ſeen ſeveral Letters which have come from Paris, Rome, and St. Omers, all relating to this, to encourage Mr. Evers, and that he ſhould go on to encourage the reſt that were engag'd. For that purpoſe I read ſome of 'em, and intercepted them, becauſe they were all directed to me. Mr. Evers hath ſent me upon Meſſages, ſometimes by Letters, and ſometimes by word of Mouth, and all tended for the introducing of their Religion, that all ſhould be ready with Money and Arms againſt the King's Death: For I did hear nothing till of late about the killing of the King. In particular, there came one Letter to Evers from my Lord Stafford, to ſhew that things went on well beyond Sea, and hop'd they did ſo here. I ſaw another time ſome Letters which were alſo tranſmitted to my hands by a Meſſenger that came from Boſcobel, which did come from Paris, and ſo to St. Omers, from whence they came to Harcourt, and Harcourt had deliver'd the Letters to have the Opinion of ſome Lords; all which contain'd Advice which they had receiv'd from Paris, which they counted extraordinary good. The Purport of theſe Letters were to ſhew there was no way could be more likely to do their Work, than if any ſudden Death ſhould happen to the King, then to throw it upon the Presbyterians, who had kill'd the old King, and were likelieſt to be thought to have done this; and ſo they might eaſily get the Proteſtants, thoſe of the Church of England, to join with the Papiſts againſt the Presbyterians, who would by that become odious, and ſo ſhould weaken the Party the more eaſily to accompliſh their Deſign. I have of late ſeveral times been in Company with Prieſts and other Gentlemen in the Country, when they have had Conſultations both for the introducing their own Religion, and taking away the King's Life, which they did always intend to be about November, December or January 78. It was late in the Year; but all that Year (78) this this was their Conſultation. I have been ſent to the Jeſuits, ſome of them, particularly to Mr. Vavaſor and Mr. Gavan for ſome Moneys, for there was a general Collection, and there was the Sum of five hundred Pounds at one time, which I received, and gave to Mr. Evers, and he returned it to London for the carrying on this Deſign, and for diſcharging an account of Arms and things receiv'd from beyond Sea. And it was agreed that my Lord Aſton, Sir James Symons, and others, ſhould go in October 1678. to diſpoſe of the Arms which they had ſo received, ſome here, and ſome beyond Sea, to the value, I heard ſay, of 30000*l.* Moreover I did hear that they were to have Men raiſed there, as well as here. So I have heard from Mr. Evers, and Mr. Gavan and others, and I have been alſo by when it hath been diſcourſed that the King of France was acquainted with all theſe Deſigns, and that he would furniſh us with Men, and ſhould not be wanting with all other Aid and Aſſiſtance, if there ſhould be any Alteration, if the King ſhould die or be taken away, or to that purpoſe. I have been ſeveral times put upon to make Foot-Races, to draw People together, that they might the better have Diſcourſes together without Suſpicion. I was likewiſe put in truſt by the Jeſuits all the while the Plot was carrying on, and particularly for two years; all the Letters relating to the Plot came to my hand, ſome of which I opened, and ſome I kept in my own hands; and particularly I had one that came to my hands which was about the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, for when I carried it to Mr. Evers, he ſaid, There was one of our Enemies taken out of the way: and it was contained in the Letter, This night Sir Edmondbury Godfrey is diſpatched; which by the Date of it was the 12th of October, 1678. I told him that that would prove a diſcouragement to us, and would be the Ruin of all the Deſign: he ſaid, not ſo, it would rather prove otherwiſe; for he was one that was active in puniſhing lewd and debauched Perſons, and it would rather be put upon them than us, as done out of revenge.

Mr. Treby. Pray Sir, ſpeak the particular time when that Letter came into Staffordſhire.

Mr. Dugd. The 14th of October 1678. which was Monday.

Mr. Treby. The Date of it pray tell us.

Mr. Dugd. The 12th of October, 1678.

Mr. Treby. The very Night that it was done.

Mr. Dugd. Likewiſe when I did hear there was like to be an Alteration in the Government, and having ſuch fair Promiſes, I was incouraged to it, and was very willing to contribute to the Deſign, and I did then make over an Eſtate which I had of four hundred pound value for that purpoſe, and for the praying for my Soul. And when my Lord Aſton and I ſhould come to Account, as there was Mony over and above due to me, I did likewiſe promiſe, becauſe I ſaw Mony would be wanting, I would give them a hundred pound more. There were ſeveral other Gentlemen, as Mr. Heveningham, Sir James Symons, my Lord Aſton, Mr. Draycott, Mr. Howard and Mr. Gerard, who did to my knowledge contribute towards the carrying on of this Charge, for defraying of Mony and raiſing Arms, and paying for them. And I have ſeen Letters from beyond Sea, that have been to Mr. Evers, that all things have been ready as to the Arms, and there only wanted Orders how they ſhould be diſpoſed of; and I have been ſeveral times brought to the Oath of Secrecy for fear I ſhould diſcloſe it, and particularly that time that I went away from my Lord Aſton's, which was on a Monday Morning, Mr. Evers gave it me about the 18th or 19th of November 1678. And I did then promiſe by all the Promiſes I could make, and upon the Sacrament, in his Chamber, that I would not diſcloſe it; but having others to adviſe me in it, ſuch as could better do it, that told me ſuch Oaths were better broken than kept: and thereupon I came to diſcover the thing, which I have done to the beſt my knowledge. I am very loth to charge my Memory in particular, about Times, or how many were in Company, but thoſe that I am ſure of; but there hath been in Company at the Conſultation ſeveral times, Mr. Heveningham, Sir James Symons, Mr. Vavaſor, Mr. Petre, Mr. Howard, and my Lord Aſton himſelf; when there hath been Speech about the Deſign, for the introducing of Religion, and for taking order about Money to buy Arms, and particularly when my Lord Stafford was by about the Death of the King, and that was about September 1678.

Mr. Treby. Mr. Dugdale, you ſpeak of levying Arms, and of the Oath of Secrecy that was given you; were there not other ſpiritual Weapons uſed? Was there not an Indulgence, or ſuch a thing?

Mr. Dugd. There was an Indulgence about 78, or thereabouts, which came thro Ireland's hands, tranſmitted from beyond Sea, and ſo to Mr. Evers, and Mr. Gavan was put on to publiſh it, which he did one time at Boſcobel. And it was likewiſe at all private Chappels, that whoſoever was active for the introducing the Romiſh Religion, or killing the King, ſhould have a free Pardon of all his Sins.

Mr. Foley. Pray declare what Arguments have been uſed by your Prieſts, to induce you to this Deſign?

L. H. S. Raiſe your Voice, that we may hear what you ask.

Mr. Foley. We would know what Arguments have been uſed to perſuade to this Deſign?

Mr. Dugd. They have told me in their Meetings, the King was an excommunicated Heretick, and he was out of the Pale of the Church, therefore it was lawful to kill him, and it was no more than the killing of a Dog.

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, I deſire to ask him one Queſtion further, what he hath heard about a Maſſacre that was intended?

L. H. S. Have you heard of any Maſſacre that was to be?

Mr. Dugd. I have heard that about the time the King ſhould be killed, ſeveral ſhould be provided with Arms, and ſuch Inſtruments, and riſe all of a ſudden at an hour's warning, and ſo come in upon the Proteſtants, and cut their Throats; that was one Propoſal: and if any did eſcape, there ſhould be an Army to cut them off in their Flight.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I deſire to ask him one Queſtion further, Whether he ever knew or heard of Mr. Oates and Bedloe till the Plot was detected?

Mr. Dugd. I have heard of them from Prieſts, as Meſſengers entruſted by them, but no otherwiſe.

L. H. S. When did you hear that?

Mr. Dugd. I have formerly declared it.

Mr. Treby. Ay, when?

L. H. S. Before the Diſcovery, or after?

Mr. Dugd. Before the Diſcovery.

Mr. Treby. My Lord, the reaſon of the Queſtion, and the uſe we make of it is this; we charge the Papiſts with the Conſpiracy of a Plot, and they charge our Witneſſes with a Conſpiracy to accuſe: Now it appears, that Mr. Dugdale had not any knowledge knowledge of the other Witneſſes, and only had heard of them as Perſons concerned; ſo it could not poſſibly be a joint Contrivance amongſt them.

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, I deſire to ask this Queſtion, Whether Mr. Dugdale hath ſeen any Letters from Whitebread to Evers, and what Inſtructions were in thoſe Letters to Evers about the Perſons to be concerned, and what kind of Creatures he was to imploy in this great Deſign of theirs?

Mr. Dugd. I ſaw a Letter from Whitebread, to give Mr. Evers a caution who he did imploy or truſt in the Deſign; for he told him there had been good care taken therein hitherto; and it were no matter whether they were Gentlemen of Quality or not, ſo they were ſtout and truſty, or to that purpoſe.

L. H. S. What ſhould they be truſty for?

Mr. Dugd. For the killing the King.

L. H. S. Was that ſaid plainly in the Letter?

Mr. Dugd. To the beſt of my remembrance in thoſe very Words.

L. H. S. Was there no Cypher or Character?

Mr. Dugd. There was no Cypher or Character that I know of, nothing but two Letters for his Name.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I deſire Mr. Dugdale may give an account of thoſe Papers he ſpeaks of; what became of them, and tell us the reaſon why they were not produc'd?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, when I was by the Inſtruction of Mr. Evers to take my flight, I convey'd all my Papers, that either belonged to him or my ſelf, for the carrying on of the Plot, and carried them to an Houſe not far remote from my Lord Aſton's, and by the help of two Maids——

Mr. Treby. Name them.

Mr. Dugdale. Elizabeth Eld, and Anne Eld. And they two did prepare a Fire in their Chamber for that purpoſe, and they aſſiſted me to burn them: I was in a great Conſternation, and great Fear, in regard I muſt fly and abſcond my ſelf, and indeed I did it with Tears in my Eyes. And whilſt we were burning of the Papers, one of them ſpy'd a little Paper-Book, by chance, and ſhe asked me, whether that ſhould be burnt; I told her, no; burn not that, for there is no Treaſon in it. With that one of them asked me, Is there any Treaſon in the reſt? and I put them off, to the beſt of my knowledge, and would not give them a direct anſwer.

Sir John Trevor. Why did you conſent to burn them?

Mr. Dugd. Becauſe I knew they would diſcover me, and others that were concerned in the Plot.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to obſerve, the burning of the Letters was before he diſcovered the Plot, or any thing.

Mr. Sacheverell. My Lords, We deſire he may be asked one Queſtion; he told your Lordſhips of the Letter that came into Staffordſhire about the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, but he hath not told you of the reaſon why he was to be taken away. We deſire he will let your Lordſhips know what reaſons they gave for it.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I was deſirous to know how things went, being concerned as well as Mr. Evers; and I asked what the Reaſon was they took away his Life? Mr. Evers told me, that there was a Meſſage ſent to Mr. Coleman, to deſire him that he would not reveal what he knew concerning the Plot, or any thing of that nature.

Mr. Sacheverell. From whom was that Meſſage ſent?

Mr. Dugd. From the Duke of York. And Coleman did ſend word back again, What was it the nearer? for he had been ſo fooliſh as to reveal all to Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, who had promiſed to keep it all as a Secret. But upon the Examination of Oates, before Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, as a Juſtice of Peace, he was afraid he would come in an Evidence againſt him; and had ſhewn himſelf a little too eager, which made Coleman afraid he would witneſs againſt him. And the Duke of York did ſend word back again, That if he would take care not to reveal but conceal it, he ſhould not come in againſt him, or to that purpoſe: And the next News we heard was the Letter that he was diſpatched.

Mr. Foley. I deſire he may give an account what Aſſiſtance the Pope gave for the carrying on of this Deſign?

Mr. Dugd. I heard the Pope had out of his Revenue promiſed ſeveral Sums of Money for the carrying on this Plot; and particularly that he would aſſiſt the poor diſtreſſed Iriſh, with both Men and Money; and there ſhould not be any thing wanting on his part.

L. H. S. Have you done with him, Gentlemen?

Mr. Treby. Yes, I think we have done with him as to the General.

L. Staff. I deſire to ask him then what Sums of Money did the Pope contribute to it?

L. H. S. What Sums of Money did the Pope contribute to this Deſign?

Mr. Dugd. I have heard of ſeveral Sums in general that he was to contribute for the carrying on of the Plot.

L. H. S. Did you hear of any Sum certain?

Mr. Dugd. I do not know, but I think I have heard ſometimes of ten thouſand Pound, or ſome ſuch Sum. I have been told by a Servant, that formerly belonged to my Lord Stafford, That the Pope's daily Income was twenty four thouſand Pounds a day; and that if he would do as he had promiſed, he was able to do very much.

L. H. S. They told you ſo, you do not know it otherwiſe.

Mr. Treby. We have done then with him: We call Mr. Prance next. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I deſire Mr. Prance would give us an account of what Diſcourſe he had with one Mr. Singleton a Prieſt, and when.

Mr. Prance. I went to one Mr. Singleton a Prieſt, at one Hall's, in the Year 78: and he told me, That he did not fear but in a little time to be a Prieſt in a Pariſh-Church; and that he would make no more to ſtab forty Parliament-Men, than to eat his Dinner, which he was at, at that very time.

L. H. S. Where was that?

Mr. Prance. At one Hall's, a Cook in Ivy-Lane.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Queſtions, my Lord.

L. Staff. No, my Lord.

Mr. Treby. Then call Dr. Oates. (Who was ſworn.)

L. H. S. Do you examine Mr. Oates upon the general Plot, or the particular?

Mr. Treby. Only to the General now; and we deſire him to take notice he is ſo to ſpeak, and to confine himſelf to that at preſent.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, in the Year 76, I was admitted into the Service of the Duke of Norfolk, as Chaplain in his Houſe, and there I came acquainted with one Bing, that was a Prieſt in the Houſe. And being acquainted with him, there came one Kemiſh very often to viſit him, and one Singleton, who told me, that I ſhould find that the

Proteſtant

Proteſtant Religion was upon its laſt legs, and that it would become me, and all Men of my Coat (for then I profeſſed my ſelf a Miniſter of the Church of England) to haſten betimes home to the Church of Rome. My Lords, having had ſtrong Suſpicions for ſome years before, of the great and apparent Growth of Popery; to ſatisfy my Curioſity, I pretended ſome Doubts in my Mind. My Lords, after ſome time had paſſed over, and I had had ſome Converſation with theſe Men, I found they were not Men for my turn, becauſe being regular Men, they were not Men that had any great degree of Learning. Afterwards, my Lords, I met with one Hutchinſon; I found him a ſaint-like Man, or one that was religious for Religion ſake; and him I found not for my turn neither: For, my Lords, my Deſign was to deal with their Caſuiſts; that is, thoſe of the Society. After that I had obtain'd the Favour from him, to have ſome Conference with one of the Society, I found they were the Men for my turn, becauſe I found they were the cunning politick Men, and the Men that could ſatisfy me. After that I had had ſome Diſcourſe with them, I pretended to be convinced by their Arguments. And, my Lords, after that I had thus acknowledged my Conviction, I deſired to be reconciled; and accordingly on Aſh-Wedneſday, $16\frac{76}{77}$, I was reconciled. And ſoon after my Reconciliation, Strange, who was then Provincial of the Society, did tell me much after this way; Mr. Oates, you are now reconciled to the Church of Rome, and you muſt lay down your Miniſtry, for your Ordination is invalid, and you muſt look upon your ſelf as no more than a Layman: Pray, ſays he, now what courſe do you think to take? I told him, I did deſire to be one of their Society, and to be admitted a Novice into their Order. He ſaid, it was a very honeſt Requeſt, and a very honeſt Deſire; and he ſaid, he would take ſome time to conſider of it, and he would take till the Saturday following. Saturday following I was ſent for, by one Fenwick: I lodged then in Barbican, and Fenwick came to me, and told me, the Fathers were met at Wild-Houſe, and would ſpeak with me: And he alſo told me, they had granted my Requeſt, and I ſhould be admitted. After I was admitted, they told me, I had ſome years upon me, and I could not undergo thoſe Burdens they put upon younger Men; but what did I think of travelling, and going beyond Sea to do their Buſineſs? I did agree to it, and in April 77, I went aboard one Luke Roch, Maſter of the Bilboa-Merchant, bound for Bilboa, having their Letters of Recommendation. After I arrived there, which was on a Sunday, in May or June, I can't tell which, I went the Friday following for Vallidolid in Caſtile, and I got thither the Tueſday following; but by the way I open'd certain Letters, wherein was made mention of a Diſturbance deſigned in Scotland. And the Letters did expreſs what Hopes they had to effect their Deſign in England, for the carrying on (as they worded it) the Catholick Cauſe, and for the Advancement of the Intereſt of the Biſhop of Rome. My Lords, after I had arrived at Vallidolid, there were Letters there got before me, which were dated in May, wherein was expreſſed News, that the King was diſpatched, which was the Cauſe of great Joy to the Fathers there; and afterwards Letters dated in May too (but towards the latter end of May) came, that they were miſtaken, and deſired the Fathers there to ſtifle that News. My Lords, there came Letters dated in June, wherein they did give an account, That they had procured one Beddingfield to be Confeſſor to the Duke of York; which Beddingfield by his Intereſt might prevail much with the Duke, in order to this Deſign. Letters came alſo in June from St. Omers, which gave them an account, that Father Beddingfield had aſſured them of the Duke's Willingneſs to comply with them, for the advancement of the Catholick Religion. My Lords, after I had ſtay'd ſome time there, and had paſſed thro the Country for the Buſineſs of the Society, I found that in the Court of Spain ſome Miniſters of that Court had been very ready to advance Money, which Money was returned for England; and that the Father Provincial of the Jeſuits of Caſtile, by his Care and Induſtry had advanced ten thouſand Pound, which was promiſed to be paid in June following, within a twelvemonth after. My Lords, in July I received Letters out of England, wherein an Account was given there, to the Fathers in Spain, that they were ſending them a Miſſion of twelve Students, four whereof were to go to Madrid, and eight to Vallidolid: the Conductors of theſe twelve Students were one Father Croſſe, that was his true Name, and one Father Mumford, whoſe true Name was Armſtrong. Theſe Miſſioners arrived in December, where they had a Sermon preached at their coming by this ſame Armſtrong, wherein the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy were declared to be antichriſtian, heretical, and deviliſh; in which the King's Legitimacy was vilify'd and abuſed; and that his Religion did intitle him to nothing but ſudden Death and Deſtruction, in that he appear'd an Enemy both to God and Man. Theſe were the Contents of that Sermon, as near as I remember. My Lords, after the meeting with ſeveral Letters there, in July, Auguſt, and September in the Kingdom of Spain, it was ordered, I ſhould return for England, and in the Month of November I came for England, at which time I had Letters from the Provincial of Caſtile, called by the Name of Padre de Hieronimo de Corduba, who did in his Letter aſſure the Provincial in England, and the Fathers here, that the ten thouſand Pound ſhould be paid (as I ſaid before) in June following. When I came for England, at London I was lodged at one Grigſon's, that lived in Drury-lane, near the Sign of the Red-Lyon, and there I lay till I went to St. Omers; and by the Provincial and Conſulters of the Province I was order'd a Maintenance, and it was paid to this Man for entertaining of me. I went and brought theſe Letters to this Strange, and there was Father Keins lying ill upon Strange's Bed; and Keins was ſaying, he was mighty ſorry for honeſt William (ſo they called the Ruffian that was to kill the King) that he had miſſed in his Enterprize. But, my Lords, this I think good to tell your Lordſhips, they were not ſo zealous for the Deſtruction of the King, till the King had refuſed Coleman the diſſolving of the long Parliament. Then they were more intent upon it, though they had ſeveral times attempted it ever ſince the Fire of London; but when Coleman was refuſed the Diſſolution of the Long-Parliament, then were they more zealous for the Deſtruction of the King: but the Deſign for the introducing the Popiſh Religion, they have been carrying on ſome Years before the Fire, by thoſe Inſtruments, ſome of whom are yet alive. My Lords, I left England in November O. S. and December N. S. for when I came to St. Omers, it was (as near as I can remember) the 9th or 10th of December according to the Stile of the Place. I carried with me a Packet of Letters from Strange, the Provincial, and other Fathers that were of the Conſult for the Province of England, to the Fathers at St. Omers, wherein Strange did tell them, that they had great hopes of their Deſign taking effect the next Year, but as yet it would not be effected: he ſaid, therefore they at London thought fit to ſuſpend it till they ſaw what the Parliament would do. And he did in the ſame Letter declare, That the Parliament would be about a long Bill that had been brought into the Commons Houſe ſome Seſſions before, but he did not queſtion but that the Catholick Party would evade that Bill. And, my Lords, in that year, ſome time after, we had a Letter from our new Provincial, whoſe true Name was Whitebread, and his counterfeit Name White. This Father writes to the Fathers at St. Omers, and therein he does order one Conyers to preach upon St. Thomas of Canterbury's Day; and he did therein alſo tell them, that he would be as zealous for the carrying on of the Deſign as his Predeceſſor had been: and a Sermon was accordingly preached at the Sodality Church, wherein after he had commended the Saint, whoſe Day they celebrated, for his great Virtues, declaring how unworthily he was ſacrificed, he did inveigh againſt the Tyranny (as he called it) of temporal Princes, and particularly of the King of England; and when he came to ſpeak of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, he declared, that he looked upon them as antichriſtian and deviliſh, and that it was fit to deſtroy all ſuch as would countenance them. We have done with the Year 77, and we come now to January 1678.

L. H. S. You ſpeak of one Keins, who (lying upon Strange's Bed) ſaid he was ſorry honeſt Will had miſſed his Enterprize: You have not explain'd who that honeſt Will was; explain that.

Dr. Oates. It was Grove.

L. H. S. But about what did he ſay he was ſorry for him?

Dr. Oates. That he had miſſed his Deſign.

Mr. Foley. What was that miſſing of his Deſign?

Dr. Oates. That he had not killed the King, my Lords, in January 78.

L.H.S. You mean according to the foreign Stile?

Dr. Oates. Yes, according to the foreign Stile, my Lords: we received Letters out of Ireland, and there, my Lords, we found by the Contents of thoſe Letters, that they were as buſy in Ireland as we were in England. We found there that the Talbots, and other Perſons, were very zealous in raiſing of Forces, and were reſolved to let in the French King, provided that the Parliament ſhould urge the King to break with France. My Lords, likewiſe in January (as near as I can remember) Morgan was ſent into Ireland as a Viſitor (which is ſomething a better Place than a Provincial, but only it is but temporary for the time he viſits) and he returns in February or March, and gives us an account how ready the Iriſh were to vindicate their Freedom, and their Religion, from the Oppreſſion of the Engliſh, as they called it. My Lords, in February ſome were employ'd to go into ſome Parts of Germany, to Liege, and to ſome Parts of Flanders, to ſee how the Affairs there ſtood, and how their Correſpondencies ſtood, to ſee whether there was not an Interruption in the Correſpondencies. My Lords, upon their return, they found that the Fathers at Ghent were inclined to take into this Buſineſs the Secular Clergy; but the Fathers of St. Omers, together with the Provincial, did refuſe the Motion, becauſe the Secular Clergy were more cowardly, and ſought themſelves, and not the Intereſt of the Church, or to that purpoſe. My Lords, in March we received Letters, that there was a very ſhrewd Attempt made upon the Perſon of the King, and that the Flint of Pickering's Gun or Piſtol was looſe, and his Hand ſhaking, the King did then eſcape, for which he received a Diſcipline, and the other a ſevere Chiding.

L. H. S. You explain not the Meaning of what you ſay; that was not honeſt Will, for he you ſay was Grove.

Dr. Oates. I mean Pickering received the Diſcipline, and William was chid; for it was Pickering's Flint that was looſe. My Lords, this was in March, and at the latter end of March there comes a Letter from London, in which there was a Summons to a Conſult here in London; and being ſummoned, there went over eight or nine from St. Omers, Leige, and Ghent, to this Conſult, and I did attend them in their Journey.

L. H. S. When did that Summons come?

Dr. Oates. The latter end of March, or the beginning of April, as I remember; they had notice of it in England before, but we had notice of it juſt when we were to come. I think it was in April, as near as I can remember; I cannot be certain in that, my Lord. We did come to Town in April, there the Conſult was held, it begun at the White-Horſe Tavern, where they did conſult about ſome things of the Society, and afterwards they did adjourn into particular Societies, where they did debate and reſolve on the Death of the King, and that Grove ſhould have fifteen hundred Pounds for his pains, and the other being a religious Man, ſhould have thirty thouſand Maſſes ſaid for him. My Lords, after ſtaying in Town awhile, we returned to St. Omers; and after I had ſtaid there ſome few days, the new Provincial did begin to viſit his Province, and comes over to St. Omers, where after ſtaying ſome ſix days he goes over from thence to Wotton. But whilſt he ſtaid at St. Omers, I was ordered to go into England to attend the Affairs here, and for to do ſome other Services that they ſhould employ me about. My Lords, accordingly I did come over, a nd it was on the 23d N. S. as near as I remember, I got to Calice; the 24th I got to Dover; on the 25th I got to Sittenburn, but between Dover and Sittenburn we had ſome Boxes ſeized: for at Dover we met with Fenwick, who is ſince executed, who went by the Name of Thompſon, and carried a Box with him; and a little on this ſide Canterbury it was ſeized by the Cuſtom-Houſe Officers, and ſeveral little Trinkets in, which were ſeized as French Goods; and he did deſire the Searcher to ſtand his Friend, and he would give him ſomething for his pains, and told him where he ſhould write to him in London. There was a Superſcription on the Box to one Blundel, but he ſhould write to him by the Name of Thompſon, at the Fountain Tavern near Charingcroſs. We arrived in Town the 17th of June, which is the 27th N. S. it was upon a Monday; and there were Letters which did follow us, wherein were Propoſals made to Sir George Wakeman for the poiſoning of the King, and that the ten thouſand Pounds which the Spaniards had promiſed in January before, and was accordingly paid in London at the time, ſhould be propoſed to Wakeman to poiſon the King. I found that Coleman did look upon it as too little, and he thought fifteen thouſand Pound ſhould be given to him: I found that Langham thought it too much, and that he ought to do ſo great a piece of Service for nothing, and told us he was a narrow-ſpirited Man, if he would not engage in ſuch a thing. My Lords, there was five thouſand Pounds, as the Books told me, paid; but I did not then ſee it paid, becauſe I was then ill, and not fit to ſtir abroad. My Lords, we are now paſt June 78. In July Father Aſhby comes to Town, who did revive the Propoſal to Sir George Wakeman; but being ſick of the Gout, he haſtned down to the Bath; and when he came there, as ſoon as he began to be well, he was adviſ'd by the Fathers to ſee how the Catholicks ſtood affected in Somerſetſhire; for they had an account in March 78, by Letters from Berkſhire, Oxfordſhire, and Eſſex, that the Catholicks ſtood well affected; and Sir William Andrews did ſecure that the People of Eſſex ſhould ſtand to their Points; and ſo ſeveral Men did ſecure that they would have them in readineſs. My Lords, in Auguſt (I cannot remember every Particular, but refer myſelf to the Records of the Houſe) about the 26th of Auguſt, I find that Fenwick went to St. Omers, and there he was to attend the Provincial home, and to give the Provincial an Account of the Propoſal accepted by Sir George Wakeman: but in July (if your Lordſhips pleaſe to give me leave to go back again) Strange comes to Town, and falling in diſcourſe about the Fire of London, and the Rebuilding of it, he very frankly told me how it was fir'd, and how many of thoſe concerned were ſeiz'd; and among the reſt, told me, that the Duke of York's Guard, as by his Order, did receive them, and were afterwards willing to diſcharge them: which I forgot to mention before, but upon review of my Papers, I do find that it was told me his Guard did releaſe the Priſoners that were ſuſpected about the Fire, and that all the Order they had for it, they pretended was from the Duke. But now, my Lords, we return to Auguſt again. Upon the 3d of Auguſt, I find Ireland did pretend to go to St. Omers, and a Letter came from him as directed from thence; but we find by his Tryal and other things ſince, that he went into Staffordſhire: And about the 12th of Auguſt (as I remember) he was here in Town. The latter part of July I communicated with Dr. Tongue, and gave him ſome particular account of Affairs; I deſir'd him to communicate it to ſome that might make it known to the King: The King had notice the 13th of Auguſt, or the 14th, as I remember; and by the 3d of September I was betray'd, and was expos'd to the Vengeance of theſe Men whoſe Contrivances I had thus diſcover'd. So my Intelligence did ceaſe wholly the 8th of September. Then was I forc'd to keep private; and upon my Examination, what Information I gave before the Lords and Commons, I refer myſelf to them.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, will you ask him any Queſtions?

L. Staf. No, my Lord; I am not at all concern'd in his Evidence.

L. H. S. You ſay you were betray'd; Can you tell how or which way you were betray'd?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I will give this Honourable Houſe what Light I can in it; but I deſire then to be excus'd from my Oath, for I can't ſpeak it of my own Knowledge.

Sir J. Trevor. Then the next Witneſs we deſire may be called, is Mr. Bernard Dennis.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. This Witneſs we call now, is to confirm what Dr. Oates hath ſaid, that he was at Vallidolid, and other Places in Spain: he will be ſhort.

L. H. S. Call you Oates again?

Sir F. Win. No, my Lord, we call Dennis to confirm what Dr. Oates hath ſaid. He hath given your Lordſhip an account that he was in Spain; we now produce one that ſaw him when he was there, and ſo confirms the Evidence that was given by him.

[Then Mr. Dennis was ſworn.]

Mr. Treby. Mr. Dennis, Do you give their Lordſhips an account of your diſcourſing with Dr. Oates in Spain, or any where elſe abroad, and where.

L. H. S. Stay a little; do you know Mr. Oates?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. How long have you known him?

Mr. Dennis. I knew him in the Year 77.

L. H. S. Where?

Mr. Dennis. At Vallidolid.

L. H. S. Did you ſee him there? Was he a Student there?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. Was he known by the Name of Oates?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lord, he was.

Sir F. Win. My Lord, we deſire he may tell his Knowledge of Mr. Oates, what Converſation he had with him in Spain.

Mr. Dennis. My Lords, I was in Spain in the City of Victoria; and leaving the City of Victoria in the Month of June, I took my courſe to Madrid, and paſſing thro the City of Vallidolid, going into the Convent of the Dominicans, there came an Iriſh Man, a Prieſt of Ireland, out of the City to ſee me; and there he told me there was a Student of the Jeſuits, by Name Mr. Oates, an Engliſhman: and I underſtanding this, went into the College of the Jeſuits to ſee Mr. Oates, and there had Converſation with Mr. Oates; and in the Converſation I had with him there, he told me that he was a Vicar in Kent, and that he was Chaplain to a great Nobleman in England, by Name Howard; and that he went out of England by the Conſent of the Jeſuits in England, being converted by them to the Roman Catholick Faith, and that his going into Spain was to fit himſelf for the Society of the Jeſuits. And underſtanding my Reſolution was to go to Madrid, he did deſire me to carry a Letter to the Archbiſhop of Tune, one James Lench an Iriſhman, who liv'd at Madrid. And further, he lent me four Pieces of Eight to defray my Journey to Madrid, and deſir'd me to pay the Money to the Procurator of the Jeſuits at Madrid. And in carrying this Letter to the Archbiſhop, when I came there, I got a Dominican Fryar of Ireland, by Name Humphrey Delphin, to go with me and ſee the Archbiſhop at his Lodging; and going in, I deliver'd him the Letter in the Preſence of the Dominican, and he perus'd it in my Preſence, and in the Preſence of a Prieſt that waited upon him; and finiſhing the Contents of the Letter, as I ſuppoſe, with a ſmiling Countenance he turned about, and ſaid, Sirs, the Contents of this Letter is, that Mr. Oates is deſirous to receive the Order of Prieſthood from me, or at my hands; and if it be ſo, it will be much in our way, and this Man will be a fit Man for our Purpoſe: for, ſaid he further, Dr. Oliver Plunket, Primate of Ireland, is reſolv'd this Year, or with the next Convenience, to bring in a French Power into Ireland, thereby to ſupport the Roman Catholicks in England and Ireland; and if it pleaſe God, I myſelf, without any delay, will go into Ireland to aſſiſt in that pious Work. All this Diſcourſe between us and the Archbiſhop, and between Oates and me, was in July 77. And there I did ſpeak and converſe with Mr. Oates. All this I can teſtify for Truth on the behalf of Mr. Oates, who was then a Student in the College of Vallidolid, and had no other Name nor Title.

Mr. Foley. I deſire himſelf may tell your Lordſhip what Religion he is of.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Mr.

Mr. Dennis. I am a Dominican Fryar, my Lord.

L. H. S. Are you?

Mr. Dennis. My Lords, I am.

L. H. S. At this time?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. He hath a Pardon, my Lords.

Mr. Treby. This hath been controverted, my Lords, whether Mr. Oates ever was in Spain; we deſire to make it out plain to the World, for the Confirmation of his Evidence: therefore we ask him again, Do you know the Perſon of Mr. Oates?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, I do.

Mr. Treby. Is this Perſon that gave Evidence laſt before you, the ſame Perſon you ſaw at Vallidolid?

Mr. Dennis. Yes it is.

Mr. Sacheverel. My Lords, we deſire to ask of him, why he had the four Pieces of Eight of Mr. Oates?

L. H. S. Why had you that Mony of Oates?

Mr. Dennis. For to defray my Journey to Madrid.

L. H. S. Was that all you had?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Sachev. We pray he may be ask'd how he came to be ſo needy.

Mr. Dennis. My Lords, I was not altogether needy; but it is very certain Religious Perſons, eſpecially of my Order, cannot carry any Money about them but what is requiſite for their Journey, and that which may be remov'd from place to place.

Sir J. Trevor. I deſire to ask him, did he ſee any more Money that Dr. Oates had?

Mr. Dennis. I did ſee Dr. Oates in his Chamber in the College at Vallidolid, when he deliver'd me the four Pieces of Eight, to draw out a Drawer of a Table in his Chamber, and out of the Drawer he pull'd a Bag of Money, which was a very conſiderable Sum of Money, and I am certain he did not want Money there then.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I think we have done with him; if my Lord pleaſe to ask him any Queſtion, he may.

L. Staf. But only one Queſtion, for I never ſaw the Man in my Life. I deſire he may be ask'd whether he be ſtill of the Romiſh Religion.

Sir J. Trevor. My Lords, We have not yet done with him; the Queſtion we would ask him, is this, whether he hath heard of any Money that was gather'd in Ireland for the Support of this Plot?

L. H. S. The Queſtion ask'd of you, have you heard of any Money gather'd in Ireland for the Support of this Plot?

Mr. Dennis. I have both heard and ſeen of it.

L. H. S. When and where?

Mr. Dennis. My Lords, in the Year 68, I entred into the Order of the Dominicans in Ireland; and in the ſame Year there arriv'd at Dublin a Franciſcan Fryar, Brother to the late Earl of Carlingford; and arriving there, he made ſeveral Collectors for the levying a competent Sum of Money out of every Convent and Religious Houſe. My Lords, the Collectors were by Name John Reynolds, alias Landy, and John Berne; and arriving at the County of Sligoe, in the Month of May——

L. H. S. What Year?

Mr. Dennis. 68. And when the Collectors came to the Convent of our Fryars in Sligoe, all the Fryars gather'd together into a Room, and theſe Collectors coming in did read their Commiſſion given them from one James Taaffe, as they ſaid; and I was there perſonally preſent, tho a Novice; and upon reading their Commiſſions, they ſaid forty Shillings was to be paid by the Prior, and the Fryars of that Convent: and the Provincial of the Order of the Dominicans queſtion'd the Power of the ſaid Reynolds and Berne, and ſo did the Prior; and I ask'd why the Money was levy'd? They gave anſwer, That that Levy and ſeveral other Levies was to encourage the French King, in whoſe Kingdom were ſeveral Biſhops of Ireland, Clergymen, and others, whoſe Buſineſs it was to provoke the King to bring an Army to invade Ireland, whenever time ſhould ſerve.

L. H. S. Have you done with him now?

Mr. Treby. Yes.

L. H. S. Will your Lordſhip ask him any Queſtions?

L. Staf. My Queſtion is only whether he profeſs himſelf of the Church of Rome, or a Proteſtant?

Mr. Dennis. I am a Roman Catholick ſtill, my Lord.

L. H. S. Are you?

Mr. Dennis. I am, my Lords.

L. Staf. Then I have no more to ſay.

Sir J. Trevor. Then we call Mr. Jeniſon.

[Who was ſworn.]

Mr. Treby. Mr. Jeniſon, you have been among the Papiſts, and you have had great Confidence among them; pray declare what you know of their Deſigns for the Deſtruction of the Proteſtant Religion, or the means of doing it, whether by the Murder of the King, or what other Means, tell your whole Knowledge.

Mr. Jeniſon. My Lords, in the Beginning of the Year 78, I have heard Mr. Ireland and Mr. Thomas Jeniſon, both Jeſuits, ſpeak of a Deſign they had to gain a Toleration of Conſcience for their Party in England; and the way then deſign'd to get it, was, by procuring a great Sum of Money from their Party, and by bribing the then Parliament. I have heard them likewiſe diſcourſe of procuring the Duke of York's Succeſſion; and that (they told me) was to be done, by procuring of Commiſſions to be granted out to thoſe of their Party, to be ready to riſe upon the Death of the King. I likewiſe have heard them diſcourſe of the Neceſſity and Uſefulneſs to their Party of the Alteration of the Government eſtabliſh'd, and that their Religion could never flouriſh till that was done, and this Kingdom alter'd according to the French Model. In the Month of June 78, I was at Mr. Ireland's Chamber; and there happening a Diſcourſe, that the Roman Catholick Religion was like to come into England, Mr. Ireland did then ſay, there was but one who ſtood in the way, and that it was an eaſy thing to poiſon the King, and that Sir George Wakeman might eaſily and opportunely do it. I ask'd Mr. Ireland, whether Sir George Wakeman was the King's Phyſician? His Anſwer was, No, but he was the Queen's, and ſo might have an Opportunity to do it. In the Month of Auguſt the ſame Year, the Day that I came from Windſor, I went to Mr. Ireland's Chamber, and I found that he was newly come from Staffordſhire, and was drawing off his Boots on the Frame of a Table; he ask'd me whence I was come? I told him from Windſor: He enquir'd of me about the Diverſions of the Court. I told him I underſtood his Majeſty did take delight in Hawking and Fiſhing, but chiefly in Fiſhing; and that he went accompanied only with two or three, early in the Morning. Then Mr. Ireland reply'd, He were eaſily taken off or remov'd. To which I anſwer'd, God forbid, being ſurpriz'd at that time: Oh, ſaid he, I ſay not that it is lawful. Then there happen'd ſome Interruption to our Diſcourſe about Staffordſhire; then we fell into a Diſcourſe of their Religion that he ſaid was ſuddenly to come into England; and he ask'd me if I would be one of thoſe that would go to Windſor to aſſiſt to take off the King. I told him no; then he told me he would remit the 20 l. I ow'd him, if I would go to Windſor to be one of thoſe that were to take off the King. My Lords, I told him I would have no hand in any ſuch Matter, and that I would not for twenty times 20 l. have any hand in the Death of the King. Said he, Would you do nothing for the bringing in of our Religion? I told him I thought it would never come in by Blood: I told him further, God forgive me, if the King were taken off ſo, well and good, but I would have nothing to do with it. He left not the Diſcourſe there, but ask'd me if I knew any Iriſhmen that were ſtout and courageous. I told him, yes I did, and nam'd Captain Levallian, Mr. Karney, Mr. Broghall, and Mr. Wilſon, all Gentlemen of my Acquaintance about Grays-Inn. When I nam'd theſe, he ask'd me if I would go along with him to Windſor, to aſſiſt them in taking off the King. I told him I did not think any Man of Eſtate would engage in ſuch a matter; that I was Heir to an Eſtate, my Brother being a Prieſt, and that Captain Levallian was Heir to a very good Eſtate, and therefore I did believe he would not do ſuch a thing, unleſs the Pique which he had to the King or Religion might move him to it. My Lords, he approv'd of theſe Perſons, and ſaid, he knew the firſt two of them, Levallian and Karney; and he ſet down, as I remember, the other two Names in Writing. He told me he was going to the Club, to Mr. Coleman, and Mr. Levallian, and Karney at that time, and then ask'd me for the Money, the 20 l. that I ow'd him. He told me he wanted fourſcore Pounds, and he deſir'd me that I would return it as ſoon as I came into the Country. Now, my Lords, the ſame Day that I receiv'd this twenty Pound of Ireland, I went with Mr. Thomas Jeniſon the Jeſuit to Harcourt's Chamber, to give the Fathers Thanks for the Loan of the Money; and there Mr. Jeniſon falling into Diſcourſe on that common Topick of their Religion coming into England, he did then uſe that Expreſſion which Dr. Oates hath in his Narrative, If C. R. would not be R. C. he ſhould not be long C. R. And he did interpret it thus in Latin: Si Carolus Rex non eſſet Rex Catholicus, non foret diu Carolus Rex. And he did add, my Lords, upon the Diſcourſe, that if the King were excommunicated or depos'd, he was not longer King, and it was no Sin, or no great Sin to take him off; and if it were diſcover'd who did it, two or three might perhaps ſuffer, but denying the Fact, the matter ſoon would be blown over. My Lords, about two Months after the muſtering the Forces upon Hounſlow-Heath, Mr. Thomas Jeniſon did tell me he had a matter of great Conſequence to impart to me, that there was a Deſign on foot ſo laid, as that it could not well be diſcover'd, and that the greateſt Papiſts, the greateſt Catholicks in England were in the Deſign; that the Queen and the Duke were in it, and that ſeveral Lords, by Name my Lord Bellaſis, my Lord Powis, my Lord Arundel of Warder, and others: I believe my Lord Stafford was nam'd, but I cannot be poſitive in that. At that time, my Lords, I did wiſh I had had a Commiſſion in the new-rais'd Levies that were muſter'd on Hounſlow-Heath. He told me he would procure me a Commiſſion from the Duke of York, and that there was a new Army to be rais'd to bring in the Catholick Religion; but he did ſay he would tell me more Particulars after my receiving the Sacrament of Secrecy; and I did underſtand by him that that Commiſſion was not to be ſent till the taking off the King was effected: but being I was ſurpriz'd at it, he would not tell me the whole matter, but he deſired me to come and receive the Sacrament at Sir Philip Tyrwhitt's in Bloomsbury, and then he would acquaint me with the whole Affair. My Lords, being in Berkſhire about the Month of December 78. at Madam Hall's in Shinefield Pariſh, one Mr. Cuffil a Jeſuit came into our Company. It was about the Tryal of Coleman; and Mr. Cuffil did then ſay, that he thought Mr. Coleman was infatuated, upon the Diſcovery of the Plot, to give notice to Mr. Harcourt, Mr. Ireland, and Mr. Fenwick, and the other Jeſuits, to burn or ſecure their Papers, and yet not to ſecure his own. My Siſter Hall was preſent at this Diſcourſe; and Mr. Cuffil did then further ſay, that Bellarmine did draw a Sentence out of the Scripture, to favour the Pope's Authority of excommunicating, depriving, and depoſing temporal Princes; and the Saying was this, Quod Papa habeat eandem poteſtatem ſuper Reges, quam Jehoiada habuit ſuper Athaliam. And that there were other corroborating Teſtimonies among the Fathers for it.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, we deſire to ask him whether ever he heard of Mr. Oates being in the Plot, or being thought Truſt-worthy among them.

Mr. Jen. Yes, my Lords, I did.

L. H. S. When did you hear it, and of whom?

Mr. Jen. Of my Brother Tho. Jeniſon the Jeſuit.

L. H. S. When did he tell you ſo?

Mr. Jen. About the latter end of July 78, when there was a Diſcourſe of a Deſign, and that the greateſt Papiſts were in it, he ſaid, Mr. Oates, a Parſon newly come over to them, was in that Deſign: I anſwer'd, I did wonder that he would truſt a reconciled Enemy. He anſwer'd, That being once reconcil'd, they were more zealous and truſty. I ſubmitted to his Opinion, and inſtanc'd in Dr. Godmyn and Dr. Bayley, that were Proteſtants, and afterwards came over to the Church of Rome.

Mr. Treby. We have done with him, my Lord.

L. H. S. Will your Lordſhip ask him any Queſtions, my Lord Stafford?

L. Staf. No, my Lord.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I would only obſerve the time when he ſays his Brother told him of the Deſign, that it was about the time of the muſtering the Forces on Hounſlow-heath; and that he was then told Mr. Oates was in the Plot: I only obſerve it now for the end of the Caſe in point of time.

L. H. S. He ſaid it was in July.

Mr. Jen. It was two Months after the muſtering of the Forces, about the latter end of July.

L. H. S. Before the Diſcovery?

Mr. Jen. Yes.

L. H. S. Did you know Oates at that time?

Mr. Jen. No, my Lords, I was not acquainted with him.

Sir J. Trevor. Did you not ſee him then?

Mr. Jen. Yes, I ſaw him at Ireland's Chamber.

Sir J. Trevor. When was that?

Mr. Jen. The latter end of April, or the beginning of May.

L. H. S. You ſay you did not know him in July; how then can you ſay you ſaw him before?

Mr. Jen. I did not know him; I only ſaw him come into Ireland's Chamber, and whiſper for ſome time, two or three Minutes, and then they told me that that was Mr. Oates, a Parſon newly come over to them, a briſk jolly Man, and worthy my Acquaintance.

L. H. S.

L. H. S. Is this the ſame Man you ſaw there?

Mr. Jen. My Lords, I cannot remember his Face, for he was gone out when I was told of him.

L. H. S. Why, you know Mr. Oates now?

Mr. Jeniſon. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. Do you know him to be the ſame Man that you ſaw then?

Mr. Jeniſon. I can't tell that.

Sir J. Trevor. My Lords, He ſays Mr. Oates only came in for three or four Minutes, and his Back was towards him, and his Brother told him when he was gone who it was.

Mr. Jeniſon. I only knew his Name from my Brother.

Mr. Treby. And I preſume your Lordſhips will obſerve this was at the very time of the Jeſuits Conſult.

Sir J. Trevor. We deſire this Gentleman may tell your Lordſhips who his Brother is, and what Profeſſion he is of.

Mr. Jeniſon. My Brother was a Jeſuit brought up at St. Omers.

L. H. S. Your Brother is dead, and dy'd in Newgate?

Mr. Jeniſon. Yes, he did ſo.

L. H. S. Pray recollect yourſelf again: When was it that you ſaw the Man they call'd Oates at the Jeſuit's Chamber?

Mr. Jeniſon. My Lords, It was in the Year 78, the latter end of April, or the beginning of May. And I will tell you why I apprehend it to be that time. My Brother being a Prieſt, liv'd with Sir Philip Tyrwhitt in Lincolnſhire; and in that Year in Lent he came to Town with my Lady and that Family, and he and I us'd to dine together at the Fiſh-Ordinary at Pedley's. And about three Weeks or a Month after that time, when he came to Town, I was at Mr. Ireland's Chamber, and there was a Gentleman, whom they told me was Oates.

L. H. S. This you ſay was the latter end of April, or beginning of May 78; for the time is material: upon your Oath you ſay it?

Mr. Jeniſon. Yes, my Lords, I do.

L. H. S. You ſay it was at Ireland's Chamber.

Mr. Jeniſon. Yes, my Lords.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, Will you give us leave to ask him one ſhort Queſtion; becauſe ſome of the Gentlemen doubt of it, we would ask it again: What his Brother was, whether he was a Jeſuit or no?

Mr. Jeniſon. I have heard him own it, my Lords.

L. H. S. Whom do you call next, Gentlemen?

Mr. Treby. If it pleaſe your Lordſhips, we ſhall in the next place produce our Evidences that are Matters of Record; and we deſire your Lordſhips Advice and Direction how we are to miniſter the ſame, whether your Lordſhips will have them all read, or but a word of them, and let them be left with your Lordſhips.

L. H. S. What Records are they?

Mr. Treby. They are the Records of the Attainder of Coleman, Ireland, and the other Conſpirators.

L. H. S. The Fact is ſo notorious that they were attainted and executed, that the reading of a Word will ſerve the turn.

Sir J. Trevor. Then we deſire they may be produc'd here, and the Copies prov'd upon Oath; and then we ſhall leave them upon your Lordſhips Table. And, my Lords, we deſire likewiſe at the ſame time to ſave another Trouble, there may be deliver'd in the Convictions of Reading, Lane, Knox, and others.

Then Mr. Clare was ſworn, and deliver'd in the Copies of the Records.

L. H. S. What Record is that?

Mr. Clare. It is the Record of the Attainder of Coleman for High-Treaſon.

L. H. S. Did you examine it?

Mr. Clare. I did examine it.

L. H. S. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Clare. To the beſt of my Underſtanding it is. Here is likewiſe a Copy of the Record of the Conviction of Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, for High-Treaſon.

L. H. S. Is there Judgment of Attainder entred upon Record?

Mr. Clare. Yes, my Lords, there is Judgment entred. Here is a Copy of the Indictment, Conviction, and Attainder of Whitebread, Fenwick, Harcourt, Gavan, and Turner for High-Treaſon. Here is a Copy of the Record of Attainder of Richard Langhorn for High-Treaſon. Here is a Copy of the Attainder of Green, Berry, and Hill, for the Murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey. Here is a Copy of the Conviction of Mr. Nathaniel Reading, for endeavouring to ſuborn Mr. Bedloe to retract his Evidence againſt ſome of the Lords in the Tower, and Sir Henry Titchbourn.

L. H. S. What is the Judgment there?

Mr. Clare. The Judgment is entred upon it; and 'tis to pay 1000 l. Fine, and to be put in and upon the Pillory in the Palace-Yard, Weſtminſter, for an Hour, with a Paper upon his Head, written in great Letters, For endeavouring Subornation of Perjury. Here is a Copy of the Record of the Conviction of Tasbrough and Price, for endeavouring to ſuborn Mr. Dugdale, and Judgment entred upon it. And here is a Copy of the Record of Conviction of Knox and Lane, for conſpiring to aſperſe Dr. Oates and Mr. Bedloe.

Here is the Record of the Conviction of John Giles, for barbarouſly attempting to aſſaſſinate John Arnold Eſq; one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace; and the Judgment entred thereupon is, To ſtand three times on the Pillory, with a Paper on his Hat declaring his Offence; to pay 500 l. to the King, to lie in Execution till the ſame be paid, and find Sureties for his good Behaviour during Life.

L. H. S. Deliver them all in. And if my Lords have occaſion to doubt of any thing, being left in the Court, they will be there ready to be us'd. (All which were then deliver'd in.)

Mr. Treby. My Lords, we humbly deſire that the Record of Coleman may be read, becauſe there is more of ſpecial Matter in it than any of the reſt, and your Lordſhips may diſpoſe of the others as you pleaſe.

L. H. S. Read the Record of Coleman.

Then the Clerk read (in Latin) the Record of the Attainder of Edward Coleman, formerly executed for High-Treaſon, by him committed in this horrid Popiſh Plot, which is in Engliſh as followeth.

Of the Term of St. Michael, in the thirtieth Year of the Reign of King Charles the Second, &c.

And to accompliſh and fulfil theſe his moſt wicked Treaſons and traitorous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, the ſame Edward Coleman afterwards, to wit, the ſaid 29th Day of September, in the aboveſaid 27th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King, at the Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilly and traitorouſly deviſed, compoſed, and writ two Letters to be ſent to one Monſieur le Chaiſe then Servant and Confeſſor of Lewis the French King, to deſire, procure and obtain to the ſaid Edward Coleman, and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King from the ſaid French King, his Aid, Aſſiſtance and Adherence, to alter the true Religion in this Kingdom then and ſtill eſtabliſhed, to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome, and to ſubvert the Government of this Kingdom of England: And afterwards, to wit, the ſaid 29th Day of September, in the aboveſaid 27th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord, now King of England, &c. at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly and traitorouſly deviſed, compoſed and writ two other Letters to be ſent to one Monſieur le Chaiſe, then Servant and Confeſſor of the ſaid French King, to the intent that he the ſaid Monſieur le Chaiſe ſhould entreat, procure and obtain to the ſaid Edward Coleman and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, from the aforeſaid French King, his Aid, Aſſiſtance and Adherence to alter the true Religion in this Kingdom of England, then and ſtill eſtabliſhed, to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome, and to ſubvert the Government of this Kingdom of England: And that the aforeſaid Edward Coleman, in further Proſecution of his Treaſons and traitorous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, afterwards, to wit the ſame 29th Day of September, in the aboveſaid 27th Year of the Reign of our ſaid now Lord the King, the aforeſaid ſeveral Letters from the ſaid Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilly and traitorouſly did ſend into Parts beyond the Seas, there to be delivered to the ſaid Monſieur le Chaiſe. And that the aforeſaid Edward Coleman, afterwards, to wit the 1ſt Day of December in the 27th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, now King of England, &c. at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex aboveſaid, one Letter from the aforeſaid Monſieur le Chaiſe (in anſwer to one of the ſaid Letters, ſo by him the ſaid Edward Coleman writ, and to the ſaid Monſieur le Chaiſe to be ſent, firſt mentioned) falſly, ſubtilly and traitorouſly received, and that Letter ſo in anſwer received, the Day and Year laſt aboveſaid, at the aboveſaid Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilly and traitorouſly did inſpect and read over; and that the aforeſaid Edward Coleman, the Letter aforeſaid ſo by him in anſwer received in his Cuſtody and Poſſeſſion the Day and Year laſt aforeſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilly and traitorouſly detained, concealed and kept; by which ſaid Letter the ſaid Monſieur le Chaiſe, the Day and Year laſt aboveſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, ſignify'd and promiſed to the ſaid Edward Coleman, to obtain for him the ſaid Edward Coleman and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Lord the King, from the ſaid French King, his Aid, Aſſiſtance and Adherence. And that the aforeſaid Edward Coleman, afterwards, to wit the 10th Day of December in the aboveſaid 27th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord Charles II. now King of England, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly and traitorouſly did relate and declare his traitorous Deſigns and Purpoſes aforeſaid to one Monſieur Ruvigni (then Envoy Extraordinary from the French King to our ſaid moſt Serene King, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, reſiding) to move and excite him the ſaid Envoy Extraordinary with him the ſaid Edward Coleman, in his Treaſons aforeſaid to partake: And the ſooner to fulfil and compleat thoſe his moſt wicked Treaſons and traitorous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, he the ſaid Edward Coleman, afterwards, to wit the 19th Day of December in the aboveſaid ſaid 27th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord Charles the Second now King of England, &c. at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, adviſedly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly and traitorouſly did deviſe, compoſe, and write three other Letters to be ſent to one Sir William Throgmorton Knt. then a Subject of our now Lord the King, of this Kingdom of England, and reſiding in France, in Parts beyond the Seas, to ſollicit him the aforeſaid Monſieur le Chaiſe to procure and obtain of the ſaid French King his Aid, Aſſiſtance and Adherence aforeſaid. And thoſe Letters laſt mention'd, afterwards, to wit the Day and Year laſt aboveſaid, from the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Margaret Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, to the ſame Sir William Throgmorton in France aforeſaid, falſly and traitorouſly did ſend, and cauſe to be deliver'd, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid now Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch caſe made and provided. Wherefore it was commanded the Sheriff of the County aforeſaid, that he ſhould not omit, &c. but that he ſhould take him, if &c. to anſwer &c. And now, to wit, on Saturday next after eight Days of St. Martin this ſame Term, before our Lord the King at Weſtminſter, came the aforeſaid Edward Coleman under the Cuſtody of William Richardſon Gent. Keeper of the Goal of our ſaid Lord the King of Newgate, by virtue of the King's Writ of Habeas Corpus ad ſubjiciend', &c. (into whoſe Cuſtody before then for the Cauſe aforeſaid, he was committed) to the Bar here brought in his poper Perſon, who is committed to the Marſhal, &c. and preſently of the Premiſes to him above impoſed, being asked, How he will thereof be acquitted? ſaith, That he is in no wiſe thereof guilty, and thereof for Good and Evil doth put himſelf upon the Country. Therefore let a Jury thereupon come before our Lord the King at Weſtminſter on Wedneſday next after fifteen Days of St. Martin; and who &c. to recognize &c. becauſe &c. the ſame Day is given to the ſaid Edward Coleman &c. under the Cuſtody of the ſaid Keeper of the Goal of our ſaid Lord the King, of Newgate aforeſaid, in the mean time committed to be ſafely kept until &c. At which Wedneſday next after fifteen Days of St. Martin, before our Lord the King at Weſtminſter, came the aforeſaid Edward Coleman under Cuſtody of the aforeſaid Keeper of the King's Goal of Newgate aforeſaid, by virtue of a Writ of our Lord the King of Habeas Corpus ad ſubjiciend', &c. to the Bar here brought in his proper Perſon, who is committed to the aforeſaid Keeper of the King's Goal of Newgate aforeſaid. And the Jurors of the Jury aforeſaid, by the Sheriff of the County aforeſaid hereunto impannelled, being called, came, who being choſen, tried and ſworn to ſpeak the Truth upon the Premiſes, ſay upon their Oaths, That the aforeſaid Edward Coleman is guilty of the High Treaſon aforeſaid, in the Indictment aforeſaid ſpecify'd, in manner and form as by the ſaid Indictment above againſt him is ſuppoſed; and that the aforeſaid Edward Coleman at the time of Perpetration of the High Treaſon aforeſaid, or at any time afterwards had no Goods, Chattels, Lands or Tenements, to the knowledge of the Jurors aforeſaid. And the aforeſaid Edward Coleman being asked if he hath any thing, or knows what to ſay for himſelf, why the Court here ought not to proceed to Judgment and Execution of him upon the Verdict aforeſaid, ſaith nothing, but as before he had ſaid: And hereupon inſtantly the Attorney-General of our ſaid Lord the King, according to due form of Law, demandeth againſt him the ſaid Edward, Judgment and Execution to be had upon the Verdict aforeſaid, for our Lord the King. Whereupon all and ſingular the Premiſes being viewed, and by the Court here underſtood, it is conſidered, That the ſaid Edward Coleman be led by the ſaid Keeper of the Goal of Newgate aforeſaid, unto Newgate aforeſaid, and from thence directly be drawn to the Gallows of Tyburn, and upon thoſe Gallows there be hanged, and be cut down alive to the Earth, and his Entrails be taken out of his Belly and be burned (he ſtill living); and that the Head of him be cut off, and that the Body of him be divided into four Parts; and that thoſe Head and Quarters be put where our Lord the King will aſſign them, &c.

Lord Staff. I do not hear one word he ſays, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord, this does not concern your Lordſhip any further than as to the Generality of the Plot.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we have now done with our Proofs for the firſt general Head that we open'd, which was to make it out, that there was a Plot in general. We now come to give our particular Evidence againſt this every Lord; and before we do begin, we think fit to acquaint your Lordſhips, that our Evidence will take up ſome time: if your Lordſhips will have the patience to hear it out now, we will give it; but if your Lordſhips will not ſit ſo long till we can finiſh it, it may be ſome Inconvenience to us to break off in the middle. And therefore we humbly offer it to your Lordſhips conſideration, whether you will hear it now, or no.

L. H. S. If it cannot be all given and heard now, it were better all ſhould be given to-morrow.

Sir. Will. Jones. If your Lordſhips pleaſe then, we will reſerve it till to-morrow.

Lord Staff. My Lords, I would only have your Directions, whether I ſhall anſwer this General firſt, or ſtay till all be ſaid againſt me. That which I have to ſay to this General, will be very ſhort.

L. H. S. My Lord, you are to make all your Anſwer intire, and that is beſt for you.

Lord Staff. I am very well contented, that I may be the better prepared for it.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure that we ſhould adjourn into the Parliament-Chamber?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. Then this Houſe is adjourned into the Parliament Chamber.

And the Lords went away in the ſame Order they came.

The Commons returned to their Houſe, and Mr. Speaker reſumed the Chair, and then the Houſe adjourned to eight of the Clock the next Morning.

The Second Day.

Wedneſday December 1. 1680.

A Meſſage was ſent from the Lords by Sir Timothy Baldwyn and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker,

The Lords have ſent us to acquaint this Houſe, That they intend to proceed to the Tryal of William liam Viſcount Stafford, at ten of the clock this Morning, in Weſtminſter-Hall.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair, and the Commons came into Weſtminſter-Hall in the new erected Court.

And the Managers appointed by the Commons went into the Room prepared for them in that Court, to proceed to the particular Evidence againſt William Viſcount Stafford.

About ten of the Clock in the Morning the Lords came into the ſaid Court in their former Order; and Proclamation being made of Silence, and for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring his Priſoner to the Bar, they proceeded.

L. H. S. My Lords expect you ſhould go on with your Evidence, and proceed in the Tryal of this noble Lord.

L. Staff. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I humbly deſire that my Counſel may be near me for the arguing of what is fit to them to ſpeak to, as to Points of Law; for Points of Fact I do not deſire it.

L. H. S. My Lord, you have an Order for your Counſel to attend, and they muſt and ought to attend.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. The Counſel muſt not ſuggeſt any thing to him, while the Evidence is giving, they are not to be heard as to Matter of Fact.

L. H. S. It is not intended to make uſe of Counſel as to Matter of Fact, but they may ſtand by.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lords, they may ſtand within hearing, but not within prompting.

Lord Staff. I aſſure you, if I had all the Counſel in the World, I would not make uſe of them for any Matter of Fact.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, will you pleaſe to order them to ſtand at a convenient diſtance, that they may not prompt the Priſoner?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I hope your Lordſhips will conſider, that a Man in a capital Cauſe ought not to have Counſel to matter of Fact. 'Tis true, he may adviſe with his Counſel, I deny it not; but for him in the face of the Court to communicate with his Counſel, and by them be told what he ſhall ſay, as to Matters of Fact, is that which (with ſubmiſſion) is not to be allow'd. If your Lordſhips order they ſhall be within hearing, I do not oppoſe it; but then I deſire they may ſtand at that diſtance, that there may be no means of Intercourſe, unleſs Points in Law do ariſe.

L. H. S. You were beſt make that Exception when there is Cauſe for it, in the mean time go on with your Evidence.

Sir F. Win. We did perceive his Counſel came up towards the Bar, and very near him, and therefore we thought it our duty to ſpeak before any Inconvenience happened. This Lord being accuſed of High Treaſon, the allowing of Counſel is not a Matter of Diſcretion. If Matters of Law ariſe, all our Books ſay, that Counſel ought to be allowed: But we pray that there may be no Counſel to adviſe him in Matter of Fact, nor till your Lordſhips find ſome Queſtion of Law to ariſe upon the Evidence.

L. H. S. When there is Cauſe, take the Exception, but they do not as yet misbehave themſelves.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, we preſume your Lordſhips did, from the Strengh and Clearneſs of yeſterday's Evidence, receive full Satisfaction concerning the general Plot and Conſpiracy of the Popiſh Party.

It being an Evidence apparently invincible, not out of the Mouths of two or three Witneſſes only, but of twice that number, or more, credible Perſons.

Upon which we doubt not but your Lordſhips who hear, and Strangers and unborn Poſterity when they ſhall hear, will juſtify this Proſecution of the Commons, and will allow that this Impeachment is the proper Voice of the Nation crying out, as when the Knife is at the Throat. By the Evidence already given, I ſay, it is manifeſt that there was a general grand Deſign to deſtroy our Religion, our King, and his Proteſtant Subjects. And 'tis even impoſſible that this Deſign, ſo big, could be conducted without the Concurrence of ſuch Perſons as this noble Lord at the Bar: It could not be carry'd on by leſs and lower Men.

And it were a Wonder, that a Perſon ſo fervently affected and addicted (as this Lord is) to that Party, ſhould not be in, at ſo general a Deſign of the Party.

But this indeed is but preſumptive Evidence, which will induce a moral Perſuaſion.

We ſhall now produce ſuch poſitive Evidence as will make a judicial Certainty; and will abundantly ſuffice to convince your Lordſhips, and convict this Lord.

The Particulars you will hear out of the Mouths of the Witneſſes, whom we ſhall call: They will teſtify what ſhare this Lord had in (almoſt) all the Parts and Articles in our Charge; contriving and contracting for the Murder of the King, levying Arms, &c. And firſt we call Mr. Dugdale.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do conceive I have good ground to except againſt this Man for a Witneſs: for my own particular, I know my ſelf as clear and free as any one here, but I will not except againſt him now, but reſerve it againſt the time when I come to make my Defence, and therefore admit him to be ſworn, provided, my Lords, that he look me full in the face.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, What is your Exception againſt this Man that he may not be a Witneſs?

L. Staff. I do admit him to be ſworn, I ſay nothing now againſt him.

Mr. Treby. He is ſworn already.

L. H. S. You ſwore him to give Evidence as to the general Plot; you not did ſwear him as to the Particulars againſt my Lord Stafford.

Sir John Trevor. We are content he ſhall be ſworn again, we pray he may be ſworn.

Sir Will. Jones. 'Tis true, my Lords, we did divide the Evidence into two Parts, but his Oath was not divided: If your Lordſhips pleaſe you may ſwear them all over again, if it may be any ſatisfaction, but I think it was never ſeen before.

Then Mr. Dugdale was ſworn.

L. H. S. There is Mr. Dugdale; come, Sir, what ſay you?

L. Staff. Really he is ſo changed I do not know him.

Mr. Dugd. My Lord, I have Witneſſes to prove that you know me.

L. Staff. I beg your Lordſhips that he may look me in the face, and give his Evidence, as the Law is.

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, if this noble Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, will have this Witneſs to look him continually in the face, the Court will not hear half his Evidence: We deſire he may addreſs himſelf, as the Law is, to your Lordſhips and the Judges.

L. Staff.

L. Staff. I deſire the Letter of the Law, which ſays, my Accuſer ſhall come face to face.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I am willing to do as your Lordſhips ſhall order.

L. H. S. My Lord, you do ſee the Witneſs, that is enough for face to face; and you make no legal exception againſt him, why he ſhould not be heard.

L. Staff. Very well, my Lord, I ſubmit.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I have for ſome years paſt, whilſt I was a Servant with my Lord Aſton, been acquainted and frequently had Diſcourſes with my Lord Stafford, before we came to diſcourſe any thing concerning the Plot on foot. Lately, in 78, my Lord coming down into the Country, it was either in Auguſt or September, the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September——

L. Staff. I beſeech your Lordſhips he may name the times.

L. H. S. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe do not interrupt the Witneſſes, but wherein he is ſhort, do you ask him the Queſtion when it comes to your turn, I will bring it to as much Certainty as I can.

Mr. Dugd. There was a meeting at Tixal where there were ſeveral preſent——

L. H. S. When?

Mr. Dugd. It was in September or the latter end of Auguſt.

L. H. S. What Year?

Mr. Dugd. 78. My Lords, I had then by Mr. Evers's means Admittance to hear, becauſe of my Incouragement, what the Diſcourſe was at that time. It was to debate and determine upon the former Reſolutions both beyond Sea and at London before, both to take away the Life of the King, and to introduce their Religion, of which I was then one. My Lord Stafford was there preſent, and did with the reſt conſent to it. Afterwards my Lord Stafford being at one Mr. Abnett's of Stafford one Sunday Morning in September, came to my Lord Aſton's Houſe to Maſs: I met with my Lord Stafford at ſome diſtance from the Gate, and my Lord ſpeaking to me when he alighted off from his Horſe, told me it was a very ſad thing they could not ſay their Prayers but in an hidden manner, but e'er long we ſhould have our Religion eſtabliſhed; which was much to my Joy at that time. After that time my Lord Stafford was ſometimes at Stafford, and ſometimes at Tixal, I will not be poſitive as to a Day, but I think it was about the middle of September. My Lord Stafford ſent for me to his Lodging-Chamber, as he had ſeveral times before ſent for me; and ſaid, he had had great Commendations of me from Mr. Evers that I was faithful and truſty.

L. Staff. My Lords, I deſire I may have Pen, Ink and Paper allowed me.

L. H. S. Ay, God forbid you ſhould be denied that: Give my Lord Pen, Ink and Paper. I hope your Lordſhip hath one to aſſiſt you that takes Notes for you; if you have not, you have loſt a great deal of time already.

L. Staff. There was one all day yeſterday, my Lords; I deſire he may ſpeak his Evidence over again.

L. H. S. Let him begin his Evidence again, for my Lord had not Pen, Ink nor Paper, which he ought to have, to help his Memory.

Mr. Dugd. I may miſs as to the Words, but the Matter of Fact I ſhall repeat: My Lords, I have been frequently acquainted whilſt I was a Servant at my Lord Aſton's with my Lord Stafford, coming to my Lord's Houſe in the Country, and my Lord being ſeveral times where I came to that Intimacy by Mr. Evers's means, that my Lord would frequently diſcourſe with me. About the latter end of Auguſt or ſome Day in September, my Lord Stafford, my Lord Aſton, and ſeveral other Gentlemen, were in a Room in my Lord Aſton's Houſe, and by the means of Mr. Evers I was admitted to hear for my Incouragement, and there I heard them in that Debate at that time fully determine a Reſolution upon all the Debates that had been beyond Sea and at London before, That it was the beſt way they could reſolve on to take away the Life of the King, as the ſpeedieſt means to introduce their own Religion. After ſome time my Lord being at Stafford at Mr. Abnet's ——

L. H. S. Was my Lord Stafford at that Meeting where they debated to kill the King?

Mr. Dugd. My Lord was there.

L. H. S. Was he conſenting to that Reſolution?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I heard every one give their particular full Aſſent.

(At which there was a great Hum.)

L. H. S. What is the meaning of this? For the Honour and Dignity of publick Juſtice, let us not carry it as if we were in a Theatre.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, ſometimes in September, my Lord Stafford being at Mr. Abnet's Houſe in Stafford, came once upon a Sunday Morning to hear Maſs: I meeting him at the outward Gate of my Lord Aſton's Houſe when he alighted off his Horſe, after ſome Diſcourſe he turned to me, and told me, It was a ſad thing we could not ſay our Prayers but in an hidden manner; but e'er long if things took effect we ſhould have the Romiſh Religion eſtabliſhed: and I at that time did ſeem to be, and really was as glad as any Perſon could be. After ſome time, I think it was about the 20th or 21ſt of September, my Lord Stafford ſent for me into his Lodging-Room, I think it was by his Page or him that waited upon him in his Chamber; and he told me I muſt come to my Lord, and I immediately went to his Lordſhip, he was juſt then ariſing and dreſſing, he ſent his Men out, and told me, he had had a good Account from Mr. Evers and other Gentlemen that I would be faithful and true to their Intentions about the introducing their Religion. He told me, he was likewiſe concerned himſelf, and that in a very high degree; and for taking away the Life of the King, he offered me at that time for my Charges and Incouragement 500 l. and that I ſhould go in October after to London with him (my Lord Stafford) and that I ſhould be with him ſometimes at London, and ſometimes at an Houſe of my Lord Aſton's, about twenty five Miles from London, and that I ſhould be under the care of him in London and Mr. Ireland, and in the Country of one Mr. Parſons that knew of the Deſign. I did then ſhew as much Reſolution to be faithful to my Lord as I could, and that I would be true to what my Lord then engaged me. I after went to Mr. Evers, and communicated to him what my Lord Stafford ſaid, and was ſomething in admiration at my Lord's offering me ſuch a Sum of Mony, for I doubted of my Lord's Ability to make good Payment. He told me, that I need not fear it, for Mr. Harcourt and Mr. Ireland had Mony enough in their hands to defray that and other Charges; and I ſhould not want Mony for the carrying it on. My Lords, I remember that at another time there was a Meeting, wherein there was a Debate about my going up, and other Buſineſſes; my Lord Stafford was preſent, and there were ſeveral there beſides, I did not know them all then; but in the firſt place they told me I ſhould be made equal with one Captain Adderly that is ſince dead, and that I ſhould have a Reward in London. I underſtood that the Duke of York, my Lord Arundel, and my Lord Bellaſis, and others were to give me it; and ſpeaking of the Rewards to thoſe that were ingaged, they ſaid, there would be Land enough from the Proteſtants to ſatisfy all that acted in the Deſign. Another time my Lord Stafford diſcourſing in a Dining-Room in my Lord Aſton's Houſe, did expreſs his great zeal, and the reaſon why he was ſuch an Enemy againſt the King; he ſaid, both he and my Lord Aſton had been great Sufferers for the King, and for his Father, and that my Lord in particular his Grandfather or his Father had ſpent 30000 l. in the King's Service, and had no Recompence; that he had always ſhewed himſelf loyal to the King, but whenever there came any Place of Preferment to be diſpos'd of, it was rather given to ſuch as had been Traitors and Rebels to the old King, and likewiſe to the King himſelf, than to any that had been loyal. He ſaid, this was his chief Motive, if there were not Religion in the Caſe, which was of an higher Nature, or to that purpoſe.

L. H. S. When was this laſt Diſcourſe?

Mr. Dugdale. In September 78, as near as I remember, for we had ſeveral Diſcourſes.

L. H. S. This was not the time you were at my Lord's Chamber?

Mr. Dugdale. No, it was in my Lord Aſton's Dining-Room.

L. H. S. No, nor when he ſent for you to offer you the 500 l.?

Mr. Dugdale. No, not at that time, it was another time.

L. H. S. What Month and Year?

Mr. Dugdale. September 78, my Lord.

Mr. Foley. I deſire he may give your Lordſhips an account what Aſſurance he had of Pardon, if he did ſucceed.

Mr. Dugdale. I was told I need not fear; and particularly my Lord Stafford told me, I ſhould have a free Pardon for it; for the King had been excommunicated, and was likewiſe a Traytor, and a Rebel, and an Enemy to Jeſus Chriſt.

L. H. S. But how could you be pardon'd? From whom were you to have that Pardon?

Mr. Dugdale. I was to be pardon'd by the Pope.

L. H. S. That was for your Sins.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes; I expected no other if I had gone on.

Mr. Treby. Were you promis'd nothing elſe but a Pardon from the Pope?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I was to be Sainted.

Sir W. Jones. Will his Lordſhip pleaſe to ask him any Queſtions? we ask him no more.

Mr. Foley, Yes, I deſire another Queſtion may be ask'd him; That he would give an account of the Letters my Lord Stafford writ to Evers about the Deſign.

L. H. S. What ſay you to that Queſtion?

Mr. Dugd. There came a Letter to Evers from my Lord Stafford; I knew it to be my Lord's Hand: ſome might counterfeit his Hand; but as near as a Man can ſwear to the Hand of another in a Paper he did not ſee written, that was my Lord's Hand; That things went all well beyond Sea, and ſo he did hope they did here, for the carrying on of the Deſign: it was to this purpoſe expreſly.

Mr. Treby. We have done, my Lords, with him.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

L. Staf. My Lords, I have divers Queſtions to ask him, very many; but I humbly crave your Lordſhips Directions, if I askt him any Queſtions now, whether I may not ask him ſome afterwards?

L. H. S. My Lord, you may ask Queſtions of the Witneſſes as often as you pleaſe, and whenever you find it uſeful to you: God forbid there ſhould be any time to foreclose a Man from asking a Queſtion that may ſave his Life.

L. Staf. I pray he may be ask'd how long before this time he knew of the Plot.

L. H. S. How long have you known this Plot?

Mr. Dugd. In general, for the introducing of the Popiſh Religion, and the Incouragement to it by the Duke of York's being Succeſſor, I have known it fifteen or ſixteen Years by the means of Mr. Evers.

L. Staff. My Lords, I underſtand him, he ſays he knew the Plot fifteen or ſixteen Years ago; if I be not miſtaken, he ſays ſo.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe to give me leave to explain my ſelf further, it was not for taking away the Life of the King, but for making ready againſt the King died, with Men and Arms.

L. Staff. My Lords, he ſays in the latter end of Auguſt, or beginning of September, I told him ſuch and ſuch things, I deſire he may name the Day, that may be many Days, and I may prove I was not there, and I can prove for all Auguſt, and a good while in September; therefore I deſire he may name the Day.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, I come thus near on purpoſe to ſerve your Lordſhip, that you may not ſtrain your Voice too much; but I am not ſo happy as to apprehend what it is you ſay.

L. Staf. My Lords, I ſay, he ſpeaks of the latter end of Auguſt, or beginning of September, which is too great a Latitude, and I conceive more than ought to be given in ſuch a Matter of Importance as this is to me; I deſire he may name the Day, for he may name Days perhaps that I was not there.

L. H. S. Look you, Mr. Dugdale, my Lord does deſire, if you can, you would be a little more particular than about the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September; if you can remember the Day, tell it us.

Mr. Dugd. I cannot remember particular Days, it being a thing I then took no account of; only this I do remember by a remarkable Circumſtance, that one time was either the 20th or 21ſt of September 78.

L. H. S. That was the time of your coming into his Chamber, and his offering you five hundred Pound?

Mr. Dugd. It was ſo; but other Meetings I dare not charge to a day.

L. Staff. How then can I make my Defence?

Mr. Dugd. I will ſtand to that time.

L. Staff. How, my Lords, can I be able to give an account of it? I ſhall prove to your Lordſhips, that he once ſaid it was in Auguſt, now he ſays it was in Auguſt or September. I beſeech you that he may poſitively ſtand to the Month, if not to the Day.

Mr. Dugd. I ſpeak as near as I can.

L. Staff. But he ſays the 20th or 21ſt particularly.

Mr. Dugd. Thereabouts I am ſure it was.

L. Staff. Look you, he will be poſitive in nothing.

Mr. Dugd. I will ſtand to that time.

L. Staff. If he ſwears falſe in one thing, I hope, upon proof of that, your Lordſhips will believe he may be falſe in all. I pray he may be asked what what Hour of the Day it was, whether it was Morning or Afternoon.

L. H. S. He is poſitive only to the 20th or 21ſt of September, the time when he ſays you called for him into your Chamber, and offered him five hundred Pound to kill the King: would your Lordſhip ask him whether it were in the Forenoon or the Afternoon?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lord, I would.

L. H. S. Was it in the Forenoon or in the Afternoon?

Mr. Dugd. It was in the Forenoon; for I did formerly ſpeak of that, he was dreſſing himſelf when I came in.

L. H. S. Then that is anſwered poſitively.

L. Staff. My Lords, he ſays one Sunday Morning I came to my Lord Aſton's to Maſs, I deſire you would pleaſe to ask him, whether ever he ſaw Mr. Evers and me in his Life alone together?

L. H. S. Have you ſeen my Lord Stafford and Mr. Evers, ever together alone?

Mr. Dugd. Several times I have ſeen them walking together in the Garden, and in the Walks, at my Lord Aſton's; and I have been with them my ſelf when there hath been only them two beſides.

L. H. S. That is anſwered fully; will your Lordſhip ask him any thing elſe?

L. Staff. He ſays he was to go to London in October with me, I ſtand not upon that till I come to make my Anſwer; but I take it he ſays the 20th or 21ſt of September when I offered him five hundred Pound, in my Chamber, to kill the King, that he went preſently to Evers to ſpeak with him about it.

L. H. S. As doubting the Payment of the Money, and he told him, that Harcourt and Ireland would pay it.

L. Staff. Was it the ſame Day? pray ask him, my Lords.

Mr. Dugd. I do not ſay it was the ſame Day, but it was the next time I could come to ſpeak with him.

L. H. S. He tells you it was as ſoon as he could ſpeak with him.

L. Staff. He ſaid before, it was preſently after he went from me. I deſire your Lordſhips would take notice how he contradicts himſelf in every Circumſtance.

L. H. S. What ſay you, did you go preſently to Mr. Evers after my Lord Stafford had made the Offer, or was it the ſame Day or the next Day?

Mr. Dugd. To the beſt of my remembrance it was the ſame Day; I can't ſay poſitively.

L. Staff. My Lords, I have no other Queſtions with Dugdale.

Sir J. Trevor. Then my Lords, we will call another Witneſs.

L. H. S. Have you no more to ſay to Dugdale, my Lord?

L. Staff. Not at preſent, till I come to make my Defence.

L. H. S. God forbid, but you ſhould have leave to ſay all that you can for your ſelf.

Mr. Treby. Then ſet up Dr. Oates. Do your Lordſhips require that he ſhould be ſworn again?

L. Staff. I deſire nothing, nor propoſe it, if he will declare upon his Oath that he took yeſterday.

L. H. S. Hark you Dr. Oates, this is but a Continuation of the Proceedings yeſterday, you are upon the ſame Oath now that you were then, and what you ſay this morning will be taken to be upon ſame Oath.

Mr. Treby. Dr. Oates, upon the Oath you have taken yeſterday——

L. H. S. Pray ſwear him again. (Which was done.)

Mr. Treby. Dr. Oates, pray ſpeak your Knowledge of my Lord Stafford's being ingaged in the Deſign.

Dr. Oates. I deſire I may be left to my own Method.

L. H. S. Go on in your own Method.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, in the Year 67, there were divers Attempts upon the Life of the King, as the Jeſuits told me; and in the Year 74, there was an Attempt upon the account of the King's withdrawing the Indulgence in 74, and 75: in the Year 1677, whilſt I was in Spain, I met with ſeveral Letters ſigned Stafford, wherein my Lord Stafford did aſſure the Jeſuits in Spain, that were of the Iriſh Nation, how zealous he ſhould appear in the promoting of the Catholick Deſign. My Lords, in the Year 77, I went to St. Omers, and I came there in December. My Lords, in that Year I being order'd to look over the Papers, and put them in order, I found ſeveral Letters ſigned Stafford; wherein my Lord Stafford did intimate to the Fathers, that whereas there had been ſome Difference betwixt him and the Society for ſeveral Years, the Buſineſs was reconciled by one Signior Con, who came over into England in the Year 76, to reconcile the great Difference that was betwixt the Jeſuits and the Secular Clergy, and between the Benedictine Monks and the Jeſuits. My Lords, my Lord Stafford, upon the perſuaſion of this Signior Con, as he does intimate in his Letter, does aſſure the Jeſuits of his Fidelity and his Zeal. My Lords, in the Year 78, I found Letters from my Lord Stafford, wherein he does blame Mr. Coleman's Openneſs, and his being too publick in the great Affair, and that Mr. Coleman was pleaſed to communicate ſeveral great Secrets to Men, of whoſe Fidelity his Lordſhip was not ſecure. My Lords, in 1678, in the Month of June, my Lord Stafford, the Priſoner at the Bar, came to Mr. Fenwick, and there received a Commiſſion from him to pay an Army that was to be raiſed for the promoting of the Catholick Intereſt, and he did aſſure Mr. Fenwick that he was going down into Staffordſhire, and there he did not queſtion but he ſhould have a good Account how the Catholicks ſtood affected; and he did not queſtion but to give a good account how Affairs ſtood in Staffordſhire, Shropſhire, and Lancaſhire: and this Commiſſion to my Lord Stafford was, as near as I can remember, to be Pay-Maſter-General of the Army. My Lords, among other Diſcourſes with my Lord at the Bar, he was diſcourſing about my Lord Duke of Norfolk, and my Lord Arundel his Son; and after ſeveral other Paſſages, he (Fenwick) was asking of him how my Lord Arundel came to have a Jeſuit in his Houſe. My Lord Stafford did ſay, that my Lord of Peterborough, his Father-in-Law, was inſtrumental in it, on purpoſe to oblige the Duke of York; for my Lord Arundel, as I have been told, kept Father Symonds in his Houſe, who to my knowledge was a Jeſuit. But, my Lords, he came to Mr. Fenwick's (my Lord Stafford did) by the Name of Mr. Howard of Effingham.

L. H. S. Were you at Fenwick's when my Lord Stafford came to his Chamber?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Look upon my Lord Stafford, is that the ſame Perſon?

Dr. Oates. It is the ſame Gentleman that came there by the Name of Howard of Effingham.

L. H. S. And he took the Commiſſion?

Dr. Oates. Yes, he did ſo.

L. H. S. And he promiſed to effect it?

Dr. Oates. Yes, and he ſaid that he was then going down into the Country, and he did not doubt but at his return Grove ſhould do the Buſineſs.

L. H. S. Who ſaid ſo, Fenwick?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord Stafford. And ſays Fenwick to my Lord Stafford again, Sir, 'tis fit that ſome ſhould be here preſent, leſt you fail of your Expectation; or to that purpoſe. 'Tis two Years ſince, and I cannot remember the Words, but my Lord Stafford did ſay, he was of neceſſity to go into the Country at that time. And there he did write a Letter to St. Omers, in which he did excuſe himſelf about a young Man that was to be ſent to the Jeſuits College, whom he had taken care of another way. And he deſired their Excuſe, but he would be as faithful to them as any body for all that. And the ſame Hand that wrote that Letter, by all the comparing I could make in my Thoughts, wrote all the other Letters that I ſaw at St. Omers, and in Spain. My Lords, I ſaw my Lord Stafford at Dr. Perrott's, I think verily it was in June or July 78; it was before the riſing of the Parliament that ſat that Summer, and my Lord Stafford was diſcourſing of a Son he was to ſend over to Lisbon, and he went over by the name of Sir John Stafford. And after this Diſcourſe was over, they fell into a Diſcourſe of the Affairs in hand, and my Lord was mighty glad there was ſo good a Correſpondence and Concord; tho, my Lords, it was not very great, for the Jeſuits have an irreconcilable Quarrel with the reſt of the Clergy: But my Lord did hope that their fair Correſpondence might tend highly to the advancing the Catholick Cauſe. But, my Lords, I have one thing more to ſpeak as to the Diſcourſe at Fenwick's Chamber; ſpeaking of the King, he ſaid, he hath deceived us a great while, and we can bear no longer.

L. H. S. Who ſaid ſo?

Dr. Oates. My Lord Stafford, the Gentleman at the Bar.

L. H. S. When was that? At Dr. Perrott's?

Dr. Oates. No, I ſpeak of a Paſſage at Fenwick's, which I had forgot. My Lords, this is all I can remember at preſent.

Mr. Foley. My Lords, I deſire he may give an account what Letters my Lord Stafford ſent to Fenwick and Ireland to pay Money.

Dr. Oates. There was ſome Money returned, but it was no great Sum, and it was about private Buſineſs; Mr. Morgan was to receive it: I chanced to have the Mony in my own keeping; Mr. Fenwick gave it me to pay to Mr. Morgan, and the Letter in which the Sum was mentioned did give them an account (for it was out of Staffordſhire) that he found things ſtand in a very good ſtate there. But I being not within, Mr. Morgan called on Mr. Fenwick for the Money, which I returned to him when he had paid it.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do in the firſt place deſire to know where Mr. Fenwick lived.

L. H. S. Where did Mr. Fenwick live when you ſaw my Lord at his Chamber, and the Commiſſion delivered?

Dr. Oates. His Lordſhip, I ſuppoſe, knows very well where he lived; he lived in Drury-lane.

L. Staff. I will ſubmit to any thing, if I ever ſaw the Man or heard of him till the Diſcovery of the Plot.

Dr. Oates. He came to him by the Name of Thompſon.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip does not obſerve; your Lordſhip ſays that you never knew any Fenwick, but your Lordſhip knew one Thompſon, and that Thompſon was Fenwick.

L. Staff. I did know one Thompſon, but that Thompſon I knew was an Engliſh Merchant in Bruſſels, and not a Jeſuit.

Dr. Oates. I can't ſay what my Lord knows, that he knew Fenwick to be a Jeſuit, but he knew one Thompſon, that was Fenwick the Jeſuit.

L. Staff. I never heard of the Name till this Plot.

Dr. Oates. But, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will give you a reaſon why I believe he knew him to be a Jeſuit, becauſe the Society was very often in their Mouths in their Diſcourſes; which gives me a ground to believe he knew him to be what he was: but, my Lord, he took his Commiſſion from him.

L. Staff. I deſire he may be asked——

L. H. S. Good my Lord raiſe your Voice, for I am come half way to hear you.

L. Staff. Pray my Lords give me leave to ask him whether Dr. Oates hath not ſaid ſeveral times ſince I was firſt impriſoned, that he never ſaw me in his Life. I think I was impriſoned the 21ſt of October 78.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I never ſaid any ſuch thing.

L. Staff. I will willingly die, if ever I ſaw this Doctor in my Life.

Dr. Oates. I excuſe my Lord for that, for I was in another Habit, and I went by another Name, and your Lordſhips do remember I came in another Habit to make the firſt diſcovery.

L. Staff. My Lord, I never ſaw his Face, nor know him, nor Fenwick, or Thompſon, otherwiſe than one Thompſon, a Merchant at Bruſſels.

Dr. Oates. But, my Lords, I have one thing more to ſay of my Lord Stafford; my Lord Stafford went into France, I can't ſay the Year, but I believe it is within the Term of ſix or ſeven, but he went over to France; and it did appear by Letters from him, that Signior Con was made choice of to heal the Difference between the Regulars and the Seculars; and Signior Con did come over in the Year 76, and there did make a kind of a Peace among them, which laſted whilſt Con ſtayed here, and Con did bring over Meſſages, to which my Lord Stafford (if he tells any Truth in his own Letter) did return Anſwers.

L. Staff. For the preſent all I ſay to it is this, I never writ any one Letter this 25 years, nor had any Correſpondence with any Jeſuit.

L. H. S. I beſeech you, my Lord, make me capable of ſerving your Lordſhip, by letting me hear what you ſay.

L. Staff. My Lord, I have a great Cold, and can ſpeak no louder; I deſire to ask this Witneſs no more Queſtions at preſent, but I ſay I never writ any Letters to any Prieſt this 25 years.

Mr. Foley. Then, my Lords, if my Lord hath done, we will call another Witneſs, and that is Mr. Edward Turbervile. (Who was ſworn.)

L. H. S. Look upon the Priſoner. Do you know my Lord Stafford?

Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. Raiſe your Voice, and ſpeak deliberately.

Mr. Treby. Give an account of your Knowledge, and uſe your own Method.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, in the Year 1675, I was perſuaded by my Lady Powis, and one Morgan that was Confeſſor

Confeſſor to the Family, to go to Doway, in order to take upon me the Fryar's Habit. When I came there, inſtead of Religion, I found nothing but Hypocriſy and Villany among them, and quickly grew weary of ſtaying there, and with much difficulty I eſcaped thence to go for England: when I came into England, I did not think that my Friends would look unkindly upon me, becauſe I refuſed to live in that way that they propoſed to me to live in. I uſed all the means I could to have them reconciled, and made Applications to them, that ſince I could not bear with the Life they would have had me lived in, they would contrive ſome way for me, being a younger Brother, that I might live in the World; but they were ſo averſe and inveterate againſt me, that they told me, inſtead of doing any thing for me, they would do me all the Miſchief and Prejudice they could; and having lived all my time among them, I thought the World would receive a Character of me from them who were my Relations, as they would pleaſe to repreſent it. So having no hopes in England, I took a Reſolution to go into France, where I had a Brother that was a Benedictine Monk; and I hoped that he being in good repute amongſt them, might be able to do me ſome ſervice there. When I came to Paris, my Brother uſed all the Endeavours imaginable to get me to be of that Order; but I having ſo ill a Conceit and Opinion of the Order that I was in before, and thinking all the reſt were the ſame, I was unwilling at all to enter into it. And after I had ſtaid there a while, I reſolved to come over into England. My Brother uſed all the means he could for my Accommodation, and recommended me to this noble Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, who lodged then at a corner Houſe in a Street, which, as I remember, bears the Name of La Rue de Beaufort, where I was ſeveral times with him in order to come over with him in the Yacht for England. After I had been there for a fortnight with this Lord, he underſtanding my Condition, by my Brother, and by the other Fathers of that Convent, and imagining I was a fit Inſtrument to be employ'd on ſuch an occaſion, propoſed to me a way whereby, as he ſaid, I might not only retrieve my Reputation with my Relations, but alſo make my ſelf a very happy Man: and after having exacted from me all the Obligations of Secrecy which I could give him, he at length told me in direct Terms, it was to take away the Life of the King of England, who was an Heretick, and conſequently a Rebel againſt God Almighty. I looked upon it as an extraordinary Attempt, and deſired time to conſider of it before I would undertake it. And I gave him this Anſwer, I would give him my Reſolution at Diep, where we were to go on board for England. And when I came to take my leave of this noble Lord at the Bar, he was ſitting upon a Bench, and he was troubled with the Gout in his Foot at that time. And he told me he had ſome Buſineſs to go to Verſailles, and that he ſhould not be in ſix or ſeven days at Diep, where I was to wait for him. After a while, I received a Letter at Diep from his Lordſhip, wherein he writ me word, that he had altered his Reſolution, and would go by the way of Calais, and that I ſhould haſten to wait on his Lordſhip at London. I have one thing more to obſerve to your Lordſhips; when I got paſſage from Diep, in a Fiſher-boat for England, I never came near my Lord Stafford, becauſe being not willing to undertake his Propoſal, I thought my ſelf not ſafe, even from my own Relations; and therefore I made my Applications to the Duke of Monmouth, and his Grace was pleaſed by Letter to recommend me into the French Service, and by that means I avoided his Lordſhip's further Importunity.

L. H. S. You ſay my Lord did propoſe to you the killing of the King; did he plainly make the Propoſal in direct Terms to kill the King?

Mr. Tur. Yes, he did, my Lord.

L. H. S. What did he offer you to do it?

Mr. Tur. Nothing, for I would not accept of it. I told him it was a Matter of great Concernment, and I ought to conſider of it, and I took time to think of it, and would give him my Anſwer at Diep, which he came not to; and ſo there was an end of it.

L. H. S. What Engagements of Secrecy had you given my Lord before he open'd himſelf ſo plainly to you?

Mr. Tur. I gave my Lord my Word and my Promiſe that I would not diſcover it to any Perſon, directly nor indirectly; my Lord had nothing of an Oath from me.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any more Queſtions, Gentlemen?

Sir Will. Jones. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. Will your Lordſhip ask him any Queſtions, my Lord Stafford?

L. Staff. My Lord, I never ſaw the Man before in my Life. I will ask him one Queſtion, ſince he hath been pleaſed to ſwear againſt me.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, I had no reaſon but the Truth to do it; for I never received any Injury from his Lordſhip in my Life.

L. Staff. It ſeems I had ill luck to chuſe this Man for an Attempt to kill the King, who was ſuch a Coward he ran away from his Colours, and was to have been ſhot to death.

Mr. Tur. Ask the Duke of Monmouth what Character he received of me.

L. Staff. He ſays, in the Year 75 he went from London to Doway, and ſtaid ſome time there, and then came back to England; I beſeech your Lordſhips to ask him what time he went back to Paris.

L. H. S. What time was it that you went back to Paris?

Mr. Tur. Truly, my Lord, I cannot be punctual to a Fortnight, but I believe it was the beginning of June.

L. H. S. What Year?

Mr. Tur. 75.

L. Staff. My Lords, I would know who recommended him to me to go over with me into England.

L. H. S. Who recommended you to my Lord Stafford to go into England?

Mr. Tur. My Lords, it was Father Sherborn who was then Prior of the Benedictine Monks in Paris, and Father Nelſon Sub-Prior of thoſe Monks, and my Brother, who is a Monk in the ſame Convent.

L. H. S. He ſays, that there were three Perſons that recommended him to your Lordſhip.

L. Staff. I never ſaw them in my Life.

Mr. Tur. Your Lordſhip, that ſays I was a Coward, and run away from my Colours, will ſay any thing.

L. Staff. I not only ſay it, but will prove it by two Witneſſes.

Mr. Tur. Do it if you can.

L. Staff. He ſays in the beginning of June 75. he went into France. I deſire to know of him when was it he ſpoke to me?

Mr. Tur. In November 75.

L. Staff. He ſays in November?

Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lord, about the beginning of November.

L. Staff. I beſeech your Lordſhip, where was it he ſpoke to me?

L. H. S. Turbervile, where was it you ſpoke to my Lord?

Mr. Tur. In Paris.

L. Staff. Whereabouts in Paris?

Mr. Tur. It was the Corner-Houſe of the Street, which Street faces Luxenburgh Houſe, the Prince of Conde lodges on the right hand in that Street, I take it to be ſo, and you lodged at the Corner-Houſe; I think the Name of the Street was La Rue de Beaufort.

L. Staff. Which if the Prince of Conde did—I will ſay no more.

Mr. Tur. I cannot be upon my Oath in ſuch Caſes, but I think he does, I take it ſo.

L. Staff. He ſays he was with me a Fortnight, what does he mean?

Mr. Tur. I came to my Lord ſeveral times in the ſpace of a Fortnight.

L. Staff. I deſire to know who brought him to me?

Mr. Tur. Father Sherborn, Father Nelſon, and my Brother Father Anthony Turbervile; and ſometimes I came alone.

L. H. S. He ſays thoſe three Fathers recommended him to your Lordſhip, and he came himſelf ſeveral times.

Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lords, it is true.

L. Staff. I beſeech your Lordſhips, did he come directly to my Chamber, or where?

Mr. Tur. Sometimes to my Lord's Chamber, and at other times I met him in a lower Room.

L. Staff. It concerns me much, my Lords; and tho they be fooliſh Queſtions, yet I hope your Lordſhips will pardon me if I ask them. Where was this Diſcourſe about killing the King?

L. H. S. Was this Diſcourſe in the Chamber, or in the lower Room?

Mr. Tur. In the lower Room.

L. Staff. He ſays, I think, that he hath been in my Chamber.

L. H. S. Have you been in my Lord's Chamber as well as in the lower Room?

Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lords, I have.

L. Staff. What kind of Room is it?

Mr. Tur. I can't remember that.

L. Staff. No, I dare ſwear you can't.

Mr. Tur. I cannot tell the Particulars; what Stools and Chairs were in the Room.

L. Staff. My Lords, I have no more to ſay to him at preſent.

L. H. S. Mr. Turbervile, how long have you been in England?

Mr. Tur. I cannot anſwer punctually; I have been in England near four years?

L. H. S. How came it to paſs that you never diſcovered this ſooner?

Mr. Tur. I had no Faith to believe that I ſhould be ſafe if I did it, but my Brains might be knocked out; and that kept me off from doing that Service which I might be better able to do, if I did defer it.

L. H. S. How come you to diſcover it now?

Mr. Tur. The King's Proclamation, and ſome Friends that have perſuaded me that I may do it with Safety, who will give your Lordſhips an account of it.

L. Staff. I deſire he may attend when I make my Defence.

Mr. Tur. Yes, I ſhall: But I am ſorry his Lordſhip hath ſo ill a Memory as to what paſſed between us. I ſhall be very unwilling to do his Lordſhip or any body elſe any injury, but I muſt tell the Truth.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we ſhall call no more Witneſſes, unleſs my Lord, the Priſoner, give us an occaſion. If he ſhall make any Objections to any of our Witneſſes, I hope we ſhall have liberty to call Witneſſes to ſupport them; but we give over at preſent, and expect his Lordſhip's Anſwer.

L. Staff. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I beſeech your Lordſhips, before I ſay any thing that I may know if they have any more Witneſſes to examine.

L. H. S. They ſay they will call no more Evidence, unleſs your Lordſhip's Anſwer do give them occaſion to fortify their Witneſſes you except againſt.

L. Staff. My Lords, it is now about two Years that I have had the misfortune to be accuſed of this deteſtable Treaſon. I have been ſeveral times in thoſe two years a cloſe Priſoner, that my Wife and Children were deny'd to come near me; and hardly a Servant permitted to ask how I did, but at the Door of my Priſon. My Lords, this was a great and an heavy Affliction to me; and, my Lords, it was ſo great an Affliction to me, that truly I did not know how to bear it. 'Tis true, I had that Comfort, that I did hope I ſhould ſoon come to my Tryal, and before your Lordſhips make my Innocency appear. In order to which, I did all I could, having heard this Hall was provided for it; and I did expect in a very few days to clear my ſelf before your Lordſhips and all the World. When I had ſettled my Mind, and did not foreſee any greater Affliction that could befal me, I had on the ſudden by ſome of my Friends a ſad Meſſage ſent me, That the Houſe of Commons had impeached me of High Treaſon. My Lords, I looked upon the Houſe of Commons then (as I do now) as the great Repreſentative Body of the Commons of England; and I confeſs, my Lords, to be accuſed by them was a Load, eſpecially being added to what lay before upon me, more eſpecially to my weak Body and weaker Mind, that I was ſo afflicted with it, and have ſo continued, that I am ſcarce yet able to bear up under it: for I look upon the Houſe of Commons as the great and worthy Patriots of this Kingdom; I ever held them ſo, and I hold them ſo ſtill. My Lords, theſe things being ſuch great Afflictions to me, and ſome other Accidents, which I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with the telling you of, have ſo much diſordered my Senſe and Reaſon (which before was little) that I ſcarce know how to clear my ſelf to your Lordſhips, as I ought to do; or which way to go about the doing of it: therefore I do with all Humility beg your Lordſhip's pardon if I ſay any thing that may give an Offence, or urge that which may not be to the purpoſe. All which I deſire you would be pleaſed to attribute to the true Cauſe, my want of Underſtanding, not of Innocency, or a Deſire to make it appear.

My Lords, Theſe Gentlemen the Managers of the Houſe of Commons, who are great and able Men, ſome I am ſure, if not all them very well read, and have underſtanding in the Law, have ſet forth to your Lordſhips Treaſon in an horrid ſhape; but I confeſs, my Lords, if they had made it never ſo much worſe, it cannot be ſo horrid as I have often fancied it my ſelf: for, my Lords, I do, and did ever hold Treaſon to be the greateſt Sin in the World, and I cannot uſe Words enough to expreſs it; and therefore I hope you will give me me leave to clear myſelf of it, and I ſhall give you one Notion of it, which I heard at your Lordſhips Bar ſome Years ago, where you were pleaſed to hear ſeveral People of ſeveral Perſuaſions give you ſome Reaſon why Liberty of Conſcience ſhould be allowed them. And I remember one of them, an Anabaptiſt, I think, did tell you, That they held Treaſon to be the Sin of Witchcraft, and ſo do I. And next to Treaſon, I hold Murder to be the worſt Sin. But the Murder of the King I look'd upon to be ſo above all others, that it is not to be expreſs'd by Words.

My Lords, I have heard very much of a thing that was nam'd by theſe Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, and that very properly too, to wit, of the Gun-Powder-Treaſon. My Lords, I was not born then, but ſome Years after I heard very much Diſcourſe of it, and very various Reports; and I made a particular Enquiry, perhaps more than any one Perſon did elſe, both of my Father who was alive then, and my Uncle, and others; and I am ſatisfied, and do clearly believe, by the Evidence I have received, that that thing call'd the Gun-Powder-Treaſon was a wicked and horrid Deſign (among the reſt) of ſome of the Jeſuits: and I think the Malice of the Jeſuits, or the Wit of Man, cannot offer an Excuſe for it, it was ſo execrable a thing. Beſides, my Lords, I was acquainted with one of them that was concerned in it, who had his Pardon, and lived many Years after: I diſcourſed with him about it, and he confeſſed it, and ſaid, he was ſorry for it then; and I here declare to your Lordſhips, that I never heard any one of the Church of Rome ſpeak a good Word of it: it was ſo horrid a thing, that it cannot be expreſs'd or excus'd. And God Almighty ſhewed his Judgments upon them for their Wickedneſs; for hardly any of the Perſons, or their Poſterity, are left, that were concerned in it; and even a very great Family too, that had collaterally ſomething to do in it, is in the Male-Line extinct totally; and I do think God Almighty always ſhews his Judgments upon ſuch vile Actions. And I have been told, all thoſe Perſons that were engaged in this wicked Act, were all heartily ſorry for it, and repented of it before they died, without which I am ſure there is no Salvation. And therefore I think it was not the Intereſt of Religion, but a private Intereſt put them upon it.

My Lords, as to the Doctrine of King-killing, and abſolving Perſons from their Allegiance, I cannot ſay the Church of Rome does not hold it; I never heard it did hold it, it may be it does, it may be not, I ſay not one thing or other: but, my Lords, there was an Engliſh College of Prieſts at Rheims, that tranſlated the Bible, and printed it with Authority, according to their Tranſlation; and in their Annotations upon the 14th Chapter to the Romans, they do declare their Diſlike and Deteſtation of that Opinion. They ſay all Subjects ought to obey their Kings, as the primitive Chriſtians did the Heathen Princes of the Empire; and the learned Doctors of the College at Sorbonne, did, upon an occaſion adminiſtred to them about that Opinion, declare the Miſtakes that were in it, and own'd it to be a damnable Principle. My Lords, I have an authentical Copy of that Decree of the Sorbonniſts, whether it be here or no, I can't tell---- Yes, here it is, which does declare that a damnable Poſition: and there is lately come out a Book, written by a Prieſt of the Church of Rome, try'd for his Life for being in the Plot, but acquitted of that, in which he ſays, That that Opinion of killing Kings is damnable and heretical, and declar'd ſo by the Council of Trent.

My Lords, this gives me occaſion to believe that the Church of Rome holds it not. I do not ſay that it does not, but ſome particular Perſons do abhor it, which are great in that Church, and which weighs far with me: but that which furthermoſt of all confirms me in my ill Opinion of it, is the Words of our Saviour, when not only he commands us to give unto Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's, but aſſerts our Obedience to our Governours in many other Paſſages of the Holy Scripture; and what I find there, the whole World is not able to alter my Opinion of.

I do aſſure your Lordſhips in the Preſence of Almighty God, that I do extremely admire when I hear of any thing like it; and I did read with great Horror what I found the other Day in the Gazette, of ſome imprudent People in Scotland, and of their wicked Principles and Practices.

My Lords, I do in the Preſence of Almighty God, who knows and ſees all things, and of his Angels which are continually about us, and of your Lordſhips who are my Peers and Judges, ſolemnly profeſs and declare, that I hate and deteſt any ſuch Opinion, as I do Damnation to myſelf. And I cannot be more deſirous of Salvation to my ſelf, than I am cordial in hating this Opinion.

My Lords, I know no Perſon upon Earth, nor all the Perſons in the World put together, nor all the Power they have, can in the leaſt abſolve me of my Allegiance. And I do acknowledge the King is my Sovereign, and I ought to obey him as far as the Law of the Land obliges any Subject of his to obey him: whether I have taken the Oath of Allegiance, I appeal to your Lordſhips to be my Witneſſes; and if I did not take it a thouſand times for my Allegiance to the King, if required, I ſhould think I deſerved a thouſand Deaths, and all the Torments in the world for refuſing it.

My Lords, Theſe Gentlemen here did begin their Charge (Serjeant Maynard, and Sir Francis Winnington) with telling your Lordſhips there was an horrid Deſign to murder the King, to alter the Government, and introduce the Popiſh Religion. This they ſay was engag'd in by the Roman Catholicks; that all the Church of Rome were the Contrivers of it; for they tell your Lordſhips, the whole Body hath been engag'd in it, and they have given you many Proofs by Witneſſes examined the firſt Day, of a general Plot: what Credit you will give to them, I leave to your Lordſhips in the end of the Caſe; but ſtill they ſaid it was the Body of the Roman Catholicks in England, or the Papiſts, or what they call them, that were the Plotters in this Deſign. But I beſeech your Lordſhips, how am I concerned in it? for I muſt ſay to your Lordſhips, they have not offer'd one Proof that I am of that Religion. So that tho any of you ſhould have ſeen me at the Exerciſes of that Religion, or otherwiſe know it of your ſelves, yet if there be no Proof judicially before you, you are not to take notice of it. I have heard, if a Man be accus'd of a Crime, and be to be tryed, and no Evidence come in; if every Man of the Jury were ſure that the Fact was done, yet they muſt go upon the Evidence produc'd to them, and not upon their own Knowledge. So then, no Evidence being produc'd before your Lordſhips about my being a Papiſt, you are not to take me for ſuch a one. But, my Lords, if I were of that Church,

Church, and that were never ſo well prov'd too, I hope I have an Advantage in it, that I have kept myſelf from being poiſon'd with ſo wicked a Principle, or engaged with the reſt in ſo ill a thing.

My Lords, I am here accus'd of having endeavoured to kill the King. I find by the Law, upon reading Sir Edward Coke, ſince my Impriſonment, That all Accuſations of Treaſon ought to be accompanied with Circumſtances antecedent, concomitant and ſubſequent: but I conceive, my Lords, there is no Tittle of any ſuch thing prov'd againſt me. The whole Compaſs of my Life, from my Infancy, hath been clear otherwiſe. In the beginning of the late unhappy Times, the late King of happy and glorious Memory, did me the honour to make me a Peer; and thinking that my Preſence might rather prejudice him than ſerve him, myWife and I ſettled at Antwerp when the War begun, where I might have liv'd, tho obſcurely, yet ſafely; but I was not ſatisfy'd in my Conſcience to ſee my King in ſo much Diſorder, and I not endeavour to ſerve him what I could, to free him from his Troubles. And I did come into England, and ſerv'd his Majeſty faithfully and loyally, as long as he liv'd. And ſome of your Lordſhips here know, whether I did not wait upon the now King in his Exile, from which he was happily reſtor'd; which ſhews I had no ill Intention then.

My Lords, I hope this I have ſaid does ſhew, that my Life hath given no Countenance to this Accuſation, but clear contrary to what theſe (I hope I may call them ſo, and I doubt not to prove them ſo) perjur'd Villains ſay againſt me.

My Lords, After I had this Misfortune to be thus accus'd, about a Month or ſix Weeks after, your Lordſhips were pleas'd to ſend two Members of this Honourable Body to me, (I do not ſee them at preſent here) to examine me about the Plot, (they were my Lord of Bridgewater, and my Lord of Eſſex) if they be here, I appeal to them what I did ſay. Theſe two, after they had examin'd me, told me, they did believe, and could almoſt aſſure me, that if I would confeſs my Fault, and let them know the Particulars of it, your Lordſhips would intercede with the King for my Pardon; but I then, as I ought, aſſerted my own Innocency. Not long after, the King, out of his Grace and Goodneſs to me, ſent ſix of the Council to the Tower, to offer me, That tho I was never ſo guilty, yet if I would confeſs, I ſhould have my Pardon. I did then conſider with my ſelf; I could not imagine what Ground there was to believe your Lordſhips could have Evidence of what there was not, to bring me in guilty; and thereupon I was ſo far from being able to make a Diſcovery, that I could not invent any thing that might ſave my Life, if I would.

My Lords, I was ſeven Days in the Country after I heard of the Plot; if I had known myſelf guilty, I ſhould ſurely have run away. As I came to London, when I was at Litchfield, there met me two of my Lords: they told me, and ſo did a Gentleman of the Houſe of Commons, how much there was in the Plot, which, if I had had an hand in it, would certainly make me fly for it. I have ever heard when a Man is accus'd or ſuſpected of a Crime, Flight is a great Sign of Guilt; and that it is often ask'd of the Jury, tho there be no certain poſitive Evidence of the Fact, whether a Man fled or no? As that is a Sign of Guilt, ſo remaining is a Sign of Innocency. If then after notice I come to Town, and ſuffer myſelf to be taken; if after Impriſonment and Accuſation, I refuſe my Pardon, and yet had been guilty, I ought to die for my Folly as well as my Crime.

My Lords, 'tis a great Offence to commit Treaſon, and a great Addition to continue obſtinate, when upon Acknowledgment a Man can ſave his Life; nay, my Lords, if I ſhould have refus'd theſe Offers, and yet known myſelf guilty, I had at the ſame time been guilty of one of the greateſt Sins in the World, as being the Cauſe of my own Death. And as I hold, next to Treaſon, Murder the greateſt Sin, ſo I hold of all Murders Self-murder to be the greateſt: nay, I do not think any Man living can pardon that Sin of Murder. And I do profeſs to your Lordſhips, in the Preſence of Almighty God, that if I could immediately, by the Death of this impudent Fellow Dugdale, who hath done me ſo much wrong, make myſelf the greateſt Man in the World, that is or ever was, I profeſs before God I would not. I cannot ſay my Charity is ſo great, but that I ſhould be glad to ſee him ſuffer thoſe Puniſhments the Law can inflict upon him for his Crimes; but his Death I would not have. Blood is ſo great a Crime, and I know every Man is careful of giving his Voice in the Caſe of Blood, I ſhould be very cautious myſelf; and if I were a Judge, I would rather ſave twenty guilty, than condemn one innocent. I bleſs God I have not the leaſt Deſire of the Death of any Man, and would not for all the world have innocent Blood lie upon me.

I beg your Lordſhips Pardon that I have troubled you thus long: I ſhall now, as well as I can, apply myſelf to my particular Defence. I do, my Lords, before I can go on to it, deſire I may have ſuch Depoſitions as have been taken againſt me, and the liberty to look upon your Journal-Book, when I have occaſion. I do particularly deſire the Depoſitions of Oates, upon which I was committed by my Lord Chief Juſtice; the two Depoſitions of Stephen Dugdale, taken at Stafford before two Juſtices of the Peace, Mr. Lane, and Mr. Vernon; I deſire the Depoſitions taken before, I think it was Mr. Warcup and Sir William Poultney, or ſome other two Juſtices, which was made by Turberville; and then I ſhall compare their Teſtimonies together, and I hope ſhall give you a clear Account that they are perjured Perſons. How without theſe to go on to my juſt Defence, I cannot well tell.

L. H. S. What do you ſay to it, Gentlemen? you hear what my Lord prays.

Sir F. Win. The Witneſſes are here, and have been heard viva voce. As we cannot uſe any of the Depoſitions of which he ſpeaks, ſo no more can they be uſed by him.

L. H. S. If I underſtand my Lord aright, this is the thing he deſires: ſays he, You have brought Witneſſes againſt me viva voce, they have been examined here, and they have been examined elſewhere, and their Depoſitions are upon Record; I deſire to confront what they have ſaid here, with what they have ſaid contrary in other Places.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. If there be any thing expreſs'd by my Lord, wherein they have contradicted themſelves, and produce that Depoſition, he may do that; but to deſire to have all the Depoſitions that have been made by our Witneſſes, is a ſtrange Requeſt. When there is occaſion to uſe them upon any particular Point, he may produce them if he can.

L. H. S. Can you object why my Lord ſhould not have Copies of any thing that is upon the Journal,

Journal and Depoſitions that are ſworn before a Magiſtrate, which may be of uſe to him?

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, we do not object againſt it; but, my Lords, I think it is out of time to deſire it. What was ſworn, and is entred in your Lordſhips Journal, was ſworn above two Years ſince. My Lord, or any Man elſe, might repair to them; they are Matters of Record, and for ought we know, were never deny'd to any, eſpecially if they deſir'd it in the Houſe: but after two Years time, and after three Weeks time given to prepare for this Tryal, when my Lord could not but know what Witneſſes would be examined before your Lordſhips, for him to come now and deſire ſuch and ſuch Depoſitions may be produc'd, which if by Law he might be allow'd to do, he might have done before, is to no other purpoſe, under favour, but to gain time, and to cauſe our Evidence to be forgotten; and therefore we moſt humbly pray it may not be admitted: my Lords, I think it is an unuſual thing. My Lords, the Judges are near your Lordſhips, I ſuppoſe they will inform your Lordſhips. If a Man be tryed at the Aſſizes, for him to deſire a Copy of the Informations remaining in Court, by which he may except againſt the Witneſſes, is what the Court does not uſe to grant. But if your Lordſhips Proceedings vary from the common Proceedings of other Courts, then I reſort to what I ſaid before, Whether your Lordſhips will think this a proper time, when he might have had it in the Parliament that was firſt diſſolved, and then in the Parliament that was laſt diſſolved. Now to deſire thoſe Copies at this time, is to put off the Cauſe for that which perhaps he cannot be furniſh'd with in a day or two.

Sir F. Win. I would add but one word, if your Lordſhips pleaſe to give me leave. My Lords, You have the learned Judges near you, who will inform you, whether ever, when a Man was accuſed of a Capital Offence, and the Evidence againſt him had been fully heard by the Court and by himſelf, he was admitted to require from the Proſecutors the Copies of Examinations formerly taken before other Perſons. Does my Lord intend to have time to peruſe thoſe Examinations, and to have the Copies of them, that he may conſult in private with his Counſel to find out Exceptions, and with his Witneſſes to make them good? My Lords, I muſt ſay, that in my ſhort Experience (and I have attended a conſiderable time upon the greateſt Court for Tryal of Offenders) I never heard ſuch a thing ask'd by a Priſoner, either at the Bar of the King's Bench, or at the Aſſizes. I ſpeak with all the Tenderneſs imaginable, becauſe we are in a matter of Blood; and God forbid but the Lord at the Bar ſhould have true and equal Juſtice done him. But if I take my Lord right, this ſeems but an Artifice to delay the Tryal, of which it is our Duty to be very cautious. Indeed I have ſeen the Judges, upon Tryal of a Criminal, call for the Depoſitions or Informations from the Clerk, or the Juſtice of the Peace who took them, and caus'd them to be read; but for a Priſoner to call for Examinations at the Bar from the Proſecutors, & ex debita Juſtitia, to demand them, is a thing, which as it never has been, ſo I think will not be admitted at this time, eſpecially when we are now almoſt at the end of the Cauſe. And with all Modeſty and Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, I look upon it as a very ſtrange and unreaſonable Demand.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, What is the reaſon your Lordſhip had not all this while Copies of the Journal, which is that you now ask?

L. Staf. I ſhall not undertake that I am able to give your Lordſhips a reaſon for it, becauſe I think wherein I have been miſtaken as to point of Time, your Lordſhips will not tie me up to that. But this Gentleman that ſpoke laſt is not acquainted with me, and does not know me; for I have no deſire to go back, or to put off this Tryal: But if it cannot be done to-day, I am as guilty to-morrow as I am to-day; and I deſire no more than what he ſays hath been done in the like Caſes. I do deſire, my Lord, the Informations and Depoſitions of Dugdale, Oates, and Turberville may be produced and read, and I will make Obſervations upon them in my Defence. I deſire thoſe Affidavits may be brought.

L. H. S. Affidavits taken when and where?

L. Staf. Of Dr. Oates, that was read in your Lordſhips Houſe, I heard it.

L. H. S. Let us underſtand your Lordſhip's Demands, that when my Lords are withdrawn, I may know what Queſtions to put to them, and acquaint them with your Deſires: The one is the Journal of the Lords Houſe, which is always before their Lordſhips, and you might have had Copies long ſince. The next thing you ask is an Affidavit of Dugdale; if this Affidavit is entred into the Journal, that ſupplies your Demands; if it be not entred there, where ſhall we find it?

L. Staf. I do not know.

L. H. S. Does your Lordſhip think all this matter muſt ſtay till we can find a looſe Affidavit, that we know not where 'tis fil'd?

L. Staf. I know it was before the Council, and I believe my Accuſers have it; I deſire the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons may produce it.

Sir J. Trevor. I have ſeen none, nor have none.

L. Staf. The one was taken the 24th of December this time two Year, and the other the 29th.

L. H. S. My Lord, will your Lordſhip give me leave to tell you, you ought to be provided with ſome particular Exception, and not to make your Demand in general. If your Lordſhip will ſay Dugdale did ſwear ſuch and ſuch things, which are contrary to what he now affirms, we know what to make of it; but to hunt after an Affidavit that we know not where to find, to pick ſomething out of it, that I do not underſtand.

L. Staff. I appeal to my Lord of Eſſex, and my Lord Bridgewater, whether they did not examine me the firſt time upon one or two Affidavits of Dugdale.

L. H. S. Suppoſe it be not to be found, my Lord?

L. Staf. Then I muſt have Patience, and ſubmit.

L. H. S. Can you tell wherein he ſwore quite blank contrary to what he ſwears now?

L. Staf. My Lord, I conceive it was never denied before; but your Lordſhips may do what you pleaſe.

L. H. S. Well, my Lord, let us go on to the next. The Affidavits of Dugdale, if they be entred on the Journal, may be ready; if not, then I ſhall acquaint their Lordſhips, and they will direct what is fit in the Caſe.

L. Staf. Then there is the Affidavit of Oates before my Lord Chief Juſtice, upon which I was committed; the next Day, which was Friday, it was read in your Lordſhips Houſe.

L. H. S.

L. H. S. I believe that it is entred upon the Journal, and ſo will be ready to be uſed.

L. Staff. I do hope to make it evidently appear thereby that he is forſworn. I deſire two Affidavits more that were taken before the Juſtices of the Peace of Middleſex, who examined Mr. Turberville twice.

L. H. S. What Juſtice of the Peace?

L. Staff. Mr. Warcupp, Sir William Poultney, and Sir Thomas Stringer. I deſire I may not be miſunderſtood, I do not deſire to have them to inſtruct my Counſel, or adviſe with them upon them, but I cannot make my Defence without them.

L. H. S. Thoſe are voluntary extrajudicial Affidavits, that no body is bound to keep.

L. Staff. They were ſpoken of in the Votes of the Houſe of Commons.

L. H. S. What ſay you Gentlemen to it?

Sir F. Win. My Lords, becauſe my Lord at the Bar is pleaſed to inſinuate, as if we knew where thoſe Affidavits are which he ſeems to deſire, and becauſe your Lordſhip was pleaſed to ſay that the Commons in Parliament are the Grand-Jury of the Kingdom, I deſire to ſay one thing, That certainly it will not be required from us to produce and publiſh the ſeveral Facts and Circumſtances that induced us to impeach him, if it ſhall be demanded by the Priſoner at the Bar.

L. H. S. I wiſh you would anſwer the Queſtion, and not argue upon it, whether thoſe Affidavits of Turberville may not be produc'd; for 'tis my Lord's Exception againſt your Witneſſes, that he ſwears ſeveral ways; and by thoſe Affidavits of Turberville, he intends to diſprove him in what he hath ſaid to-day.

Sir Fr. Win. My Lords, the Houſe of Commons never adminiſter an Oath, and therefore it is not to be ſaid to us, but my Lord Stafford muſt go to the particular Offices where they are to be found.

L. H. S. I do not ask you where my Lord ſhould find them, but whether if they can be found, you can object any thing why they ſhould not be produced and read.

Mr. Ser. Mayn. When they are produced, we will give an anſwer.

L. Staff. My Lords, I am informed this is the Subſtance of the Affidavit, That Turberville did ſwear before two Juſtices of the Peace, whether they be of the Houſe of Commons, or no, I can't tell, That he ſpake with me at Doway, and in Paris, in the Years 73 and 76, and now he ſays 72 and 75, I am informed, my Lords: and I appeal to the Houſe of Commons, they are all Perſons of Honour and Worth (if my Information be miſtaken, I beg their pardon and yours for't) whether he did not mend it after he had ſworn it.

L. H. S. Are theſe all you do demand?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lords. Whether this was true or no, I don't know, it is what I have been told; I appeal to the Houſe of Commons (who are all worthy Perſons, I do not believe I have an Enemy among them) they know whether I ſpeak true or no.

L. H. S. When will your Lordſhip be ready to make your Defence?

L. Staff. As ſoon as ever I have them, I will not ſtay a minute, a moment, an inſtant; I deſire not to ſhew my Counſel, nor any one, for my Tryal is a thing that I have long deſired; therefore I would not be miſtaken, as if I would put off the Cauſe. I am innocent, and ſhall be ſo while I live, and hope I ſhall make it appear ſo. I beg, if this be a Matter of Law whether I may have them or not, that my Counſel be heard to it.

L. H. S. This is a Matter of Fact.

L. Staff. I inſiſt upon it as things without which I cannot make my Defence: I am innocent, and I ſuppoſe not one of the Houſe of Commons, nor one of your Lordſhips, will debar me of that by which I may make my Innocency appear.

L. H. S. You cannot know my Lords Pleaſure till they are withdrawn.

Sir Will. Jones. Before your Lordſhips withdraw, I hope you will pleaſe to hear us a few Words, which we think may be for the Service of this Court. My Lords, what Evidence is before your Lordſhips, 'tis in your Lordſhips Pleaſure what of that you ſhall pleaſe to communicate to my Lord Stafford; but for this Evidence he ſpeaks of, as remaining in our hands, and which he takes upon himſelf to appeal to us for, admits of another Conſideration. My Lords, if we were conſcious of any thing in theſe Affidavits that were for my Lord's advantage, and knew where they were, we would readily produce them; but for my ſelf, I muſt anſwer, and I think my Companions will ſay ſo too, that we do not know where theſe Affidavits are, nor of any Variation in thoſe Affidavits from what is now ſworn: but whatever they were, they were taken for the Information of the Houſe of Commons, who are the Proſecutors in this Cauſe, and who are no Judges. Now if my Lord will bring any Witneſs that will ſay this Witneſs of ours did before a Juſtice of Peace depoſe ſo and ſo, and ſays the contrary now, there might be then juſt Reaſons to look after theſe Affidavits, and to have them produced; but upon a bare Imagination that there is a Variance, where in truth there is none, and the Truth may otherwiſe be known; to deſire that theſe Affidavits that never were before you ſhould be produc'd, whether ſuch a Suggeſtion is to be admitted, I humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhips conſideration.

L. Staff. My Lords, if theſe Gentlemen that are the Managers for the Houſe of Commons will aver to your Lordſhips, that there is no Variation in them, I will ſubmit to them and be quiet: if they will ſay it was not debated in the Houſe, whether he ſhould amend or no.

L. H. S. Look you, he puts it upon you ſo far, Gentlemen, that if you will take it upon you to aver that there is no Variation between thoſe Affidavits upon which you grounded your Impeachment, and the Evidence you have given upon the Tryal of your Impeachment, he will not give you the trouble.

L. Staff. I beſeech you let me ſay one word: My Lords, I have been thus long a Priſoner, I was as far from being proceeded againſt now, as any of the reſt of the Lords in the Tower, till Turberville came in with his Diſcovery; and I believe I am now called the ſooner (which I am glad of, and I give the Gentlemen thanks for it) upon the Affidavit of Turberville; I deſire that Affidavit. And tho it be true, the Houſe of Commons give no Oath, yet they appointed two Members of the Houſe, that were Juſtices of the Peace of Middleſex, to take it upon Oath, and he deſired the next day to amend it; and I put my ſelf upon them, whether this be not true.

L. H. S. What ſay you, Sir, to it?

Sir W. Jones. My Lord, I cannot anſwer, becauſe I don't hear.

L. Staff. My Lords, I ſay this, I do obſerve that Mr. Turberville (whoſe Face I never ſaw in my Life, that that I know of, till to-day, nor never ſpoke a word to him, and I ſhall prove that no Servant that ever I had ſee him) did depoſe (for the purpoſe) to-day, that he was in the Years 73 and 76 in ſuch and ſuch Places, and that he did ſpeak with me at Doway and Paris; and to-morrow recollecting his Notes, he found he was miſtaken in his Affidavit that he had made before, and deſired to mend it, and brought it to the Years 72 and 75: there was ſome Debate in the Houſe about it, whether they ſhould permit him to mend it; I appeal to all the Gentlemen, whether it were not ſo.

L. H. S. Your Labour is to have two Affidavits, that you do preſume will do your Buſineſs in order to the finding out a Variety of Time of his being at Doway or at Paris: That which does preſs your Lordſhip we know in Turberville's Evidence, is, That at Paris, in the Room below of your Lodging, you encouraged him to kill the King, and you were to have met him at Diep to know his mind, but you came not, and he went away; if you have it in the Affidavit quite contrary to this, you ſay ſomewhat.

L. Staff. My Lords, I beſeech you, it preſſes me, and every Man in England, not to be run down by a Fellow that forſwears himſelf; for him to ſwear one thing to-day, and another thing to-morrow, is Perjury.

L. H. S. What ſay you to it, Gentlemen?

Sir Will. Jones. What was done in the Houſe of Commons, it does not become any of us that are Members to diſcloſe: But I have heard, and will admit it, that in the Depoſitions the Witneſs made before a Juſtice of Peace, there was a Year put down, which he going home, and upon ſight of Letters and Papers, finding it to be miſtaken; he comes the next day, and deſires to alter it: if this be for my Lord's ſervice, we ſhall grant it.

L. H. S. What ſay you, my Lord, now?

L. Staff. I do ſay, my Lord, I am informed by what I have heard curſorily, (for I have not ſeen one of the Houſe of Commons before the Day of my Tryal) that tho in his ſecond Depoſition he named the Years 72 and 75, yet I can prove him perjured as to what he hath ſworn here to-day.

L. H. S. Since 'tis inſiſted upon, Gentlemen, that there is a Variety in the laſt Depoſition from what he ſwore at firſt, what can you ſay why he ſhould not have the Avail of his Exception?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, whether your Lordſhips will think fit to conſider by what ways and means the Houſe of Commons informed themſelves, in order to Impeachments, I ſubmit to you; and for thoſe things that ſtill remain in the hands of the Commons, I ſuppoſe you will be pleaſed to conſider how you can ſend for them to inform you. We would not be miſtaken in the matter; let not any one that hears us think that we are conſcious there is the leaſt Variation, nay we are confident if the thing were produced, it would turn to my Lord's prejudice; but what is done in this caſe, may be a Precedent for the future, and therefore we cannot without reſorting to the Houſe conſent to deliver any thing the Houſe took for their Information. Therefore if your Lordſhips ſtand upon it, and incline to have it done, we muſt reſort to the Houſe to ask their leave whether we ſhall do it or no.

L. H. S. I cannot tell what my Lords will incline to do; but I deſire when you are gone back, you will conſider how far it will make the matter eaſy to my Lord.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we can give no anſwer to that till we have attended our Houſe.

Mr. Ser. Maynard. I deſire your Lordſhips to conſider what a piece of Cunning he hath put upon both Houſes, to paſs by his vilifying our Witneſſes, which I may ſay was not comely. But if he makes any Queſtion, it muſt be put to the Houſes upon ſuppoſition to be a Queſtion, and ſo he would bring things only to this iſſue to put off the Cauſe for to-day. He ought to put that which might probably be ſomething of a Queſtion. Let him inſtance in Particulars, and make out his Evidence, not feign things to put off the Cauſe, for ought I ſee 'tis to no other end, and 'tis a jeſuitical Trick I think.

L. Staff. I feign nothing; I have been told this that I ſpeak here, and I deſire it may be proved.

L. H. S. If you are bound up ſo that you cannot conſent, I can't help it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Let him put the Fact, my Lords, and not ſuppoſe and imagine things, and then raiſe Queſtions.

L. H. S. It is uſual in theſe Caſes for the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons to ſtay till the Lords are withdrawn, and expect their Lordſhip's Reſolution; perhaps they may ſo order it that you need not go back.

Sir Will. Jones. I deſire before your Lordſhips withdraw, that it may be taken notice of by your Lordſhips, that for the Matter of the Variation of the Year we do admit it. My Lord is not pleaſed to mention any other particular Matter of the Affidavit, but only ſays in general that it is contrary to what he ſays to-day; if my Lord would tell us wherein, perhaps we ſhould admit it, or anſwer it, or take it into further conſideration: but to make ſo general an Allegation, and give your Lordſhips no particular Account, we ſubmit whether ſuch a Suggeſtion ought to be regarded.

L. H. S. Is there any further Variation, beſides the Variation of the Year?

L. Staff. I cannot ſay there is, my Lord, I do not know it; but I do really believe in my Conſcience there is, from what I have heard: but however I inſiſt upon it, and demand your Judgment.

Sir Fr. Win. My Lords, I humbly deſire one Word as to the Objection that hath been made, that he hath prayed your Lordſhips to grant him the ſight of ſuch and ſuch Papers. The Nature of this Cauſe, my Lords, we know is ſuch, that there was never the like number of Papers known, as to the general Plot; and my Lord that is the Priſoner at the Bar, may as well demand to-morrow ſuch a particular Paper, and the next day another, that he hath heard of in the general Plot: and where will the end of this be? So that if the thing be granted upon the Variation of the Time that it was immediately rectified, and he cannot produce any Grounds that may ſatisfy your Lordſhips why he ſhould have that Paper; you may as well ſuffer him to demand any other Paper after, and ſo never end the Cauſe.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip hath been told, and you ſhall find it, that you ſhall have as fair and equal an Hearing as is poſſible, and nothing ſhall be deny'd you that is juſt and reaſonable to ſave your Life, or make your Defence. But pray, my Lord, for ſo much as is upon the Journal, which you may reſort unto, you may eaſily know what Anſwer my Lords will give to that; but for this other thing, if it be only the Variety you alledge of the Time and the Year, and you do deſire it to look for other Exceptions, and you pray the Help of the Lords to ſee ſuch a Paper, that you make inquiry after other Varieties, do you think they are to help you to find out Exceptions to the Witneſſes?

L. Staff. I do not deſire their Lordſhips to help me to find out Exceptions; but I have told your Lordſhips of one Exception to the Affidavit, which theſe Gentlemen acknowledge to be true; and the other Affidavit is, that he ſwears I ſpoke to him at Doway in the Year 72 or 73, which I can diſprove: and then I ſay, he ſwearing ſeveral things falſe, he is no credible Witneſs.

L. H. S. 'Tis admitted to your Lordſhip that he did miſtake the Time.

L. Staff. It is admitted that he ſaid he ſpoke to me at Doway.

L. H. S. How very eaſy a matter were it to expedite this Proceſs, by allowing the Priſoner his Demand in this particular!

Sir Will. Jones. I never ſaw it, and a great many of the Managers ſay they never ſaw it.

L. Staff. Theſe Gentlemen ſay I did it to put off the Cauſe, I am far from it; for tho I am in a Condition very unfit to manage my Defence, faint and weak with ſpeaking ſo long, and hardly able to ſpeak any more, yet I deſire to finiſh this night; and if I ſee it now, it will be enough, I ſhall not deſire to have a Copy to adviſe with my Counſel, or any body elſe.

L. H. S Pray Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons will you obſerve my Lord, as weary as he is, would make an end of the Matter preſently, if you would but ſend for the Affidavit.

Mr. Foley. My Lords, it is not in our hands here; if the Houſe of Commons will order it, it may be done, we cannot order it of our ſelves.

Mr. Powle. My Lords, this is a Paper that does properly belong to the Houſe, and I do think, that none of us here that are Managers for this Tryal, will undertake it ſhall be delivered without reſorting to the Houſe for their Opinion: for tho I do verily believe, and am fully perſuaded, that what this noble Lord at the Bar does object, will not appear to be ſo; for I think there is not any thing of my Lord Stafford's ſpeaking with this Witneſs at Doway mention'd therein: yet how far the Precedents of this may reach in other Caſes, I think is worthy the Conſideration of the Houſe. And we cannot preſume to offer any thing in it to your Lordſhips, until you be pleas'd to give us leave to go and reſort thither.

Then the Lords withdrew, and after an hour and a half's ſpace returned, and Proclamation was made for Silence.

L. H. S. My Lord Viſcount Stafford, my Lords have conſidered of the Demands you made, and my Lords upon the Debate of the Reaſons of your Demands, are come to this Reſolution: Your Lordſhip did demand in the firſt place, that you might have a ſight of the Journal, and have the Papers lodged in the Houſe of Peers; my Lords take notice that this Demand which your Lordſhip now makes, is a Demand that was granted you long ago, about two Years ſince; you have an Order entred upon the Books, that your Lordſhip ſhould have Copies of every thing in that Houſe, and if your Lordſhip have not taken out Copies, and if any thing is miſſing to your Lordſhip that is yet there extant, 'tis your Lordſhip's fault. However, my Lords will command their Journals to be brought hither, that your Lordſhip may make that uſe of them that may be of moſt profit to you. For the other Demand touching the Affidavit ſuppoſed to be taken from Turberville by the Juſtices of the Peace, that my Lords, upon Conſideration had, do find that there is no Obligation at all upon them as a Court, to concern themſelves in that matter. And therefore my Lords have made no order in that point, but your Lordſhip muſt come provided as well as you can, and the Court can do no more to help you in it. For the reſt, my Lords did take notice that your Lordſhip ſaid before they were withdrawn, that you found your ſelf very faint and weary, and that you were much ſpent in Diſcourſe, and tired with what already you have done. My Lords are extremely willing to give your Lordſhip all the Favour and Accommodation poſſible, for the recollecting your ſelf, therefore my Lords will not now put you upon it, to go on to make your defence, but will give you time till to-morrow.

L. Staff. I humbly give your Lordſhips thanks for your Kindneſs and Favour to me; but here I profeſs, and call Almighty God to witneſs, rather than I would have it thought I am willing to put it off, I would have ſunk down dead at the Bar. But, my Lords, there was another Demand that I made: Your Lordſhips ſay I ſhall have Copies of all the Journals, and that you cannot help me to the Affidavit of Turberville, I ſubmit to it without ſaying one word more: but I deſire that I may have brought hither to-morrow the Journals, and other Papers in the Lords Houſe; but I deſire alſo the two Affidavits of Dugdale, taken the one the 24th, the other the 29th of December following, which Depoſitions were taken before Mr. Lane and Mr. Vernon, in Stafford Town, when Dugdale was in Priſon.

L. H. S. Look you, my Lord, this is all under the ſame Rule: What Evidence ſoever there is before the Court of Peers, that you ſhall have; whatſoever Evidence is not in that Court, you ought to come provided of: the Court is not to ſtay, nor to help you to Evidence.

L. Staff. My Lord, I beg your pardon, Dugdale made an Affidavit then, and ſays the clean contrary now; I deſire nothing but Juſtice, and I am ſure I ſhall have all Juſtice from your Lordſhips.

L. H. S. Produce it, and alledge what you will for your ſelf, it ſhall be heard.

L. Staff. How then ſhall I be able to make my Defence, if I have not thoſe Papers, which I humbly conceive by the Law ought to be brought? Theſe Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons ſay, that I could not have Turberville's Affidavit, becauſe it was in the Houſe, and they could not give it without conſent of the Houſe; but this was examined before a Juſtice of Peace, and returned to the Council: ſure I ſhall have that. I was examined by my Lord of Eſſex, and my Lord of Bridgwater, upon that Affidavit twice, I think, therefore that is material and neceſſary; and I know your Lordſhips would not have me come to defend my ſelf without Weapons.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, I do beſeech your Lordſhip to be a little better informed in your own Buſineſs. You have leave to make uſe of the Journal, and all Papers that are entred there; the Clerks ſay Dugdale's Oath is entred there.

L. Staff. Is the 24th of December there?

Clerk. It is there.

L. H. S. Pray my Lord do not put the Court upon Interrogatories, but come provided as well as you can.

L. Staff. If it be entred on the Journal-Book, I deſire not the Original, I am very well ſatisfy'd.

L. H. S. Will you be ready to go on to-morrow, my Lord?

L. Staf. I will with all my heart.

L. H. S. 'Tis too late, Gentlemen, to go on to-night, we muſt adjourn till to-morrow.

L. Staf. My Lords, I had ſo much to write laſt night, that I had very little Sleep; I deſire I may not come till Ten.

L. H. S. My Lord, I am not able to hear you, I take as much pains to come near you as I can.

L. Staff.

L. Staff. I had a great deal to write laſt night, I ſay, and I want ſome Sleep; I deſire I may not come till Ten.

L. H. S. Will you be ready by Ten a-clock to-morrow?

L. Staff. I will be ready by Ten.

L. H. S. I will move my Lords when they are withdrawn, to adjourn till Ten to-morrow. But my Lord Stafford, I do not know how your Lordſhip is provided, or how you look after your own Buſineſs. If you have not had Copies of the Journal all this while, 'tis you are in the fault. A great deal of it is in Print, you may ſend your Sollicitor to the Clerk of the Parliament, and take Copies of what you have need of. I give you notice of it, that if you come unprovided, you may know it is your own fault.

L. Staff. I do acknowledge I have Copies of the Journal-Book, I think of all; but I do not find any thing of Dugdale's ſecond Depoſition there.

L. H. S. Here is that of the 24th of December, that you ask after; ſend your Sollicitor, and then you ſhall have a Copy out of the Journal of it.

L. Staff. I aſſure your Lordſhip I will be ready to-morrow, if I can get thoſe Copies.

L. H. S. My Lords will give you as much Eaſe, and all the Accommodations that are fit.

L. Staff. Then to-morrow I will be ready by Ten a-clock, if your Lordſhips pleaſe; only I would deſire your Lordſhips to take notice that theſe Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons do acknowledge that Turberville ſwore one day to one Year, and the next day to another.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, you ſay you can be ready to-morrow at Ten a-clock; are you ſure you can be ready then?

L. Staff. I ſay, my Lords, this, I ſhall not be ſo ready as I ſhall be next day; but I aſſure your Lordſhips, I will rather ſink down in the Place where I am, if you think fit, than put off the Tryal.

L. H. S. Look you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, in a Caſe of this Conſequence, and of this vital Importance to a Man as this is, where is the Inconvenience if there ſhould be a day's reſpite, and the Court ſhould adjourn till Friday, if my Lords be moved in it? I make no direction, but what Inconvenience will be in it? Will it not be every way as well?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, your Lordſhips do not expect from us to give our Conſent to put off the Tryal.

L. H. S. I ask only what Inconvenience it is?

Sir Will. Jones. Your Lordſhips are the Judges, and will do as you find it reaſonable; but this I ſay, it is very unuſual, and ſcarce to be precedented, that when the Proſecutors have given an Evidence, the Priſoner ſhould have time, a further conſiderable time, to give his Anſwer to it. The Priſoner knows before-hand the general Scope and Drift of the Evidence; therefore for him to have time till to-morrow, is a Favour: but to have more than that, even a whole Day to intervene, is very unuſual.

L. H. S. If that be all, and the Matter depend upon what is uſual, I do venture with my Lords leave to inform you, that my Lord of Strafford had two days time after the Proſecution to give his Anſwer to what was ſaid againſt him.

Sir Will. Jones. That was an Evidence of twenty eight Articles, this but upon two Heads; and that was after a long Examination of many Days.

L. Staff. My Lords, I had prepared my ſelf for my Tryal as well as I could, and had written down a few things that I intended to ſay; and I profeſs before God, as I am a Man, and as I am a Chriſtian, of all I intended to ſay: I have in a manner made uſe of very few Words; but as to what I had to ſay upon Evidence, I was forced to lay all aſide, becauſe I wanted theſe Papers. I have not eaten to-day, and being forced to lay aſide all that I had written, I ſhall need a whole day to write; however, I ſubmit my ſelf to your Lordſhips in that matter.

L. H. S. My Lord, if it will be equal to your Lordſhip, and your Lordſhip will be as ready to-morrow as another day, this Court will be more ready.

L. Staff. I aſſure your Lordſhips, if your Lordſhips do give me another Day, I will not debate with my Counſel any one thing upon the Papers I have asked.

L. H. S. Pray, my Lord, will you be pleaſed to make your demand to my Lords, who are your Judges, by what time you will be content to be foreclоſed.

L. Staff. My Lords, if you will give me till Friday, I ſhall be ready to give my Evidence, and I will bring Witneſſes ſufficient I hope to prove my Innocency.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords we do not preſume at all to offer our Conſent to what time the Court ſhall be adjourned——

L. H. S. No, we do not ask your Conſent.

Sir Will. Jones. And I hope your Lordſhips will not ask the Priſoner's Conſent, nor do it by his Direction.

L. H. S. De morte hominis non eſt cunctatio longa.

Sir Will. Jones. But we muſt deſire your Lordſhips, as we are entruſted by the Houſe of Commons to manage this Tryal, to take notice, that as we do not expect your Lordſhips ſhould take the Meaſures from our Deſires, much leſs do we expect you ſhould do it at the only inſtance of the Priſoner. 'Tis a great Advantage to this Lord to chuſe his own time when he will pleaſe to anſwer our Evidence. We do know very well, that in this caſe there have been Attempts to ſuborn Witneſſes, and that we ſhall prove in due time, and Attempts to deſtroy Witneſſes too; ſo that there hath been too much time loſt already, and I think to-morrow is a very convenient time for him to make his Anſwer. And I muſt obſerve to your Lordſhips, that the Priſoner hath gained his end of not making his Anſwer this day, by raiſing an Objection, which in my Thoughts carried no great weight in it; though when it was made, your Lordſhips were pleaſed to adjourn upon it: but ſeeing he hath got his Point of deferring the making anſwer till to-morrow, there can be no reaſon he ſhould gain a further day, ſince the Depoſitions may be ready by to-morrow as well as by the next day. And therefore we deſire your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to go on in the Tryal to-morrow.

L. H. S. You ſhall know their Lordſhips Pleaſure when they are withdrawn. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure that we ſhould adjourn?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. This Houſe is adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber.

So the Lords withdrew in their Order, and the Commons went back to their Houſe, and Mr. Speaker reſum'd the Chair.

A Meſſage was ſent from the Lords by Sir Timothy Baldwyn, and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker, The Lords have ſent us to acquaint this Houſe, that they have order'd the Priſoner William Viſcount Stafford, to be brought to the Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall to-morrow Morning at Ten of the Clock.

And then the Commons adjourned to Eight of the Clock next Morning.

The Third Day.

Thurſday, December 2. 1680.

AT the Hour of Ten in the Morning, the Lords adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall, and returned in their former Order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair, the Commons were ſeated as before. The Court being ſat, Proclamation for Silence was made, and the Lieutenant of the Tower commanded to bring his Priſoner to the Bar; which being done, the Lord High Steward ſpake to him as followeth:

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, this is the time appointed to hear what your Lordſhip hath to ſay in your Defence, and to call your Witneſſes.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, Yeſterday my Lord Viſcount Stafford was pleas'd to make mention of an Affidavit of Mr. Turberville taken before two Juſtices of the Peace, wherein he was pleas'd to ſay there was ſome Amendment made; and ſo indeed we did then acknowledge there was. But he had a deſire to ſee it, notwithſtanding our Acknowledgment, becauſe he was informed that that which Turberville ſwore then, differ'd from what Turberville ſwore yeſterday. My Lords, at that time we had not the Affidavit, nor was it proper for us to produce it, for indeed it remain'd in the Juſtice of Peace's hands that took it: but now that his Lordſhip may have full Satisfaction, and not only his Lordſhip, but alſo all that are preſent at this Tryal, I do inform his Lordſhip, that the Affidavit is in the hands of a Member of the Houſe of Commons, Sir Will. Poultney by Name; and if his Lordſhip pleaſe, he may have it produc'd, and make what uſe he can of it.

L. H. S. It is extreme honourably and worthily done of the Houſe of Commons; and my Lord hath no manner of Exception left him.

L. Staf. My Lords, if I ſhall have occaſion to uſe it, I ſhall call for it; but I would firſt ſay ſomething to your Lordſhips: My Lords, I firſt give your Lordſhips thanks for granting me the liberty to come ſo late to-day; I have had a little Sleep upon it. Your Lordſhips heard yeſterday, when you had Dr. Oates at the Bar, the firſt thing that he ſaid, as I remember, was, to deſire you would be pleaſed to leave him to his own Method: I beg of your Lordſhips the ſame Favour, that I may begin with the one or the other Witneſſes, or with Matter of Law, as I pleaſe.

L. H. S. God forbid but you ſhould take your own Method in your Defence.

L. Staf. In order to which, I deſire firſt Mr. Turberville may come to the Bar.

L. H. S. Do you call Turberville, my Lord?

L. Staf. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. H. S. He is there, what ſay you to him?

L. Staf. My Lords, I will ask him but one Queſtion, and I hope I ſhall have occaſion to ask him no more: When was the laſt time that he ſpoke with me?

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, I think I hear right, I do not know: My Lord Stafford asks when was the laſt time you ſpoke with his Lordſhip?

Mr. Tur. It was in November 1675.

L. Staff. I have very much to ſay againſt his Evidence; but I hope your Lordſhips will not think him any Evidence at all againſt me, or any body elſe. But I deſire your Judgment, whether I be not within the Compaſs of the Time limited by the Statute.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Expreſs yourſelf, my Lord, for we do not underſtand you.

L. Staff. I cannot ſay more than I do: the Time which the Statute limits is ſix Months, but this is five Years; I deſire the Statute may be read.

L. H. S. What Statute, my Lord?

L. Staff. The Statute of the 13th of this King.

L. H. S. If your Lordſhip pleaſes you ſhall have it read: But your Lordſhip does not obſerve, you are proſecuted and impeached of High-Treaſon upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. not upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, made for the Safety of the King's Perſon, which limits the Proſecution of ſome Offences to be within ſix Months; but the Proſecution for Treaſon may be at any time.

L. Staff. Does your Lordſhip ſay it may be at any time?

L. H. S. Yes, my Lord.

L. Staff. This truly does very much ſurprize me, tho I am wholly ignorant in Matters of Law. My Lords, I have ever heard that no Man can be proſecuted by that Statute, but within ſo many Days, in one part of it in thirty Days, in another ſix Months; and I deſire your Lordſhips that the Statute may be read.

L. H. S. If your Lordſhip pleaſe the Statute ſhall be read; if your Lordſhip deſires the Clauſe of the Statute of the 13th of this King, which limits the Proſecution to be within ſix Months, that ſhall be read. But I conceive your Lordſhip is not accus'd upon that Statute.

L. Staff. I beſeech your Lordſhips, I may know whether I am proſecuted upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, or upon what other Statute.

L. H. S. What ſay the worthy Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons: Is my Lord proſecuted upon the Statute of the 13th of this King?

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Not at all, my Lord; he is not proſecuted upon that Statute, but upon the Common Law, and the 25th of Edward III. which was only declarative of the Common Law.

L. Staff. This is a Point of Law.

Sir W. Jones. What is the Point of Law?

L. Staff. Whether I can be proſecuted after ſo many Days.

L. H. S. The Law is very clear. If you were proſecuted upon the 13th of this King for any leſs Offence than Treaſon, you could not be proſecuted after ſix Months; but if you be proſecuted for Treaſon either upon the 25th of Edward III. or the 13th of Car. II. there is no time limited, and God forbid there ſhould.

L. Staff. I beſeech your Lordſhips Judgment, whether there be not a Statute, I think 'tis in the Reign of Edward VI. that ſets the time, after which no Man ſhall be proſecuted for any thing of Treaſon. I deſire a quarter of an Hour's time to look into the Statute.

L. H. S. What ſay you, Gentlemen?

L. Staff. Pray, my Lord, let me read the Statute of Edward VI.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. We know not of any ſuch Statute.

L. Staff. I will not ſay there is, but I will ſay I cannot read if there be not.

L. H. S. Pray, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, my Lord does ſuppoſe he has ſome kind of Objection in Law to make, which he cannot make out of himſelf; will it be amiſs to let his Counſel make and propoſe the Queſtion for him?

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, we rather would have my Lord propoſe the Objection; for your Lordſhips know, till a Matter of Law is propos'd, he cannot be admitted to have Counſel. If he deſires time to recollect himſelf about the Objection, we can't oppoſe it. But we deſire that he may propoſe the Objection; and after, if it be any Doubt in Matter of Law, your Lordſhips will aſſign him Counſel to be heard to ſpeak to it.

Sir F. Win. This would be a way for a Priſoner to have the Advantage of Counſel, when they ought not to be allowed it; for 'tis but to ſay, he hath ſome Doubt which he cannot propoſe himſelf, and ſo let in his Counſel to make Objections for him. If any Queſtion of Law do ariſe, and that Queſtion is ſtated, you will allow the Priſoner Counſel to argue it: but at this rate he may make the like Pretences in every part of his Defence, and ſo obtain that Counſel ſhall manage his whole Defence for him.

L. H. S. I ſuppoſe my Lord does intend an Objection as to the Time of the Proſecution, but he does not know how to make it. He ſuppoſes he is proſecuted after the ſix Months, which he thinks is the Time limited for the Proſecution. But I pray, my Lord Stafford, will your Lordſhip take time to recollect yourſelf, and make an Objection fit for Counſel to be heard upon, and you ſhall have it.

L. Staff. I beſeech you I may have the Statute-Book with me, for I have none myſelf, my Lord.

Sir W. Jones. With all our hearts, we do not oppoſe it.

Then my Lord withdrew into the Room provided for him, and within a quarter of an Hour return'd.

L. H. S. Say, my Lord.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do confeſs I have been very much miſtaken ever ſince I was firſt committed to the Tower: For I did conceive that they would have proceeded, as I thought I was impeach'd, upon the Statute of the 13th of this King. I humbly deſire your Lordſhips Judgment, whether I ought or no to be proſecuted upon that Statue?

L. H. S. The Gentlemen have told you already: They proſecute you upon the Statute of 25 Ed. III. and upon the Common Law.

L. Staff. And they lay aſide that Statute.

L. H. S. What Statute?

L. Staff. The 13th of this King.

L. H. S. What ſay you, Gentlemen, once more?

Sir F. Win. My Lords, we have declar'd already to his Lordſhip; and if my Lord had look'd well upon the Articles of Impeachment, he could not have put that Queſtion, but would have found himſelf impeach'd for Treaſon at the Common Law, declared by the 25th of Edward III.

L. Staff. So then they lay that aſide of the 13th of this King?

Mr. Serj. Mayn. We do not mention any Statute, but we mention the Crime; and that Crime is againſt the Common Law, declared by the Statute, to wit, the attempting the King's Death, and the Subverſion of the Government.

L. Staf. My Lords, there is no doubt but the attempting the King's Death is a great and heinous Crime; but, my Lords, I do not find that in the Impeachment there is any Overt-Act at all. And whether I ſhall anſwer to a Treaſon not prov'd by any Overt-Act ſworn by two Witneſſes, I ſubmit to your Lordſhips. But, my Lords, becauſe your Lordſhips and the Houſe of Commons may not think that I propoſe theſe things out of a deſire of Delay; if your Lordſhips pleaſe it may be ſaved to me, with all other Points of Law, I will go on to my Proofs.

L. H. S. Yes, all theſe things ſhall be ſav'd to you; pray let us hear your Evidence.

L. Staf. Since your Lordſhips have granted me that, be pleas'd to give me leave to go to my Evidence; and I begin with Stephen Dugdale.

L. H. S. Set up Dugdale.

L. Staff. Will your Lordſhips pleaſe I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper?

L. H. S. By all means, my Lord. [Which was given him.]

L. Staff. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, Stephen Dugdale ſaid, if I underſtand him right (and I ask him again) that he knew ſomething of the Plot fifteen or ſixteen Years ago?

L. H. S. What ſay you, Mr. Dugdale, you hear the Queſtion? Did not you ſay you knew of the Plot fifteen or ſixteen Years ago?

Mr. Dugd. I did ſay it, and did explain my Meaning in it. I did ſay there was among us ſuch a Preparation to be made againſt the King died, of Arms and Money, that neither ſhould be wanting.

L. Staff. I beſeech your Lordſhip to ask what Proportion of Arms was to be provided.

L. H. S. What Proportion of Arms was to be provided?

Mr. Dugd. I never heard it nominated how many abſolutely. I have heard of ſome Numbers. I heard of late of 30000 that were to be rais'd beyond Sea: what the whole Number in England was, I have forgot; but I think I have heard Mr. Gavan, and ſome of the Prieſts ſay, that if there was occaſion they ſhould have at leaſt 200000 to aſſiſt them, that was of Men; and I ſuppoſe they had Arms as well as Men.

L. Staff. My Lords, if this were true which he ſays Mr. Gavan ſaid, that they were 200000, I deſire to know what Men he meant, what Religion they muſt be of.

L. H. S. What Religion were they of, that were to come in and help?

Mr. Dugd. He did not name them at that time; but I underſtood them, and ſo I apprehend the Company would, that they were Roman Catholicks.

L. Staf. 'Tis a ſtrange thing that there ſhould be 200000 Catholicks rais'd, when there are not 20000 in England that can bear Arms.

L. H. S. Good my Lord, they might come from beyond Sea, and ſo they might be ſo many Roman Catholicks, tho there were not ſo many in England.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. And he ſays not they were Roman Catholicks, but he heard ſo.

Mr. Treby. There might be ſo many Roman Catholicks, and ſuch as ſhould be with them.

L. Staf. Did he hear fifteen or ſixteen Years ago that I was to be one among them?

L. H. S.

L. H. S. Anſwer that Queſtion: Did you hear then that my Lord Stafford was to be one among them?

Mr. Dugd. I cannot remember that I did, my Lord.

L. Staf. Then, my Lords, I make this uſe of it: He tells you of a Plot ſixteen Years ago, that 200000 Men in Arms were ready againſt the King's Death——

Mr. Dugd. I did not ſay ſo, my Lords; I deſire I may be underſtood aright——

L. Staf. You ſay you heard ſo.

Mr. Dugd. I ſpeak as to the Number of Men, what I heard of late at the Conſults and Meetings within theſe two Years.

L. Staf. But I ſpeak of ſixteen Years ago, what Number of Men was there to be rais'd?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, it was a general Word that was amongſt us, That we muſt be provided againſt that time, againſt the Death of the King, but no Number at all.

L. Staf. This, my Lords, under favour, I conceive does not concern me. He tells you there was ſuch a thing; it might be ſo, or it might not be ſo; I am not concern'd in it, then 'tis out of doors as to what concerns me: I conceive otherwiſe, if the Gentlemen conceive otherwiſe, they will ſay ſo. Then, my Lords, the next thing is, How long ago it is ſince I firſt ſpake to him about this Plot? and I beſeech your Lordſhip he may mention Time and Place.

L. H. S. You hear the Queſtion, Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugd. The firſt time, to my beſt Remembrance——

L. Staf. I beſeech you, my Lords, let us have no Remembrance, but let him ſwear poſitively.

L. H. S. There is no mortal Man can ſwear otherwiſe than according to his Remembrance.

L. Staf. When a Man's Life and Honour, and all he hath is at ſtake, and indeed in conſequence every Man in England is concerned if they ſwear not poſitively, but ſtill ſay, As I remember; who can make a Defence?

L. H. S. Mr. Dugdale, go on and ſay as near as as you can, and be as particular as you can, upon your Oath.

Mr. Dugd. That which I can poſitively affirm, is, It was about Auguſt or September 78.

L. Staf. He ſaid yeſterday it was in the latter end of Auguſt or the beginning of September, which are two Months. I beſeech you what does he mean by the latter end of Auguſt? How long before the end of Auguſt?

L. H. S. How long was it before the laſt Day in Auguſt?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I will not be poſitive; but it was either in one Month or the other: I did not keep a Diary, or elſe I would give your Lordſhips Satisfaction.

L. Staf. I beſeech your Lordſhips he may poſitively ſay whether in Auguſt, or not in Auguſt; or whether in September, or not in September.

Mr. Dugd. I dare not venture to ſwear that, I dare not do it.

L. Staf. Then ſaving my Exceptions to the Incertainty of that afterwards, I would ask him what Day was it in September that I ſpoke to him.

Mr. Dugd. I remember one was either the 20th or 21ſt of September 78.

L. Staf. My Lords, he ſays the 20th or 21ſt; does he ſay that was the firſt time he ſpoke with me?

Sir J. Trev. No, no.

L. Staf. I beſeech you, my Lords, they may not anſwer the Queſtions, but the Witneſſes: they cry, No, no.

L. H. S. My Lord, you ſhall certainly have an Anſwer to all the Queſtions you will ask.

L. Staf. But when I ask, they anſwer for them; I would know whether that is the Courſe or no?

L. H. S. Do not diſquiet your ſelf for any thing that is ſaid about you; you ſhall have a fair Hearing.

L. Staf. But, my Lords, I cannot but be diſquieted when I hear theſe learned Gentlemen make Anſwers to my Queſtions for the Witneſſes.

L. H. S. Mr. Dugdale, was the 20th or the 21ſt of September, you ſpeak of, the firſt time that you ſpoke to my Lord Stafford?

Mr. Dugdale. No, my Lords, it was not.

L. Staf. Pray, my Lords, what Day was it then I ſpoke firſt to him?

L. H. S. What was the Day you firſt ſpoke to my Lord?

Mr. Dugd. Truly, my Lords, I cannot remember ſo well as to tell you.

L. H. S. Do you remember when my Lord came to Tixall?

Mr. Dugd. I remember one Sunday in particular; but I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was.

L. H. S. Do you remember my Lord Stafford at Tixall, in Company with my Lord Aſton and Father Evers?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. Do you remember that any Diſcourſe paſſed between them?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. Was that before or after the 21ſt of September?

Mr. Dugd. Both before and after.

L. Staf. My Lords, he ſays there was a Conſult at Tixall, where ſuch and ſuch were preſent, and the King's Death determin'd; I ask when was that?

Mr. Dugd. That was in September, I cannot ſay poſitively the Day; but in September, or the latter end of Auguſt.

L. Staff. My Lords, I muſt acquieſce and ſubmit to your Lordſhips to do what you pleaſe; but if he does not name Times nor Places, how can I make my Defence? I deſire he may ſay poſitively within five Days of the one or of the other; and, my Lords, I will put it upon that, if he ſay five Days before the end of Auguſt, or five Days in the beginning of September, which one would think is ſpace enough, that is ten Days time.

L. H. S. My Lords do obſerve how far Mr. Dugdale goes, and that he is no further poſitive than he does expreſs himſelf.

L. Staff. I beſeech your Lordſhips, I preſs this, becauſe it concerns me very much, that he may be poſitive within five Days over or under.

L. H. S. Can you remember whether it were within five Days of the one or of the other?

Mr. Dugd. Truly, my Lords, I cannot be poſitive; if I had not made a particular Remark upon that of the 20th or the 21ſt, I could not have remembred that; for I did not then intend to reveal the Plot, or elſe I could have given you Satisfaction in that.

L. H. S. My Lord, your Lordſhip hath an Anſwer to it; he cannot ſpeak more poſitively to it than he does.

L. Staff. I beſeech you then, how is it poſſible I can make my Defence?

Mr.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I kept no Journal; if I had, I would be more poſitive.

L. Staff. He ſays it was the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September; I deſire he will ſay whether it was the laſt Week in Auguſt, or the firſt Week in September.

L. H. S. He anſwers he cannot tell; your Lordſhip muſt make what advantage you can of that Anſwer.

L. Staff. I can make no advantage of it, unleſs he does ſpeak poſitively to the time. My Lords, I beſeech you I may know what is the end of Auguſt and the beginning of September?

L. H. S. My Lord, I hear you not.

L. Staff. If a Man ſays the beginning of June I was at ſuch a Place, how many Days is the beginning, and how many Days the end of a Month? How much time will your Lordſhips underſtand the meaning of that to be? I am concern'd extremely in the point of time, for it is that which the whole Buſineſs depends upon, I mean as to this Man.

L. H. S. My Lord, go on with your Evidence; I know not how to give you an anſwer, what Judgment my Lords will make of it, or how much they will underſtand by it, till they are withdrawn: they obſerve how much your Lordſhip inſiſts upon it, and will hear what the worthy Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons will anſwer to it.

L. Staff. My Lords, my whole Buſineſs with this Fellow is concerned in a poſitive Anſwer to this Queſtion; I give him, I think, reaſonable time to confine himſelf to.

L. H. S. What ſay you to the 20th or 21ſt of September, my Lord?

L. Staff. My Lords, I ſhall give a clear Anſwer to that anon; but I am extremely concerned in this, to know whether it was in Auguſt or September.

L. H. S. My Lord, if your Lordſhip be concerned never ſo much at that, the Witneſs can ſwear no more than he can ſwear. He ſays about the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September; will your Lordſhip ſtand ſtill for that?

L. Staff. Well then, I will go on as well as I can: As for the matter of the 20th or 21ſt of September, I beſeech your Lordſhips I may ask Dugdale one Queſtion, whether at the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, or the five Jeſuits, he did not ſay the Conſult was in Auguſt; if he deny it, I ſhall prove it.

L. H. S. Mr. Dugdale, my Lord asks whether at the Tryal of Wakeman, or of the five Jeſuits, you did not ſay it was in Auguſt?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I did name there was a Conſult at Boſcobel in Auguſt, but I do not remember that I did name my Lord Stafford in any Conſult in Auguſt poſitively; but, as I ſay now, the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September. But I did name that there was a Conſult at Boſcobel in Auguſt 78.

L. Staff. My Lords, he did ſay I was at the Conſult in Auguſt.

Mr. Dugd. I did not ſay my Lord Stafford was there, I don't charge him in it; and if any ſuch thing was printed, I have wrong done me.

L. Staff. Then he ſays he had nothing to do with me till the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September. My Lords, I beſeech your Lordſhips to ask him, whether in Sir George Wakeman's Tryal he did not ſay, he was to receive Orders from me in June or July, when I came into the Country.

L. H. S. Did not you ſay at Sir George Wakeman's Tryal, That you were to receive Orders from my Lord Stafford in June or July, when he came into the Country?

Mr. Dugd. My Lord, I ſubmit to your Lordſhip, and the reſt of my Lords here, whether, when that Queſtion was ask'd by my Lord Stafford, I did not ſay, That the firſt time I entred into Correſpondency with the Conſulters, they told me, my Lord was to come down then, and I ſhould receive Orders from him. I had heard of my Lord Stafford before, but not to enter into any Conſults with him, till he came down the latter end of that Summer.

L. Staf. I beſeech your Lordſhips pardon me; I deſire him to anſwer poſitively, whether at the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, he did not ſay he was to receive Orders from me in June or July, when I came into the Country.

L. H. S. Did you ſay ſo at Sir George Wakeman's Tryal?

Mr. Dugd. I believe I did ſay ſo; for I had it from others, and not my Lord Stafford himſelf.

L. Staf. My Lords, in June or July I was not in the Country.

L. H. S. He ſays you were to come down, not that you did come down.

L. Staf. If you will let him do thus, there is no Man ſafe: I ſhall begin the Tragedy, and Millions will follow. He ſwore at the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, or that of thoſe other Perſons, That there was a Conſult at my Lord Aſton's at Tixall, where I was one, in Auguſt.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I did not ſwear ſo; but in Auguſt or September, or one of them, as now I ſwear.

L. Staf. I ſhall prove it by the Book, and Witneſſes that were there.

Mr. Dugd. Then they did me wrong by printing it; for I never ſaid of your Lordſhip otherwiſe than I do now.

L. Staff. I deſire my Witneſſes may be call'd to prove it, for I conceive it is very material. My Lords, does he deny it?

Mr. Dugd. I do ſay there was a Conſult at Tixall in Auguſt; but I did not charge your Lordſhip poſitively to be there then, nor with more than I do now.

L. Staf. I think you did, and I have Witneſſes to prove it. And 'tis impoſſible for any Man living to defend himſelf, if Perſons ſhall ſwear as they ſuppoſe, think, or remember. I tell your Lordſhips I was not there all the Month of Auguſt.

L. H. S. Does your Lordſhip intend to call any Witneſſes?

L. Staf. My Lords, I thought I had more Witneſſes than I have. But I have two here, if your Lordſhips will hear them, that he did ſwear I was at Tixall in Auguſt.

L. H. S. Who are they?

L. Staf. My Daughter Wincheſter for one, and a Lady that is my Kinſwoman for another.

L. H. S. Let them ſtand up, they are not to be ſworn. You don't except againſt them, Gentlemen?

Sir W. Jones. No, let him prove what he can.

L. Marchioneſs of Wincheſter. He did ſwear that he was to receive his Orders from——

L. H. S. Madam, your Ladyſhip is not upon your Oath; but you are under all the Obligations of Truth and Honour in the world.

L. March.

L. March. Winch. My Lords, by the Grace of God I will not ſpeak an untrue Word.

Sir W. Jones. We deſire to know this Lady's Name.

L. Staf. It is my Daughter Wincheſter.

L. March. Winch. This Stephen Dugdale did ſay at the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, That he was to receive Orders from my Lord in June or July, when he was to come down; and that my Lord was at a Conſult at Tixall in Auguſt.

L. H. S. Did he ſay poſitively in Auguſt, or in Auguſt and September.

L. March. Winch. No, he did not name September.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I might ſay my Lord was to come down then; but not that ever I ſaid he was there, but as now.

L. H. S. But ſhe ſays you did not name September.

L. Staf. Here is another Lady.

Sir W. Jones. Who is ſhe, my Lord?

L. Staf. Mrs. Howard, Daughter to Sir George Blount, and married to Mr. Howard, a Kinſman of mine; ſhe is now a Widow.

Mrs. Howard. My Lords, at the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, Dugdale was asked to be poſitive in the Month my Lord Stafford came down; and he ſaid, he came down in June or July; but he ſaid the Conſult was in Auguſt, wherein my Lord Stafford was.

L. H. S. That Lady likewiſe ſays the ſame, That you would not be poſitive as to June or July; but as to Auguſt, you were poſitive that my Lord was there.

Mr. Dugd. No, my Lords, I only ſaid, In Auguſt there was a Conſult; and in June or July my Lord was to come down.

Mrs. Howard. I do aſſure you we came to that Tryal on purpoſe to obſerve every Word he ſaid about my Lord Stafford, and we have kept it in our Memories ever ſince.

L. H. S. What do you ſay, Mr. Dugdale, to it?

Mr. Dugd. I ſuppoſe there was a great many more at that Tryal than thoſe two worthy Ladies; and I ſuppoſe ſome of them may remember I ſaid no more than I do now. I ſaid then, my Lord was to come down at that time, and ſo I ſaid ſeveral times, but not poſitively, that he was there till the end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September.

L. Staf. My Lords, I do poſitively aver, here are two Witneſſes that ſay, he ſwore I was there at the Conſult in Auguſt. Now it concerns me to prove that I was not there in Auguſt, ſince he ſaid abſolutely I was there in Auguſt; and I aſſure you I can prove I was not there all the whole Month. In the beginning of Auguſt I came from London, from my own Houſe; on Tueſday or Wedneſday the 6th of Auguſt, I went to my Lord Bellaſis's, and that Night I went to George Porter's; the next Night I went onwards towards Bath: when I was there, I went over and ſtaid with my Noble Lord the Marquiſs of Worceſter; there I ſtaid two or three Days, and I went thence to another Place hard by there; and then I came back again to Bath, and went back again afterwards to my Lord's Houſe; and the firſt or ſecond of September, I went from my Lord's Houſe to London. Then if this be acknowledged, I need ſay no more; if not, I'll prove it by ſufficient Witneſſes: So then I was not there the whole Month of Auguſt, and the beginning of September he ſays he ſpoke with me. I was not there till the 12th of September. Now I beſeech your Lordſhips how that could poſſibly be the beginning of September. I ſubmit to you, Whether then he be a Witneſs fit to be heard, that ſhall ſwear poſitively what hath no colour of Truth in it, I alſo leave to you. And if they object I was not where I ſay I was in Auguſt, I will prove it. And for the 20th and 21ſt of September, I do own ſomething of that, and I ſhall prove to your Lordſhip what it was.

L. H. S. Call what Witneſſes you pleaſe, my Lord.

L. Staff. My Daughter proves when I went out of Town.

L. March. Winch. My Lords, it was on a Tueſday my Father went to my Lord Bellaſis's, he dined there, and then went on to George Porter's.

L. Staf. That I was at Bath, I ſhall call Witneſſes.

L. H. S. My Lord, you ſhould prove when you firſt came to Tixall, my Lord Aſton's.

L. Staf. Will that ſatisfy your Lordſhip?

L. H. S. Me! 'Tis not me you are to ſatisfy, but my Lords, and the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons.

L. Staff. Then I do own to your Lordſhips, I came the firſt time the 12th of September to Tixall.

L. H. S. That was the firſt Day you were there?

L. Staf. That Year, my Lord, it was.

Sir Will. Jones. Prove it.

L. Staf. Does he deny that, my Lords?

L. H. S. Do you deny that my Lord came firſt to Tixall the 12th of September? or do you know he was there before?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I have poſitively ſpoke to no Day, but only to the 21ſt or 20th of September.

L. Staf. Where is my Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter's Servant?

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, it will be beſt for your Lordſhip to produce all the Witneſſes you have, and not to leave any thing undone that you can prove.

L. Staf. But I beſeech your Lordſhips I may ask one Queſtion; If I ſhall name any of the Houſe of Peers as my Witneſſes, does that exempt them from being Judges?

L. H. S. No, my Lord. If your Lordſhip have any Witneſſes among any of my Lords here, they may very well teſtify for you, and yet remain ſtill in the Capacity of your Judges; for my Lord of Strafford had a great many Witneſſes that were Peers.

Sir John Trevor. We do not oppoſe it, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord, call your Witneſſes.

L. Staf. There is no Place appointed for them, and therefore I could not have them ready now; I have ſent for them; I have a throng of them.

L. H. S. They will open the way, and we will ſtay for them.

L. Staf. My Lords, I deſire, that as yeſterday, when the Witneſſes were ſworn againſt me, mine did not hear what they ſaid, ſo I deſire when my Witneſſes come, theirs may not be preſent.

L. H. S. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's Pardon, it was not well done that your Witneſſes were not there; but if Witneſſes be to confront one another, ſhall they not hear what one another ſay?

L. Staff. My Lords, I am ſo clear in every thing, I will diſpute no little matters.

Then my Lord's Witneſs ſtood up.

L. H. S. What is this Man's Name you call now, my Lord?

L. Staff. Indeed my Lord I don't know.

Witneſs.

Witneſs. My Name is Bonny, my Lords.

L. H. S. Does your Lordſhip call this Man?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. You are not upon your Oath, but you are to look that a ſtrict account will be taken of what you ſay.

Mr. Foley. My Lords, we deſire to know where this Witneſs lives?

Bonny. I live in Exeter-Street, by Exeter-Exchange.

L. Staff. I declare it, I know him not: but I am told he can witneſs for me.

L. H. S. Your Chriſtian Name?

Bonny. Thomas.

L. H. S. What Profeſſion are you of?

Bonny. I live as Clerk of the Kitchin to my Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter.

Mr. Foley. What Religion are you of?

Bonny. A Proteſtant, one of the Church of England.

L. Staff. My Lords, I humbly move your Lordſhips, when I asked Mr. Smith the firſt day, where he was made a Prieſt, the Gentleman ſaid, he was not bound to anſwer any thing againſt himſelf that might make him criminal. I deſire that the Queſtion may not be put to my Witneſſes what Religion they are of.

L. H. S. The Gentleman will not offer to ask any Queſtion that may make a Man accuſe himſelf; but my Lord, a Papiſt or not Papiſt is not ſo penal as a Prieſt or no Prieſt.

Mr. Foley. To acknowledge a Man's ſelf a Papiſt, is not to make him a Criminal.

L. H. S. What does your Lordſhip call this Witneſs for?

L. Staff. To prove when I was at my Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter's.

L. H. S. What ſay you; when was my Lord Stafford at my Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter's?

Bonny. In Auguſt 78.

L. H. S. Do you remember it perfectly?

Bonny. Very well.

L. H. S. What Day of Auguſt?

Bonny. The 17th of Auguſt, which my Lord Marquiſs keeps as his Wedding-Day every year, and the Gentlemen of the Country are invited thither. My Lord Stafford was then at Bath, and my Lord Marquiſs was pleaſed to ſend his Coach for him, to be preſent there that day; there he ſtaid that day and the next day, and then return'd on Monday. And in the ſame Month, the 31ſt of Auguſt, my Lord came again from Bath to Badminton, my Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter's, and upon the Monday after returned for London.

L. H. S. That was the beginning of September?

Bonny. Yes, the 2d he went to London.

L. H. S. Will you ask him, Gentlemen, any Queſtions?

Managers. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. Call another Witneſs then.

(Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What is this Man's Name?

Witneſs. Thomas.

L. H. S. Thomas what?

Witneſs. Thomas White.

L. H. S. Where do you live?

White. I live with my Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter at Badminton.

L. H. S. What do you ſay?

White. My Lords——

Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter. My Lord Steward, I have only this to ſay, my Lord Stafford deſired that his Witneſſes might not be asked what Religion they were of, but I deſire all my Servants may be asked, for I keep none but Proteſtants.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

White. A Proteſtant.

L. Staff. My Lords, I did not require it for them, I know my Lord keeps none but Proteſtants; but I asked it for others of my Witneſſes, that may come, and be ſtartled at it.

L. H. S. What ſay you, when was my Lord Stafford at my Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter's Houſe?

White. The 17th of Auguſt, 78; I fetched him from Bath, being my Lord's Wedding-Day.

L. H. S. You fetched him?

White. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. What Place do you ſerve my Lord Marquiſs in?

White. As Coachman.

L. H. S. Was he there afterwards?

White. Yes, he was, but I can't remember the Day; only this being a remarkable Day, I can remember it.

L. H. S. Did you carry my Lord from thence towards London?

White. Yes, I did.

L. H. S. When was that?

White. The ſecond of September, to the beſt of my remembrance.

L. H. S. Gentlemen, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Managers. No.

L. Staff. I think this is ſo clear, I ſhall not need to trouble your Lordſhips further with more Witneſſes.

L. H. S. Call whom you pleaſe, my Lord, and as many as you think fit, they ſhall be heard.

L. Staff. One more then, my Lords.

(Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. Richard Bevan.

L. H. S. Who do you live with?

Bevan. I am Groom to my Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Bevan. A Proteſtant.

L. H. S. Do you remember when my Lord Stafford was at the Marquiſs of Worceſter's Houſe?

Bevan. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. What time was it?

Bevan. The 17th of Auguſt.

L. H. S. Do you remember any other Day?

Bevan. No, my Lord; but he was there that Day.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Managers. No, my Lords.

L. Staff. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I deſire my Lord Marquiſs of Worceſter may tell your Lordſhips whether his Men have ſaid true or no.

L. Marq. of Worceſt. My Lords, I do remember, that my Lord Stafford was pleaſed to do me the honour to come upon my Wedding-Day from the Bath, and dine with me, as moſt Perſons of Quality that are of my Acquaintance, and happen to be at the Bath at that time, are pleaſed to do; and as moſt of the Gentlemen of the Country, within ſuch a diſtance, do alſo. (And that Day is the 17th of Auguſt.) I think he was there once or twice after, from the Bath, but I cannot tell preciſely the Days; but that particular Day I remember, becauſe it was my Wedding-Day.

L. H. S. Can your Lordſhip remember when my Lord Stafford went to London?

L. Marq. of Worceſt. Truly I cannot tell that, my Lords.

L. H. S. Did you not after that lend my Lord your Coach?

L. Marq. of Worceſt. Yes, I did, to carry him as far as Sandy-lane, on the Road to London; but the particular Day I remember not: but one of the Perſons examined (who was then my Clerk of the Kitchin) muſt needs know, becauſe he books every day who is in the Houſe, and therefore I believe what he has ſaid is true.

L. Staff. Stephen Dugdale I deſire may come again. I conceive I have made it plain to your Lordſhips, that Stephen Dugdale did ſwear, That in Auguſt there was a Conſult at my Lord Aſton's, where I was; and I conceive it is alſo clear that in Auguſt I was not there: and then if it were the beginning of September, that could not be neither; for I came not down to Tixall till the 12th. I beſeech you to ask him when I offer'd him the five hundred Pounds to kill the King, I think he ſays it was the 20th or 21ſt.

L. H. S. What was the time my Lord offered you the five hundred Pound?

Mr. Dugd. It was about that time, the 20th or 21ſt of September, to my remembrance.

L. Staff. He ſaid poſitively before, it was one of thoſe two days; I beſeech your Lordſhip to ask him where it was.

L. H. S. Where was that Offer made?

Mr. Dugd. In my Lord's Lodging-Chamber at Tixall.

L. Staff. Then one Queſtion more, I deſire your Lordſhip to ask him what Day the Race was at Etching-Hill between Sir John Crew's Man and Lazingby.

Mr. Dugd. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I do conceive it was about that time.

L. Staff. I pray he may anſwer poſitively, for if you pleaſe I will tell you how it was. It is very true, the 20th of September this Fellow was in my Chamber, and I ſhall trouble your Lordſhips with ſome little Diſcourſe about it, and my Reaſons why: Firſt, I beſeech your Lordſhips to permit me to let you know, that this Fellow did ſerve my Lord Aſton in the quality of a Bailiff. And I never thought him to be an honeſt Man, he was a mean Servant, and when the other Servants waited but till the ſecond Courſe came in, he ſtaid till the Coach-man and the Groom went to dinner, and eat with them. I profeſs before God it is true as that the Sun ſhines, I have often and often, I cannot tell how many times, when I have been very dry at my Lord's Table, and ſeen him by me, not called for Drink; I did deteſt him as ſo mean a Knave, that I often refuſed to take Drink at his hands: And now for me to offer this Fellow five hundred pounds——

L. H. S. I think your Lordſhip ſays he was Bailiff to my Lord Aſton?

L. Staff. But I knew him to be an errant Knave, and a great Gameſter at Races and ſuch things.

L. H. S. My Lord would you have offered five hundred Pounds to an honeſt Man to kill the King?

Mr. Ser. Mayn. You ſaid you never ſaw him.

L. Staff. I ſaid I had ſeen him, but now I did not know him by his Perriwig.

L. H. S. Did you not know him, my Lord?

L. Staff. No, my Lords, I profeſs I did not.

L. H. S. Why, your Lordſhip was a going to ſhew that the Race at Etching-Hill was upon the 20th of September; and your Lordſhip confeſſes, that he did ſpeak with you on the 20th of September in your Chamber; and Dugdale ſays, this Day was the very Offer made him of five hundred Pounds to kill the King. What do you ſay Dugdale, were you at the Race?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I was with my Lord at the Race?

L. H. S. Did my Lord ſpeak with you before he went, or after?

Mr. Dugd. Before.

L. H. S. That Morning in his Chamber?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, it was that very Morning, before he went to the Race.

L. Staff. I do own, my Lord, thus far, he was in my Chamber that Morning; but, my Lord, I can prove what I ſay to you: My Lords, that 20th of September in the Morning, I was in my Bed, and there comes a Servant of mine that hath ſerved me twelve or fourteen Years, and he comes in to me, and ſays, Yonder is Stephen Dugdale very deſirous to go to this Race. It ſeems he ſays he went along with me to this Race.

Mr. Dugd. I ſay I went either before or after, or when you went to the Race, for I was with you at the Race.

L. H. S. Whether he went with you, or no, is not the point, but whether he was in your Chamber at that time.

L. Staff. 'Tis the point, for he ſaid juſt now, he went with me, as I apprehended him. But I tell your Lordſhips, my Servant came and told me, Stephen Dugdale deſires that you will ask my Lord Aſton leave that he may go before to the Race; my Lord is angry with him already for his meddling in Races, and he dare not ask himſelf. My Lords, I was a little concerned in the Race, for I had betted ſome Money; and I thought with my ſelf, ſhould I ask my Lord Aſton leave for him to go, my Lord will not deny me, but perhaps will take it ill to be asked, ſo I was not over-willing to do it. But I bid my Servant call him in, and when he came I asked him ſome fooliſh Queſtions about the Race, as who he thought would win, and the like; but I told him I would get leave of my Lord for him. My Lords, I did go to my Lord Aſton, and told him, My Lord, I am ſending my Servant before to the Place of the Race, but I am afraid he does not well know the way, ſhall Stephen Dugdale go along with him? my Lord gave him leave to go. But, my Lords, I dreſſed me, and did not ſpeak one tittle more to this Dugdale, but he went before, and I was hardly or but juſt dreſt when he was gone.

L. H. S. I pray, my Lord, was your Lordſhip at no time alone with him in your Chamber?

L. Staff. No, never ſiuce I was born, never in all my Life.

L. H. S. No, my Lord!

L. Staff. He ſays my Servants uſed to come for him, I profeſs it is all falſe.

L. H. S. What ſay you to that, Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I was in my Chamber, and buſy when my Lord ſent for me that Morning, and it was either by his Page or one that waits on him in his Chamber; I went to my Lord, and the Page was in the Chamber, and he ordered him to go out.

L Staff. I declare and aver to your Lordſhips he was in the Hall, or the next Room, and deſired to come in.

L. H. S. Where is the Page?

L. Staff. This Fellow was but a poor Boy, found at the Door, then he was a Threſher, and now a Witneſs for the King.

(Then my Lord Stafford*'s Man ſtood up.)*

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs.

Witneſs. My Name is Nicholas Furneſe.

L. H. S. Do you remember the Day of the Race at Etching-Hill?

Furneſe. Yes, I do, my Lords.

L. H. S. Do you remember Dugdale was in your Lord's Chamber that Morning.

Furneſe. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. Do you remember whether your Lord did bid you go out or no?

Furneſe. No, he did not.

L. H. S. Were you there all the while Dugdale was there?

Furneſe. Yes, my Lords, I was.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, ask him whether I ſent for Dugdale, or he deſired to ſpeak to me.

L. H. S. Did my Lord ſend for Dugdale, or did he come to you to ſpeak to my Lord for him?

Furneſe. No, Dugdale ſpoke to me firſt.

L. H. S. What did he ſay to you, pray?

Furneſe. My Lords, about Eight or Nine of the clock in the Morning I came to go to my Lord's Chamber, and I came through my Lord Aſton's Hall; and coming through, I met Mr. Dugdale coming to me, and ſaid, he had one Favour to deſire of me. He ſaid he would fain go to the Race, but ſaid he I do not know how to go, for my Lord is very angry with me, and if I ſhould ask him, he would be worſe, for he is diſpleaſed that I have meddled ſo far in theſe Matters already; therefore I deſire ſome means may be uſed that I may go, and I deſire that you would ſpeak to my Lord to get leave for me to go: for Mr. Fox is there, and hath a great deal of Money in his hands, and divers People will give Money to bett, and ſo it will be a great Loſs and Prejudice to me not to go. So I did promiſe him, my Lords, and I went into my Lord's Chamber, and told him; and when I had ſpoke to my Lord, my Lord bid him come in. And when he came in, my Lord asked him ſeveral Queſtions about the Race: my Lord asked him what hopes he had, for he ſaid, a great deal of Money was laid by ſeveral People; he reply'd, he could win, but he wanted Money to bett: ſays my Lord, I will bett twenty Pound for Staffordſhire ſake tho I were ſure to loſe. And then after ſome Diſcourſe to that purpoſe, my Lord told him, he would ſpeak to his Lord. After my Lord was dreſt, he went out of his Chamber, and went to my Lord Aſton, to ask him leave for Dugdale; and my Lord bid me make my ſelf ready to go to the Race. About Nine or Ten of the clock I was ready to go, and coming down the Back-ſtairs, my Lord met me: Go, ſays he, to Etching-Hill, and ſee what Betts there are, and take Stephen Dugdale with you to ſhew you the way; for I have asked his Lord leave for him to go. So Stephen Dugdale went along with me to the Stable, and took out his Horſe; mine was not ready, but I overtook him in half a Mile, and it was Eleven of the clock e'er we were at Ridgely. I asked him ſome Queſtions about one Mr. Gerard; and I think about Twelve of the clock we were at the Race, and I ſtaid till One with him and Mr. Fox, who was a Party concerned in the Race, and there were ſeveral Betts laid. I was watchful when my Lord ſhould come, leſt he ſhould want me; ſo I left them, and went to the Room where my Lord was to dine; and when I went to my Lord, I left him betting. About Two of the clock the Lords and Gentlemen all went to dinner (that were there) and when we had half dined, betwixt Two and Three, Dugdale came in, and we asked him how the Wagers went; he ſaid he would bett Gold to Silver, if he had it, but he had betted away all his Money, I know not how much. So there was a Gentleman that was Servant to my Lord Aſton, one George Hobſon by Name, he lent him two Guineas and odd Money, and I lent him ſome forty or fifty Shillings out of my own Pocket, which I told him, I would not lend, unleſs he would give it me at the Hill again, before the Race begun, becauſe I was fearful my Lord ſhould go to Stafford again from my Lord Aſton's that night. About Four or Five a-clock I went up to the Race, and demanded my Money, and he paid it me before the Race begun, and after the Race was done I loſt him. My Lord went home, and I waited on him: This was about Five or Six, and about the Midway towards my Lord Aſton's Houſe, he went into the Coach, and I got on horſeback, and we got home about Six or Seven of the clock, as I ſuppoſe. But at night after Supper I inquired for Dugdale, how he took his loſings, and how he did after it: They told me, he was gone to Bed, ſo I ſaw him no more that Night. The next Morning, my Lord bid me come betimes, for he would go to Stafford that Morning, where we dined, at Mr. Abden's, and from thence took our way to go to my Lord's own Houſe.

L. Staff. Now, my Lords, if you pleaſe to ask this Boy whether I bid him go and call Dugdale to me, and leave him there.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford did bid you, Mr. Furneſe, go and dreſs your ſelf, and make you ready for the Race; did you not leave Dugdale behind you in the Chamber when you went to dreſs your ſelf?

Furneſe. No, my Lord, Dugdale was gone thence; and my Lord was gone too, before me, to my Lord Aſton's.

L. H. S. I ſtill ask you the Queſtion, (you are upon an Obligation very great, as much as if you were upon your Oath) Whether you were in my Lord's Chamber before Dugdale came in, and ſtaid till after he went out?

L. Staf. And whether I bid him go out or no?

L. H. S. Were you there before Dugdale went in?

Furneſe. He went along with me in; I conducted him in.

L. H. S. Did you ſtay all the while Dugdale was there?

Furneſe. As near as I remember, I ſtaid there all the while.

L. Staf. Ask him poſitively.

Furneſe. Yes, my Lords, I was there all the while Dugdale ſtaid; but I cannot ſay poſitively how long it was.

L. H. S. Mr. Dugdale, you are upon your Oath; he ſays he came in along with you, and you went out of the Chamber before him, and he was there all the while you were there.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lords, I am not poſitive which of my Lord's Servants it was that came for me; but one it was. But when I came into the Chamber to my Lord, my Lord was getting up, and he charged them both to go forth, and the Room was clear, and I ſaw no body.

L. Staf. My Lords, ask my Man.

Furneſe. My Lord never bid me go forth that Day, nor any elſe in my Life, when any was in the Room.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lords, if it pleaſe your Lordſhips, Mr. Furneſe was pleaſed to ſay I would bett Gold to Silver; but in that he was miſtaken, for the Odds was quite ſix to four againſt us.

L. H. S. Well, we are not upon the Race now, or the Wagers laid there. But, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, will you ask this Man any Queſtions?

Sir William Jones. No, my Lords, we have none to ask.

Sir Thomas Lee. We deſire to know where he lives now, what Countryman he is, and what Religion he is of.

L. H. S. Whom do you ſerve now?

Furneſe. My Lord Stafford.

L. H. S. Do you live with him ſtill?

Furneſe. Yes, I do, and have done this fourteen Years.

L. H. S. What Countryman are you?

Furneſe. A Dutch-Man.

L. H. S. Where born?

Furneſe. At Bruſſels.

Sir Francis Winnington. We would ask him what Perſuaſion or Religion he is of.

L. H. S. You may be ſure of what Anſwer you ſhall have.

Furneſe. I am a Roman Catholick.

L. Staf. That is as good as a Jew.

Mr. Treby. The Queſtion is not intended for any harm, not with any purpoſe to criminate him; 'tis only in regard of his Credit in this matter.

L. H. S. Call another Witneſs, my Lord.

L. Staf. Where is George Leigh? (Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. How old are you?

Leigh. I am about fifteen or ſixteen.

L. Staf. My Lords, I believe he is eighteen or nineteen.

Mr. Treby. Whoſe Servant is he?

L. Staf. He is my Servant; he hath ſerved me ſeven or eight Years.

L. H. S. What does your Lordſhip call him for?

L. Staf. To tell you whether I bid my Servants to go out when Dugdale came in, and whether ever he ſaw Dugdale and I alone.

L. H. S. George Leigh, how long have you lived with my Lord Stafford?

Leigh. Seven Years the 10th of June laſt.

L. H. S. Why then you were but nine Years old when you came to him?

Leigh. No, my Lords, I think I was not.

L. H. S. Do you remember when my Lord Stafford was at Tixall?

Leigh. I do not remember the Month very well.

L. H. S. Do you remember the Time of the Race at Etching-Hill?

Leigh. I do not remember the Day; but I was at it.

L. H. S. Did Mr. Dugdale come into your Lord's Chamber that Morning?

Leigh. I do not remember he was there that very Morning.

L. Staf. Be pleaſed to ask him whether ever I bid him go out of my Chamber when Dugdale was there.

L. H. S. Did you ever ſee Dugdale any other Morning in your Lord's Chamber?

Leigh. My Lords, I think not; I am not certain: He was there one Morning, and it was about a Race; but I am not certain what Race it was, whether it was two Boys ran, or two Men.

L. H. S. Did your Lord bid you go out of his Chamber?

Leigh. No, my Lords.

L. Staf. Dugdale ſays I often ſent him for him; pray ask him that Queſtion.

L. H. S. My Lord, this Boy does not remember that Dugdale at all was at your Chamber that time of the Race at Etching-Hill; ſo that it is not material to the Thing in queſtion.

L. Staf. Yes, my Lords, Dugdale told your Lordſhips yeſterday that I ſent this Boy often for him.

L. H. S. Did ever this Boy come for you?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he hath, I am ſure, come to my Chamber for me to go to my Lord.

L. H. S. Were you ſent for by my Lord more than once?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, ſeveral times.

L. H. S. Before or after the Race?

Mr. Dugdale. Both before the Race, and after the Race.

L. H. S. By whom were you ſent for?

Mr. Dugdale. Sometimes by the Gentleman that was laſt examined, and ſometimes by this Boy.

L. H. S. Did you ever come from my Lord Stafford to bid Dugdale come to him?

Leigh. My Lords, I do not remember that ever I did.

L. H. S. 'Tis an hard thing to remember ſo long.

L. Staf. If ever he came once to me, and was alone with me, I will be content to acknowledge all this to be true. Pray ask the other Man if ever I ſent him for him.

L. H. S. He did teſtify before, that he came with him that Day to your Lordſhip's Chamber.

L. Staf. That Day, my Lords: But he ſays, other Days I ſent for him.

L. H. S. Call Furneſe again. (Who ſtood up.) Furneſe, did my Lord Stafford ever ſend you for Dugdale, either before or after the Race?

Furneſe. Never, my Lords, to his Chamber.

L. H. S. Did he ever in his Life ſend you to Mr. Dugdale, to ſpeak with him, as you remember?

Furneſe. Never, my Lords.

L. Staf. He was, my Lords, ſuch a Fellow, I could not endure he ſhould come near me; ſuch an impudent lying Fellow.

L. H. S. Have you any more Witneſſes, my Lord?

L. Staf. Yes, a great many.

L. H. S. Call them all, I pray.

L. Staff. My Lords, I hope you think I would not be ſo great and impudent a Fool to employ ſuch a Fellow as this, who not long after run away from my Lord Aſton's.

L. H. S. Who did?

L. Staff. Stephen Dugdale. And for that, if you pleaſe, I would call ſome Witneſſes.

L. H. S. Call Furneſe again. (Who ſtood up.) Did you ever ſee Dugdale and my Lord Stafford together?

Furneſe. Never in my Life.

L. H. S. Why you ſaw them together that Morning you brought him to the Chamber.

(Then the Auditory laughed.)

Furneſe. Never alone.

L. Staf. I did not think I was in a Cock-Pit, or a Play-Houſe. But if your Lordſhips pleaſe to let me call my Witneſſes, to prove that Dugdale ran away from my Lord Aſton, I ſhall call for that Thomas Sawyer. (Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. Sawyer.

L. H. S. Your Chriſtian Name.

Witneſs. Thomas.

L. H. S. Who do you live withal?

Sawyer. My Lord Aſton.

L. H. S. Where do you live?

Sawyer. At Tixall.

L. H. S. Are you my Lord Aſton's Servant?

Sawyer. Yes.

L. H. S. How long have you been ſo?

Sawyer. Six Years, and ever ſince Michaelmas.

L. H. S. What have you to ſay?

Sawyer.

Sawyer. As to Dugdale's Reputation, I have this to ſay, How that he went from my Lord Aſton's for Debt, and was taken by the Watch at Heywood.

L. H. S. When was that?

Sawyer. The latter end of November, or the beginning of December.

L. H. S. What Year?

Sawyer. (78.)

L. H. S. Then the Family broke up.

Sawyer. And coming thither, and being taken by the Watch, he was brought by the Juſtices to Tixall; and after the Juſtices had been with my Lord, their Reſolution was to carry him to the Goal. So coming to Tixall, where Dugdale was at an Ale-Houſe, he deſired me to go to my Lord, and deſire him that he would own him as his Servant, for he was ſo much in Debt, that he ſhould elſe be undone for ever. In the mean time Mr. Philips, the Parſon of the Town, had been with my Lord, (for Dugdale had deſired him to go to him alſo) and he asking me whither I was going; ſaid I, I am going to my Lord from Dugdale, to deſire him to own him as his Servant. Said he, I have been with my Lord juſt now, and he ſaid, he will not own him as his Servant; it was his own Act and Deed. So Mr. Philips and I came back to him, and told him. So he ſat down in the Chair, and then roſe up again, and ſwore, He would be revenged of my Lord Aſton, if ever it lay in his power.

L. H. S. You never heard him ſay he would be revenged of my Lord Stafford, did you?

Sawyer. No, of my Lord Aſton. Then another time, being at Stafford, he owed me twenty nine Pounds, and he was under the Serjeant's hands; and then he promiſed me from time to time he would pay me, and did not keep his Word. This was three or four Days before he begun to peach. He bid me come ſuch a Day, and he would pay me part of the Money; and when I came thither, he told me it was reported that he ſhould be a Peacher; and that there was a Speech, how that he ſhould have two hundred Pounds for informing that there were fourteen Prieſts in the Country: But he takes a Glaſs of Drink, and, Thomas, ſays he, by God, I wiſh this may be my Damnation and my Poiſon, if I know of any Plot, or any Prieſts.

L. H. S. Was not he a Papiſt then?

Sawyer. I cannot abſolutely tell that, whether he was or no.

L. H. S. Do you know one Father Evers?

Sawyer. My Lords, I have ſeen him.

L. H. S. Hath he never been at Tixall?

Sawyer. Yes, my Lords, I have ſeen him there.

L. H. S. And have not you ſeen Dugdale in his Company?

Sawyer. Yes, I have.

L. H. S. Did not you at Tixall think Dugdale a ſtout able Fellow?

Sawyer. No, he never was accounted to be ſo.

L. H. S. Then I ask you, if you thought him an honeſt Man, or a rich Man?

Sawyer. No, truly, my Lords: For I'll tell you more than that; My Lord Aſton imployed him to be his Bailiff, and receive his Rents, and to pay Workmen their Wages, which he received every Saturday. And my Lord Aſton did account with him, where he did ſet his Hand to receive the poor Workmens Wages according to their Bills, when they had not been paid ſome of them whole Years, and half Years, and Quarters. And they came and cried to my Lord, that they were not paid. And thereupon Dugdale did ſay, that one of them had demanded more of my Lord than was his due; for he ſaid he had reckon'd ſuch a Day with him, and paid him ſo much Money; which Man ſaid he was not that Day at Tixall: And ſo he hindered him of part of his Money.

L. H. S. Did you ever know that Dugdale did forſwear himſelf?

Sawyer. That I do not know, my Lords. I did hear he was concerned in a Race, about which there was a Tryal and a Diſpute which had won. This I have heard by Report.

Sir Fran. Win. Speak your own Knowledge, not Reports.

L. H. S. I ask you, do you remember the Day when my Lord Stafford came to Tixall?

Sawyer. He came on the 12th Day of the Month.

L. H. S. What, September?

Sawyer. Yes, the 12th of September.

L. H. S. Did you ever ſee Dugdale in the Company of my Lord Stafford, while he was at Tixall?

Sawyer. No, never in the Houſe; but at the Race, he hath come into the Parlour.

Mr. Treby. You had Diſcourſe with Dugdale: You ſay he took a Glaſs, and drank, and wiſhed it might be his Poiſon. Was not Father Evers that time at my Lord Aſton's?

Sawyer. Not as I know of, my Lords.

Mr. Treby. Was he not commonly there?

Sawyer. Yes.

Mr. Treby. If he were, Mr. Dugdale muſt know it; and how then could he take a Glaſs, and wiſh it were Poiſon, if he knew where any Prieſt was, ſince it was apparent he knew where that Prieſt was? 'Tis moſt improbable Mr. Dugdale ſhould ſay thus!

Sawyer. My Lords, this was three or four Days e'er he confeſſed any thing he knew of his Knowledge.

Mr. Treby. What Perſuaſion of Religion are you?

Sawyer. Of the Church of England.

Mr. Ser. Mayn. Pray, my Lords, ask him one Queſtion; he ſays Dugdale went away from my Lord Aſton's, was not there a Speech of a Plot (at that time) that was diſcovered?

Sawyer. Yes, that I heard.

Sir Fr. Win. My Lords, I would ask him one Queſtion more: Was there no Diſcourſe of the Death of a Juſtice of Peace that was ſaid to be killed in London about that time?

Sawyer. To my beſt remembrance, as I heard, there was.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe that I ſhould call Witneſſes to confront him now, or afterwards?

Sir Will. Jones. Not now; ſtay till your time comes.

L. Staff. Then call Philips. (Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name, Sir?

Witneſs. Ralph Philips.

L. H. S. What are you, a Clergyman?

Mr. Philips. Yes.

L. H. S. Are you beneficed?

Mr. Philips. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. Where?

Mr. Philips. At Tixall, my Lord.

L. H. S. You are a Perſon that knows the Obligation that lies upon you to give a true Teſtimony; what can you ſay of Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Philips. My Lords, I have very little to ſay concerning Stephen Dugdale as to any thing of the Plot,

Plot, but in reference to what he ſhould relate concerning Mr. Sambridge and me in the Narrative which he depoſed upon the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman: He ſaid then he did receive a Letter concerning the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, which was dated the 12th of October, as I remember; and that he did communicate the Letter to Mr. Sambridge and me immediately the next Tueſday: whereas I will aſſure you, my Lords, I never heard neither by Letter nor Word of Mouth from him nor any other, till it was publickly known.

L. H. S. You did not live in my Lord Aſton's Houſe, did you?

Mr. Philips. No, my Lords.

Sir Will. Jones. We know not what he ſays, we deſire to underſtand what he means.

L. H. S. He takes notice that Dugdale at the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman did depoſe touching a Letter dated the 12th of October, which ſhould come down to Tixall, intimating the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, and that he did communicate that with the Parſon of Tixall and another; which Parſon comes now to ſay, he did communicate no ſuch Matter to him.

Sir Will. Jones. We deſire to ask him whether he was preſent at that Tryal, and heard him ſay ſo?

Mr. Philips. I was not preſent at the Tryal, but if the Narrative of the Tryal be Truth, he did ſay ſo.

L. H. S. So then, you only come to diſprove what is printed that Dugdale ſhould ſay.

Mr. Philips. Then I leave it to your Judgments, whether what he ſaid in the Narrative of that Tryal do concur with the Truth.

L. Staf. I deſire then to ask him whether Stephen Dugdale did not run away from my Lord Aſton's, and would have him go to my Lord to own him for his Servant.

L. H. S. What do you know of Dugdale's running away?

Mr. Philips. I know nothing at all of that, my Lords.

L. Staf. Whether he did ſpeak to him to own him for his Servant when he was in the Juſtices hands?

L. H. S. Can you ſay any thing touching the Credit of Dugdale?

Mr. Philips. I have nothing to ſay concerning Dugdale's Credit.

L. H. S. Did you know him?

Mr. Philips. Yes, ever ſince I came to Tixall.

L. H. S. How long is that?

Mr. Philips. About fourteen Years.

L. H. S. What Reputation had he in the Country? Was he looked upon as one that would perjure himſelf?

Mr. Philips. I never knew any thing of that.

L. H. S. Was he thought a ſtout Man?

Mr. Philips. He was in good repute with ſome, and indifferent with others.

L. H. S. Will you call any more Witneſſes, my Lord?

L. Staf. I would only ask him one Queſtion; whether he did go to my Lord Aſton from Dugdale to know if he would own him for his Servant.

L. H. S. What ſay you, Sir, did you?

Mr. Philips. Yes, my Lords, he knows very well I did; he did requeſt me to go to him. My Lord Aſton I was loth to go to, becauſe I had no Familiarity with him, nor Intereſt in him; but he did requeſt and urge me ſo much, that I did go by much Motives and Perſuaſions from him, and I did ſpeak to my Lord: ſo I told him the Meſſage I had was from Mr. Dugdale, who would requeſt of my Lord that he would own him for his Servant; for if he did not, he knew not what to do with himſelf; but if he did, he might be free from the Goal and from the Oaths, and eſcape the Troubles that were upon him. So my Lord reply'd to me, 'tis his own Act and Deed, and I have nothing to do with him, and let the Juſtices do what they will with him; which were Sir Walter Bagott, and Mr. Kinnerſley.

Mr. Foley. We deſire to know whether he heard any Diſcourſe about a Plot at that time, or no?

Mr. Philips. Truly, my Lords, I heard a Talk of a Plot, but not at that time.

Mr. Foley. My Lords, I deſire to know if he took Mr. Dugdale for a Perſon that might be in the Plot, if there was any ſuch thing?

Mr. Philips. I cannot tell how to anſwer that, 'tis a hard Queſtion; I am not ſo intimately acquainted with Perſons whoſe Secrets are not repoſed in me.

L. Staf. The next Witneſs I deſire may be (with the leave of the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons) Sir Walter Bagott, I did deſire him to be here.

Sir Will. Jones. There he is, we do not oppoſe it.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordſhip's pleaſure that Sir Walter Bagott be heard in his Place?

Lords. Yes.

Sir Walter Bagott.

L. H. S. What would you ask Sir Walter, my Lord?

L. Staff. My Lords, I deſire to ask Sir Walter Bagott, whether he did not apprehend Dugdale, and upon what account it was?

L. H. S. Sir Walter Bagott, my Lord deſires to know of you, whether you did apprehend Dugdale, and upon what account?

Sir Walter Bagott. My Lords, Mr. Dugdale was taken at an unſeaſonable time of Night, and brought to me the next morning by the Watch, as the other Witneſſes have told your Lordſhips. And I took him away to Stafford, where there were ſeveral other Juſtices of the Peace; there we offered him the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, which he took. After the taking of theſe Oaths, we told him, that he was a likely Man to know ſomething of the Plot, and it was a very proper time for him to diſcover it to us that were Juſtices: he at that time did deny the Knowledge of it, that is all I can ſay.

L. Staf. I deſire Sir Walter Bagott may be asked whether he did not go to my Lord Aſton, to ſee whether he would own Dugdale as his Servant.

L. H. S. Did you ask my Lord Aſton to own him for his Servant.

Sir W. Bagott. Yes, I did: for my Lord's Houſe being in the way to Stafford, whither I was going, I called upon him to know if Mr. Dugdale were his Servant: he told me he was no Servant of his, and he would not receive him; upon which I and another Juſtice of the Peace that was with me, took him to Stafford. The occaſion of our meeting there, was to ſummon in the Militia, upon an Alarm of the Papiſts being riſen in Derbyſhire.

L. Staff. I make this uſe of it, my Lords, that my Lord Aſton would not receive him: and if my Aſton had known he had been in the Plot, and could have diſcovered him, he would not have diſobliged him.

L. H. S. Nay, he ſays more than that, which you don't hear; he ſays, when they examined him, they gave him the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and then told him he would do well to diſcover his Knowledge of the Plot, and then he did not own any thing he knew; nay, he deny'd it.

Mr.

Mr. Foley. Did he deny the knowing of it?

Sir Wal. Bag. Yes, he did then.

Sir F. Win. He was not reſolved to diſcover at that time.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. We deſire Sir Walter Bagott may be ask'd whether he examined him upon his Oath, or no.

Sir W. Bag. No, I did not.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. But had they then juſt given him the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy?

Sir W. Bag. Yes, my Lords, we gave him thoſe Oaths, and thoſe only.

L. Staff. Then Mr. Kinnerſley, if you pleaſe. (Who ſtood up.) Be pleaſed to ask this worthy Gentleman what he knows about Dugdale's going from my Lord Aſton.

L. H. S. Firſt let us know this Gentleman.

L. Staff. His Name is Kinnerſley.

Mr. Kin. What Queſtions would your Lordſhip ask me?

L. Staff. What you know about Dugdale's going from my Lord Aſton.

L. H. S. Mr. Kinnerſley, we muſt know your Chriſtian Name.

Mr. Kin. Thomas.

L. H. S. Do you know Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Kin. My Lords, I was not acquainted with Mr. Dugdale, till Sir Brian Broughton, Sir Walter Bagott, and I and others gave him the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, the latter end of November, or the beginning of December; I did not take notice exactly of the time.

L. H. S. What Year?

Mr. Kin. 78.

L. H. S. Well, Sir, go on.

Mr. Kin. When he had taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, I ask'd him if he knew any Treaſon or Conſpiracy againſt the King, telling him it was a ſeaſonable time to declare it. He told me he knew of none. This is all I know, and all the Diſcourſe that I remember we had with Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray why did you ask him that Queſtion?

Mr. Kin. The Plot was then newly broken out.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Why did you ask him ſo particularly?

Mr. Treby. Why did you think Mr. Dugdale concerned in it?

Mr. Kin. Becauſe we heard he was a Papiſt, and my Lord Aſton's Servant.

L. Staff. Then I deſire Sir Thomas Whitgrave may be examined. (Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What ſay you to Sir Thomas Whitgrave, my Lord?

L. Staf. Will your Lordſhips pleaſe to ask Sir Tho. Whitgrave, whether he did not examine Dugdale about the Plot, and what he ſaid at that time.

Sir Tho. Whitgrave. My Lords, I came to Stafford the latter end of November, or the beginning of December, I am not certain which; but I think it was this time two Years. The Deputy-Lieutenants met about the Militia of the County. They told me that Mr. Dugdale was in Town, and was under an Arreſt: the occaſion of his coming to Town, was his Refuſal of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, which he had ſince taken. I propos'd to them the ſending for him, for I thought this was a fit Opportunity to get ſomething of him about the Plot. They ſeemed to approve of what I ſaid; but withal, I told them it was not good to ſend for him till the Evening late, that the People of the Town might not take notice of his coming. At night we did ſend for him, and the Gentlemen deſired that I would examine him at the end of the Table: ſo I called him up, and told him, I was ſorry he was fallen into that Misfortune to be arreſted, and that Mr. Mayor had not dealt well with him or us to take that advantage of him; that now he had taken the Oaths, I look'd upon him as one of us, and would do him any Kindneſs I could. He ſaid, Truly for his part, he was born a Proteſtant, and of Proteſtant Parents; and it was his Misfortune to fall into the Houſes of Papiſts, but he never lik'd their Religion. I then told him, Sir, you may do your ſelf a kindneſs, ſerve God, and oblige your King and Country: I am very confident you know of this horrid Plot; pray do not ſtifle your Conſcience with any Oath of Secrecy, but let it come out. Many, I told him, ſtrain'd their Conſciences to ſerve their Intereſts; but you may clear your Conſcience, and at the ſame time promote your true Intereſt. He reply'd, As he hop'd to be ſav'd he knew nothing of it. And this is as much as I know of the Matter.

L. H. S. Do you ask him any Queſtions, Gentlemen?

Manag. No, my Lord.

L. Staf. My Lords, I ſhall humbly move your Lordſhips now, that you will pleaſe to take notice, this Fellow Dugdale hath endeavour'd to perſuade People to ſwear againſt me falſly, and offer'd them Money for it. In order to the Proof of which, I deſire your Lordſhips would call John Morrall, Samuel Holt, and William Robinſon.

(Then Robinſon ſtood up.)

L. Staf. This Man I never ſaw before in my Life.

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. Robinſon.

L. H. S. What is your Chriſtian Name?

Robinſon. William.

L. H. S. Where do you live?

Robin. In Worceſterſtire now.

L. H. S. With whom?

Robin. With myſelf now.

L. H. S. Do you know Dugdale?

Sir F. Win. We deſire he may give you an account what Profeſſion he is of.

Robin. An Upholſterer.

Sir F. Win. How long hath he liv'd in Worceſterſhire, and in what Place there?

Robin. I have lived half a year in Worceſterſhire, half a mile beyond Worceſter.

Sir F. Win. And whether he follows that Trade or Profeſſion now, or no?

Robin. No, I do not follow it now.

Sir F. Win. What do you live upon, and how?

Robin. I live of myſelf now?

L. H. S. How is that?

Robin. Of my own Money.

Mr. Hambden. We deſire to know whether this Man was a Servant to my Lady Gerard, or no.

Robin. Never.

Mr. Hamb. Or to my Lord Gerard of Gerards-Bromley?

Robin. Never, not an hired Servant, my Lords.

Mr. Foley. Were you a Voluntier Servant, or what were you?

Mr. Treby. Did you work at any time there for my Lord or Lady Gerard?

Robin. No.

L. H. S. How came you to live there?

Robin.

Robin. I went over from a Cocking out of Cheſhire.

L. H. S. How long were you there?

Robin. Three Weeks or a Month.

L. H. S. What was your Employment there?

Robin. Nothing at all; I followed no Employment.

Mr. Treby. What kind of Servant were you then?

L. H. S. Come, do you know Dugdale?

Robin. Yes.

L. H. S. How long have you known him?

Robin. I have known him about five Years.

L. H. S. What ſay you to him?

Robin. I ſay, I met Mr. Dugdale about Midſummer was twelvemonth, in London, about Charing-Croſs, and he carried me to the Harp and Ball, and gave me Beer and Mum, and ſuch as the Houſe did afford, and treated me; and ask'd me what made me ſo dejected and caſt down. I told him I was not well; I was poorer than I us'd to be. He told me again, I ſhould not want any Money that he had; and if I would pleaſe to be rul'd by him, and do what he would have me, he would furniſh me with Money. And he took his Handkerchief out of his Pocket, and bid me, if I wanted, take Money there. I took none; but told him, I would not meddle nor make with any thing that Night. Then he told me he could furniſh me with Money, and put me in a way to get Money, if I would come in as an Evidence againſt my Lord Stafford.

L. Staf. Be pleaſed to ask him, for I never ſaw the Man before, nor heard of him till laſt Week, what he ſhould ſay againſt me, and whether he knew me, or not.

L. H. S. Did he tell you what you ſhould ſay againſt my Lord Stafford?

Robin. Nothing at all, my Lords.

L. Staf. Did he ſay any thing, or nothing? Or did he ask whether he knew me or not?

L. H. S. Did you tell him you knew my Lord Stafford?

Robin. No, if it pleaſe you, I told him I did not know him.

L. H. S. And after you ſaid you did not know him, he offered you Money to ſwear againſt him, did he?

Robin. Yes, my Lords, he did ſo, to come in as an Evidence againſt him.

L. Staf. Will your Lordſhips pleaſe to ask how much Money there was in the Handkerchief?

L. H. S. How much Money was in the Handkerchief?

Robin. I believe there might be eight, or nine, or ten Pounds.

L. H. S. Did he offer you all the Money, or bid you take ſome?

Robin. He bid me take ſome.

L. H. S. Did he make any Agreement with you for what you ſhould take?

Robin. No, not at all, my Lords.

Mr. Foley. Did he ſee Dugdale any more, or was there an end of it then?

Robin. No, I ſaw him no more.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Sir W. Jones. We ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of him (we deſire him not to go away) when our time comes.

(Then another Witneſs ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. John Morrall.

L. H. S. What are you?

Morrall. A Barber.

L. H. S. Where do you live?

Mor. At Ridgeley.

L. H. S. Where is that?

Mor. In Staffordſhire, within ſix Miles of Stafford.

L. H. S. What do you ask him?

L. Staff. Whether Dugdale did not perſuade him to ſwear againſt ſome of the Lords in the Tower?

L. H. S. Do you know Dugdale?

Mor. Yes, my Lords; I have known him twelve or thirteen Years.

L. H. S. What can you ſay againſt him?

Mor. My Lords, this Mr. Dugdale the 6th of Auguſt laſt was twelvemonth ſent for me to the White Horſe in Ridgeley; and there, when I came to him, he told me I knew as much of the Plot as he. I told him I was innocent of the thing. He ſwore God damn him, that I knew as much as he. Then I told him, if he knew no more than I did, he knew no more than my Lord Mayor's great Horſe did. Then he took me aſide: Come, ſays he, you are a poor Man, and live poorly, I can put you in a way whereby you may live gallantly; I will give you 50 l. in hand, if ſo be you will do ſo and ſo, and 50 l. more when the thing is done.

L. H. S. What do you mean by ſo and ſo?

Mor. To ſwear againſt Mr. Howard, Sir James Symons, and ſeveral other Gentlemen of the Country.

L. H. S. Did he offer you any Money to ſwear againſt my Lord Stafford?

Mor. No, I did not hear him mention any thing of him.

L. H. S. But he offer'd you Money to ſwear againſt Symons and Howard?

Mor. Yes, my Lord; and Herbert Aſton, my Lord Aſton's Kinſman.

L. H. S. What were you to ſwear?

Mor. That they were at ſuch a Meeting at Mr. Herbert Aſton's, upon the Conſpiracy of the Plot.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any thing?

Man. No, ſet him by.

(Then another Witneſs ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. Samuel Holt.

L. H. S. What Profeſſion are you of?

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, ask him whether Dugdale would perſwade him to ſwear that which he knew not.

L. H. S. What Profeſſion are you of?

Holt. A Proteſtant of the Church of England.

L. H. S. What Trade?

Holt. A Blackſmith.

L. H. S. Where do yo live?

Holt. At Tixall.

L. H. S. Are you my Lord Aſton's Servant?

Holt. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. What ſay you?

Holt. My Lords, he ſent a Man and a Horſe for me to Stafford to the Star——

L. H. S. Who did?

Holt. Mr. Dugdale did. And there I waited upon him a good while. At length he came and told me he muſt ſpeak with me privately: ſo he told me, if I would ſwear that Walter Moor carried Evers away, he would give me 40 l. And he bid me not be afraid to ſwear, for fear of my Lord Aſton; for he would hire me an Horſe, and get me to London, and place me, that where I got one Shilling, I ſhould get five.

L. H. S. Did you know Evers?

Holt. Yes, my Lords, I have ſeen him:

L. H. S.

L. H. S. Do you know when he went away from Tixall?

Holt. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. What elſe can you ſay?

Holt. Nothing elſe.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Gentlemen?

Manag. No.

L. Staff. The next thing I go upon, is, that Stephen Dugdale, at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, ſwore, That he acquainted Sambidge with the Letter about the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, the Monday or Tueſday after, which Mr. Sambidge denies. And in order to that, I call Mr. Sambidge; but if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I ſhall firſt prove that he ſwore it then. Where is Mr. Lydcott? (Who ſtood up.) I deſire to ask him whether Dugdale did ſwear at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, that he acquainted Mr. Sambidge with the Letter about the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey.

L. H. S. You, Fellow!

Witneſs. My Lord.

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witn. John Lydcott.

L. H. S. How do you live?

Lydcott. I am a Fellow of King's College in Cambridge.

L. H. S. What do you come to ſay?

Lyd. I don't know, my Lords, what my Lord will ask me.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, before you enter into the Examination of this Man, we deſire to ask him a Queſtion or two.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Whoſe Servant are you, or were you lately?

Lyd. I am a Fellow of King's College.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. But whom did you ſerve lately? Were you never Secretary to a Lord?

Lyd. Yes, I was.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. To what Lord?

Lyd. To my Lord Caſtlemain, Sir.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Lyd. Of the Church of England, and always was; nay, I can't ſay always, for I was bred up a Preſbyterian: my Father was a Colonel under Monk.

L. Staff. Mr. Lydcott, I ask whether you did not hear Mr. Dugdale ſwear at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. I deſire one Favour, my Lords: my Lord Stafford asks Queſtions to lead the Witneſſes; pray let him ask his Queſtions more generally.

L. H. S. You ſay you are a Proteſtant?

Lyd. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. When did you laſt receive the Sacrament?

Lyd. When I was laſt at Cambridge —— No, not ſo; for it is not above a Year ago that I was there.

L. H. S. When then did you receive the Sacrament?

Lyd. I do not exactly remember, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord, I would be glad to know what is the Queſtion your Lordſhip calls him for, that your Lordſhip may not ask the Queſtion, but by me.

L. Staff. My Lords, I deſire to know (for my part I know not what his Anſwer will be) whether he did hear, at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, Dugdale ſwear he had communicated the News of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Death, which was on the Saturday, on the Tueſday after to any People, and to whom.

L. H. S. Were you at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits?

Lyd. Yes, I was.

L. H. S. Did you hear Dugdale ſwear there, and give his Teſtimony?

Lyd. Yes, I did.

L. H. S. Do you remember what Dugdale ſwore then?

Lyd. Very well.

L. H. S. What was it?

Lyd. My Lords, Mr. Dugdale ſpoke of a Letter that came down to my Lord Aſton's on the Monday, and he imparted it on the Tueſday after, at an Alehouſe, to one Mr. Sambidge, and Mr. Philips: this was alſo at Sir George Wakeman's Tryal, which I took notice of more particularly, becauſe I had occaſion to take ſome Notes there.

L. H. S. What uſe do you make of this, my Lord?

L. Staf. If that be allow'd to be ſo, then I will call no more Witneſſes; otherwiſe I have more.

L. H. S. Call them all.

L. Staf. Then call Mr. Charles Gifford.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray, my Lords, give me leave to ask this young Scholar one Queſtion before he goes. By whoſe Commendation or Means did you come into that College?

Lyd. By Election from Eaton.

Mr. Ser. Mayn. Who promoted you?

Lyd. One Mr. Doyley, now Senior Fellow of King's College; it was his Election.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I would ask him one Queſtion. He ſays he went to take Notes; by whoſe Direction did he go to take Notes at Sir George Wakeman's Tryal?

Lyd. It was for my own Curioſity.

L. H. S. Friend, 'tis all one as if you were upon your Oath, and as penal to you: By whoſe Direction did you go?

Lyd. It was partly my own Curioſity, and partly to ſee what Evidence was againſt my Lord; for my Lord Caſtlemain thought himſelf concerned as well as others, and therefore deſired me to go.

Sir F. Win. Now it is out.

Sir W. Jones. It was done like a Secretary.

L. H. S. Had you ever that Curioſity before?

Lyd. Yes, I'll aſſure your Lordſhips, I had a great Curioſity to hear it.

L. H. S. Were you at any other Tryal?

Lyd. Yes, at the five Jeſuits Tryal, and Langhorn's.

(Then another Witneſs ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. Charles Gifford.

L. Staf. Ask him whether he did not hear at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, or Sir George Wakeman, Dugdale ſay, that he did communicate that Letter to ſome People, I name not who, the Tueſday after?

L. H. S. Were you at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits?

Gifford. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Did you take Notes?

Gif. Yes, my Lords, I was ſummoned there as an Evidence; I had occaſion of being there, both at the five Jeſuits Tryal, and Wakeman's and Langhorn's.

L. H. S. You took Notes you ſay?

Gif. Yes, I did.

L. H. S. What do you remember that Mr. Dugdale did then ſwear?

Gif. I remember at the five Jeſuits Tryal, he did ſwear he received a Letter ſent to Evers, which he intercepted, and it ſpoke of the Death of a Juſtice of Peace; and he returned anſwer to Evers again, he would be hang'd if it did not ſpoil the Buſineſs. And he ſaid farther, he could not hold, but went to an Alehouſe, and there he did impart it. But then he did ſay there was one that could teſtify and make out what he ſaid: Upon which he call'd Mr. Chetwyn, who depos'd much to the ſame purpoſe. And then at Sir George Wakeman's Tryal he did poſitively declare, that he ſpoke of it at an Alehouſe to a Miniſter, Parſon Philips, and my Lord Aſton's Kinſman.

L. H. S. What is his Name?

Gif. Mr. Sambidge.

L. Staf. Well, my Lords, I have no more to ſay to him: but I conceive by this 'tis plain, that Dugdale did then ſay, he had communicated it to Mr. Philips and Mr. Sambidge. I ſhall call Mr. Sambidge to give you an account.

(Mr. Sambidge ſtood up.)

L. Staf. Be pleaſed to ask him whether he did hear Mr. Dugdale ſay on the Tueſday, that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was murdered the Saturday before.

L. H. S. You hear the Queſtion, anſwer it.

Mr. Samb. Who muſt I ſpeak to?

L. Staff. He is very deaf, and very old, my Lords.

[Then the Black Rod was ſent to be near him, to put the Queſtion to him.]

Black Rod. What would you have him ask'd, my Lord?

L. Staff. Whether Mr. Dugdale did tell him on the Tueſday, that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was murder'd the Saturday before.

Black Rod. Did Mr. Dugdale tell you of the Tueſday, that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was murdered the Saturday before?

Mr. Samb. No, my Lords, he never told me any ſuch thing, I take it upon my Salvation. I never heard it till Friday or Saturday he was found at Bury-Hill.

L. Staff. Ask him if he were with Dugdale at the Alehouſe the Tueſday before.

Mr. Samb. Dugdale never ſpoke any ſuch thing to me.

L. H. S. Were not you with him at the Alehouſe?

Mr. Samb. No.

L. H. S. Not on Monday.

Mr. Samb. No.

L. H. S. Nor on Tueſday?

Mr. Samb. No.

L. H. S. Nor Wedneſday?

Mr. Samb. Not as I know of.

Sir W. Jones. We ſhall prove he was.

L. Staff. Pray ask him what Reputation Dugdale hath in the Country.

Mr. Samb. Oh, the wickedeſt Man that ever liv'd upon the face of the Earth: I know great part of it myſelf; and a hundred and a hundred of People will ſay as much.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Samb. I was never a Papiſt in my Life, nor ever a Fanatick.

L. H. S. What do you know of Dugdale in particular, that is ill.

Mr. Samb. Yes, my Lords, I'll tell you; he was a very abuſive Man, eſpecially to the Clergy, and moſt eſpecially to Mr. Philips, with whom I boarded. My Lord Aſton, that is dead, came and told me of it. Said I, You are miſinformed, for this Dugdale is a Knave and a Rogue, and all the Country rings of him for his Wickedneſs. Upon which, he cites me into Litchfield Court for defaming him; and he entertains all the Proctors, that I could not get one to put in my Anſwer: but before the Day came, he diſcharg'd the Court, and never appeared; for we had that againſt him that he durſt not appear.

L. H. S. What Particulars do you know?

Mr. Samb. He ſaid the Clergy of England was a lewd Clergy, and a pack of Rogues.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Manag. No.

L. H. S. Hath my Lord no more to ſay to him?

L. Staff. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, go on: Hath your Lordſhip done with Dugdale, or have you any more Witneſſes?

L. Staff. No, my Lords; I have a great deal more to ſay to him.

L. H. S. Go on then.

L. Staff. My Lords, I conceive by this, 'tis prov'd to your Lordſhips, that Dugdale did at that Tryal declare, he had acquainted Mr. Sambidge and Mr. Philips with the Letter about the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, the Tueſday after he was murder'd. And I conceive I have prov'd to your Lordſhips, by their denying it, that he did not tell them ſo; and ſo he is forſworn in that. I ſhould now have humbly deſired your Lordſhips, that you will pleaſe to call William Day; but upon asking the Queſtion, I find he is not yet come to Town, and ſo I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with him: I deſire that Thomas Sawyer may be call'd again.

(Who ſtood up.)

L. Staf. Pray be pleas'd to ask him, whether he did not hear Dugdale wiſh he might be damn'd, if he knew any thing of the Plot.

L. H. S. He ſaid that before.

L. Staff. Then I beg your Lordſhips pardon, I ſhall not call him again.

L. H. S. Go on, my Lord.

L. Staff. My Lords, there are a great many other Witneſſes which I could call; but it is to no purpoſe, and ſo I ſhall call no more as to Dugdale. I conceive upon the whole Matter, his Reputation and Credit are gone; for he is forſworn before the Juſtices of Peace, in that he ſaid there was no Plot, and wiſh'd he might be damn'd if he knew of any Plot. I conceive 'tis alſo prov'd, that upon the twentieth of September, when he ſays, I did communicate with him about the King's Death, he was only then with me upon his own Deſire, and my Servants were by: there was nothing diſcourſed of, but about the Foot-Race. And likewiſe, as to what he ſwore in Auguſt, that I was at ſuch a Meeting at Tixall, he is forſworn, for I was not there; and ſo I hope that Witneſs is laid aſide, no Creature will give any Credit to him, neither your Lordſhips nor the Houſe of Commons.

L. H. S. Have you done with Mr. Dugdale?

L. Staf. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Whom will you proceed againſt next?

L. Staff. Dr. Oates.

L. H. S. Call Dr. Oates.

L. Staf. Only give me leave to ſay one thing, my Lords, that you were pleaſed to ſay, I ſhould have Copies of the two Depoſitions of the twenty-fourth and twenty-ninth of December: And I had one to enquire, but cannot find that of the twenty-ninth. (Then Dr. Oates ſtood up.)

L. H. S.

L. H. S. What ſay you to Dr. Oates, my Lord?

L. Staf. This Dr. Oates, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I deſire may be ask'd, when was the firſt time he ever ſaw me in his Life.

L. H. S. When was the firſt time, Dr. Oates, you ſaw my Lord Stafford?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, the firſt time I ſaw this Gentleman at the Bar, was, as near as I remember, at Mr. Fenwick's.

L. H. S. That was in Drury-lane?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. When was that?

Dr. Oates. That was, as near as I remember, in June.

L. H. S. Was it that time the Commiſſion you ſpoke of was delivered?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Did you ſee that Commiſſion?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Did you read it?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. From whom was it?

Dr. Oates. I cannot be poſitive as to that; but, as near as I remember, it was ſign'd as the reſt was ſign'd.

L. H. S. How was that?

Dr. Oates. Johannes Paulus Oliva.

L. H. S. You read it?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I did, my Lords.

L. H. S. It was a Commiſſion to be Paymaſter of the Army, was it not?

Dr. Oates. Yes, it was.

L. H. S. And it was delivered to my Lord?

Dr. Oates. Yes, it was.

L. H. S. By the Name of Mr. Howard of Effingham?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. What ſays your Lordſhip to this?

L. Staf. What is it poſſible for me to ſay againſt this? I declare to your Lordſhips, in the Preſence of God, I never ſaw the Man in my Life. I never went by any Name, ſince I had the honour of being a Peer, but by the Name of Stafford. I never heard of Mr. Fenwick the Jeſuit, nor by the Name Thompſon, till this Plot was diſcovered, and he taken. This you may believe, or not, if you pleaſe; but this is as true as I am alive. My Lords, I deſire I may have out of the Journals the Depoſition on which I was committed.

L. H. S. Turn to the Journal.

L. Staf. It was read, as I remember, Friday 25. Octob. 78.

Then the Clerk turned to the Journal, and read.

Die Veneris 25° die Octobris 1678.

Clerk. THE Lord Viſcount Stafford acquainted the Houſe, That he was informed that there was a Warrant iſſued out from the Lord Chief Juſtice of England to apprehend him, which he thought fit to acquaint their Lordſhips with, and ſubmitted himſelf to their Lordſhips Judgment.

The Lord Chief Juſtice being preſent, was commanded to give the Houſe an account of the Buſineſs; who ſaid, That laſt Night, about nine of the Clock, he receiv'd a Letter from the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, dated from the Speaker's Chair, to come to the Houſe of Commons about Buſineſs of great Concernment. Accordingly he attended the Houſe of Commons, where the Speaker told him, That the Houſe of Commons had receiv'd Accuſations of High Treaſon againſt five Lords, and ſome Gentlemen, and deſir'd him to iſſue out his Warrants for their Apprehenſion. The Perſons were, the Earl of Powis, Viſcount Stafford, the Lord Arundel of Warder, the Lord Peters, and the Lord Bellaſis. And upon this he iſſued out his Warrants for their Apprehenſion, having taken the Examination of Titus Oates upon Oath. That the Earl of Pewis and the Lord Arundel were brought to him this Morning in Cuſtody; and he advis'd them to render themſelves to the Gatehouſe, where now they are.

Upon this the Examination of Oates was read, whereby it did appear, that the Lord Viſcount Stafford was charg'd to be in a Conſpiracy of Treaſon againſt the King.

The Lord Viſcount Stafford deny'd the Fact, and after this withdrew. And after a while the Houſe was inform'd that his Lordſhip would render himſelf to the Lord Chief Juſtice.

L. H. S. This is all that is in the Journal.

L. Staf. Then, my Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe to remember, all of you that were there, that I was accuſed by Dr. Oates, whoſe Depoſitions I deſire to ſee, taken before my Lord Chief Juſtice, that he had ſeen Letters of mine written to Fenwick, Harcourt, and ſome others, three or four Jeſuits, in which I was conſenting to the Plot; that I had ſent my Son to Lisbon, yet I would be as kind to the Jeſuits as before, tho there was ſome Difference between us. Theſe Affidavits I deſire to ſee, which, as I take it, were read before your Lordſhips that Day.

L. H. S. The Affidavit was taken by my Lord Chief Juſtice in the Houſe of Commons, where he did attend them upon their Summons: I know not if the Original were read in the Houſe of Lords, or the Copy; but it ſeems it is not entred into the Lords Journal: but your Lordſhip had an Order to take Copies of all things you would have demanded; and if you would not, I cannot tell what to ſay to it.

L. Staff. Truly I could not take a Copy, becauſe I did not know where it was. I deſire my Lord Chief Juſtice may be ask'd where it is; that is all I deſire, and I will then go on.

L. H. S. I think Dr. Oates does ſay at this time that he had ſeen Letters of your Lordſhip's, offering your Correſpondence and Aſſiſtance.

L. Staff. If Dr. Oates will own he ſaid no more than is in that Affidavit, I am content.

L. H. S. Have you any Copy of your own Examination, Dr. Oates?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords, I think I have it here.

L. H. S. Marry, that is very well; produce it then. Do you oppoſe it, Gentlemen?

Manag. No, we agree; we deſire the Truth may come out.

Then Dr. Oates looking amongſt his Papers, drew out one, and offer'd it to the Court.

L. H. S. Is that a true Copy of your firſt Examination?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I will not ſwear it, but it was given me for a true Copy.

L. H. S. By whom was it given you?

Dr. Oates. I can't remember now, 'tis two Years ago.

Sir W. Jones. Unleſs we know whence it comes, or what Authority it hath, we cannot conſent it ſhould be read.

L. H. S. Had you it from my Lord Chief Juſtice, or any Servant of his?

Dr. Oates. I cannot tell whether Sir Charles Harbord gave it me, or no.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, Sir Charles Harbord might be of the Committee of Examinations; but the Examination for which my Lord ask'd, was not in the Committee nor before the Houſe: My Lord Chief Juſtice retired out of the Houſe, & virtute Officii took it. Now it was very fair in Mr. Oates to produce it; but yet in point of Evidence, if he will not ſwear it to be a true Copy, or give an account how he came by it, we cannot allow it to be read.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, 'tis you that want this Paper, you deſire to have the Benefit of the Examination that was taken of Mr. Oates, and therefore you muſt produce a Copy of it.

L. Staff. My Lords, I could never get it.

L. H. S. 'Tis not entred in our Journal, nor is it to be trac'd, we know not where it is: You have had time enough to look after it. You are now offered by Oates himſelf a Copy that was given him for a true Copy, tho he can't ſwear by whom. Are you content that ſhall be read, if the Gentlemen will admit it?

L. Staff. By what I gueſs of Dr Oates. (I know him not) he would not give in a Copy of an Examination, unleſs it were true; if it be true, I know not what ſhould hinder the reading of it: but as far as concerns me, I deſire it may be read.

L. H. S. You do conſent, and will you Gentlemen permit it?

Mr. Serj. Mayn. We do not know whence it comes; we cannot admit it, unleſs Oates ſays 'tis true.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, it hath been long in the Doctor's Poſſeſſion, he hath read it over, he can't ſay 'tis a true Copy; but I deſire to ask him whether all in that Writing be true, and whether he did ſwear what is in that Writing.

L. H. S. If your Lordſhips pleaſe thus, and you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, the beſt way to have an Anſwer to this Queſtion is, that it may be read de bene eſſe.

Sir F. Win. Pray, my Lords, let him read it over to himſelf privately, and then let us know whether he can ſwear the ſame things that are in that Paper. (Which Dr. Oates began to do.)

Dr. Oates. Your Lordſhips ask only as to my Lord Stafford?

L. H. S. My Lord deſires no more, but pray read it over all, and give your Anſwer to all; for that Queſtion, may be, will be ask'd in other Caſes, and 'tis fit you ſhould be provided for it. (Which he did.)

L. H. S. What ſay you, Doctor?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I do verily believe I did ſwear the Contents of that Paper.

L. Staf. My Lords, I do not oppoſe the reading of that Paper; but I have here a Copy of ſomething in the Journal, and do not ſtand upon my Memory; but I think upon the viewing of it now, there is ſomething in the Copies of the Journal.

Clerks. We cannot find it.

L. Staf. Then read this Paper.

L. H. S. Will you have this Copy of the Examination read, or not?

L. Staf. Yes, my Lords.

Clerk. The Examination of Titus Oates Clerk, taken before us———

L. H. S. When was that?

Clerk. The 24th of October 1678.

L. H. S. That was read the 25th, the next Day, in the Houſe of Lords.

The Examination of Titus Oates Clerk, taken by us this 24th of October, 1678.

THis Examinant ſaith, That in the Month of May laſt, this Examinant ſaw a Patent under the Seal of the Father-General of the Society of Jeſus at Rome, call'd Johannes Paulus Oliva, at the Chamber of Mr. Langhorn, wherein it was expreſs'd, That by virtue of a Breve from the Pope, he did conſtitute the Lord Arundel of Warder Lord High Chancellor of England, which Patent was ſent to the Lord Arundel of Warder by a Meſſenger, who was the Son of Mr. Langhorn. And this Examinant ſaith, That he ſaw a Letter ſubſcribed by the Lord Arundel of Warder, as he believes, wherein the Lord Arundel did acknowledge the Receipt of the ſaid Patent, and accepted of the ſame, and promis'd to anſwer the Expectation of the Society.

This Examinant ſaith, That in June laſt he ſaw the like Patent, wherein the Lord Powis was conſtituted Lord Treaſurer of England, which Patent was carried by one Parſons, Secretary to the Lord Powis, from one Saunders's Houſe in Weldſtreet, to be delivered to the Lord Powis, and at the Delivery of the Patent 300*l.* was paid by Parſons to Fenwick and Ireland, to carry on the Deſign of the Jeſuits, which was to raiſe a Rebellion in the three Kingdoms, and to deſtroy the King.

In the Month of July this Examinant ſaw a Letter ſubſcribed Powis, and directed to Fenwick, wherein his Lordſhip did acknowledge the Receipt of the ſaid Patent, and did accept of the ſame, and ſaid he had three hundred Men and Horſe ready for the Deſign, and that his Lordſhip would venture his Life and Fortune in the Affair.

In the Month of Auguſt laſt this Examinant ſaw a Letter directed to Mr. Langhorn by the outſide, but within to the Society of the Jeſuits, wherein Sir William Godolphin acknowledged he had receiv'd the like Patent to be Lord Privy-Seal, and had accepted thereof; and in July 1677, this Examinant ſaw the ſame in the hands of the Archbiſhop of Tuam, at Madrid in Spain.

This Examinant ſaith, that in July laſt Mr. Coleman acknowledged and confeſſed to Fenwick, in this Examinant's Preſence, that he had receiv'd the like Patent to be Secretary of State, and that it was a good Exchange.

This Examinant ſaith, that in May, June, July, and Auguſt laſt, this Examinant ſaw ſeveral Letters ſign'd Stafford, whereby it appeared that the Lord Stafford was in this Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty, and that he had returned ſeveral Sums of Money to the Jeſuits to carry on the Deſign; the Letters were directed to Fenwick and Ireland: and in Auguſt laſt this Examinant ſaw another Letter directed to the ſame Perſons, ſign'd Stafford, wherein my Lord writ, that altho he had ſent his Son to Lisbon, yet he would be never the worſe Friend to the Jeſuits; and this Examinant conceiveth the reaſon of that Letter was, becauſe there was then a Difference between the Engliſh College at Lisbon and the Jeſuits. In July laſt this Examinant ſaw in the hands of Fenwick a Commiſſion directed to the Lord Bellaſis, from the Perſon aforeſaid, to be Lord General of the Army to be raiſed in England againſt his Majeſty; and in July this Examinant ſaw a Letter from my Lord, directed to Fenwick, wherein his Lordſhip acknowledged the Receipt of the Commiſſion, and and thanked the Society for the ſame, and that he accepted the ſame, and would do what in him lay to anſwer their Expectations.

In May laſt this Examinant ſaw a Patent in the hands of Mr. Langhorn, to make my Lord Peters Lieutenant-General of the Army; and in June laſt this Examinant did hear my Lord Peters, in the preſence of Mr. Longworth his Confeſſor, acknowledge the Receipt of the ſame, and that he accepted thereof, and his Confeſſor wiſh'd him much Joy thereof.

L. Staff. My Lords, If this be own'd for Truth that he ſwore, then I proceed upon the Evidence of that.

L. H. S. Without allowing it to be a true Copy, Dr. Oates at the Bar does ſwear what is ſaid there is true.

L. Staff. Then he ſays there, he ſaw Letters ſign'd by me to Fenwick and others, I do humbly deſire to know whether that be Evidence or no, that a Man ſays he ſaw Letters, and does not ſay he knew them to be my Hand, nor what the Letters were in particular, nothing that he did prove of it. I muſt appeal to your Lordſhips, to all my Lords, to my Lord High Steward, and the reſt that were of the Council at that time, Whether Dr. Oates did not poſitively name ſome, and left me out at the Council-Table? And whether Dr. Oates did not ſay there was no Lord concerned in the Plot, and whether ſome of my Lords did not ſay ſo, and told ſome other Lords of it, from whom I had it? And in order to this I deſire Sir Philip Lloyd may be examined; and if he did not know of my being in it, then he hath ſince forſworn himſelf.

L. H. S. My Lord, I know not where you are, nor what you are about: Are you objecting againſt Oates upon any Evidence out of the Journal?

L. Staff. My Lords, I go upon this that hath been read.

L. H. S. Pray, my Lord, produce your Witneſſes that did hear him ſay any thing, and take your Advantage of it.

L. Staff. I call Sir Philip Lloyd.

L. H. S. Where is Sir Philip Lloyd?

L. Staff. My Lords, I do not know; I think he is here, I hope he will come.

Then he appeared amongſt the Members of the Houſe of Commons, and was called to the Bar amongſt the other Witneſſes, and ſtood up.

L. H. S. What does your Lordſhip ask Sir Philip Lloyd?

L. Staff. Whether he was not by when Dr. Oates was ask'd, if there were any Lords concerned in the Plot, and he ſaid, No; and whether he did not tell me ſo a day or two before I was committed, in the Prince's Lodgings?

L. H. S. What ſay you Sir Philip Lloyd, did you ever hear Dr. Oates deny upon his Oath, that ever he heard of any Lords that were concerned in the Plot?

Sir Philip Lloyd. My Lords, truly I cannot remember any ſuch thing: If my Lord put me in mind of any particular Circumſtance or Time, I may recollect it: I muſt confeſs I think I have heard ſuch a thing rumour'd; but I am ſo unfortunate I cannot remember any thing poſitively of it.

L. Staff. He did tell me ſo I am ſure.

Sir Philip Lloyd. Truly, my Lords, I would be glad to remember any thing to juſtify the Truth; but I cannot remember this.

L. Staff. But whether it were ſo or no, your Lordſhips that were of the Council can tell.

L. H. S. My Lord, I do not know. Your Lordſhip cannot be refus'd, if you preſs it, to ask any of the Lords of the Council, if they remember any ſuch thing that did paſs there; but if I were there or in the Council, I deal plainly with your Lordſhip, I cannot ſay that there was any ſuch thing ſaid.

L. Staff. If there be any here that were there beſides, I deſire they may be ask'd.

L. H. S. If your Lordſhip will call upon any other of my Lords that were there, they will tell you.

L. Staff. I don't know who were there, I can't call them.

L. H. S. You may ask any of the Lords of the Council, who were there that time Dr. Oates was examined.

Lord Marq. of Worceſter. My Lords, I was not at the Council then; but I heard it, not there indeed, but as a general Report abroad.

L. Staff. I deſire my Lord Privy-Seal may tell what he knows of it.

Lord Privy-Seal. What is it your Lordſhip would know of me?

L. Staff. Whether Oates did not ſay he had no more to accuſe?

Lord Privy Seal. Where, my Lord?

L. Staff. At the Council-Table.

Lord Privy Seal. 'Tis a very hard thing for me to charge my Memory with all the Queſtions at an Examination; we uſe to refer to the Examinations themſelves: I have ſeen ſome Examinations, I wiſh all were ſo, wherein the Queſtions are put down as well as the Anſwer; and I cannot charge my Memory that he ſaid he had no more to accuſe.

L. Staff. I deſire then all the Lords of the Council that are here to ſay whether or no he was not ask'd this Queſtion particularly by my Lord Chancellor, (and I deſire particularly his Lordſhip would ſay whether he can't remember it) Whether he had any thing to ſay againſt ſome Lords? and he anſwer'd, they were to know of it, but God forbid he ſhould accuſe them.

L. H. S. When ſhould that be?

L. Staff. My Lords, I can't ſay the Day, for I was not in Town. But I deſire to ask whether you did not ask him upon the firſt Diſcovery of the Plot, whether he had any thing to ſay againſt ſome Lords?

L. H. S. Do you deſire to know whether I asked him this Queſtion, If he had any thing to ſay againſt ſome Lords?

L. Staff. I do not ſay poſitively your Lordſhip, but whether that Queſtion was not ask'd him?

L. H. S. Certainly I ſhould never ask any ſuch Queſtion of any man alive. I might ask in general of any Lord, but not of ſome.

L. Staff. Some or other Lords it was.

L. H. S. I don't remember it; and 'tis impoſſible for any Man living to remember what Queſtions he did ask two or three Years ago upon an Examination.

L. Staff. I deſire I may have leave to ask the Earl of Berkley a Queſtion.

L. H. S. What is it you would ask him?

L. Staff. My Lords, I humbly ask his Lordſhip, whether he did not hear Dr. Oates ſay, after he had accuſed ſome Perſons before the Council, that he had no more to accuſe?

Earl of Berkley. My Lords, I had the honour to be of the Privy-Council about the time of the Diſcovery of the Plot; but I do not remember that I heard Dr. Oates ſay any ſuch thing there.

L. Staf. Or in the Houſe of Lords; for I may miſtake. And therefore I deſire my Lord of Berkley would declare what he heard Dr. Oates ſay before the Houſe of Lords.

Earl of Berkley. Yes, my Lords; in the Lords Houſe I will tell your Lordſhips what I remember. My Lord Chancellor, to the beſt of my remembrance, did ask Dr. Oates, at the Bar of the Houſe, this Queſtion——My Lords deſire to know if you can accuſe any other Perſon or Perſons, of what Quality ſoever, and you are incouraged by their Lordſhips to accuſe them: His Anſwer was—— My Lords, I have no more to accuſe in relation to England, but in relation to Ireland I have.

L. H. S. That was after he had accuſed your Lordſhip, my Lord Stafford.

Sir Will. Jones. We pray, my Lords, we may have the favour to ask that very Honourable Lord, at what time Dr. Oates ſaid this, for the ſatisfaction of thoſe that are preſent.

Earl of Berkley. My Lords, it was after Dr. Oates had accuſed my Lord Stafford, but before he had accuſed the Queen.

L. Staff. I beſeech you, my Lords, to mark it (and I am very glad of it) he ſaid he had no more to accuſe in relation to England, and yet after that he accuſed the Queen.

L. H. S. My Lord, then the beſt Account of it will be on the Journal, the Queſtion and Anſwer is entred there.

Die Jovis 31 die Octobr. 1678.

Poſt Meridiem.

Titus Oates being at the Bar, is directed to proceed in giving an account of the Commiſſions given to ſeveral Lords, and other Perſons for Offices Civil and Military.

Upon which he proceeded in a particular Narrative thereof, with ſome Circumſtances tending to make out the truth thereof, and then was commanded to withdraw, but ſtay without.

Then upon conſideration had hereof, the Lord Chancellor, by Directions of the Houſe, cauſed him to be called in again, and told him, that the Lords expect not his entring into particular Circumſtances, but if there be particular Perſons concerned, of what Quality ſoever they be, the Houſe expected he ſhould name them; but he named none but thoſe he had mentioned in his Narrative, nor could name no other Perſon.

L. Staf. Then, my Lords, he ſaid, he knew no Perſons more than he had diſcovered; and after, did he not accuſe the Queen, and ſeveral others? if he ſaid true, then he knew no body more; if not, he is forſworn.

Sir Will. Jones. Pray prove he did accuſe the Queen.

L. Staff. He did ſo in the Council, and he is clearly perjured in that, and ſo not to be believed. And I ſay beſides, after that Dr. Oates had conſulted with himſelf, and poſſibly with ſome others, what his Narrative ſhould be, and what he ſhould accuſe Perſons of, and did only accuſe me of ſeeing ſome Letters ſigned Stafford, and now he comes to give Evidence, he knows more of my having a Commiſſion. After this rate, it may be he may know a great deal more to-morrow, when he hath invented it: and 'tis a great Sign he did not know of any more, if he did know of that; for I never had any Correſpondence with the Jeſuits, nor any Buſineſs tranſacted with them theſe twenty four or twenty five Years. Indeed at Ghent the Engliſh Jeſuits were deſired to do a little thing for me, and they refuſed it me; it was to ſend over a Man that was to be a Witneſs in a Suit I had beyond Sea: And I never writ one Letter to a Jeſuit ſince, nor he to me, that I know of, nor never had to do with them that I know of. I never heard of Fenwick's Name, nor Harcourt's, till I heard of the Plot; nor of Johnſon nor Thompſon, Jeſuits: and if any can prove it, I will acknowledge my ſelf guilty of all that is ſaid againſt me. And for that Dr. Oates at firſt ſaid, he only ſaw Letters of mine, and after comes and accuſes me of a Commiſſion, I appeal to your Lordſhips if there can be any Truth or Belief in him. I cannot ſay more than what I have ſaid already, and I do challenge Dr. Oates, at the Day of Judgment, to ſay, if ever he ſaw me in his life till I was committed; or if I did ever go by any Name, but that of Stafford, I will be content to die immediately. If I had gone by the Name of Howard, I need not be aſhamed of it; for 'tis a Name good enough to be owned. I know there is a worthy Gentleman that bears the Name of Howard of Effingham, but I never did. If your Lordſhips pleaſe to let me ask Mr. Dugdale one Queſtion.

L.H.S. Call Dugdale again. (Who appear'd.) What ſay you to him my Lord?

L. Staf. I deſire to ask Dugdale, whether he did not, in his Depoſitions before Mr. Lane and Mr. Vernon, ſwear, that the 20th of October I offered him 500 l. to kill the King?

Mr. Dugd. No, September.

L. Staf. Ay, September,

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I think I did make that Depoſition before Captain Lane. I am certain I did, that my Lord Stafford the 20th or 21ſt of September offered me 500 l.

L. Staff. Then did not he ſay preſently upon this, he went to Mr. Evers's Chamber?

L. H. S. He ſays ſo now.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I am not certain it was the ſame Day, it was as ſoon as I could have opportunity, it was preſently after.

L. Staf. Did he not ſay he told Evers what I ſaid to him, and he did not underſtand the Meaning of it?

Mr. Dugd. I did ſay ſo to Mr. Evers, I did ask Mr. Evers what my Lord Stafford's meaning was, whether his Intention was true or no to do as he ſaid, and whether my Lord was in that condition, as to be able to perform his Promiſe, for I feared Payment of the Money; and he told me, Harcourt and the reſt of the Jeſuits would furniſh it.

L. H. S. So he ſaid Yeſterday.

L. Staf. Then ask him if he did not ſay, the beginning of September I met him at Tixall, and I ſpake to him about ſuch a Buſineſs.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I did ſay to the beſt of my remembrance it was about that time, the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September, I would not be poſitive, nor could not, to five days.

L. Staf. No, I think not to 5000. Then I asked him this Queſtion, whether he did not preſently upon that, when I told him about the Deſign, go to Mr. Evers, and ask'd what it meant?

L. H. S. He ſaid ſo but now, he went to Evers and asked what you meant.

L. Staf. I beſeech you I may be underſtood, Whether he did not ſay in the beginning of September, which was before the 20th or 21ſt in the Journal?

L. H. S.

L. H. S. Is it in the Journal?
L. Staf. Yes.
L. H. S. Why then, read it.

Die Sabbati 28 Decembris 1678.

The Earl of Eſſex acquainted the Houſe, that he had received an Information out of the Country of very great Concernment, which was read as followeth.

Staffordſh. December 24. 1678.

The Information of Stephen Dugdale Gent. late Servant to the Lord Aſton of Tixall, concerning the Plot againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, as followeth.

1. THis Informant ſaith, that preſently after one Howard, Almoner to the Queen, went beyond the Seas, he was told by George Hobſon (Servant to the ſaid Lord Aſton) that there was a Deſign then intended for the Reformation of the Government to the Romiſh Religion.

2. He informeth, that in the beginning of September 1678, he met in Tixall, nigh the Lord's Gates, the Lord Stafford, who ſaid to this Informant it was ſaid that they were troubled, for that they could not ſay their Prayers but in a hid manner, but ſuddenly there would be a Reformation to the Romiſh Religion; and if there was but a good Succeſs, they ſhould enjoy their Religion. And upon the 20th Day of September laſt, the ſaid Lord Stafford told this Informant that there was a Deſign in hand, and if this Informant would undertake the Deſign, he ſhould have a good Reward, and make himſelf famous.

3. Upon the aforeſaid Day, immediately after, this Informant went into the Chamber of Mr. Francis Urie, alias Evers, (a Jeſuit) in Tixall-Hall, and ask'd him what the Lord Stafford meant by thoſe Words; and after he had made him to ſwear Secrecy upon his Knees, he told him he might be a Perſon employed in the Work, and have a good Reward that would make him famous: and then he told him he muſt be inſtrumental with others in taking away the King's Life; and that it ſhould be done by ſhooting or otherwiſe. And that this Informant need not to fear, for the Pope had excommunicated the King, and that all that were excommunicated by him were Hereticks, and they might kill them, and be canoniz'd for Saints in ſo doing.

4. The Informant ſaith, that the ſaid Evers and Hobſon both ſaid, that the Deſign was as well to kill the Duke of Monmouth as the King.

5. That George North (Nephew to Pickering, and Servant to the Lord Aſton) lately told this Informant, that they had taken his Uncle (meaning Pickering) and put him into Newgate; and thought the King deſerved ſuch an execrable Death as was intended him, becauſe of his Whoring and Debauchery.

6. That Mr. Evers ſaid, Mr. Bennyfield had a Pacquet of Letters deliver'd to him from the Poſt-houſe, which he fear'd the Lord Treaſurer had notice of, and therefore he deliver'd them to the Duke of York, and the Duke delivered them to the King, and that the King gave them to the Treaſurer, after he had read them; but that the King did not believe them, and therefore it was happy, or elſe the Plot had been diſcovered.

7. That he had received many Pacquets of Letters for Evers, ſome of which this Informant broke up, and found them to be and tend to the Eſtabliſhment of the Romiſh Religion, &c.

8. That he had receiv'd ſeveral Sums of Money himſelf, and knew of divers others that were employ'd to put forth Money, which was and is for the Jeſuits Uſe.

Stephen Dugdale.

Taken upon Oath the 24*th Day of* December 1678. before us,

Tho. Lane,
J. Vernon.

L. Staf. My Lords, I find by this here, that preſently after one Howard Almoner to the Queen went over, George Hobſon, Servant to my Lord Aſton, told Dugdale there was a Deſign to reform the Government, &c. I beſeech your Lordſhips I may ask him, how long after he went over this Diſcourſe was.

Mr. Dugdale. I do not ſay I knew George Hobſon before he came to be a Servant to my Lord Aſton, which was in the Year 78; but that this was only a Diſcourſe to me, that the Plot had been ſo long carrying on.

L. Staf. He ſays upon his Oath, preſently after the Almoner went over, he told him ſo. Now the Almoner went over three Years before that, when the Proclamation came out to baniſh the Queen's Servants for being Papiſts.

Mr. Dugdale. I heard it there; I never knew George Hobſon before he came to be Servant to my Lord Aſton, but I did not tell it as a Diſcourſe at that time, or that it was more than what I had from him, that there was ſuch a Deſign ſo long before.

L. Staf. He ſays preſently after the Almoner went over, in his Oath; which was, I think, in the Year 72 or 73, or rather in the Year 75, about the end of the Year 74, as I remember: and he ſays preſently, three Years after; is that preſently? E'en now the end of Auguſt was the beginning of September, and how long that was we can't tell, and now three Years is preſently after.

Sir Will. Jones. He is telling of another's Diſcourſe with him.

L. H. S. My Lord, you muſt obſerve that Dugdale ſays, that he did hear it from Hobſon after he came to my Lord Aſton's Service.

L. Staf. But he ſays, preſently after the Almoner went over; and 'tis impoſſible, for he did not ſay it till three Years after, and ſo there is no Truth in him.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, it was that Hobſon told me, that preſently after the Almoner Howard went over, there was ſuch a Deſign carrying on.

L. H. S. You diſtinguiſh not, and therefore don't comprehend. 'Tis one thing if Dugdale had ſaid, that preſently after there was ſuch a Deſign Hobſon told him ſo.

L. Staf. I beſeech you, it is ſaid, that preſently after the Almoner went over, Hobſon told him ſo.

L. H. S. But it is not that preſently after he heard the Diſcourſe; but George Hobſon told him, that preſently after the Almoner went over, there was ſuch a Deſign.

L. Staf. 'Tis ſaid he was told preſently after.

(Then the Information was read again.)

L. H. S.

L. H. S. Do you know when Howard the Almoner went over?

Mr. Dugd. No, my Lords; but by report I heard when he went: But I do not make that part of my Oath, for I cannot abſolutely remember it.

L. H. S. My Lord, you muſt not make a Strain to make a Miſtake.

L. Staff. God's Life! is three Years a Strain?

Mr. Dugdale. I never did mean ſo, nor never did intend ſo, for I never knew him till he came to my Lord Aſton's; but he told me then this Diſcourſe.

L. H. S. My Lord, this is only a Queſtion of Grammar, how it can be conſtrued.

L. Staff. My Lords, I beg your pardon: 'tis to my little Reaſon a Queſtion of Senſe, and it is plain to me it can have no other Senſe; but I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, whether this be not the true Conſtruction.

L. H. S. Go on, my Lord, with your Evidence, notice will be taken of your Objection: you ſhall ſee what they ſay to it; if they do not give it an Anſwer, it will have its Weight.

Sir Will. Jones. We will give that an Anſwer in due time.

L. Staf. Then next he ſays, I talk'd with him at my Lord Aſton's the beginning of September, where he met with me at Tixall at the Gate, and I ſaid, it was ſad we could not ſay our Prayers, but in private. Truly, my Lords, I cannot ſay I did not ſay this to him; but if I did ſay it, I do not remember it, or that ever I thought ſo much; for I was ſo much of a contrary Opinion, that I thought thoſe of that Religion ſaid their Prayers too openly, and have chid them for it. And why ſhould I ſpeak it to him, whom I did not know what Religion or what Profeſſion he might be of? And preſently after I ſpoke of theſe things, he ſays, he went to know what the Deſign was, and then Mr. Evers told him of the Plot, and yet yeſterday he ſaid he knew it ſixteen Years ago. How can all this be true? And beſides, it ſeems I could have no great Power with him to perſuade him, for it ſeems he miſtruſted my Ability to pay; and he had reaſon, for I ſhould hardly have parted with 500 l. in the condition I was then in, to any one; but I have no more to ſay to him now. There is a third Witneſs, one Turberville, I deſire to ask him a Queſtion.

L. H. S. Call Turberville. (Who ſtood up.)

L. Staf. I deſire to know what time he came to ſerve my Lady Molyneux (for it is in the beginning of the Information in the Houſe of Commons, that he came in the Year 73.) and how long he ſtaid with her?

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, there was an Offer made to you, that thoſe Affidavits ſhould be produced, if you deſired to ſee them.

L. Staf. I think I ſhall have no occaſion as yet; it may be I may by and by: But I deſire to ask him this Queſtion firſt, Whether he did ſay he came in the Year 73 into my Lady Mary Molineux's Service, and ſtaid with her about three Years?

L. H. S. Did he ſwear in the Year 73 he came?

L. Staff. 'Tis ſo in his Narrative in Print.

L. H. S. Do you own that Narrative in Print for true?

Mr. Tur. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. How can you challenge him then with a Narrative he does not own?

L. Staff. Then what can a Man do, if he muſt not go according to what is printed?

Mr. Tur. There is a Miſtake in the Printing of it, there is a Miſtake of 73 for 72.

L. Staf. I now deſire that Affidavit may be produced.

L. H. S. Pray let him have the Benefit that was offer'd him of the Affidavit.

Mr. Tur. Beſides, I declared I could not be poſitive to a Year; I own any thing elſe in it.

L. Staf. Then, my Lords, if I ſhall have Fellows that will not ſwear to Months nor to Years, I beg of your Lordſhips to know whether theſe be legal Witneſſes.

Manag. The Affidavit is in the cuſtody of Sir W. Poulteney, a Member of our Houſe.

Sir Will. Poulteney. My Lords, I have the Affidavit; if you pleaſe I ſhall give you an account what I did upon it, and Sir Thomas Stringer, another Juſtice of Peace. My Lords, after that Mr. Turberville had given his Evidence to the Houſe of Commons viva voce, he tendred to them this Information that I have in my Hand. The Houſe of Commons, after it had been read, thought it might be convenient to have it ſworn to before two Juſtices of Peace. Whereupon Sir Thomas Stringer and myſelf withdrew into the Speaker's Chamber, Mr. Turberville came to us, we read over the Information to him again, and after we had read it over, it was ſign'd, and he ſwore it. In this Information, when we then took it, he declar'd there, That he came to my Lord Powis in the Year 1673, and came into England 1676. After we had ſworn him, we carried this Information into the Houſe again. The next Morning, my Lords, he came to me (I being one of the Juſtices that had ſworn him) and told me, that ſearching among his Papers the laſt Night for a Letter, which he ſaid he had receiv'd from my Lord Stafford, ſent to Diep, tho he could not find the Letter he look'd for, yet he found that the preciſe time that he went to live with my Lord Powis was 1672. and the preciſe time of his coming into England was 1675. And he deſired me to acquaint the Houſe of Commons with it, that this Circumſtance of Time might be alter'd. Whereupon, my Lords, I did acquaint the Houſe of Commons with it, how he was miſtaken in that point of a Circumſtance of Time; and that he came of his own accord, and deſir'd me to move the Houſe in it. I mov'd the Houſe, and they did direct we ſhould withdraw again, and take his Information again, and that he ſhould amend it. He amended it, and made the 73, 72. and the 76, 75. and then afterwards we ſwore him to it again de novo: and this is the Matter of Fact concerning the Affidavit.

L. H. S. Sir William Poulteney, did Mr. Turberville correct the Miſtake himſelf firſt, or was it found and alter'd by others?

Sir Will. Poulteney. My Lords, he came to me, for I did not know any thing of it, that he was miſtaken; but he came to me the next Morning as ſoon as ever I came to the Houſe, before indeed I entred into the Houſe, and told me of the Miſtake; and told me the Reaſons how he came to recollect himſelf, and find out the Miſtake.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, I would ask you the Queſtion, how came you to be inform'd that you had miſtaken yourſelf?

Mr. Tur. My Lords, I'll tell you: I was ſearching for a Letter I receiv'd from my Lord Stafford, and miſſing that, I found my Diſcharge I had from the French Army; wherein I ſaw my Miſtake as to the time, and that I have to produce.

L. H. S. I ask you again by the Oath you have taken, did you correct it of yourſelf, or by Information from any other?

Mr. Tur. By the Oath I have taken I did correct it of myſelf, and no body mov'd it to me.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. It was but a Circumſtance of Time.

Sir F. Win. And corrected by himſelf the very next Morning, my Lords.

L. Staf. He does acknowledge he did forſwear himſelf once, and did make himſelf an honeſt Man the next Day, when he was a perjur'd Villain the Day before. And now he tells your Lordſhips that he was ſearching for a Letter that I ſent to him, but he cannot find it.

Mr. Tur. No, my Lords, I thought I had it, but I cannot find it.

L. Staf. No, I'll ſwear thou canſt not. But then he does ſay that he had a Diſcharge from the French Army.

Mr. Tur. Yes, 'tis here, my Lord.

L. H. S. Is that the Paper of your Diſcharge?

Mr. Tur. Yes, it is. 'Tis worn out a little, and torn, but the Seal is preſerv'd: I did not know that ever I ſhould have occaſion to make uſe of it; but my Lord challenging me for a Coward, and a Deſerter of my Colours——

L. Staf. I believe ſo ſtill, for I have heard ſo.

L. H. S. Your Honour is not in queſtion, Mr. Turberville.

Mr. Tur. The Title is a little torn; and if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will read it: (which he did, being in French, and is rendred in Engliſh in theſe Words.)

THis certifieth all to whom it ſhall appertain, that I have given an abſolute Diſcharge to the Sieur Turberville, a Cavalier of my Company, after having ſerv'd the Space of ſix Months with all Honour and Fidelity. Therefore I deſire thoſe that are to be deſired, to treat him civilly, and let him paſs and repaſs, without doing him any Injury, or giving him any Hindrance; but on the contrary, to afford him all Aid and Aſſiſtance where it ſhall be neceſſary, promiſing the like upon all Occaſions that ſhall require it. In Confirmation of which, I have for him ſign'd this preſent Diſcharge, and thereto put the Seal of my Arms, to ſerve him in caſe he ſhall need it. Made at the Camp before Aire this 4th of Auguſt, 1676.

Sheldon.

L. H. S. What is the Date of that Diſcharge, Turberville?

Mr. Tur. 'Tis in Auguſt 76.

L. Staf. May I ſee it, my Lords?

L. H. S. Yes. Deliver it to my Lord. (Which was done, and he look'd upon it.)

L. Staf. The thing looks like Truth, but there is no Proof of it.

Mr. Tur. The Seal is a little broke, but the Name remains perfect.

L. Staf. He ſays here is a Diſmiſſion from the Army in 76. how will that rectify his Miſtake about 73? I underſtand not that.

Then the Court called for the Paper; and it was look'd upon by the Duke of Monmouth, and ſome other Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord, this Paper hath been look'd upon; the Hand is well known by thoſe that ſhould know it.

L. Staf. I do not ſay the contrary.

L. H. S. Whereabouts are you now, my Lord, then?

L. Staff. I am extremely faint and weary, that I am ſure of. This Gentleman told you yeſterday that he ſpoke with me ſeveral times in France, and that he was converſant with me for a Fortnight together, that he viſited me, and I propos'd the killing of the King to him; and that he refus'd to give me an Anſwer then, but told me he would give it me at Diep: This he ſaid yeſterday, as I remember. And afterwards, when he was gone down, he came up again, and deſir'd to put your Lordſhips in mind of a particular Circumſtance which he ſaid he did remember, That when he came to me, I had the Gout, and was in a lower Room of the Houſe, in ſuch a Street, which fac'd Luxemburgh Houſe; all which I ſtand not upon: and that the Prince of Conde liv'd in the ſame Street, on the left hand he ſaid firſt, and after on the right hand, and after he knew not where, and that I did lodge in the ſame Street.

Mr. Tur. I did ſay I believed the Prince of Conde lived there, but I was not poſitive.

L. Staff. No; but firſt he ſwears a thing, and then only believes it. Be pleaſed to call my Servants, to know if ever I had my Foot ill of the Gout in my Life.

Mr. Tur. Your Lordſhip told me it was the Gout.

L. Staff. If ever I put my Foot on a Stool, or was lame there, I will own all that he ſays. But when a Man ſwears his Evidence, and goes down from the Place, and then invents, and comes up again to tell new Stories, who ſhall believe ſuch a Man?

Mr. Tur. I never went from the Bar.

L. Staff. I do ſay, you went down, and had given all your Evidence, and came up again, and told this Circumſtance. I have not been lame, not one Moment, theſe forty Years; and yet this Fellow, this impudent Fellow, to ſay, that I was lame, and put my Foot upon a Stool. He does not, my Lords, ſwear poſitively in any thing but this, and this I can eaſily diſprove him in.

L. H. S. What ſay you to this Particular, Turberville? Had my Lord Stafford never the Gout while he was in France?

Mr. Tur. He told me it was the Gout, my Lords: He had a great Lameneſs, he could not go from one place to another. Here are ſeveral People to give Teſtimony that my Lord was lame within leſs time than he ſays.

Mr. Foley. Hold, hold, Turberville, you muſt not give that Evidence now.

L. Staff. Call Nicholas Furneſe again.

L. H. S. What do you call him for?

L. Staf. Ask whether ever he ſaw Mr. Turberville with me in France.

L. H. S. Were you with my Lord Stafford all the while he was in France?

Furneſe. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Did you never ſee Turberville there?

Furn. No.

L. H. S. Pray did you never ſee Father Anthony Turberville there?

Furn. No, my Lords, I never heard of his Name.

L. Staff. Was I ever one moment lame while I was in France?

Furn. Not that I remember.

L. H. S. How long was my Lord there?

Furn. About three Months.

L. H. S. What time of the Year?

Furn. At Paris in October and November, in December at Rohan, in January we came over into England.

L. Staf. Ask him if ever I put my Foot upon a Cuſhion or upon a Stool for Lameneſs.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, did you ever ſee Furneſe when you were in France?

Mr. Tur. This Man, my Lords?

L. H. S. Yes.

Mr. Tur. No, not that I remember.

L. H. S. In what quality did you ſerve my Lord in France, Furneſe?

Furn. My Lords, I waited on him in his Chamber.

L. H. S. Do you remember any other Servant of my Lord's, that you did ſee there?

Mr. Tur. Truly, my Lords, I don't remember, I might forget him.

L. Staf. So I believe thou doſt me too.

Mr. Tur. Your Lordſhip, that could call me Coward, may ſay any thing.

L. Staff. You ſhall be as valiant as Hector if you will. Pray call my other Boy.

(Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. You little Boy, were you all the while with my Lord, that he was in France?

Leigh. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Did you ever ſee Turberville there?

Leigh. No, my Lords, not that I know of.

L. H. S. Had my Lord the Gout in France?

Leigh. No, nor never had ſince I have been with him.

L. H. S. That is ſix Years.

Leigh. Seven Years almoſt, my Lords.

L. H. S. Are you ſure of that?

Leigh. I am ſure of it.

L. Staff. Now, my Lords, Mr. Turberville ſays, I writ him a Letter to Diep, which Letter he can't find. I beſeech you what were the Contents of the Letter?

L. H. S. What were the Contents of the Letter my Lord ſent you?

Mr. Tur. The Contents of the Letter were, that I ſhould not ſtay at Diep in expectation of him, for he had appointed a Yacht to come to Calais; but I ſhould make what haſte I could to London, and there I ſhould meet with him.

L. Staf. I deſire to ask whether I ſent him word that Count Gramont came over with me.

Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lords, to the beſt of my remembrance.

L. Staff. I ſhall now bring Witneſſes that I did not come by Calais, but by Diep, and Count Gramont came not with me.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, which way came you, from Diep, or from Calais?

Mr. Tur. From Diep, my Lords.

L. Staff. And I came from Diep too.

L. H. S. My Lord came that way too, he ſays.

Mr. Tur. I know not of it, he ſent me word otherwiſe.

L. Staff. I ſhall now prove what I ſay. Pray call Mr. Wyborne.

(Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What do you ask him, my Lord?

L. Staff. Whether he did not ſee me at Diep, and embark from thence for England?

Mr. Wyborne. My Lords, I will give you an account as well as I can. In the Year 75, in December, I had occaſion to go over into France upon my own Concerns; and enquiring where there was a Conveniency to go over, I heard that a Yacht was ſending to Diep for my Lord Stafford, and Mr. Henry Sidney, his Majeſty's Envoy-Extraordinary now in Holland: I took that occaſion, and we weighed Anchor on Friday the 24th of December; and it being foul Weather, and we being toſs'd long upon the Sea, we did not come to an Anchor before Diep till the Sunday was Se'nnight at Two a-clock in the Afternoon, which was January the 2d. Then I came with the Captain immediately on ſhore, to enquire for my Lord and Mr. Sidney; I enquired for my Lord, and they told me he was at Rohan, expecting to hear of the Arrival of the Yacht: upon which the Captain deſired me to write a Letter to my Lord, and I did ſo; upon ſight of which Letter, he came to Diep on Tueſday in the Afternoon, which was, as I take it, the 4th of January, and we were at the Baſtile there then together, when he came that Evening. And the next Day I went on my own Occaſions to Paris, and my Lord and Mr. Sidney did come over together in the Yacht.

L. Staff. If you pleaſe I will call my two Servants again to this Matter.

L. H. S. Call them, my Lord.

(Then Furneſe and Leigh ſtood up.)

L. H. S. Which Way came my Lord Stafford out of France into England, by Diep or by Calais?

Furn. By Diep.

L. H. S. What ſay you, Boy? Which Way came my Lord?

Leigh. By Diep, my Lords.

L. H. S. You came with him?

Leigh. Yes, we did.

L. H. S. My Lord, the Queſtion is not whether you came by Calais or no, but whether you writ a Letter to him to Diep, that you would go by Calais.

L. Staf. He ſwore yeſterday that I did come by Calais.

L. H. S. Do you ſay my Lord came by Calais?

Mr. Tur. My Lords, I had a Letter from his Lordſhip, which he wrote to me, that he would come by Calais.

L. Staff. He did not name the Letter yeſterday, nor is it in the Information.

L. H. S. Read the Affidavit.

The Information of Edward Turberville of Skerr, in the County of Glamorgan, Gent.

WHO ſaith, That being a younger Brother, about the Year 1672, he became Gentleman-Uſher to the Lady Mary Mollineux, Daughter to the Earl of Powis, and by that means lived in the Houſe of the ſaid Earl above three Years; and by ſerving and aſſiſting at Maſs there, grew intimate with William Morgan, Confeſſor to the ſaid Earl and his Family, who was a Jeſuit, and Rector over all the Jeſuits in North-Wales, Shropſhire, and Staffordſhire. And he during the three years time often heard the ſaid Morgan tell the ſaid Earl and his Lady, That the Kingdom was in a high Fever, and that nothing but Blood-letting could reſtore it to Health, and then the Catholick Religion would flouriſh. Whereunto the ſaid Earl many times reply'd, It was not yet time, but he doubted not but ſuch means ſhould be uſed in due time; or words to that effect. And he heard the Lady Powis tell the ſaid Morgan, and others, publickly and privately, That when Religion ſhould be reſtored in England, which ſhe doubted not but would be in a very ſhort time, ſhe would perſuade her Husband to give 300*l.* per annum, for a Foundation to maintain a Nunnery. And this Informant was perſuaded by the Lady dy Powis, and the ſaid Morgan, to become a Fryar; the ſaid Lady encouraging this Informant thereunto, by ſaying, That if he would follow his Studies, and make himſelf capable, ſhe queſtion'd not but he might ſhortly be made a Biſhop by her Intereſt in England; becauſe upon Reſtoration of the Catholick Religion, there would want People fit to make Biſhops, and to do the Buſineſs of the Church. And thereupon ſhe gave this Informant ten Pounds to carry him to Doway, where this Informant entred the Monaſtery, and continued about three weeks, and with much difficulty made his eſcape thence, and returned for England; for which the ſaid Earl and his Lady, and all the reſt that incouraged him to go to the Monaſtery, became his utter Enemies, threatning to take away his Life, and to get his Brother to diſinherit him: which laſt is compaſſed againſt him. And Father Cudworth, who was then Guardian of the Fryars at Doway, ſome days before his eſcape thence, told this Informant, That if he ſhould not perſevere with them, he ſhould loſe his Life and Friends: And further added, That this King ſhould not laſt long, and that his Succeſſor ſhould be wholly for their purpoſe. And Father Croſs, Provincial of the Fryars, told this Informant, That had he been at Doway when this Informant made his eſcape thence, he ſhould never have come to England. And this Informant finding himſelf friendleſs, and in danger in England, went to Paris, where one of his Brothers is a Benedictine Monk, who perſuaded this Informant to return for England; and in order thereunto, about the latter end of November, 1675, he was introduced into the Acquaintance of the Lord Stafford, that he might go for England with his Lordſhip; and three Weeks he attended his Lordſhip, and had great Acceſs and Freedom with his Lordſhip, who gave him great Aſſurances of his Favour and Intereſt to reſtore him to his Relations Eſteem again: And ſaid, That he had a Piece of Service to propoſe to this Informant, that would not only retrieve his Reputation with his own Relations, but alſo oblige both them and their Party to make him happy as long as he lived. And this Informant being deſirous to embrace ſo happy an Opportunity, was very inquiſitive after the Means; but the ſaid Lord Stafford being ſomewhat difficult to repoſe ſo great a Truſt as he was to communicate to him, exacted all the Obligations and Promiſes of Secrecy, which this Informant gave his Lordſhip in the moſt ſolemn manner he could invent. Then his Lordſhip laboured to make this Informant ſenſible of all the Advantages that would accrue to this Informant, and the Catholick Cauſe; and then told this Informant in direct Terms, That he might make himſelf and the Nation happy, by taking away the Life of the King of England, who was an Heretick, and conſequently a Rebel againſt God Almighty. Of which this Informant deſired his Lordſhip to give him time to conſider, and told his Lordſhip that he would give him his anſwer at Diep, where his Lordſhip intended to ſhip for England, and to take this Informant with him; but this Informant going before to Diep, the Lord Stafford went with Count Gramont by Calais, and ſent this Informant orders to go for England, and to attend his Lordſhip at London: but this Informant did not attend his Lordſhip at London, but went into the French Service, and ſo avoided the Lord Stafford's further Importunities in that Affair. And this Informant further ſaith, That one Remige, a Frenchwoman, and vehement Papiſt, who married this Informant's Brother, lived with the Lady Powis all the time this Informant reſided there, and ſome years ſince, and was the great Confident of the ſaid Lady; and the ſaid Remige was for the moſt part taken with her Ladyſhip into Morgan's Chamber, when the Conſults were held there, where he hath often ſeen Father Gavan, Father Towers, Father Evans, Father Sylliard, Roberts, White, Owens, Barry, and the Earl of Caſtlemain, and other Prieſts and Jeſuits, meet and ſhut themſelves up in the ſaid Morgan's Chamber, ſometimes for an Hour, ſometimes for two Hours, more or leſs; and at the breaking up of the ſaid Conſults, have broke out into an Extaſy of Joy, ſaying, They hoped e'er long the Catholick Religion would be eſtabliſhed in England, and that they did not doubt to bring about their Deſign, notwithſtanding they had met with one great Diſappointment, which was the Peace ſtruck up with Holland: ſaying, That if the Army at Blackheath had been ſent into Holland to aſſiſt the French King, when he was with his Army near Amſterdam, Holland had certainly been conquer'd, and then the French King would have been able to aſſiſt us with an Army to eſtabliſh Religion in England. Which Expreſſions, with many others, importing their Confidence to ſet up the Romiſh Religion, they frequently communicated to this Informant. And the ſaid Morgan went ſeveral times into Ireland, to London, and ſeveral other Parts of England, as this Informant hath juſt Cauſe to believe, to give and take meaſures for carrying on the Deſign: and the ſaid Remige and her Husband having firſt clandeſtinely ſold their Eſtate, and fled into France about May or June laſt, for fear of diſcovery; this Informant by many Circumſtances being aſſured that the ſaid Mrs. Remige was privy to all or moſt of the Tranſactions of the Plot. And he ſaith, That about May laſt was two years, he was preſent at Maſs with the Lord Powis in Vereſtreet, when the Earl of Caſtlemain did ſay Maſs in his Prieſtly Habit, after the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of Rome.

Edward Turberville.

Sworn the 9th Day of November, 1680. before

Thomas Stringer,
William Pulteney,
Edmund Warcupp:

L. H. S. My Lord, this Affidavit is to the purpoſe to which you call for it; this does ſay that your Lordſhip did go by the way of Calais, it does abſolutely ſo.

L. Staff. Now whether he be forſworn or no, your Lordſhips may judge by theſe three Witneſſes.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, that which I grounded my Belief of his going to Calais upon, and ſo conſequently that Affidavit, was the Letter which I received from my Lord; which I have looked for, but cannot find.

L. H. S. This Affidavit does not ſay you went from Calais to England, but you went with Count Gramont to Calais.

L. Staff. I conceive, my Lords, this Affidavit and his Narrative are word for word the ſame, only that Amendment of 72 for 73, upon which I obſerved before he was forſworn once. I cannot tell what to ſay if this Man can be believed. And Count Gramont came by Diep too. But beſides, my Lords, in this Affidavit he does not ſay he believed ſo by the Letter, though now he ſpeaks of one.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, was Count Gramont in your Lordſhip's Company when you came to Diep?

L. Staff. No, my Lords, he was in England before me a Month; but, my Lords, I cannot deny but I had one recommended to come over with me, that pretended himſelf to be a French Count, but the Man was as errant a Raſcal as this that ſwears againſt me; and that was one that called himſelf Count de Brienne, whom all the World knows to be a Cheat.

L. H. S. Call your other Witneſſes, my Lord.

L. Staff. Where is John Minhead?

(Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. Who do you belong to?

Minhead. My Lord Powis.

L. Staf. My Lords, Mr. Turberville he ſays by the perſuaſion of my Lady Powis went to Doway, and he ſtaid in the Monaſtery three Weeks, and not liking that Life, he came away, (this may be true, I ſay nothing to it:) but that which I take exception at, is this; He ſays, for this the Earl of Powis and his Lady, when he came back from Doway, were very angry with him, and ſo were all his Relations, and he ſtood in fear of his Life from them. Surely when Mr. Turberville knew he was in ſuch danger, he would not have come near them. Pray ask this Gentleman whether he was at my Lord Powis's, and how he was entertained.

L. H. S. Do you know Turberville?

Minh. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Have you ſeen him at my Lord Powis's?

Minh. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. How was he received there?

Minh. Very well, my Lords.

L. H. S. When was that?

Minh. In the Year 75.

L. H. S. Was that before or after he came back to England?

Minh. It was after he came from Doway.

L. H. S. What Countryman are you?

Minh. A Frenchman.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Minh. A Roman Catholick.

L. Staff. Pray ask him whether he lay in my Lord's Houſe?

Minh. Yes, my Lords, he lay with me in my Lodgings.

L Staff. And yet he ſays he was afraid of his Life.

L. H. S. Did my Lord know he lay there?

Minh. Yes, he muſt needs, becauſe he came thro the Room to go to bed.

L. Staff. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, he ſays he was threatned that he ſhould have his Brother diſinherit him, and which afterwards was compaſſed. Now I ſhall ſhew that this was impoſſible, for he had no Inheritance to loſe, nor was to have none; for his Brother, who is elder than he, (this Man being by a ſecond Venter) hath Children, as I ſhall make appear by another of his Brothers, who is here. And this not being ſettled upon him who was by the ſecond Venter, could not come to him; but, for want of Iſſue of that Brother, muſt go to the Uncle. So he ſwears he was diſinherited of an Eſtate, when he was to have no Eſtate, nor could have. Call Mr. John Turberville: (Who appeared.) My Lords, I deſire you to ask him whether he knew that upon his coming back to England he was ill-uſed?

Mr. J. Tur. I never knew any Unkindneſs from my elder Brother to him.

L. H. S. Are you his Brother?

Mr. J. Tur. Yes, my Lords, by the Father, not by the Mother.

L. H. S. Well, what can you ſay?

Mr. J. Tur. I never heard any thing when he returned from Doway, that he was ill received by my Lord Powis; but in a few days after my Brother and Siſter came to Town, we went to Bloomsbury, and there we met together: and my Brother complaining that he was unfortunate in that he had undertaken what he could not perform in going beyond Sea, and now wanted a Livelihood; my eldeſt Brother told him he had done as far as his Ability, he could do no more, it was his own Choice, and he had no more to ſay.

L. Staff. Had he any Money from his Relations?

Mr. J. Tur. He made interceſſion by Friends to my Siſter, and ſhe told me that ſhe gave him 7 l. to bear his Charges to Paris, with that Proviſo, that he would never trouble them more.

L. H. S. But were they not angry with him?

Mr. J. Tur. Here he is, he cannot ſay they ever gave him an angry Word in their days; I'm ſure I never did.

L. H. S. Did you not forbid him the Houſe?

Mr. J. Tur. No.

Mr. Ed. Tur. Theſe are People that take not the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and therefore are not fit to be Witneſſes.

L. Staff. Now your Lordſhips ſee what a Villain he is.

Mr. Ser. Mayn. You muſt give good words, my Lord, for none but good words are given you.

L. Staff. I muſt call them Villains, or my ſelf Traitor.

L. H. S. You ſay they gave him 7 l. upon condition they ſhould never ſee him more.

Mr. J. Tur. I did not ſay, my Siſter ſaid upon condition ſhe would give him 7 l. he would never trouble us more; it was his Declaration.

L. Staff. One thing I would ask Mr. Turberville more, and that is about this Man's being diſinherited: Whether he could, or whether he was Heir to an Eſtate or not?

L. H. S. What ſay you to it?

Mr. J. Tur. By all the Information of our Relations, the Eſtate was made by my Grandfather to my Father for Life, and after my Father's Life to my Mother; and after my Mother's Life to my eldeſt Brother, and the Heirs Males of his Body; and for want of ſuch, afterwards to me, and the Heirs Males of my Body; and in caſe I had none, then to my Father's Brother, and his Heirs Males; and if he had no Heirs Males, then after that to the right Heirs of the Grandfather. This was before my time.

L. H. S. Well then, that Remainder to the right Heirs might come to him; and ſo there was ſome Eſtate for him to loſe, and that Remainder might be dock'd by the Tenant in Tail. I would ask, Was there any Recovery ſuffered to bar that Intail?

Mr. J. Tur. Yes, I think there was one upon my Brother's Marriage.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, were you told you ſhould be diſinherited?

Mr. E. Tur. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Who told you ſo?

Mr. E. Tur. My eldeſt Brother.

L. H. S. What did he tell you?

Mr. E. Tur. He told me it ſhould not come to me.

L. H. S. How ſhould it come to you?

Mr. E. Tur.

Mr. E. Tur. I am not ſo good a Lawyer as to tell that, whether it could or no; but I thought, by Succeſſion.

L. Staff. Then he ſays he came to ſerve my Lady Mollineux in 72; it may be it is ſo as he ſays, I don't know it of my own Knowledge: but I pray he may anſwer, whether it was in 71, or 72.

Mr. E. Tur. In January or February, 71.

Mr. Treby. That is the beginning of the Year 72, according to the Almanack.

L. Staff. My Lords, for the preſent I do not remember any thing more——Oh, yes, my Lords, he ſays he was at ſuch a time at my Lord Powis's, when my Lord Caſtlemain was at Powis-Caſtle, which muſt be either in the Year 72, 73, or 74. Now I deſire you would ask Mr. Lydcot whether my Lord Caſtlemain was there, or could be there in any of thoſe Years.

(Then Lydcot ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What do you ask him, my Lord?

L. Staff. I deſire to ask him, whether in the Year 72, 73, or 74, which are the Years Turberville ſays he was at my Lord Powis's at Powis-Caſtle, whether my Lord Caſtlemain was at Powis-Caſtle, or could be there at that time.

L. H. S. Was my Lord Caſtlemain there in any of thoſe Years?

Lydcot. My Lords, I can prove he was not, as much as I am capable of proving a Negative. I was with him in the Years 72, 73, and 74.

L. H. S. Where?

Lydcot. He was in England in 73; I was with him all the while, and I am ſure ſince I knew him he was never in Wales, and I was never abſent from him ſince I knew him (which is nine Years) not four Months in all: I have travelled with him, and been abroad with him.

L. H. S. Turberville, when do you ſay my Lord Caſtlemain was at Powis-Caſtle?

Mr. Tur. I think it was in the Year 73.

L. H. S. By what Token do you remember him there?

Mr. Tur. He was arguing with my Lord Powis about Religion, and ſeveral times he did ſo: I believe it was in the Year 73.

L. H. S. What ſay you to that?

Lyd. I can aſſure your Lordſhips he was not there then; I was always with him that Year: he had many times a Deſign to go there, but he could not but put it off; and the laſt time he was there, I can prove it was fifteen Years ago.

L. H. S. I deſire to know of you this, Friend; Can you take it upon you to affirm upon the Faith of a Chriſtian, that you were never from my Lord Caſtlemain all the Year 73?

Lyd. I can give an Account to half a Week where he was; and when I was abſent from him, it was beyond Sea, and all that while I kept Correſpondence with him every Poſt, and receiv'd Letters from him conſtantly once a Week, dated from Liege: This was in the time of my Abſence.

L. H. S. Were you at Liege when my Lord was in England, or were you with him all the time he was in England?

Lyd. My Lords, I was with him all the time he was in England, and was never abſent from him all that compaſs of time, but when he ſent me into England from Liege.

L. H. S. Then he was at Liege himſelf?

Lyd. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Was that in the Year 73?

Lyd. Yes, my Lords, I was then in England. But, my Lords, I can give you a whole Account, for my Lord and I never made any Journeys, but I put them down.

L. H. S. You ſay you can give a particular Account of the whole Year 73, even to the compaſs of four Days in that Year at moſt.

Lyd. No, my Lords, I do not ſay ſo, but I ſay I can give an Account of the whole time I have been with him within four Months.

L. H. S. Were any of thoſe four Months within the Year 73?

Lyd. No: I was with him all the Year 73.

L. H. S. Will you take it upon you to ſay, That every Day in 73 you were with my Lord?

Lyd. Every Day, my Lords!

L. H. S. Every Week?

Lyd. Yes, I do not think but that I was. My Lord did me the honour to make me as it were his Companion.

Mr. Ser. Mayn. No, you do your ſelf the honour to make your ſelf his Companion; he made you his Servant.

L. H. S. Come, where are your Notes you pretend to ſpeak by? your Diary, or your Journal? Let us hear a whole Account of the Year 73, for you come to teſtify as if you could give an Account of every Day.

Lyd. I did not think any Queſtion of this nature would come on the Stage; there is my Lord's Steward can give a very good Account of this by his Account-Books, which are all ready to be produced: he can tell where my Lord was, by laying out ſuch and ſuch Moneys. And 'tis an hard thing to give a Teſtimony after ſo many Years, of a thing that we thought not would ever be a Queſtion.

L. H. S. Let us ſee your Notes.

Lyd. My Lords, I will read it to your Lordſhips.

L. H. S. When was this written?

Lyd. I took this out of another Book.

L. H. S. When?

Lyd. Lately, ſince Mr. Turberville's Narrative came out.

Sir Will. Jones. Oh, I deſire that may be obſerved.

L. Staff. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, I deſire that he may bring his Books Oh, Oh! will not condemn me, but Law and Juſtice: I am not to be run down with Oh, Oh! or what ſuch impudent Villains as theſe ſay.

L. H. S. Read what you have there.

Lyd. From Liege we ſet forth to Paris, January 1. 72. where we ſtaid three Weeks, and arrived thence at London, January 24; there we ſtaid till May 73, and from thence we went to Liege again in June, and from Liege we ſet forth to London in Auguſt, and returned October the 3d, 73.

L. H. S. Were you all the while between Auguſt and October in London?

Lyd. I am morally certain, that I did not go from my Lord all that time.

L. H. S. Where were you after October?

Lyd. Which October, if your Lordſhip pleaſe?

L. H. S. October, 73.

Lyd. At Liege; for we returned to Liege at October the 3d, and then after this my Lord ſent me into England. I left him at Liege, and from thence I ſet out for England; and in January I returned to Liege, which was the greateſt part of time that I was ever abſent from him.

L. H. S. And was he at Liege, are you ſure, all that time from October to January?

Lyd.

Lyd Yes, except he fled: For I ſent Letters by the foreign Poſt, and received Letters by the foreign Poſt every Week. And his Account-Books will ſpeak it.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we deſire to ask him one Queſtion, (ſince he can give ſo exact an Account) Whether my Lord Caſtlemain was in England, 72; and how much of that Year?

Lyd. Yes.

Sir Will. Jones. How many Months of the Year 72, was he in England?

Lyd. I read it before. We arrived from Liege to London, January the 24th, 72, and ſtaid at London till May 73.

L. H.S. But where was my Lord all the Year 72?

Lyd. Pray, my Lords, do you mean New-Stile or Old-Stile?

L. H. S. When I ſpeak of his being at London, I mean the Stile of the Country.

Sir Will. Jones. Then, under favour, he ſpeaks of the latter part of the Year: I deſire to know, whether my Lord for all the former part of the Year was in England?

L. H. S. Where was my Lord in December, 72, and in November before that, and in all the Year up backwards?

Lyd. My Lords, I have told you the whole Year.

L. H.S. But where was my Lord from January 71, to January 72?

Lyd. In 71, June the 19th, New-Stile, we came to London, and returned in September to Liege; from Liege we ſet forth to Paris, January 1, 72; and arrived at London, January 24.

L. H. S. He runs paſt the time.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we ask him a plain Queſtion, but he does not anſwer it; he ſlips over the time that we deſire your Lordſhips to ask him about.

L. Staff. I beſeech your Lordſhips that it may be made plain, that there may nothing be ſaid afterwards that it was not plain.

Lyd. Sir, do you propoſe any thing to me, and I will anſwer it.

Sir Will. Jones. Anſwer not us, anſwer my Lords.

Lyd. I deſire any body may peruſe my Notes, if they pleaſe.

L. H.S. Pray, Sir, anſwer the Queſtion, which in very ſhort Terms is this, Where my Lord Caſtlemain was all the whole Year 72?

Lyd. Well, my Lords, I will; I can but read it over again. From Liege we ſet forth to Paris, January 1. 72.

L. H. S. Are not you a rare Fellow now!

Lyd. My Lords, I underſtand it according to the Stile of that Country when I am there, and of this Place when I am here.

L. H. S. Anſwer me according to our Stile.

Lyd. This that I have written here, in the Book out of which I took it, hath been written ever ſince that time; and I did not think I ſhould e'er be called to account about it.

L. H. S. Begin January the 1ſt, 71.

Lyd. We went from Liege to Paris, where we ſtaid about a Week, or ſuch a time, and we arrived at London, January the 24th, that is the Old-Stile, and ſtaid at London till May the 8th, 73.

L. H. S. That is impoſſible, for you 'ſcape a Year and an half together.

Lyd. My Lord was here in England in January.

L. H. S. You begin very gravely with January, Stilo veteri, that you came from Liege; and ſo January the 24th, Stilo veteri, you came to London.

Lyd. When I ſpeak of any Stile, I underſtand it according to the Stile of the Country.

L. H. S. But in your Account, what is become of all the time from January 71, to January 72; ſay and ſwear, if you can, where my Lord was all that time.

Lyd. He muſt be in London.

L. H. S. Can you take it upon your Oath, that my Lord was in London from January 71, Stilo veteri, to May 73, Stilo veteri?

Lyd. I cannot know how to count better than I have done.

L. Staff. Mr. Turberville ſays, my Lord Caſtlemain was in 73 at Powis-Caſtle; I beſeech your Lordſhips this Man may be asked, and that without any Interruption, where my Lord was that Year.

Sir Will. Jones. With your Lordſhips favour I muſt deſire your Lordſhips to ask Mr. Turberville whether he did ſay poſitively the Year 73; for if my Ears and my Notes do not fail me, he ſaid, as he remembred; and that is the reaſon why we ask about the Year 72.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, I do not ſay poſitively, nor cannot, which Year it was.

Lyd. My Lords, I do ſtand upon it that he was in London January 72, and went away May 73.

L. H. S. What becomes of the mean time, between January 71, and May 73?

Lyd. My Lords, I explain my ſelf as well as I can.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, will you call any more Witneſſes?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. Call them then.

Earl of Shaftesbury. My Lord High Steward, I deſire my Lord Stafford may be asked how many Witneſſes my Lord hath more, for it now grows late.

L. H. S. My Lord, I deſire to know how many Witneſſes you have more?

L. Staff. Three or four; I can't tell well how many.

Lords. Adjourn, adjourn.

L. H.S. Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure that we do adjourn?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H.S. Then this Houſe is adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber.

Then the Lords returned in their former Order to their Houſe, and the Commons went back to their Houſe.

Mr. Speaker reſumed the Chair, and a Meſſage from the Lords was ſent by Sir Timothy Baldwin and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker,

The Lords have ſent us to acquaint this Houſe, that they have ordered the Priſoner, William Viſcount Stafford, to be brought again to his Tryal at the Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall to-morrow morning at Ten of the clock.

The Fourth Day.

Friday, December 3. 1680

ABOUT the Hour of Ten in the Morning the Lords adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall, and returned in their former Order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair,

Chair, the Commons were ſeated as before-mentioned.

The Court being ſat, Proclamation for Silence was made, and the Lieutenant of the Tower commanded to bring his Priſoner to the Bar; which being done, the Lord High Steward ſpake to the Priſoner as followeth.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, your Lordſhip's Defence took up yeſterday. All the Day was employed in hearing your Lordſhip's Witneſſes to impeach the Credit of the Teſtimony that hath been given againſt you. Your Lordſhip hath excepted againſt Dugdale, becauſe you were not at Tixall, as he ſays you were, neither the latter end of Auguſt, nor the beginning of September, till the Twelfth; and when you were there, you never ſent for him to your Chamber, but your Man, upon his own deſire, brought him: and when he came there, the Buſineſs was, to deſire you to get leave that he might go to the Race; and there was no opportunity of private Diſcourſe, becauſe your Men were in the Room all the while: That Dugdale hath often ſaid he knew nothing of the Plot; that he ſwore falſly, when he ſaid he told of the Letter about the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey before it was known he was kill'd, and when he ſaid, that Hobſon told him preſently after the Almoner went over, which was three Years before Hobſon came to my Lord Aſton's Service. Your Lordſhip hath likewiſe objected, that he hath corrupted Perſons to ſwear falſly againſt you and others, as Robinſon the Upholſterer againſt your Lordſhip, Morrall the Barber againſt Sir James Symons, and Holt the Blackſmith to ſwear that one Moor carried away Evers. Your Lordſhip hath endeavoured to diſcredit Oates, by his ſaying he knew nothing of any other Perſons that were concerned in the Plot, and after accuſing the Queen. Your Lordſhip hath impeach'd the Credit of Turberville, by proving that you came home by Diep, and not by Calais, as he ſays you did; that you had never the Gout while you were in France, nor, as your Page ſays, for theſe ſeven Years; that my Lord Caſtlemain was not at my Lord Powis's in the Year 73. and there you left off. This I take is the Sum of what your Lordſhip ſays; if I do you any wrong, your Lordſhip will put me in mind of it.

L. Staff. I thank your Lordſhip, you have done it with great Equity and Truth.

L. H. S. Then go on.

L. Staf. The next Witneſs that I call is one John Porter.

(Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. John Porter.

L. H. S. What Profeſſion are you of?

Porter. A Butler.

L. H. S. To whom?

Porter. To my Lord Powis.

L. Staf. My Lords, I deſire your Lordſhips would ask him what Mr. Turberville ſaid about the Plot.

L. H. S. I will ask him all the Queſtions your Lordſhip deſires I ſhould ask him.

Mr. Foley. We deſire to know what Religion he is of.

L. Staff. I deſire your Lordſhip would ask him that Queſtion, and not the Managers.

L. H. S. They will tell me their Queſtions, my Lord, and I will ask them.

L. Staff. They ask him, my Lords, and not you.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Porter. A Church-of-England Man, my Lords.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. The Popiſh Church of England, I believe.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, let not this be; when my Witneſs ſays he is of the Church of England, they cry he is of the Popiſh Church of England.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray, good my Lord, we are ſilent when you ask him proper Queſtions, and make no Remarks; we do not ſpeak it to the Court; we may ſay what we will among ourſelves, I hope.

L. Staf. I may ask impertinent Queſtions, becauſe I do not underſtand ſo well as theſe Gentlemen. But I pray they may not deal thus with me.

L. H. S. My Lord, you ſhall ask what Queſtions you pleaſe.

L. Staf. Pray ask him what Mr. Turberville ſaid to him about his Knowledge of the Plot.

L. H. S. What did Turberville ſay to you about his knowing of the Plot?

Porter. About a Year ſince, when I ſerv'd my Lord Powis as Butler there, he was us'd to come and ſee me; it was not at my Lord's Houſe, but he ſent for me to a Victualling-Houſe——

L. H. S. That was the laſt Year?

Porter. Yes.

L. H. S. What time of the Year?

Porter. It was about twelve months ago, I cannot ſay poſitively the time.

L. H. S. Was it Winter or Summer?

Porter. He hath been both, I can't be poſitive which; I believe he hath been there forty times.

L. H. S. In the Year 80, or 79?

Porter. In the Year 79.

L. H. S. What did he ſay?

Porter. He came there, and asked me how my Lord Powis did; and ſaid, he was extremely troubled that he was in that Affliction, for he did verily believe, that neither he nor the reſt of the Lords were in the Plot; and the Witneſſes that ſwore againſt him, he believ'd were perjur'd, and could not believe any thing of it.

L. H. S. Have you any more to ſay?

Porter. Yes, my Lords: I told him, if there were ſuch a thing as a Plot, he having been beyond Sea, muſt certainly know of it. He told me, as he hop'd for Salvation, he knew nothing of it, neither directly nor indirectly, againſt the King's Sacred Perſon, nor the Subverſion of the Government. And he further ſaid, Altho I am a little low at preſent, and my Friends will not look upon me, yet I hope God Almighty will never leave me ſo much, as to let me ſwear againſt innocent Perſons, and forſwear and damn myſelf.

L. H. S. Where was this ſaid to you?

Porter. At the Ship Alehouſe in Lincolns-Inn-Fields one time, another time at the King's-Head Tavern in the Strand, and another time at the Golden-Ball in the Strand.

L. H. S. Was any body by, beſides yourſelf?

Porter. Not at that time; but there is a Gentleman in Court, that can teſtify that he ſaid ſuch things at other times.

L. H. S. What ſay you to this, Turberville?

Mr. Tur. I ſay 'tis all falſe: But if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I'll tell you what I ſaid once, I did conceive my Lord Powis was the leaſt concern'd of any, I thought; and I hop'd it would prove ſo. I can take all the Oaths in the World, I ſaid no more.

L. H. S. What elſe do you know?

Porter. Only ſuch things as theſe he hath often ſaid.

Earl of Shaftesbury. Pray, my Lords, ask him how came Turberville to talk of Witneſſes about the Plot?

L. H. S. Upon what occaſion came Turberville to talk of theſe Matters?

Porter. It was only voluntary of himſelf; it was ſpeaking of my Lord Powis, and the reſt of the Lords in the Tower.

Earl of Shafteſ. My Lords, I mean of his own being a Witneſs.

L. H. S. How came Turberville to ſay, he hop'd God Almighty would never forſake him ſo far, as to let him ſwear againſt innocent Perſons? he was never call'd to be a Witneſs.

Porter. But, my Lords, ſome of his Friends did ſay they were fearful of him, in regard he was reduc'd to Poverty; his Friends were fearful.

L. H. S. Who were fearful?

Porter. His Brother and Siſter, Mr. Turberville and his Wife.

L. H. S. Did he take notice to you that they were afraid he would come in?

Porter. Yes, Mr. Turberville did tell me himſelf, that they heard he would come in.

L. H. S. Have you ſaid all that you have to ſay?

Porter. My Lords, that is all I have to ſay.

L. H. S. Then call another, my Lord.

L. Staf. Where is Mr. Talden?

(Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. Talden.

L. H. S. Your Chriſtian Name?

Witneſs. John.

L. H. S. What is your Profeſſion?

Talden. A Barriſter at Law.

L. H. S. How long have you been called to the Bar?

Talden. I was call'd to the Bar laſt Trinity Term was twelve Months.

L. H. S. What Houſe are you of?

Talden. Grays-Inn.

L. H. S. Are you a Practiſer?

Talden. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Talden. Of the Church of England.

L. H. S. Well, what can you ſay?

Talden. I am ſummon'd to appear by Order of this Houſe; and I deſire to know of my Lord what he is pleas'd to examine me about.

L. Staff. What Mr. Turberville hath ſaid in his hearing about the Plot.

L. H. S. What Diſcourſe hath paſs'd between you and Turberville about the Plot?

Talden. My Lords, in February or March laſt I was walking in Grays-Inn-Walks with Mr. Turberville, and Mr. Powell and he din'd with me a day or two after; and there Mr. Turberville and I were talking of the Diſtractions of the Times, how Trade was ruined, how the whole Kingdom was out of order; and he was a little touch'd at ſome things, and cry'd out, God damn me, now there is no Trade good, but that of a Diſcoverer; but the Devil take the Duke of York, Monmouth, Plot and all, for I know nothing of it.

L. H. S. That is odd, that he ſhould ſay it was a good Trade to be a Diſcoverer, and at the ſame time ſay, he knew nothing of the Plot.

Talden. This I underſtood to be his Meaning; he curs'd himſelf and them, becauſe he knew nothing of the Plot to diſcover; for he would have got Money by it (as I underſtood) as well as others.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, Mr. Talden did declare yeſterday, he was ſummon'd in by my Lord Stafford the laſt Night, and that he had nothing to ſay but what was by Hear-ſay.

Talden. My Lords, I do declare here what I ſay is true. And yeſterday Mr. Powell gave me a Caution to take heed what I did, and ſwore by God, it would elſe be the worſe for me.

L. H. S. Who did?

L. H. S. Who is that?

Talden. Mr. Turberville's Friend. And I ſaid, I do not appear here as a voluntary Evidence, but by an Order of the Houſe of Lords. I do not know what weight my Evidence may have; for I can ſay nothing but what I heard him ſay, and ſo perhaps it will be taken but for an Hear-ſay.

Mr. Tur. You ſaid you knew nothing but by Hearſay.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Gentlemen?

Manag. No, my Lords.

L. Staff. My Lords, I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with any more Witneſſes as to theſe Points; I have here a Copy of the Warrant for the Yacht to go to Diep: and if there be any Queſtion whether I did come over from Diep at Chriſtmas 75, if you pleaſe the Book may be ſearched.

L. H. S. My Lord, it is all loſt, for I hear not one word.

L. Staff. I ſay, my Lords, if it be fit to trouble your Lordſhips with it, I can prove that I did come over in the Yacht from Diep at Chriſtmas 75; here is the Copy of the Warrant for it to go for me. And whether you will have it prov'd that I did come over thence, I ſubmit to you.

L. H. S. I ſuppoſe that is fully prov'd, that you did come by Diep.

Manag. We do not deny it.

L. H. S. You do not ſtand upon it, Gentlemen, do you?

Manag. No, no, my Lords.

L. H. S. 'Tis admitted to you, my Lord.

L. Staff. My Lords, when I went from your Lordſhips Bar laſt Night, I had no thoughts of examining any Witneſſes, but what I have already done: But, my Lords, ſince I was here, there hath ſomething happen'd, about which I deſire Dr. Oates may be called again (I ſhall give you my reaſon why I move it afterwards) upon ſomething I heard yeſternight.

L. H. S. Call Dr. Oates again. (Who appeared and ſtood up.)

L. H. S. My Lord, what does your Lordſhip call him for?

L. Staff. He did ſay, that he being a Miniſter of the Church of England, did ſeemingly go over to the Church of Rome, or ſome ſuch Words; I deſire he may anſwer that firſt.

L. H. S. What ſay you?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I did ſay I did but ſeemingly go over.

L. Staff. I deſire to know, whether he was really a Papiſt, or did but pretend.

Dr. Oates. I did only pretend, I was not really one, I declare it.

L. H. S. What do you make of that?

L. Staff. I deſire to know how long Dr. Oates was in Spain.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I came into Spain in May, and I came home again in November.

L. H. S.

L. H. S. That is ſix Months.

L. Staff. He is called Dr. Oates: I beſeech your Lordſhips to ask him, whether he were a Doctor, made at the Univerſities here or abroad.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, any matter that is before your Lordſhips, I will anſwer to it; but I hope your Lordſhips will not call me to account for all the Actions of my Life: whatever Evidence is before your Lordſhips, I will juſtify.

L. H. S. The Doctor hath never taken it upon his Oath, that he was a Doctor, and why do you ask it?

L. Staf. He is called a Doctor, and I would know whether he did never declare upon his Oath, that he took the Degree at Salamanca?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I am not aſhamed of any thing I have ſaid or done; I own what is entred as my Oath before your Lordſhips, and am ready to anſwer it; but I am not bound to ſay what does not at all concern this Buſineſs.

L. Staff. I ſay, my Lords, 'tis entred upon your Lordſhips Books, that he did ſwear at the Council, he was at Madrid with Don John of Auſtria; I would know of him whether he did ſo.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I would have my Lord to propoſe the Queſtion to the Court of Peers.

L. H. S. Have you ſworn any thing of Don John of Auſtria?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I refer my ſelf to the Council-Book.

L. Staf. I beſeech your Lordſhips, I may have that Book.

L. H. S. I believe it is in the Narrative; turn to the Journal, you have that mention'd there.

[To which the Clerk turned, but it could not be found.]

L. H. S. If you will not acknowledge it, we muſt ſtay till the Book be brought.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will repeat, as well as I can, what was ſaid at the Council-Table; but I had rather the Council-Book were fetch'd, becauſe I am upon my Oath: but, my Lords, I always thought the Council-Book is no Record upon any Man.

L. Staf. I deſire it may be produc'd, or he own that he ſaid ſo.

L. H. S. What you ſaid at the Council-Table, you ſaid upon your Oath, and 'tis lawful to lay it before you.

Dr. Oates. But if your Lordſhips pleaſe, as to what was ſaid at the Council-Table, if my Lord will bring any one viva voce, to ſwear what was ſaid by me there, that will make ſomething.

L. H. S. That may be material, as he ſays, that your Lordſhip ſhould bring ſomebody to ſwear he ſaid ſo, for the Clerks may miſtake him.

L. Staff. If your Lordſhips pleaſe that the Book may be ſent for, I will make it out.

Sir W. Jones. It could not be read if it were here.

L. H. S. If the Clerks will ſwear what is in the Books, it may.

Sir W. Jones. But whether the Clerks will take that upon them or no, may be a Queſtion.

L. H. S. Go on in the mean time.

L. Staff. I cannot conclude with him without it.

L. H. S. Where is the Council-Book? For the Clerks inform me 'tis not in their Cuſtody; but the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons have been attended with the Book, and other Papers relating to it.

L. Staff. In the mean time, give me leave to ſay ſomething, tho perhaps it may be nothing to the purpoſe: Mr. Yalden was juſt now going down, and Turberville threatned to lay him by the heels.

L. H. S. If he did ſo, 'tis a Miſdemeanor, and he muſt be puniſh'd for it. Call Yalden and Turberville.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, have you dar'd or threatned Yalden the Witneſs, to lay him by the heels?

Mr. Tur. I did not ſpeak any ſuch Words to him; Mr. Dugdale was juſt by me all the while.

L. Staff. I tell you but what he ſaid, and what I can prove by Witneſs; pray call Yalden.

Mr. Tur. This Gentleman, Captain Scudamore, ſtood by me too.

L. H. S. But I ask you upon this Miſdemeanor, whether you threatned Yalden to lay him by the heels?

Mr. Tur. My Lords, I ſtood by Mr. Dugdale till he was gone down.

L. H. S. How could he lay him by the heels? By what Authority could he do it?

Mr. Tur. I did not ſpeak ſuch a Word, upon my Oath.

L. Staff. Ask Yalden, I am told he did.

L. H. S. I am afraid you are miſinform'd, my Lord; for he could not do it, 'tis not in his power.

L. Staff. He threatned he would jayl him; but if you won't examine it, I ſubmit to you.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, Yalden, it ſeems, calls us a Pack of Rogues, that give Evidence for the King; and here are Witneſſes of it.

(Yalden ſtood up.)

L. H. S. Yalden, were you threatned by Turberville?

Yalden. Yes, I will tell you how I was threatned, my Lords: Mr. Turberville pulls me by the Arm, when I had given my Evidence, and asked me if I knew him, and bid me take care.

L. H. S. Do you call that a Threatning?

Yalden. My Lords, I did not make this Complaint, nor did I deſire it ſhould be made; but ſpeaking this in the Room, ſomebody carried it to my Lord.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, now he hath done, let me ſpeak, I pray; Mr. Yalden did ſay in the hearing of Captain Scudamore, who is here, he had got a great many Clients here; but you, ſays he, have got nothing but a Pack of Rogues.

Yalden. That is a Miſtake.

L. H. S. This is fine Work. But, Gentlemen, will you call Captain Scudamore now, or will you ſtay till afterwards?

Sir F. Win. My Lords, Mr. Turberville deſires it may be now, and we do alſo deſire it upon this occaſion; Captain Scudamore is a Man of Quality, and will give you a true Account. We did not think to have interpos'd in my Lord Stafford's Evidence; but he having impeach'd our Witneſſes of a Miſdemeanor, we conceive it fitteſt to clear it at this time.

(Then Captain Scudamore was ſworn.)

L. H. S. Mr. Scudamore, what are you call'd for? Can you ſay any thing that happen'd between Turberville and Yalden?

Captain Scudamore. The Gentleman that is here, that ſaid he was one of Grays-Inn, I don't know his Name ———

L. H. S. 'Tis Yalden.

Captain Scudamore. I heard a Gentleman ask him if he came there to get Clients, and he ſaid, I know nothing among you but Roguery.

L. Staf. Whereabouts did this Gentleman ſtand?

Capt. Scudamore. In the Paſſage.

Mr. Tur. Here are five or ſix more that heard him ſay ſo.

Talden. That which I ſaid, was this, That I might come hither for Practice, but I did not come hither for Roguery.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, until ſuch time as the Council-Book comes, which may be ſent for, will your Lordſhip proceed to ſomething elſe?

L. Wharton. My Lord Steward, I humbly conceive, that it was reſolved in the Lords Houſe, the day before yeſterday, that no Book ſhould be ſent for out of the Court; and it was done upon the Judgment of all the Judges of England.

Talden. My Lords, they will not permit me to go down.

L. H. S. There is a ſtrange Quarrel between you Witneſſes, and an Affectation of complaining one of another: Let Mr. Talden go down.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I would only acquaint your Lordſhips, that the Council-Book, that my Lord does make mention of, was in the hands of our Clerk, we did not know of it, when it was firſt diſcourſed of; but now underſtanding that here it is, we deſire it may be delivered in to any body that hath occaſion for it.

L. H. S. Hand it in. (Which was done.)

L. H. S. What Day does your Lordſhip ſpeak of?

L. Staf. The 28th, 29th, or 30th of September.

Clerk. Then this is not the Book, for this is for January.

L. Staf. My Lords, Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper allowed me?

L. H. S. Yes, yes; give my Lord Pen, Ink, and Paper. (Which they did.)

[Then the Lord High Steward looked upon the Council-Book.]

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, in this Council-Book, as far as we can inform our ſelves by the Table of it, there is nothing at all of it; it muſt be the Council-Book in September.

Sir W. Jones. We have no other Book but that.

L. H. S. Why did not your Lordſhip ſend all this while to the Council-Table for any thing that was material, but give the Court the trouble to be interrupted upon your Inquiries?

L. Staf. My Lords, you may do what you pleaſe, I did not know any ſuch thing would have needed to be urged, I have Proof enough without the Book: The uſe I ſhould have made of it, is this, I do appeal to ſome of your Lordſhips (you that were of the Council) I do appeal to which of you that were by, whether Dr. Oates did not ſay at the Council-Table, he had been at Madrid, he went from Valladolid to Madrid, and there did preach ſomething at the Jeſuits College at Madrid (what it was I cannot tell) when Don John of Auſtria was by.

L. H. S. If any of my Lords of the Council do remember it, they may teſtify.

L. Privy Seal. My Lords, I ſhall tell your Lordſhips as much as I remember of it: Dr. Oates was examined about his Journey into Spain, and (amongſt the reſt) ſome Queſtion happened to be asked, whether he had ſeen Don John of Auſtria; he ſaid he had ſeen one that was called ſo, that he knew him not, but he was pointed to one that they ſaid was Don John of Auſtria: that I heard.

L. Staf. My Lord, I thank you.

L. H. S. You hear what is ſaid, Dr. Oates.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, ſuppoſe I did ſay ſo, I think there is no Crime in it.

L. H. S. 'Tis not objected againſt you as a Crime, but as a Miſtake in your Oath, there was no ſuch Man there.

L. Privy Seal. My Lords, I would not be miſunderſtood in the Evidence I give; I did not ſay that Oates ſaid he knew him, but that he knew him not, and only was told ſuch a Man was he.

Dr. Oates. It was made apparent that I did not know him, becauſe I miſtook his Perſon.

L. Staf. I do ſtand upon it, That upon his Oath (and I have reaſon to believe he did ſo, becauſe I am ſo informed) he ſaid it was Don John of Auſtria.

L. Privy Seal. No, my Lord, Dr. Oates ſaid, he was a tall lean Man, and it ſeems he was a little fat Man.

L. Staf. If any Man would ſhew him a Man to counterfeit Don John of Auſtria, he would not ſhew him a lean Man for a fat.

L. H. S. Go on, my Lord.

L. Staf. I ſhall now put your Lordſhips in mind that he ſwore, but my Memory is bad, and my Eyes much worſe, that he ſaw me receive a Commiſſion, and it ſeems he ſaw what it was too: Now it is ſtrange, that amongſt ſo many Commiſſions that were given, none ſhould be extant; I deſire him to ſhew the Commiſſion he ſaw me receive.

L. H. S. Would your Lordſhip have him ſhew the Commiſſions which he ſaw you receive?

L. Staf. I do not believe he can ſhew my Commiſſion; for I am ſure there was none: I deſire him to ſhew any one of my Letters he talks of. He ſays, he came over, feigning to be a Papiſt, when he was not, and that they ſhewed him preſently all my Letters, and now he is come to diſcover the Plot; I ask him, did he keep any one of my Letters?

L. H. S. Have you any of my Lord's Letters by you?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I could not keep any Letters ſent to the Fathers; I had a ſight of them, but none of them to my particular uſe.

L. Staf. Does he know my Hand? Did he ever ſee it in his Life?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I do know his Hand, I believe I have a Letter of my Lord's by me, but not about me, 'tis of no concern: I'm ſure I have one of my Lord Arundel's.

L. Staf. But he ſays he hath a Letter of mine; let him ſhew one of my Letters.

Dr. Oates. He writes a mix'd Hand, I think 'tis but an indifferent one.

L. Staf. So many Commiſſions, and ſo many Letters, as are ſpoken of, and not one to be found or produc'd!

L. H. S. Can you ſend for the Letter?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I am not certain of that.

L. H. S. Where did you ſee my Lord write?

Dr. Oates. At Fenwick's, my Lords, when I carry'd the Letter to the Poſt.

L. Staf. How often hath he ſeen me at Fenwick's?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, not above twice, if twice.

L. Staf. My Lords, I cannot ſay I did not ſee him there; but I can ſay I don't know the Place, nor that ever I was there.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, will his Lordſhip ſay I never ſaw him at Dr. Perrot's?

L. Staf. Who?

Dr. Oates. My Lord Stafford.

L. Staf. Where did he live?

Dr. Oates. In Duke-ſtreet, going into Lincolns-Inn-Fields: He is the Arch-Prieſt of the Seculars, that is, the Principal of the Secular Clergy; and he hath the Care of the Engliſh College for the ſending of Scholars to the College. Mr. Fiſher, my Lord Stafford, and Dr. Perrot were diſcourſing together about ſending his Son thither, and Mr. Fiſher would have one ſent with him, that was Dr. Perrot's Man.

L. Staf. I do profeſs before God, I was never at Dr. Perrot's in my whole Life?

L. H. S. Did not you ſend your Son abroad?

L. Staff. No, my Lords, not I.

L. H. S. Had he a Servant at Dr. Perrot's to attend him?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lords, not that I know of, I cannot ſay he had not.

L. Staf. I tell you poſitively, as I am a Chriſtian, my Lords, I did not ſend my Son to Lisbon, he went againſt my Will. I told him I had an averſion to it, but ſaid I will not lay my Commands on you not to go; but he would go, I could not help it: I told him, do you mean to go into the College? he would not tell me.

L. H. S. Pray, my Lord, does not your Lordſhip know Dr. Perrot?

L. Staf. Yes, my Lords, I do.

L. H. S. Were you never with him at his Houſe in Duke-ſtreet?

L. Staf. No, my Lords, never in my Life; nor ſaw that Fiſher he ſpeaks of, ever in my Life.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, 'tis againſt the Rules of that Houſe, that any be admitted of that Houſe (if their Parents be Catholicks) without conſent of their Parents.

L. Staf. If he be admitted there, I know it not.

Dr. Oates. He lives there.

L. Staf. But I proteſt before God, my Lords, I asked him that Queſtion, Will you go to the College? No, ſays he, I will go to lie at the Biſhop's Houſe: But as for Dr. Perrot, I never was at his Lodgings in my Life, and I never knew where he lay; he hath been with me ſometimes, but I knew not that he was a Doctor. But, my Lords, I deſire I may not be ran down by theſe Fellows, who do not ſpeak a word true, not one tittle. My Lords, I have Witneſſes in whoſe Houſe Fenwick lay. Call them, and ask them if ever they knew me there in their Lives.

L. H. S. What kind of Man was he?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, he is an antient Man, he wears his own Hair.

L. H. S. Is he a tall Man, or a low Man?

Dr. Oates. A luſty Man.

L. Staf. Truly, my Lords, I never was at his Houſe ſince I was born.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I'll tell your Lordſhips a Circumſtance; That Summer Don Franciſco de Melos, the Ambaſſador here, was ſick, and I think he died of the Sickneſs, Dr. Perrot was his Father-Confeſſor; I was waiting for Dr. Perrot ſome time, for he promiſed to meet me at his Lodgings, and this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, did come in there.

L. Staff. Where?

Dr. Oates. Into Dr. Perrot's Lodging. Dr. Perrot had a Kinſman there that waited on him; and when my Lord came in, he was in haſte to ſpeak with Dr. Perrot, and he offered me half a Crown to fetch Dr. Perrot to him, and I made him this Reply, I was no Porter.

L. Staf. If ever I ſaw this Man in my Life ſince I was born, or heard of his Name till the Plot, then I will confeſs my ſelf guilty of all. Indeed, when firſt I heard of the Plot (they ſaid) there was one Mr. Oates diſcovered it, but I did not know any ſuch Man.

Dr. Oates. I went by another Name, and went in another Habit; and my Lord Stafford, tho his Memory be bad, yet it can't be ſo bad, but that he muſt remember ſomething of me.

L. Staf. I don't remember you, I never ſaw your Face in my Life.

L. H. S. You would have given him half a Crown to have fetch'd Dr. Perrot.

L. Staf. It ſeems then at that time, I took him for a poor Fellow, that I ſhould offer him a Shilling or two.

Dr. Oates. It is like I was, but I refuſed your half Crown, and told you I was no Porter.

L. Staf. My Lords, I ſhall give you Evidence that he was a poor Fellow, ſince he gives me occaſion to prove it; nay, that he was ſo poor, that he was brought down to accept of 6 d. I will prove it by the Party that gave it, now he puts me upon it. But, my Lords, this Dr. Oates ſays he ſaw ſome of my Letters, I deſire to know what was in them; did he take any Notes? What was in them?

L. H. S. Did you, when you had a ſight of theſe Letters at St. Omers, take any Notes out of them?

Dr. Oates. What Notes I did take, if I did take any, I have not now in being; but I do not remember that I did take any. Beſides, my Lords, we could keep no Papers by us, but what we communicated to our Superiours, and therefore it was ſtill their Care to look after their Papers themſelves; and in that Circumſtance of Time, if they had known I had taken Notes out of their Papers, it would have been prejudicial to me, and indanger'd my Life.

L. Staf. My Lords, I do infer this one thing further, upon what this Dr. Oates tells you; He did ſeemingly profeſs himſelf of the Catholick Religion, and I do ſtand upon it, that hereupon he is no competent Witneſs in that which he offers againſt me: For he being of the Church of England, (for I think he profeſſes himſelf ſo, and wears that Habit) I ſay, any Man, let him be who he will in the World, Church-of-England Man or other, that ſhall pretend himſelf to be a Papiſt, for what end ſoever it be that he ſo pretends, and diſſembles with God Almighty, which he muſt do to a great height, in receiving that Sacrament, which is by your Lordſhips and the Houſe of Commons declared to be groſs Idolatry, is not eaſily to be eſteemed a Witneſs. I appeal to your Lordſhips, to the Houſe of Commons, and every body, whether ſuch a Fellow, that will abhor his Religion, let him do it for any ends in the World, be a Man to be credited; and eſpecially ingaging in ſuch a way, to ſuch an height, in that which his Conſcience tells him is idolatrous, is not a perjured Fellow, and no compleat Witneſs? No Chriſtian, but a Devil, and a Witneſs for the Devil. And I appeal to the whole Chriſtian World, if a Proteſtant of the Church of England ſhould come to be a Servant to a Catholick, and pretend himſelf a Papiſt, and were not ſo, whether he were fit to be countenanced: As it did once happen to me at Bruſſels, before the King came in, one that was a Proteſtant came to be my Footman, and he profeſſed himſelf afterwards to be a Catholick; and when I found he was not ſo, I told him what a Villain he was, and he ought to be puniſhed ſeverely. I deteſt ſuch diſſembling with God; and I think by the Laws of God and Man, and the Holy Scriptures, ſuch a perjured Man is no Witneſs. I am ſorry I have troubled your Lordſhips ſo long; but now if you pleaſe to give me leave, my Lords, I will give you my Reaſons why I called him now: When I did remember how he had diſſembled with God Almighty, as I ſaid before, I did conſider with myſelf, ſure this Dr. Oates muſt have been, ever ſince he hath returned, of a very ſevere, ſtrict and ſober Life; for a Man that hath ſo diſſembled with God, ought to ſhew himſelf of an exemplary, peaceful, pious, civil Life, to teſtify the Truth and Reality of his Repentance. But laſt night when I came home, and was ſitting by the fire-ſide, extremely weary, my Daughter here comes in, and asks me if I had heard what had paſſed between Dr. Oates and the Lieutenant; how he called the Lieutenant Raſcal and Jaylor: ſure then, ſaid I to my ſelf, this is not the quiet, civil, ſober Man, that ſuch a one that hath lived as he hath done, ought to be. And this is the reaſon I ſpeak of it, that he ſhould call him vile Name, Goaler and Raſcal; it did not become a Man of his Coat to do it: Whether it was ſo or no, I do not know; but Mr. Lieutenant, I ſuppoſe, will ſatisfy your Lordſhip.

L. H. S. What did Oates ſay to you, Mr. Lieutenant?

Mr. Lieut. My Lords, I was deſiring Mr. Oates that he would keep the People down, becauſe there was a great Croud; and ſeeing a great many People come in, he told me they were Witneſſes that were to come in: ſaid I, I believe half of theſe are not Witneſſes; and the Door opening ſo often, I could keep this Place in no order, ſo I deſired they would ſtand away that were not Witneſſes: why, ſays he, you are but a Goaler. Then I told him, if it were not for his Coat, and I were out of this Place, I would break his Head. Then he called me Raſcal.

L. Staf. My Lord Steward, I deſire to know whether this be a Witneſs fit to be believed againſt any Man.

L. H. S. Mr. Oates, this does not become you; 'tis very ill Manners in you.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, the Lieutenant of the Tower hath the Law; and I refer my ſelf to the Law, if I have done him any wrong.

Mr. Ser. Mayn. It did not become Mr. Lieutenant of the Tower to tell him he would break his Head.

Mr. Lieut. Why? If any Man out of the Court, or in any other Habit, ſhould tell me I was a Goaler, I think I ſhould not deſerve to be the King's Lieutenant, if I did not break his Head.

Mr. Ser. Mayn. Pray tell the Court ſo. But yet, under favour, you ought not to threaten him for a Word to break his Head.

L. Staf. My Lords, I do ſay this to your Lordſhips, a Man that hath diſſembled with God Almighty in ſo high a nature, as he acknowledges himſelf to have done, ought to be a Man of a very ſevere Life afterwards, and not ſo paſſionate and cholerick, as it ſeems this Fellow is.

L. H. S. Will your Lordſhip proceed?

L. Staf. For this Man truly I ſhall ſay no more; I think I have ſaid enough to make him appear a Perſon not fit to be believed. I would only ask Stephen Dugdale a Queſtion, if you pleaſe; 'tis but a little, I won't hold you long. I only ask, and if he deny it I'll prove it, whether he was not a Priſoner at Stafford for Debt, when he made the firſt Affidavit?

L. H. S. Were you a Priſoner for Debt at Stafford, when you made your firſt Affidavit?

Mr. Dugd. In the Serjeant's hands I was, my Lords.

L. Staf. For a very great Debt, my Lords, ſome hundreds of Pounds, and he was a Fellow not worth a Groat. And, my Lords, Dr. Oates ſays I offer'd him half a Crown, and he refuſed it: I call Ellen Rigby to prove he was ſo poor he begg'd for Six-pence.

Dr. Oates. I will ſave my Lord the trouble of proving any ſuch thing. My Lord Stafford ſays I was a poor Man, and had not Six-pence in my Pocket: I can make it appear to the Houſe of Lords, that ſome time ſince I came in upon this Diſcovery, I have not had Two-pence in my Pocket, and ſometimes I have not had Six-pence; but a Man's Poverty is no Objection againſt his Honeſty.

L. Staf. Where is Ellen Rigby, to prove whether ſhe did not give him Six-pence? But then, my Lords, pray ask him whether he did not ſwear at a former Tryal, he had ſpent ſix or ſeven hundred Pounds more than he got?

L. H. S. Did you ſay at a former Tryal, you vere five or ſix hundred Pound out of purſe?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I will ſatisfy this Houſe what I ſaid: what Folks write after me, I am not to juſtify. But, my Lords, I had a Friend of mine preſented me with 100 l. I name not his Name, but if that be queſtioned, he is a Peer of this Houſe, and will juſtify it: I had 100 l. for my Narrative; I had 100 l. for taking ſome Jeſuits; which is 300 l. I had for ſome other Copies that I printed, a matter of 50 or 60 l. And now I can make it appear, that as to thoſe Sums which I received in groſs, I have ſpent them all, and more, in this Service; for I have none of the Money now by me.

L. Staf. He makes out but 350 l. and he ſwore he was out 700 l. but he does not ſwear one true Tittle, nor is any whit to be believed.

Dr. Oates. If you expect I ſhould prove it, I can prove it now.

Managers. Be quiet, Dr. Oates, we will do you right anon.

L. Staf. My Lords, I do not know for the preſent that I have any thing elſe to trouble your Lordſhips with. I remember theſe Gentlemen, when I asked them if they had any more Evidence to give in, ſaid, No, unleſs I ſhould give them ſome occaſion: and now I deſire your Lordſhips, if they bring any new Evidence, that I may have time to anſwer to it.

L. H. S. God forbid but you ſhould have liberty to anſwer any Objection.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, before we go about to ſum up our Evidence, we ſhall have occaſion to call ſome Witneſſes, and that will be to fortify what our Witneſſes have ſaid, to diſcover what kind of Witneſſes have been made uſe of againſt them, and to falſify what my Lords Witneſſes have ſaid in ſome Particulars. Theſe will be the three Heads for which we deſire to call Witneſſes. And becauſe, my Lords, we will not trouble you with making one intire Narration of what they can ſay, or to what purpoſe we call them before they come, deſire the favour that we may acquaint your Lordſhips with it, ſtill as we call them; for that we think will be the way more clearly to be underſtood. My Lords, we ſhall begin to make good by other Witneſſes, ſome things ſaid by Mr. Dugdale (for he was our firſt Witneſs, and therefore in order of time time we will firſt begin with him.) My Lords, the Priſoner at the Bar was pleaſed to object——

L. Staf. My Lords, I would not interrupt him; but I would ask whether there were more than two Heads that he proceeds upon to fortify their own Evidence, and to falſify mine.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I think we may comprehend all under thoſe two Heads. But, my Lords, you obſerve, one great Matter my Lord did inſiſt upon yeſterday, was this, That he, it is true, hath ſeen Mr. Dugdale at my Lord Aſton's; (tho by the way I muſt ſay this, my Lord at the firſt did not ſeem to know him)——

L. Staf. I did not know him in his Perriwig.

L. H. S. Do not interrupt them, my Lord, for they muſt have the ſame liberty that you had, to go on without Interruption.

Sir Will. Jones. We muſt have the ſame Freedom my Lord had. I will do his Lordſhip that right, he did afterwards recollect himſelf and ſay, his Perriwig had made that alteration in him, that he did not know him. But my Lord was alſo pleaſed to ſay yeſterday, That though he did not know him, yet he looked upon him as ſo mean and inconſiderable a Fellow, that he did purpoſely avoid all Diſcourſe with him; and that ſometimes when he was a-dry at my Lord Aſton's, he would not ſpeak to him to help him, nor to call one to help him to Drink. My Lord was pleaſed yeſterday alſo to deny that ever he had any Converſe with him, but only that one time, when indeed Mr. Dugdale did deſire to make uſe of my Lord, that by his Interpoſition he might have leave to go to the Foot-Race. My Lords, your Lordſhips very well perceive we are now going about to prove a Matter moſtly ariſing within my Lord Aſton's Family; and what Witneſſes we ſhall have from thence, your Lordſhips may eaſily imagine will not be very favourable to us: And if we have not many to this Point, your Lordſhips will take into conſideration, that thoſe who can give the fulleſt Proof here, muſt be thoſe of the Family, and the Religion of the Family. But, my Lords, we will call one or two that I believe will give you ſatisfaction that my Lord the Priſoner was no ſuch Stranger to Mr. Dugdale; that they have been ſeen together, and alone together: and that is the firſt thing we deſire to call Witneſſes to. Call Mr. Anſell and William Hanſon.

Mr. Hanſon was ſworn.

L. H. S. Where do you live? Whoſe Servant are you?

Mr. Hanſon. At Wilnal in Staffordſhire.

L. H. S. What do you ask him?

Sir Will. Jones. I deſire, if you be ſatisfied where he lives, that he will tell you whether he hath been at my Lord Aſton's, and ſeen my Lord Stafford there.

L. H. S. Have you ſeen my Lord Stafford at my Lord Aſton's?

Mr. Hanſ. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. When?

Mr. Hanſ. A little above two years ago.

L. Staf. Be pleaſed he may name the time poſitively.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lord Stafford is not ſo well verſed in Proſecutions of this nature, as to know that he is not to interrupt us while we are examining our Witneſſes.

L. H. S. My Lord, your Lordſhip received no interruption, nor muſt give none.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we deſire this Witneſs may be asked, whether or no he hath ſeen Mr. Dugdale and my Lord Stafford at any time together.

L. H. S. What ſay you?

Mr. Hanſ. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. When, and where?

Mr. Hanſ. I cannot juſtly tell the Time.

L. H. S. Can you tell the Place?

Mr. Hanſ. Yes, at my Lord Aſton's.

L. H. S. Whereabouts?

Mr. Hanſ. In my Lord Aſton's Parlour.

L. H. S. And were they alone?

Mr. Hanſ. Mr. Dugdale fetched me to my Lord Stafford.

L. H. S. And was no body in the Parlour when Dugdale fetched you to my Lord?

Mr. Hanſ. No, my Lords, I think there was not.

L. Staf. He thinks there was not.

Mr. Hanſ. There was not, to my beſt remembrance.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, will you be pleaſed to ask him the occaſion why Dugdale fetched him to him?

Mr. Hanſ. My Lord had a mind to have a Boy.

L. H. S. What was the occaſion that Dugdale did come to fetch you to my Lord Stafford in the Parlour?

Mr. Hanſon. To bring the Boy, my Lords, Yong Hawkins. Mr. Dugdale fetched me and the Boy to him; it was a Boy that my Lord would have to live with him.

Sir Will. Jones. Can you tell what time of the Year it was? whether Winter or Summer, as near as you can?

L. H. S. Ay, what time of the Year was it?

Mr. Hanſ. Indeed, my Lords, I cannot tell.

Sir Will. Jones. I deſire to ask him, whether when he went away he left them together?

L. H. S. Did you leave them together?

Mr. Hanſ. To my beſt remembrance, my Lords, I did. The Boy and I went away together, and we left them at my Lord Aſton's Parlour-door.

Sir Will. Jones. Call James Anſel.

L. H. S. Nay, if you have done with him, my Lord Stafford may ask him any Queſtions.

L. Staf. My Lords, I ſhall tell you how this thing is: There was a Report that this Hawkins was a very good Running-Footboy; and this was ſpoken of at my Lord Aſton's at Dinner or Supper, I don't know which, nay ſeveral times about that time: it was when my Lord of Danby was Treaſurer, and his Son, my Lord Dunblain, was much for Foot-Matches, and I had a mind to have a Footboy to make a Match with him; and I believe Dugdale at Dinner or Supper did ſay that he was a good running Lad, and I might deſire to ſee him, and Dugdale did bring him to me I believe into my Lord Aſton's Parlour; but there was at leaſt ſix or ſeven in the Room beſides.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, was this at that time when your Lordſhip was at Tixall the 12th of September?

L. Staf. Pray, my Lords, I deſire to ask him that Queſtion; I would know what Year it was.

L. H. S. He ſays it was above two Years ago.

L. Staf. I profeſs I believe it was one or two Years before I was taxed with this Plot. I did never think I ſhould be queſtioned about this, or I could eaſily have brought Witneſſes that were by at that time. It is true, he did come to me; but pray what time of day was it?

Mr. Hanſ. In the Morning, I think it was.

L. Staf.

L. Staf. I profeſs to God, it was after Supper; as I hope to be ſaved, it was as we were going to bed, to the beſt of my remembrance.

Sir Will. Jones. Did you come into the Parlour after Supper?

Mr. Hanſ. I am not ſure what time it was.

Sir Will. Jones. If his Lordſhip pleaſe to ask him any more Queſtions; if not, we will call another.

James Anſell. (Who was ſworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. James Anſell.

L. H. S. Where do you live?

Mr. Anſell. At Heywood in Staffordſhire.

L. H. S. Did you live with my Lord Aſton?

Mr. Anſ. I have been at my Lord's Houſe at Tixall.

L. H. S. But you are not of the Family?

Mr. Anſ. No.

L. H. S. How far is Heywood from Tixall?

Mr. Anſ. A Mile.

L. H. S. Have you ſeen my Lord Stafford at Tixall?

Mr. Anſ. I have ſeen a Man they called my Lord Stafford. I did not know him, but as they told me.

L. H. S. Did you ever ſee Dugdale in the company of a Man they called my Lord Stafford?

Mr. Anſ. Two Years ago I was at Tixall, and there I ſaw one, that they ſaid was my Lord Stafford, walking with Mr. Dugdale, whom I did know.

L. H. S. Where was it?

Mr. Anſ. In the Court at Tixall, walking together.

L. H. S. Were they alone? Was there no body elſe in company?

Mr. Anſ. None that I ſaw; there might be more Company, but I ſaw no more.

Sir Will. Jones. Pray, my Lords, ask how long ago this was.

Mr. Anſ. About Summer was two years.

Sir Will. Jones. If his Lordſhip will ask him any Queſtions now we have done, he may; otherwiſe we will call another.

L. Staf. My Lords, I have recollected my ſelf as well as I can in ſo ſhort a time, and all I can ſay, is, Some of my Servants were by, I ſuppoſe; and I do aſſure your Lordſhips, the other Buſineſs above three years ago: ſo the Fellow does not know what he does ſay.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

L. Staf. Pray ask him how long he ſaw me in the Court with Dugdale.

L. H. S. How long was it?

Mr. Anſ. I cannot tell: I did but walk thro the Court. I came to ſpeak with Mr. Dugdale, and he was with my Lord.

L. Staf. Did he hear us diſcourſe, or any Word we ſaid?

Mr. Anſ. No, I did not.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, if you pleaſe, before Anſell go away, we would ask him a Queſtion to another Point; and that is, For what reaſon Dugdale was ſecured, whether he went away for Debt or no?

L. H. S. Do you know wherefore Dugdale was ſecured, or why he went from my Lord Aſton's?

Mr. Anſ. I can't tell why he went away; whether for fear of the Plot, or no, I can't tell.

Sir Will. Jones. What diſcourſe was between you and Dugdale about it?

Mr. Anſ. Where? There was a Diſcourſe at Stafford, when he was there.

Sir Will. Jones. But before he went away?

Mr. Anſ. I came to my Lord Aſton's one day, and told Mr. Dugdale I heard ſay he was concerned in the Plot; for I told him I was amongſt ſome People, and they ſay you are concerned in the Plot. And this was about a Fortnight after the News was hot in our Country.

L. H. S. What ſaid he?

Mr. Anſ. He laugh'd at it, and ſaid, God blaſt him if he knew any thing of it.

L. Staf. So he denied it then.

Sir Will. Jones. Pray, Sir, at that time did he ſay he knew any thing about my Lord Aſton, and why my Lord Aſton did uſe him ill?

[Then my Lord Stafford objected Mr. Dugdale was too near the Witneſs, and deſired he might go down; and it was ordered accordingly.]

Sir Fran. Win. My Lords, we would ask this Man what does he know of Dugdale's concealing himſelf after he had heard of the Diſcourſe about the Plot.

Mr. Anſ. I know not that, my Lords; he was fearful of coming in Company: what his Diſcourſe was, I do not know.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, now, if it pleaſe your Lordſhips, we will go to another Particular. Your Lordſhips will pleaſe to remember, that yeſterday there were two Witneſſes called by my Lord Stafford, that is Sambidge and Philips. Sambidge was the old Gentleman that was deaf, and a little paſſionate too, becauſe he was once ſummoned to Litchfield Court; Mr. Philips was the Miniſter of Tixall: And both theſe did teſtify, That whereas Mr. Dugdale had ſworn at a former Tryal, that he did give notice before them of the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey upon Monday, which (as I take it) was the 14th of October, there was no ſuch notice given in their Preſence. Mr. Dugdale did affirm, they were by, and that he gave notice before them and others. This was made uſe of by my Lord to invalidate the Teſtimony of Mr. Dugdale, that he ſhould go and affirm at a former Tryal, that he did give notice of the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey within two days after he was killed, before any one knew of it; and Dugdale muſt needs know it from the Jeſuits: and both of theſe Gentlemen being now in Court, do deny that they heard of it at that time. My Lords, we ſhall prove to you here, that he did give notice of it at that time, and that they were both preſent: For Mr. Sambidge, it is not ſo ſtrange he ſhould not obſerve it, he was very deaf, and he could hardly hear yeſterday; and as he was deaf, ſo he was very paſſionate. As for Mr. Philips, I cannot ſay that as to him, but perhaps he cannot at that diſtance of time remember; but we will prove by undeniable Witneſſes, that notice was given that Monday, and that theſe Perſons were by when it was given.

Sir Fran. Win. This Witneſs we uſe to another purpoſe beſides this; but we will ask him only to this now.

L. Staff. I deſire the Witneſſes may ſtand by themſelves.

L. H. S. Let them take care that there be but one Witneſs at a time, and that no body approach them while they are giving their Teſtimony.

Sir Will. Jones. We did not make the like Deſire as to my Lord's Witneſſes.

L. Staf. In troth, you might with all my heart, if you would.

Sir Will. Jones. It may be ſo; but we did not fear them ſo much. Swear William Goldſmith.

(Which

(Which was done.)

Sir Will. Jones. I would begin with James Anſell.

(Who appear'd, and ſtood up again.)

Sir F. Win. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, we would ask him what he knows of a Diſcourſe about the Juſtice of Peace's Death; to tell the time, and what it was that was ſaid. We only ask general Queſtions.

L. H. S. What Diſcourſe did you hear of the Murder of a Juſtice of Peace, and when?

Mr. Anſ. My Lords, I heard it at Tixall.

L. H. S. When did you hear it firſt?

Mr. Anſ. The 14th of October.

L. H. S. Who did you hear it from?

Mr. Anſ. From Mr. Dugdale.

L. H. S. The Letter was dated the 12th. Where did you hear of it?

Mr. Anſ. It was at one Eld's Houſe, an Alehouſe in Tixall.

L. H. S. Where?

Mr. Anſ. At an Alehouſe hard by my Lord's?

L. H. S. Who was by?

Mr. Anſ. When that was ſpoken, there was I, and William Hanſon, and Mr. Sambidge, and Mr. Philips.

L. H. S. Did Dugdale ſpeak with them at that time?

Mr. Anſ. Yes, he was with them at that time, but he ſpoke with me at the Parlour; for he ſent for me into the Parlour.

L. H. S. Then at the ſame time he ſpake it to you, and they were in the Houſe.

Mr. Anſ. Yes, he came from them to me into the Parlour, and went to them again.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I hear him ſpeak to the Day of the Month; if you pleaſe to ask him if he can tell what Day of the Week it was?

Mr. Anſ. It was on a Monday.

L. H. S. That is right, the Letter was dated on Saturday the 12th of October.

Sir F. Win. I would ask him, whether afterwards he came into the Room where Mr. Philips the Parſon was?

Mr. Anſ. Yes.

Sir F. Win. Was there any Diſcourſe after you came in, about the Death of a Juſtice of Peace?

Mr. Anſ. I cannot tell that.

L. H. S. Will you pleaſe to ask him any thing, my Lord?

L. Staf. Indeed, my Lords, he ſays nothing concerning me; therefore I ſay only this, I deſire to know, if he can tell, what time of day it was?

Mr. Anſ. It was the Forenoon.

Sir Will. Jones. Then call William Hanſon again.

(Who appear'd.)

Sir F. Win. We call him to the ſame Queſtion. Do you declare to my Lords what you know of Mr. Dugdale's acquainting you with the Death of a Juſtice of Peace, and when it was.

Mr. Hanſ. I heard Mr. Dugdale ſay at old Eld's Houſe at Tixall, There was a Juſtice of Peace murdered, that lived at Weſtminſter.

L. H. S. When did he tell you ſo?

Mr. Hanſ. The Day that I went to run the Race, the 14th of October.

Sir F. Win. Can you remember what Day of the Week it was?

Mr. Hanſ. It was Monday.

L. H. S. Was it the Forenoon or Afternoon?

Mr. Hanſ. The Forenoon.

L. H. S. What Company was in the Houſe when he told you of it?

Mr. Hanſ. Old Mr. Sambidge, and Mr. Philips the Parſon of Tixall.

L. H. S. Were they in the Houſe at that time?

Mr. Hanſ. Yes.

L. H. S. Were they by when the Diſcourſe was?

Mr. Hanſ. Mr. Sambidge was going to drink a Bottle of Ale, as he ſaid, at my Lord's Bowling-Green; and for a while he ſits down, and preſently Mr. Philips comes in and ſits down, and Mr. Dugdale came out of the Parlour into the Room where we were come: ſaid I, What News? ſaid he, They ſay there is a Juſtice of Peace murdered at Weſtminſter.

Sir Fr. Win. Was Philips in the Room?

Mr. Hanſ. Yes, he hath forgot it, but he was there.

L. H. S. Did Philips hear it?

Mr. Hanſ. He might have heard it if he would.

L. H. S. Had you any Diſcourſe with Philips about this ſince?

Mr. Hanſ. No, my Lords.

Sir F. Win. He is poſitive both as to the Day of the Month, and as to the Week, and that both of them were preſent.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we ſhall prove to you now, that the Poſt which comes out of London on Saturday, comes to this Place on Monday Morning; and thoſe which come out of Tueſday, come there on Thurſday Morning; and the Poſt which goes out of London on Thurſday, comes to this Place on Saturday Morning.

L. Staff. He ſays the Poſt comes ſuch and ſuch Days, I own it, and in the Morning too.

Sir Will. Jones. Then I go on, my Lords, to another Point, which will be a farther Confirmation of the Matter. For, my Lords, we will prove to you, and that by Men of Quality, that the Noiſe of the Murder was in that Country, the Wedneſday and Thurſday following the Murder. Your Lordſhips pleaſe to obſerve, Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was killed the twelfth of October; he was found the Thurſday following, which was (as I take it) the 16th or 17th of October. We will prove now, that the Noiſe and Knowledge of the Murder was in the Country about Tixall, before he was found here near London. Now we only bring this as a Confirmation of this matter, that it was revealed at the Alehouſe, and ſo it went about the Country. And for this we call Edward Birch Eſq; and John Turton Eſq;

Sir F. Win. Before we examine them, I would ſtate the time. Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was miſſing on Saturday, which was the 12th of October; his Murder was not diſcover'd till Thurſday. We call theſe Perſons to a double purpoſe; the one to fortify what our Witneſſes have ſaid, and the other to ſhew, that this Man was diſpatched by theſe Mens Confederates, becauſe they knew it ſo ſoon; which could not have been, but that they were in the Conſpiracy themſelves.

L. Staf. I deſire only that he may ſay whether he means me among the reſt.

Sir F. Win. My Lord, I will do you no wrong, I ſpeak of thoſe at Tixall.

(Then Mr. Birch was ſworn.)

L. H. S. When did you hear of the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, Mr. Birch?

Mr. Birch. My Lords, I did not hear any thing of the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, till the Saturday Poſt; but I preſume that which theſe Gentlemen call me for, is this: I did hear before Thurſday, I think Tueſday was the firſt Day, that there was a Juſtice of Peace of Middleſex killed, and it was thought the Papiſts murdered him; and this on Tueſday and

Wedneſday

Wedneſday was all over the Country, that is, Tueſday after his Death. For I'll tell your Lordſhips how I came to take notice of it; for hearing ſuch a Report in the Country, I did not ſo much as take notice of it; but being at the King's-Bench Bar, at the Tryal of Green, Berry, and Hill, for the Murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, I found upon the Evidence that the Body was not found till the Thurſday after he was killed; that made me recollect my ſelf as to what I had heard in the Country: and as I ſtood at the Bar, I told ſeveral Gentlemen that I did perfectly remember, before Thurſday it was diſcourſed of in the Country by ſeveral Gentlemen where I lived.

Sir Will. Jones. Call John Turton Eſq;

Sir F. Win. Some of my Lords here, I perceive, deſire he ſhould be asked a more particular Queſtion.

L. H. S. I deſire to ask him this: You heard of it, you ſay, on Tueſday, that a Juſtice of Peace of Middleſex was killed; I deſire to know who you heard it from?

Mr. Birch. Truly, my Lords, I can't tell: For I'll tell your Lordſhips, I have ſome certain Days that I conſtantly appoint to be at home in, when People come about Buſineſs to me. Among theſe People, ſeveral came that asked me what News I had from London. I told them, I had received a Letter or two by the Poſt, and I ſhewed them thoſe Letters, there was little or nothing in them. Thereupon they asked me if I did not hear of a Juſtice of Middleſex that was killed. No, ſaid I: How come you to hear it? Says one, I come thro Cank, (which is within half a mile of mine own Houſe) and as I came thro, there came a Perſon from Heywood, that ſaid 'tis all the News about Tixall and Heywood, and that part of the Country. And this was ſaid to me in my own Houſe.

Sir F. Win. How far is Heywood from Tixall?

Mr. Birch. About a Mile.

Sir F. Win. Now, my Lords, I would ask Mr. Turton to the ſame Buſineſs.

(Mr. Turton was ſworn.)

L. H. S. Mr. Turton, pray hear: When did you firſt hear in Staffordſhire of the Death of a Juſtice of Peace of Middleſex?

Mr. Turton. My Lords, there are two Races in that Country, at a Place near Litchfield, and they are about the middle of October; the one that Year was the 15th, the other the 18th: the one the Tueſday, and the other the Friday. I was at both of them; and one of the Days, which I cannot be poſitive in, there was one Mr. Whitehall, a Juſtice of Peace in Staffordſhire, called me from the Company, and deſired to ſpeak with me by myſelf. Said he, Do you hear any News? No, ſaid I. Do you hear nothing, ſaid he, of a Juſtice of Peace that is murdered? (I then had not heard of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's being miſſing) No. Says he, Don't you hear he is murdered? Do you know him? Yes, ſaid I: How do you hear it? Says he, 'tis a Report about us. But I did not then believe it: but the next Poſt-day, which was Monday, I did hear it. It was either Tueſday or Friday, one of thoſe Days.

Sir W. Jones. If it were either one or t'other, 'tis as ſtrange, and the Evidence as ſtrong; for his Body was not found till Thurſday.

Sir F. Win. And will your Lordſhips pleaſe to obſerve, that by that time the Report had got the Name of Godfrey too, when at that ſame time we in London did not know what was become of him.

Mr. Turton. He asked me if I knew Sir Edmondbury Godfrey: Said he, I hear he was an active Juſtice of the Peace againſt the Papiſts; and he made this Inference, We had need have a care what we do, for we ſhall be all ſacrificed.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, will your Lordſhips be pleaſed to obſerve, that yeſterday there was ſome Witneſſes called to diſparage Mr. Dugdale; and the firſt Man, as I can remember, was a very ſubſtantial Gentleman, called Mr. Robinſon: I think he was not able to give an account of his Employment, but he was a Gentleman that lived upon his Mony; I remember thoſe were his Words. My Lords, we ſhall call (without telling you what they will ſay) ſome Witneſſes to prove the Condition of this Gentleman, what Reputation he is of, and what is his Converſation. And we firſt call my Lady Gerard.

L. Staf. My Lords, pray give me leave to ſay one Word——But 'tis no great matter, 'tis not worth the ſpeaking.

L. H. S. What can you ſay, my Lord?

L. Staf. It was only a Thought of my own, not worth troubling your Lordſhips with.

(Then the Lady Gerard appeared, and was ſworn.)

L. H. S. Does your Ladyſhip know one William Robinſon?

Lady Gerard. No, my Lords.

Sir Will. Jones. He hath ſeveral Names, we deſire he may be called.

L. H. S. Call Robinſon the Upholſterer.

(He was call'd, but appear'd not.)

Sir W. Jones. I perceive we miſtake one Lady for another. We deſire Mr. Booth, a Member of the Houſe of Commons, may be ſworn.

(Which was done in his Place.)

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, ſend for Robinſon your Witneſs.

L. Staf. I believe he is here; but if he be not, one that belongs to me I have ſent to ſee for him: whether he be a good or a bad Witneſs, I do not know perſonally.

Sir W. Jones. Mr. Booth knows him very well, he ſaw him yeſterday, and ſo we may venture to ask him the Queſtion.

L. H. S. Did you ſee Robinſon the Witneſs yeſterday?

Mr. Booth. Yes, my Lords, I did.

L. H. S. Do you know him?

Mr. Booth. My Lords, I do know him very well, tho I have not ſeen him often: for indeed, my Lords, he behaved himſelf ſo the firſt time that I ſaw him, that I believe I ſhall never forget him. My Lords, I am better acquainted with his Character than his Perſon, tho I know the Man very well; and truly the firſt time that ever I was in his Company, he gave me no encouragement ever to deſire it again: for, if you pleaſe, I'll tell you how I came to know him. He told your Lordſhips that he came into Cheſhire at a Cocking; it was at that time that I ſaw him: for upon the Sunday after the Cocking, I was invited to a Neighbour's, about two Miles from home. We were ſet down to Dinner, and we had not ſat long, but this Man comes into the Room where we were; there was an empty Place at the lower end of the Table, and he ſits him down, and began a Diſcourſe to ridicule the Lord's Day, in ſuch a manner as I never heard the like. And the reſt of his Diſcourſe was full of a great deal of Contempt of God Almighty, and all that was ſacred. All his Diſcourſe at Dinner was very profane. It was not in mine own Houſe; and becauſe it was not taken notice of by the Maſter of the Houſe, and he coming under the Protection of a young Gentleman, I did not what elſe I ſhould; for I ſhould have made him hold his tongue, or have uſed it to better purpoſe: The whole of his Diſcourſe was ſo atheiſtical and profane, that I never heard the like in my life. When Dinner was done, he uſed a great many Inticements to draw the Company into play, by asking what would they ſay if they ſhould ſee ſuch and ſuch things to be done: and at length he pulls out a great many Dice out of his Pocket, and behaves himſelf in that manner, as People do that would draw in others to play; and they that had better Skill in it than I, ſaid that they were all falſe. When I ſaw this, I deſired him to leave our Room, or to forbear; for, ſaid I, if this be the Entertainment of the Day, I muſt leave the Company: then they commanded him to deſiſt. This is all that I do know of my own Knowledge: But I ſhall acquaint you what I believe; for I have heard it from very conſiderable Perſons, whom I dare credit: for the Man run much in my mind, becauſe I never ſaw ſo ill a Man in my life. Coming home, I was ſpeaking to ſome of my Family; ſays I, yonder I met with the ſtrangeſt Fellow that I ever ſaw in my days, he is fitter to be hanged than any thing elſe. Oh, Sir, ſaid they, there is ſuch a Fellow hath cheated I know not how many at the Town where the Cocking was. The next day, I think it was, or ſhortly after, I had occaſion to go to that Town; and many People came and complain'd to me of his Cheats, to a very great degree. They asked me what they ſhould do. Said I, you have nothing to do, but indict him for a Cheat. Why, ſaid they, will you take no courſe with him? Said I, what courſe can I take? I am turned out of the Commiſſion of the Peace, elſe I know enough to bind him to the good Behaviour. After this, I had occaſion to go into Lancaſhire, and there I found he was better known than truſted. There were very loud Complaints againſt him, and ſome would have given twenty Pound to meet with him. I heard afterwards he went into Staffordſhire, and he changed his Name wherever he went; but he ſoon diſcovered himſelf, and all thereabouts he goes for a notorious Cheat. This is all I can ſay of him.

L. Staff. My Lords, be pleaſed to give me leave to ſay one word. I aſſure you, if I had thought this Man had been ſuch a Fellow as now he proves, I would not have brought him before you. I never knew what he was in my life, nor heard of his Name till Saturday laſt.

L. H. S. It may be ſo, my Lord: But your Lordſhip muſt take notice, this is the Man that gave the moſt important Evidence, that Dugdale ſhould corrupt him to ſwear againſt you for Mony.

L. Staff. Give me leave to obſerve upon that, my Lords, That if Dugdale knew him to be a cheating Fellow, he might think him the liker to take Money to forſwear himſelf.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we ſhall not reply now, but obſerve anon, how this cheating Fellow comes to ſwear for my Lord at this time. But we deſire an honourable Peer of this Houſe may give ſome account of him, and that is the noble Lord the Earl of Macclesfield; I think he may be known to your Lordſhips.

(Then the Earl of Macclesfield ſtood up.)

L. H. S. Pardon me, my good Lord, my Lord muſt be ſworn.

Earl of Mac. Before I am ſworn, I would know of your Lordſhips whether I ſhould be ſworn or no; for your Lordſhip ſhall not make me be ſworn, unleſs my Lords ſay I ſhould.

L. H. S. I would not offer it, if there were any colour of doubt in it.

(Then my Lord was ſworn.)

Earl of Mac. My Lords, I have nothing to ſay againſt this Man, but what he ſaid to me, and before a Juſtice of Peace too; for I did take this Man when he had run away from my Lord Gerard. He had cheated many of his Servants. I catched him on the way running to play his Tricks ſomewhere elſe, and I intercepted him: but tho I was a Juſtice of Peace there, yet becauſe it was in a manner my own caſe, I would not commit him, till I had carried him before another Juſtice of Peace. So the Man comes up to me; ſays he, My Lord, have you a mind to have your Son-in-law bubbled? I have been only teaching him how to avoid being cheated; I acknowledge my ſelf to be a Cheat, and I would teach him to avoid them. I am going now into Staffordſhire, and that was all I intended to his Lordſhip: I am a Rogue I confeſs. And upon this a Juſtice of Peace comes in, and while they were examining of him, we bid ſome that were by to ſearch him, and they found in his Pocket falſe Dice; and truly the Juſtice nor I did not know whether they were true or falſe. Says he, you don't know what to do with theſe, but I do. This is all I can ſay; but in all the three Counties of Staffordſhire, Cheſhire, and Lancaſhire, there are ſeveral Men that I ſee here, that know his Life better than I do: for 'tis his common Practice. And I believe, my Lords, the Judges muſt know him; for it was his common Practice at all Aſſizes and great Meetings to play theſe Pranks.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we will not trouble your Lordſhips any further as to Robinſon; if he were here, perhaps my Lady would know him: but having two ſuch Witneſſes, I think we need not trouble our ſelves nor you any more about him.

L. H. S. Have you done with my Lady Gerard?

Sir Will. Jones. Yes, and we beg her pardon for this Trouble. My Lords, your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to remember, there was one Holt was produced as a Witneſs by my Lord Stafford; and your Lordſhips, when you look on your Notes, will remember, he teſtify'd to this purpoſe: That Dugdale ſent an Horſe for him to Stafford Town; which Horſe brought him to the Star-Inn, and there Dugdale did offer him forty Pounds to ſwear, That one Mr. Moor carried away Evers the Jeſuit. My Lords, we will call ſome Witneſſes to this Mr. Holt; you will find him to be ſomething a-kin to Mr. Robinſon, and, as we ſuppoſe, of nothing a better Reputation than he. The Witneſſes will give you an account of his Pranks. Call Sampſon Rawlins, and Lander.

(Rawlins ſtood up, and was ſworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. Sampſon Rawlins.

L. H. S. What do you ask him?

Sir W. Jones. We deſire to ask him if he knows Samuel Holt the Blackſmith.

L. H. S. Do you know Holt?

Rawlins. Yes.

Sir F. Win. Acquaint my Lords what Reputation he is of, where he lives, and what he is.

Rawl. He is counted to be a very lewd looſe Fellow.

L. H. S. Why ſo?

Sir W. Jones. What hath he done?

Rawl. He is counted a drunken lewd Fellow.

Sir W. Jones. Is he of an ill Reputation in the Country where he lives?

Rawl. Yes, he is ſo.

L. H. S. For what?

Rawl. 'Tis ſaid in the Town he keeps another Man's Wife.

Sir W. Jones. Is there any other Fault he hath?

Rawl. He ſaid there were none but Rogues would take Mr. Dugdale's part; whereas I never knew any harm by Mr. Dugdale, and I have known him this fourteen or fifteen Years: I dealt with him, I was Taylor to the Family, and he ever paid me very honeſtly and well.

Sir W. Jones. Have you heard of Mr. Holt any other ill thing beſides what you ſpeak of?

Rawl. He broke open my Lord Aſton's Wine-Cellar, and ſtole ſeveral Bottles of Wine; wherefore my Lord Aſton bid Mr. Dugdale ſend him to the Goal: but he curry'd favour with Mr. Dugdale, and ſo kept in with him, that he afterwards begged for him of my Lord to forgive him; and now he comes to evidence againſt Mr. Dugdale, that was his ſure ſtedfaſt Friend, and ſaved him from the Goal.

L. Staff. I would ask this Witneſs a Queſtion——

Rawl. And becauſe I took Mr. Dugdale's part, ſaying, he was an honeſt Man (and he was ſo to me, and all others, as far as ever I heard) he met me, and would have murder'd me.

L. H. S. When was this?

Rawl. Since laſt Term, when I was up here. And likewiſe Sawyer took a Pot, and would have dong'd my Brains out.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I think this Man was ſummoned as a Witneſs, to attend at my Lord Aſton's Tryal. What Occaſion brought you to London at that time?

Rawl. I was ſubpœna'd up. And when I came home to my Wife and Children, they groſly abuſed me, and ſaid I was a Rogue, becauſe I came up upon his Majeſty's Service.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, ask him whether Holt was my Lord Aſton's Servant or no.

L. H. S. Was Holt a Servant to my Lord Aſton?

Rawl. He was a Smith hard by his Gate, and he worked to the Family.

L. H. S. Were you ſubpœna'd up to the Tryal of my Lord Aſton?

Rawl. Yes.

L. H. S. And it was for coming to that Tryal he offered to murder you?

Rawl. Yes, I have ſeveral Witneſſes of it. And by the Blow that Thomas Sawyer gave me, for a good while I could not lay my Head on the Pillow.

Sir W. Jones. Call Thomas Lander. (But he did not appear, being gone away ſick.)

Sir W. Jones. Becauſe we would not loſe your Lordſhips time, ſeeing the Man we call for, is gone away ſick, we will call a Witneſs as to another of my Lord's Witneſſes, John Morral. Call Thomas Thorne.

(Who was ſworn.)

Sir F. Win. My Lords, If that other Man come by and by, we hope your Lordſhips will give us leave to ask him a Queſtion to the Point which we are now gone over. But my Lord Stafford did produce one John Morral, a Barber that lived at Ridgley, who ſaid, that Money was offer'd him to ſwear againſt Sir James Symons, and Mr. Howard, and others. We call this Witneſs to give your Lordſhips an account what this Morral is, and how he hath behaved himſelf in this Buſineſs.

Sir W. Jones. What do you ſay about John Morral? Do you know him?

Thorne. Yes.

L. H. S. What do you know of him?

Thorne. I know he is a Man that uſed to come often to my Lord Aſton's to Tixall, to trim him, he is a poor Fellow that walks up and down the Country, and hath little or nothing to live on.

L. H. S. Is he poor and needy?

Thorne. Yes, he hath been ſued for Money, and I have been contributory to keep him out of Priſon.

Sir W. Jones. I ask you in general, is he of a good or bad Reputation?

Thorne. Indifferent.

Sir W. Jones. 'Tis modeſtly ſaid. My Lords, your Lordſhips have heard what kind of Witneſſes have been brought againſt us: For two of them you have had particular Matters; for a third, our Witneſs ſpeaks modeſtly, that he is a Man of indifferent Reputation. But now, my Lords, we muſt prove what Endeavours have been uſed to get other Witneſſes againſt our Witneſſes; and for that, I deſire to call one Simon Wright, to tell your Lordſhips what hath been offered him to ſwear againſt Dugdale, and by whom.

(Wright ſtood up and was ſworn.)

Mr. Foley. My Lords, we deſire this Witneſs would give your Lordſhips ſome account what Endeavours have been uſed by Offers of Money, or otherwiſe, to make him ſwear againſt Dugdale, and by whom.

L. H. S. Hath any body endeavoured to perſuade you to ſwear againſt Dugdale?

Wright. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Tell your whole Story, who it was, and what was offer'd you.

Wright. The firſt time I was employed was preſently after the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; and it was by one Mr. Pleſſington, that was in cuſtody about that matter: And he ſent me one Sunday Morning to the Marquiſs of Wincheſter's to deſire him to conſider what a Charge he lay at; and my Lord did ſend him word, he could not expect to be diſcharged ſo ſoon. The Tueſday after he was diſcharged; and afterwards coming unto me, I told him I was glad he had ſo good Friends to get out ſo ſoon. He told me, were I in the ſame condition, I ſhould have as good or better. Whereupon Mr. Pleſſington and I were as good Friends as any about the Town. I was his Barber, and Barber to Mr. Dugdale, and we were all great Chronies. And Pleſſington told me, if I could find a way to take off his Evidence, or deſtroy him, I ſhould have ſeven hundred Pounds. I went to enquire out where I might have a Security for the Money, and Mr. Reeves, an Apothecary in Chancery-Lane, did proffer me his Note, and ſo did Mr. Dewy the Scrivener: but I did not, nor had the Money. And ſeveral times, particularly at the Tryal of Mrs. Price and Mr. Tasborough, they would have had me ſworn quite blank, That he would have hired me to have ſworn againſt them. And afterwards they would have had me own I was forſworn, and they would get me a Pardon.

L. H. S. What had you ſworn?

Wright. What I heard Mrs. Price ſay at the Horſe-ſhoe in Chancery-lane, as to the blaſting of Dugdale, as may be ſeen in the Tryal.

L. H. S. Who offered you that ſeven hundred Pounds?

Wright.

Wright. My Lord Bellaſis's Steward.

L. H. S. What is his Name?

Wright. Pleſſington.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I think he ſays he was to ſwear againſt Mr. Dugdale; I deſire he would explain himſelf more particularly, and tell who it was that offered the Money to ſwear againſt Dugdale.

Wright. Mr. Pleſſington, my Lords. And ſince the Tryal of Mrs. Price, they did perſuade me to write a Paper for the blaſting the Reputation of Dugdale, and to ſhake his Credit by it. And that they carried to Mr. Drayton and Sir James Symons, and they being ſatisfy'd, would have me write again to thoſe Gentlemen, and they framed a Letter for me to write And thereupon Mr. Longmore (I know the Gentleman if I ſee him again) told me that Sir James Symons was better able to perform, than Dugdale was to promiſe; and if I would ſtand by it, I ſhould be an happy Man.

L. H. S. What had you ſaid in that Paper?

Wright. I had ſaid according as they directed me, That Mr. Dugdale would have given me Money to ſwear againſt Sir James Symons and Mr. Gerard.

L. H. S. Did you ſwear that?

Wright. No, I did not, but I was to have done it.

L. H. S. How came it to paſs you did not agree with them?

Wright. My Lords, I have had four Pounds in hand, and that I had by reaſon Poverty came upon me. And my Lord Bellaſis's Steward came and lay with me, and ſpent twenty Shillings upon me; but finding that I was not abſolutely true to them, nor like to go through, they diſtruſted me: and I borrowed an Horſe of Capt. Chetwin, and got down into the Country, where I have been ſince July laſt, till I was fetch'd up by a Meſſenger to come and give Evidence for the King. And there I received a Letter from my Lord Aſton's Agent, That if I would call at Stafford, and come up with my Lord's Witneſſes, they would bear my Charges up to London. I have the Letter in my Pocket.

L. Staff. If it pleaſe you, he may ſhew the Letter. (Which he did.)

Clerk. This for Simon Wright, a Barber, at Deliver with Care. Subſcribed, Your Loving Friend Abnett.

Simon Wright,

I Have juſt now received a Letter from the Lord Stafford, wherein my Lord mentioned Wright to be one of his Witneſſes, and deſired me forthwith to give Wright notice, that, if poſſible, he ſhould be at London on the Saturday night next, his Tryal being to be on the Tueſday after; therefore if he pleaſed to come to him, he ſhould give him Money to bear his Charges up, and he ſhould come up with my Lord's Witneſſes.

Abnett.

(This is the Subſtance of the Letter as it was taken.)

Sir Will. Jones. I preſume your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to take notice, he was intended a Witneſs for my Lord; and it was ſuppoſed then that he was able to ſay ſomething, but he was not produced by my Lord yeſterday.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, give me leave, as to this Witneſs; I deſire, if you pleaſe, I may have time to prove ſomething againſt this Man till tomorrow: I have enough againſt him.

Mr. Ser. Mayn. You will find another Witneſs, I ſuppoſe, by that time.

L. Staff. No, I will not find him; I have him already; I have enough againſt this Fellow.

L. H. S. You ſhall have time to ſay what you will, my Lord.

Mr. Ser. Mayn. I would my Lord would name his Witneſs.

L. Staff. I will name him to you, ſince you ask it, 'tis Dodd; he knows what I mean well enough.

Wright. I don't know him, my Lord, I'll aſſure you.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we will go on now to another Matter. My Lord Stafford was pleaſed to object, that Mr. Dugdale did talk much of Letters and Proceedings, but was able to ſhew none of them. My Lords, we will give an account how that comes about: Mr. Dugdale, as in part hath been proved already, was apprehenſive of being accuſed for the Plot; nay, I think we ſhall prove he was afraid he had been in the Proclamation againſt thoſe Traitors and Jeſuits that were fled. We ſhall prove, that Mr. Dugdale, to ſecure himſelf, and his then Friends (for he was not then come over to make any Diſcovery) did burn a great many Letters and Papers that did relate to thoſe Proceedings, and did not leave any thing remaining; hoping thereby to prevent a Diſcovery. We will call Witneſſes that were by when it was done, and I think that will be ſome Anſwer to this Objection. Call Elizabeth Eld, and Anne Eld.

(Elizabeth Eld ſworn.)

Sir F. Win. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, we would ask her this general Queſtion; What ſhe knows of Mr. Dugdale's burning a great many Letters and Papers, at what place, and about what time.

Elizabeth Eld. I cannot poſſibly ſay to the time; I burnt ſome Writings for him when he went away, he deſired me to burn them, he did not tell me what Writings they were. He ſaid, the Times were troubleſom, and if he ſhould be ſick upon the Road where he was going, he would not have all his Papers ſeen, but he deſired me to burn them. And I took and burnt them all but one Book; and my Siſter asked if that Book ſhould be burnt: he ſaid, no, there was nothing of Treaſon in it. I asked him if there were any thing of Treaſon in the others; and he ſaid, do you think there was?

Sir Will. Jones. How long was this before he went away?

E. Eld. That Morning when he went away.

Sir Will. Jones. How many Papers were there?

E. Eld. I cannot ſay how many.

Sir Will. Jones. I do not ask you the Number, but the Quantity; was there a Buſhel?

E. Eld. I cannot ſay; they were roll'd up, and put in his Pockets and his Breeches.

L. H. S. Were they Parchments or Papers?

E. Eld. They were Papers.

L. H. S. Were they Letters?

E. Eld. I did not ſee what they were, but they were wrapt up together, they might be the Accounts of the Houſe for what I know.

Sir F. Win. But ſhe ſays, as I take it, that Mr. Dugdale ſaid there was Treaſon in them.

E. Eld. No, he ſaid, did I think there was? He ſaid, it was no matter for burning that little Book, there was no Treaſon in that; and when I asked him if there was any in the others, he ſaid, do you think there was?

L. H. S. Was it one or two Bundles.

E. Eld. There were ſeveral Bundles, they were not tied up, but taken in handfuls and thrown into the Fire.

Mr. Foley. If my Lord Stafford will ask her no Queſtion, we will call up another.

E. Eld. My Lords, I did ſee Mr. Dugdale take a Glaſs of Cyder, and I heard him ſay, and wiſh it might be his Damnation, and he might ſink in the Place where he ſtood, if he knew any thing of the Plot.

Sir Will. Jones. I pray what Religion are you of? I don't ask you to diſparage you.

E. Eld. A Roman-Catholick.

L. H. S. When was it that he ſaid that?

E. Eld. When he was in Staffordſhire.

(Anne Eld was then ſworn.)

Mr. Foley. Tell my Lords what you know of any Papers that were burnt by Mr. Dugdale, or by his Direction, and at what time.

A. Eld. Mr. Dugdale came to my Father's Houſe over night, and the next morning (before he went away) he brought a great many Papers he had in his Breeches, and in his Pockets, bundled together, and he deſired us to burn them in the Flame of a Candle.

L. H. S. Why did he deſire you to burn them?

Anne Eld. He ſaid, the Times were troubleſom, and being to travel he was to go to divers Places, and if he were taken, People would think him a Plotter, having all thoſe Papers about him.

L. H. S. Did he burn the Book at that time?

A. Eld. No.

L. H. S. Why not?

A. Eld. I found that Book, and asked him if that ſhould be burnt; he ſaid, No, lay that by, it might do good ſeven Years hence, there is no Treaſon in it. Says my Siſter to him, Is there any Treaſon in the reſt? Says he, Do you think there is? that was all.

Sir Will. Jones. Not to trouble you longer, my Lords, upon this, your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to remember, Yeſterday my Lord Stafford was pleaſed to offer by way of Evidence, as if Mr. Dugdale was a Man of an ill Reputation in theſe Particulars, that he had defrauded my Lord Aſton, that he was a mean Man, run in arrear to my Lord; and that being in neceſſity, he became a fit Inſtrument to give falſe Evidence. We ſhall ſhew, That Mr. Dugdale was a Man of Eſtate; that both before, and ſince he came away from my Lord Aſton, he hath made it his buſineſs to deſire my Lord to come to account; that he hath preſſed him, and that he does believe, and hath reaſon ſo to believe, that there is Money coming from my Lord Aſton to him, and that a conſiderable Sum. Now, my Lords, if we ſhall make it appear, that he hath made it his buſineſs to come to account with my Lord, I hope it will not be ſuppoſed that he is afraid of it, or ſo needy, or ſo mean. For this we call Michael Noble and Stephen Colledge.

(Michael Noble ſworn.)

Sir J. Trevor. What do you know of Mr. Dugdale, and my Lord Aſton?

Mr. Noble. My Lords, I can ſay little or nothing as to Mr. Dugdale, for that I have never been acquainted with him, but ſince the Plot, and he came to be an Evidence; but Mr. Dugdale deſired me to aſſiſt him as much as I could, to make up his Accounts with my Lord Aſton. And we were twice at the Tower, one time we ſpoke with my Lord with great difficulty; another time we could not ſee him. There were three Books of Account, two my Lord would let us ſee, but the third, wherein all the Diſcharges were, as Mr. Dugdale ſaid, he would never let us ſee, that is all I can ſay.

(Then Stephen Colledge was ſworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. Stephen Colledge.

Sir Will. Jones. Declare to my Lords what you know concerning Mr. Dugdale's preſſing my Lord Aſton to account with him.

Mr. Colledge. In January laſt I went along with Mr. Dugdale, at his requeſt, to the Tower, with one Mr. Noble, a Barriſter of the Temple, and one Mr. Boſon of Lyons-Inn, in order to the making up Accounts between Mr. Dugdale and my Lord Aſton; for he told me he was going thither for that end. When we came thither, we met with one Captain Hawley, who belongs to the Lieutenant of the Tower, and we deſired him to go to my Lord Aſton, and tell him Mr. Dugdale was there, in order to make up his Accounts with him. He went, and brings an anſwer back again, that my Lord was not at leiſure to ſpeak with Mr. Dugdale then, nor none of us from him. And Mr. Hawley ſaid he was then going up with the Lords to Nine-pins. Mr. Dugdale ſaid, he was very ill uſed, for he had been ſeveral times there before, and he could not be admitted to ſpeak with him. He hath a little Book, ſays he, (meaning my Lord) wherein there is an Account made up under his own hand, of almoſt two or three hundred Pounds; which Sum I cannot ſay, but one of them I am certain of, which he hath denied ſeveral times that he had it, (but I can prove that he hath it:) if he will be pleaſed to produce that Book, we need not be a Quarter of an hour in making up the Account. He did ſpeak of ſome other Sums he had to place to Account, but ſo much was made up already. But Captain Hawley ſaying he would not ſpeak with him, nor any of us from him, I did take the liberty to ſay to Captain Hawley, that it was hard his Lordſhip, and his Party ſhould abuſe Mr. Dugdale at that rate, to make him his Debtor; for now I underſtood by what Mr. Dugdale ſaid, my Lord was his Debtor: And ſaid I, if I can perſuade Mr. Dugdale, he ſhall publiſh his Caſe, for the Proteſtant Intereſt ſuffered by it, that he ſhould be made a Debtor to my Lord when he was not ſo. And I believe Captain Hawley told my Lord Aſton what I did ſay; for when he came back again from my Lord Aſton, he ſaid, my Lord did acknowledge he had that Book, and it was ready to be produced, but he would ſtay till a Counſellor of his came out of the Country, and till he had ſpoke with the Lieutenant; for he would not ſpeak with Mr. Dugdale unleſs the Lieutenant were by, and in three or four days time he would ſend for him: but I never heard that he ſent for him ever ſince. If it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I have one thing more that I remember: There was a young Man that belonged to my Lord Aſton's Family, that heard Mr. Dugdale was at Captain Hawley's Chamber, and came to ſee him, and paid a very great reſpect to him, and would ſtand bare to him, tho Mr. Dugdale deſired him to put on his Hat ſeveral times. Some of us asked him, whether Mr. Dugdale was thought to be ſuch a Knave, when he lived with his Lord, as they would have made him ſince. No, ſaid he, Mr. Dugdale was as honeſt a Gentleman as ever lived in our Family. I remember my Lord Aſton's Man ſaid this to us then.

L. Staff. My Lords, will you be pleaſed to give me leave, if I ſpeak impertinently, I am under your Correction; I conceive I ſhall have ſomething to anſwer to this, but I would firſt know whether I may deſire of your Lordſhips, that I may have my Lord Aſton here to give an account of this Matter.

Sir

Sir W. Jones. If he were here he could not be heard, being a Perſon accuſed for the ſame Offence.

L. H. S. My Lord, he ſtands indicted for the ſame Treaſon, and cannot be a Witneſs.

L. Staff. I beg your pardon, my Lords.

(Nicholas Boſon was ſworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. Nicholas Boſon.

Sir W. Jones. Declare to my Lords what you know concerning Mr. Dugdale's preſſing my Lord Aſton to come to an account.

Mr. Boſon. In January laſt, I met with Mr. Dugdale, and one Mr. Noble, and one Mr. College. And Mr. Dugdale deſired us to go down with him to the Tower. He ſaid he had an Order of the Council to paſs his Accounts with my Lord Aſton; and when we came there, we inquired for Captain Hawley, and deſired him that he would acquaint my Lord Aſton, that he was there to account with him. Captain Hawley went up to my Lord Aſton, and brought word back again, my Lord was not at leiſure or would not ſpeak with him, or to that effect; whereupon Mr. Dugdale ſaid, it was very hard that he ſhould be aſperſed to owe my Lord Money, and he would not come to account with him. For my Lord Aſton had a Book or Books in his cuſtody which he would ſtand by, and they would determine the Buſineſs between them; that my Lord Aſton was almoſt two hundred Pounds in his debt. And pray, ſays he, Captain Hawley, do me the favour to go to my Lord Aſton again, and deſire him that he will be pleaſed to produce that Book or Books. If I owe my Lord any Money, I am ready to pay him. And if he owe me any, I hope his Lordſhip will do the like by me; as I am ſure he does two hundred Pounds. Captain Hawley went away, and brought this Anſwer, that his Lordſhip would ſend for him in ſome ſhort time, as ſoon as a Counſellor did come out of the Country, whom he had intruſted with his Books; and that was one Birch, as near as I remember.

Sir W. Jones. We have done with this Witneſs. And becauſe we deſire to conclude as to Mr. Dugdale, we ſhall call ſome Perſons of Quality as to his Reputation, my Lord having gone about to make him a Man of no Reputation.

Mr. Boſon. I can ſpeak too about the Boy that came in.

Sir W. Jones. There is no need of that now: we ſhall trouble you no further, Sir. Your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to obſerve, That Mr. Philips, the Miniſter, that was one of my Lord Stafford's Witneſſes, did ſay, Mr. Dugdale was a Man of whom many ſpoke well, and ſome indifferently, and perhaps that is the caſe of moſt good Men; for ſcarce any are ſo good that all ſpeak well of them: but that many ſhould ſpeak well and ſome indifferently of him, may be the Lot of a very good Man. We ſhall call ſome Witneſſes, and begin with Mr. Whitby a Juſtice of the Peace, that will tell you he hath known Mr. Dugdale long, and what Reputation he is of.

(Thomas Whitby Eſq; ſworn.)

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, We deſire your Lordſhips would be pleaſed to ask him what Reputation and Credit Mr. Dugdale was in, in my Lord Aſton's Service.

Mr. Whitby. My Lords, I have known Mr. Dugdale to be a Servant to my Lord Aſton this nine or ten Years; he was Steward to him, and there was no other Perſon between my Lord and him; he received my Lords Rents and Debts for him, exchanged his Lands for him in forty places, I exchanged ſome Land with my Lord my ſelf, and he was the Man that did it. He was very hard for my Lord's advantage, and did what he could for my Lord's profit.

Sir John Trevor. What do you know more as to his dealing?

Mr. Whitby. He was a Perſon that was next to my Lord, and did rule and govern the reſt of the Family. All the Servants were under him.

Sir John Trevor. Was he looked upon to be an honeſt Man in his dealings?

Mr. Whitby. As to what I had to deal with him he was an honeſt Man, I never heard to the contrary. I have heard ſome Tradeſmen complain that he hath put them off without Money, would not pay them what my Lord owed them.

L. Staff. I deſire that Mr. Whitby may be here when I ſhall have occaſion to ſay ſomething to him.

Sir. W. Jones. That will be, I hope, by and by, for we have almoſt done. Call Mr. William Southall.

(Who was ſworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. William Southall.

Mr. Foley. Give my Lords an account how long you have known Dugdale, and what you know of him.

Mr. Southall. My Lords, I have known Mr. Stephen Dugdale about eight Years.

Mr. Foley. How hath he behaved himſelf? What Reputation hath he borne?

Mr. Southall. Truly he hath always had a good Repute, not only with my Lord's Tenants, but alſo with the Workmen, and thoſe People that had dependance on the Family; and truly I never heard any ill Report of him, but only what is ſpoken of now of late.

Sir Francis Winnington. Were you very well acquainted with him?

Mr. Southall. Yes, but never had any Buſineſs with him. Several Diſcourſes I have had with him about the Popiſh Religion.

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, I only obſerve this, This Gentleman is Coroner of the County, and hath a general knowledge of the County, and muſt know moſt Men there.

Sir Francis Winnington. You are Coroner of the County of Stafford, Sir, I think?

Mr. Southall. Yes, I am one of them.

Mr. Foley. What was he in my Lord's Houſe?

Mr. Southall. Bailiff, and a kind of Governour, providing Meat, and paying Workmen, moſt of the things of the Family went through his Hands.

Sir Francis Winnington. My Lords, This Gentleman is a Coroner of the County, and can ſpeak materially to other Particulars beſides this of Dugdale's Reputation; for he was a Perſon who was preſent when he made his firſt diſcovery of this Plot, and was very inſtrumental in prevailing with him to do it. He will give your Lordſhips an account of the whole Buſineſs, and I would rather he himſelf ſhould relate all the Progreſs of it, than take upon me to recite any of the Paſſages.

Mr. Southall. There was the latter end of November (78.) a Report that Mr. Dugdale was gone away from my Lord Aſton's, ſuddenly and ſtrangely, and it was the common Report in the Country that he was in the Plot, and was fled for it. In the beginning of December I went through a Town called Great Heywood, a Mile and a half from Tixal, where my Lord Aſton and Mr. Dugdale dwelt. I called at Mr. Thomas Whitby's Houſe, the Gentleman that was up here lately, and he was telling me, Dugdale was come again and apprehended by the Watch at Heywood upon Suſpicion. He told me further, he would make no Confeſſion of the Plot, though he had been under Examination before Sir Walter Bagott, Mr. Kinnerſley, and I think he ſaid Sir Thomas Whitgrave. But he told me divers Paſſages by which we both ſuſpected he might be concerned and know of the Plot. We thought ſo from the various Reports and Rumours we had heard in the Country, and from thoſe great grounds of Suſpicion that were given us. As I returned from Heywood, I reſolved I would ſpeak with Dugdale the firſt Opportunity, for I had a ſtrong perſuaſion I could prevail with him to make a diſcovery of the Plot: but before I did ſpeak with him, there was one Goldſmith my Kinſman, had ſome difference fallen out between him and Mr. Anſel and Mr. Dugdale, touching a Deed, the deciding of which they had referred to Mr. Dugdale. And he deſired me to go to Mr. Dugdale to Stafford with him, I was very glad of the opportunity. Anſel was to bring one Hanſon, Mr. Goldſmith was to bring me, and Mr. Dugdale was to bring one Mr. Gerard, that was concerned in the Premortgage, that we might all have diſcourſe together. I promiſed to meet them at the time appointed, and accordingly the 23d of December, two Days before Chriſtmas-Day, I came to the place in Stafford, where Dugdale was, about ten a clock in the Morning, where they met according to their Promiſe. We had not been in the Houſe longer than a quarter of an Hour, but the King's buſineſs, which I thought was a buſineſs of greater weight than any particular buſineſs, did ſtick much upon me; and I reſolved before I ſpoke to the particular buſineſs about which we all met, I would firſt ſpeak to Mr. Dugdale to put that in execution which I had reſolved. After a ſhort ſpace of time, I deſired Mr. Dugdale that I might ſpeak with him in a Chamber privately between him and me; he told me, if I would go into the next Chamber to his, he would come to me. Accordingly I went, and ſtaid a ſhort ſpace of time, and Mr. Dugdale came to me. I deſired him to make the Door to, which he did, and I began thus with him. Mr. Dugdale, ſaid I, for ſome Years laſt paſt, ſince I came to be acquainted with you, I have always had a good Eſteem of you, and you a good Report in the Country where you live, and now there is an opportunity put into your hands to ſerve his Majeſty and his Proteſtant Subjects, if (as an honeſt Man ought) you will diſcharge your Duty. Mr. Dugdale replied, Sir, What do you mean? Why ſaid I, I mean this in a few words, Here is a Plot diſcovered in London, and if it be in London, I conceive it hath been in part acted at Tixal; and if there, of neceſſity, you having ſuch a Government and Rule over that Houſe, it is impoſſible but you muſt know it. He looked upon me very earneſtly, and gave me a Smile, but anſwered me not. I replied to him again thus: ſaid I, There is a natural Allegiance which every Subject owes to his Sovereign, and by that it is required, that if any Subjects know of any Plot or any Conſpiracy againſt his Perſon and Government, they ought in Conſcience to diſcover it; therefore Mr. Dugdale, ſaid I, diſcharge a good Conſcience, and tell what you know, for it is commonly ſuſpected you are concerned in the Plot. He anſwered, I have taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy. When and where, ſaid I? Before his Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace at Stafford, ſaid he. Then ſaid I, there is not only that natural Allegiance which every Subject owes to his Prince, but the Oath of Almighty God lies upon your Conſcience; therefore diſcharge a good Conſcience, and tell your Knowledge. He ſtood pauſing a little while, and by and by, ſaid he, If I ſhould make any diſcovery, how ſhould I be ſecured of my Life? You need not queſtion that, ſaid I, nor his Majeſty's Gracious Pardon, which he hath promiſed in his Proclamation. Have you ſeen the Proclamation? Yes, ſaid he. Said I, you have but a ſhort time, a Day or two to diſcover in, for this is the 23d, and as I do conceive, you ought to diſcover before the 25th. He ſtood pauſing a while about the time: ſaid I, You need not queſtion his Majeſty's gracious Promiſe, and to incourage you thereto, there is not only an Aſſurance of Pardon, but a Promiſe of Reward of two hundred Pounds. Said he, if I do diſcover any thing of my Knowledge, I matter not, nor deſire (I don't know which it was) his Majeſty's Money, ſo I may be ſecured of my Life. Upon this, my Lords, ſaid I, Sir, you need not queſtion his Majeſty's gracious Promiſe, my Life for yours, if you have not his Pardon; but I will take ſpecial care about it, for I will ſend up a Letter to London, directed to ſome of the Lords, (which I accordingly did) and I will alſo ſpeak to Captain Lane, who is a worthy Gentleman, to interpoſe in it too. Then ſaid he, I will make a diſcovery of the Plot. Then, my Lords, he told me firſt ſome particular Paſſages relating to this Lord at the Bar, and alſo concerning Mr. Evers and Mr. Petres, now in Cuſtody, and ſome other Particulars; I wiſhed him that he would ſpeak no more at that time. And when I parted with him, forthwith I conſulted with my ſelf what I ought to do, in point of Law; I knew, I muſt diſcover, that a further Diſcovery might be made of what had paſſed between us. Then I went to Mr. Freke, who was either Mayor or Juſtice of Peace in Stafford, and told him he muſt come with me to Serjeant Parry's. He asked me what to do. I told him when he came, he ſhould know: he accordingly came, and took ſhort Notes of a further Diſcovery, and Mr. Freke he certified it up to Mr. Chetwyn, who was then at London. Upon the Day following, the 24th, I roſe and went to one Mr. Vernon, one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace, and told him what had happened, and he ſent for Captain Lane another of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace, and they took an Examination of him. I have done my Lords, with reference to his Diſcovery, and the Time.

L. H. S. Do you remember what he mentioned of my Lord Stafford? what he ſaid of him?

Mr. Southall. Truly, my Lords, I can only tell what he ſaid at the firſt Examination; he told me the firſt time my Lord Stafford ſpoke with him was at Tixal-Hall, nigh to the Gatehouſe, betwixt the Gate and the Hall. My Lord was going into the Hall, and my Lord Stafford told him it was a very hard thing, or to that purpoſe, that they could not ſay their Prayers but in private, and after told him the ſame Day or Night t'one that they had ſome work to do, and he might or muſt be inſtrumental in it. This was the Effect of what he told me paſſed the firſt time. Another time I think he told me he was to have five hundred Pounds to kill the King.

L. H. S. When did he tell you ſo?

Mr. Southall. Not till Captain Lane examined him, which was the ſecond time he was examined; which was about the 26th.

L. H. S. Did he ſwear that before Vernon and Lane?

Mr.

Mr. Southall. Yes, he did, I could give your Lordſhips a Breviate of what he ſwore then.

L. Staf. I deſire he may give that Breviate.

Mr. Southall. I took ſome Notes of what he ſwore then.

L. H. S. Have you them by you, or about you?

Mr. Southall. Yes, my Lords, I have.

L. H. S. Produce them.

Mr. Southall. I took this upon ſome Paper I had in my Pocket, and is the ſubſtance of what he ſwore.

(Which he delivered to the Clerk.)

Clerk. December the 24th, 1678. Mr. Dugdale informeth, That in September laſt, he met in Tixall, the Lord Stafford, nigh to the Gates, who ſaid, That it was ſad they were troubled they could not ſay their Prayers, but in a hid manner; but ſuddenly there would be a Reformation to the Romiſh Religion, and if there be a good Succeſs we ſhall enjoy our freedom. And that upon the 20th Day of September 1678. the ſaid Lord Stafford told this Informant, That there was a deſign in hand, and if he would undertake in it, he ſhould have a good Reward, &c. and make himſelf famous. The ſame Day this Informant went up into Mr. Francis Evers's Chamber, to know what my Lord Stafford meant by his words; and he firſt made him ſwear ſecrecy upon his Knees, and then told him, That he might be a Perſon employed, and have a good Reward, and make himſelf famous, if he would ſtand inſtrumental with others in taking away the King's Life, by Shooting or otherwiſe, and need not fear, for that the Pope had excommunicated the King, and that all that were excommunicated by him were Hereticks, and they might kill them, and be canonized for Saints in ſo doing. And that the deſign was to kill the Duke of Monmouth as well as the King.

December the 29th, 1678. this Informant ſaith, That ſince the 20th Day of September laſt, the ſaid Lord Stafford did promiſe him five hundred Pounds as to the carrying on of the Plot, and that Mr. Evers ſhould give him Inſtructions about the ſame. And that the Lord Stafford told him, he did not doubt of his Fidelity, for Mr. Evers had given him a good Character to be truſty. And that the Lord Stafford told this Informant, That there was a deſign to take away the Life of the King, and the Life of the Duke of Monmouth, and that ſeveral others were to be imployed in the Deſign beſides this Informant. And that this had been throughly conſidered of to be the fitteſt way for the eſtabliſhing of the Romiſh Religion. And that at the ſaid time, the ſaid Lord Stafford laid his Hand upon his Head, and prayed God to keep him in his good Mind, and to be faithful to what he had intruſted him in, &c.

And this Informant further ſaith, That he doubting of the Lord Stafford's Payment, the ſaid Mr. Evers promiſed him the making good of my Lord Stafford's Promiſe, &c.

And further ſaith, that he ſaw a Letter directed from my Lord Stafford to Mr. Evers, and he read the ſame, and knows it to be my Lord Stafford's Writing; and that therein was written, that things went on well beyond the Seas, for the carrying on the Deſign, and ſo he hoped it did do here in England, &c.

Sir William Jones. My Lords, We will examine no further as to Mr. Dugdale: But will conclude with this Witneſs, and I think he ſpeaks fully to him. The next Witneſs we called was Dr. Oates, and your Lordſhips have been pleaſed to obſerve, That what Exceptions have been made againſt him, have not been ſo much by Witneſſes produced, as by oppoſing one part of his Teſtimony to another, what he ſwore at one time to what he ſwore at another: To which we ſhall give an anſwer when we come to ſum up our Evidence; for there will be no need of Witneſſes to what is objected againſt Mr. Oates, but only of Obſervations. But as to the third Witneſs Turberville, we have ſomething to anſwer of Witneſs, and ſomething by way of making Obſervation. We will firſt call our Witneſſes.

[Then Mr. Southall deſired his Paper again, which the Court told him he ſhould have a Copy of from the Clerk.]

Sir William Jones. And our firſt Witneſs is to this purpoſe, It was objected againſt Mr. Turberville ——

L. H. S. Have you done with Dugdale? You have forgot to give an Anſwer to the Objection about the point of time when Hobſon told him of the Deſign.

Sir William Jones. My Lords, that will be when we come to make our Obſervations, we ſhall not anſwer that by Witneſſes; when we come to ſum up our Evidence, I doubt not but we ſhall give a ſufficient Anſwer to that Objection. But to go on with what is to be anſwered by Teſtimony, your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to remember, that Turberville did inform your Lordſhips, That he had ſome Converſe with my Lord Stafford at Paris, being introduced by ſome of the Fathers. My Lords, we ſhall call a Gentleman that happened to be there at that time, that will tell you though he did not know my Lord Stafford, yet he knew that Turberville did converſe much with an Engliſh Lord in that place where my Lord does acknowledge his Lodging to be. He will give you ſome further account how Turberville went to Diep in expectation of my Lord, and how he had a Meſſage from the Lord, though he did not know my Lord Stafford. He will give you a further account how Mr. Turberville was earneſt with him to go to Calais, and then told him, he might go over with my Lord at that time. The uſe we make of theſe Particulars we will forbear to mention till we ſum up our Evidence. We deſire to examine Mr. Thomas Mort.

(Who was ſworn.)

Sir William Jones. We deſire to ask Mr. Mort, whether he knew Mr. Turberville at Paris, and at what time.

L. H. S. What ſay you, Sir?

Mr. Mort. Yes, my Lords, I knew him, it is now five years paſt ſince we were in Paris. He and I had been intimately acquainted, before we lived in the ſame Family. I was ſeveral times in Company with him, and many times in his Brother's Company, which was a Monk, and I heard him ſay his Brother had an intention he ſhould be of the ſame Order. And ſome time after that he altered his Reſolution, and deſigned for England, and I had ſuch a deſign too to go from Paris, where I was an Apprentice. And being acquainted with him, I reſolved to go over with him, and he told me, his Brother the Monk had introduced him into the favour of a Lord; as I take it, it was my Lord Stafford, as well as I can remember. And that there was a Veſſel to come to Diep, a Yacht, and we ſhould go thither to go over with my Lord. And Mr. Turberville told me, we muſt make as much haſte as might be, for it were better to be there a Day or two too ſoon, than too late. We went to Diep, and when we came there, the Veſſel was not come. And when we had been there a Fortnight, or thereabouts, we were put to a great deal of inconveniency by reaſon of our long ſtay there: and, I think, if I miſtake not, I or ſome of the Company ſaid, Curſed is he that relies or depends on a broken Staff; alluding, as I believe, to my Lord Stafford's Name. Mr. Turberville told me, if we did go to Calais, we might go over with my Lord; but how or by what means he underſtood the Veſſel would be there, and my Lord go that way, I know not. But we did not go thither, we had another opportunity; there was a ſmall Veſſel, whether a Fiſh Boat or a Coal-Veſſel I cannot tell, a very little one it was, but we took the opportunity, and came over in it.

Sir William Jones. My Lords, We ſhall make uſe of it in due time, we only call him now to prove his Converſe with a Lord at Paris.

L. H. S. Did you ever ſee Turberville at a Lord's Houſe in Paris?

Mr. Mort. No, my Lords, not that I can remember; but I think, as near as I remember, I will not be poſitive, I walked about Luxemburgh-Houſe while he went, as he ſaid, to the place where the Lord lodged, I was thereabouts till he came.

L. Staff. In what Street was it?

Mr. Mort. Indeed I cannot tell.

Sir William Jones. This Man is very cautious.

L. H. S. Can you tell the Lord's Name?

Mr. Mort. I do not remember his Title, but I think it was my Lord Stafford.

Sir William Jones. Pray who were you Servant to? Who were you bred under?

Mr. Mort. My Lord Powis. I ſerved as a Page to him, when Mr. Turberville was Gentleman-Uſher to the young Lady, one of his Daughters, ſince married to my Lord Molineux.

Sir William Jones. Will my Lord pleaſe to ask him any Queſtions? if not, we will go on.

L. Staff. No, not at preſent.

Sir William Jones. Well then, my Lords, we deſire to call one Mr. Powell, a Gentleman of Grays-Inn, to tell you when he firſt heard Mr. Turberville ſpeak of this Evidence he hath now given.

(Mr. Powell was ſworn.)

Sir William Jones. Pray will you give an account what Diſcourſe you had with Mr. Turberville about the Plot, and when.

Mr. Powell. About this time Twelve-month we diſcourſed about it, and he told me, that he had much to ſay in relation to the Plot; but truly he did not name any particulars to me at that time.

Sir William Jones. Where was this, we deſire to ask him?

Mr. Powell. It was at the King's-Head Tavern in Holborn.

Sir William Jones. Are you ſure it was a Year ago?

Mr. Powell. It was about this time Twelve-month.

Sir William Jones. What was the reaſon he did not think fit then to reveal it? Did he tell the Reaſon?

Mr. Powell. I think he gave me a Reaſon, That he was ſomething cautious, becauſe he feared he might diſoblige his Brother at that time.

Sir William Jones. Did he give you any further Reaſon?

Mr. Powell. I think he ſaid he was afraid he ſhould not have incouragement enough, for he ſaid ſome of the Witneſſes had been diſcouraged, and he was afraid he ſhould be ſo too.

Sir William Jones. Now we ſhall call a few Witneſſes to Mr. Turberville's Reputation, which have known him a good while. Mr. Hobby.

L. H. S. Was this time that Mr. Powell ſpeaks of, that he did diſcourſe with him, before or after that of Talden?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we do not know of any Diſcourſe with Talden; nay, we believe none ſuch was. This Witneſs ſpeaks of a Year ſince.

L. H. S. What time does Talden ſpeak of?

Sir Will. Jones. February or March laſt, and this was a Year ago.

L. H. S. This was then before that certainly.

Sir Will. Jones. We deſire that Mr. Arnold a Member of the Houſe of Commons may be ſworn.

(Which was done in his place.)

Sir Will. Jones. Do you know Mr. Turberville?

Mr. Arnold. My Lords, I do know him very well, and I have known him theſe two Years, he came recommended to me from his Grace my Lord Duke of Buckingham. My Lords, preſently after the breaking out of the Plot, he was ſent down into our Country by the Lords of your Lordſhips Houſe that were of the Committee, and a particular recommendation from the Duke of Buckingham to me, to give him Direction and Aſſiſtance to find out a Prieſt, one Charles Prichard, and I think alſo if I miſtake not, one Morgan, my Lord Powis's Prieſt. I ſpoke with him before he went, I ſent Letters down with him, I ſpoke with him afterwards, he hath been in my Family ſome time; he hath behaved himſelf very well there, and in ſeveral other ſober Families nearly related to me. I have not heard a better Character of any Man from all ſorts of People, than of him, in my Life.

Sir Will. Jones. Did he tell you any thing of the Plot, Sir?

Mr. Arnold. My Lords, I did ſeveral times find by him, that he knew much; having converſed both in France and here with Jeſuits and Prieſts. I preſſed him oftentimes to diſcover his Knowledge, and to come in to the Council; but he gave me ſuch Anſwers why he did not, that I could not anſwer.

Sir Will. Jones. What were they, Sir? Pray tell us.

Mr. Arnold. That the Witneſſes that were come in, were in danger of their Lives; that they were diſcouraged, that they were diſcountenanced; and as long as the Duke of York had that Power in the Council that he had, and my Lady Powis's Brother had that Power over thoſe Countries where he lived, (which his Lordſhip is often pleaſed to call his Province) he durſt not do it for his Life.

(Then Mr. Hobby was ſworn.)

Sir Will. Jones. Do you know Mr. Turberville, and how long have you known him?

Mr. Hobby. My Lords, I have known Mr. Turberville near four Years.

L. H. S. What Account can you give of him?

Mr. Hobby. My Lords, my firſt Acquaintance with him, was at my Brother's Houſe in Glamorganſhire. When I came there, my Brother ſhew'd him me, and told me he was a very worthy Man, but his Friends had caſt him off, becauſe he would not take Orders in the Romiſh Church. He lived at my Brother's above a Year; and when he came thence, my Brother writ a Letter of Recommendation to my Father to receive him there, and do him all the kindneſs he could. He came to my Father's, and ſtaid there near half a Year, or thereabouts, abouts, I cannot tell to a Month or ſo. Since I have known him often in this Town, and been in his Company; and I never knew, nor heard, but that he behaved himſelf like a worthy honeſt Gentleman: but as to any thing of the Plot, I know nothing.

Sir Will. Jones. We ask you not to that: Where is Mr. Matthews?

(Then Mr. Matthews, a Divine, was ſworn.)

Sir Will. Jones. Mr. Matthews, pray tell my Lords, whether you know Mr. Turberville, and how long have you known him?

Mr. Matthews. Yes, my Lords, I have known Mr. Edward Turberville for about four Years laſt paſt.

L. H. S. Go on, what do you know of him?

Mr. Matthews. My Lords, he lived ſome time in my Neighbourhood; I never knew him guilty of any ill Action at all, but a Perſon of a very fair Reputation: He acknowledged himſelf a Roman Catholick, and was pleaſed to give me the liberty to talk to him. I found him inclinable to hearken to me, and to thoſe Reaſons I offered to him; and I found he had a mind to quit that Religion, being convinc'd by the Arguments I gave him; and at ſeveral times he hath ſince told me, thoſe were ſome of the great Motives of his coming over from the Romiſh to the Proteſtant Communion.

L. H. S. What were the Motives?

Mr. Matthews. One was the Hazard I told him of, in his living in the Roman Communion, as to Salvation; another was the Excellency of the Doctrines of our Church, its Principles and Practices.

L. H. S. Did he acknowledge to you, he knew any thing of the Plot?

Mr. Matthews. No, not a Syllable of it.

Sir Will. Jones. We don't call him to that Purpoſe.

(Then another Witneſs was ſworn.)

L. H. Steward. What is your Name?

Witneſs. William Seys.

Sir William Jones. Pray will you acquaint my Lords, what you know of Mr. Turberville.

Mr. Seys. I have been acquainted with him theſe two or three Years, and I never knew him guilty of any ill Action in my Life. I never heard of any body that could aſperſe him; but he hath behaved himſelf like a very honeſt civil Gentleman.

Sir Will. Jones. Where were you acquainted with him?

Mr. Seys. Here in London.

(Then Captain Scudamore ſtood up again.)

Sir Will. Jones. He was ſworn before, we deſire he may ſpeak to Mr. Turberville's Reputation.

Capt. Scudamore. My Lords, I have known Mr. Turberville for theſe three Quarters of a Year, I have been acquainted with him in London; he hath been much at my Houſe, and all that while I ſaw nothing in him, but that he is a very honeſt Gentleman.

Sir. Will. Jones. My Lords, I think we have but one Matter more, which we ſhould have mentioned before, but that our Witneſs was not come: but I hope we ſhall have the Favour of ſome Honourable Lords that do know the thing; and I think there are many more that can prove it. My Lord Stafford, who is very antient, it may be, may not remember matters exactly, I blame him not; Oblivion is the great Infirmity of old Age. He was pleaſed to ſay yeſterday, he had ſo good Health, that he had not been lame, I think he ſaid for theſe forty Years; but at laſt his Page ſaid, for the laſt ſeven Years; and I ſhall confine our Proof to that time. My Lords, I think there are ſome Honourable Lords here, that have ſeen this Noble Lord, that ſays he was not lame in ſo many Years, very near about the time that he was confined and impriſoned, go lame and come lame to the Houſe, and eaſe himſelf by holding up his Leg ſometimes. My Lords, I do not ſay, the Circumſtance is very material, but only to ſhew my Lord may forget himſelf, which I ſhall impute to his old Age.

L. Staff. I will acknowledge it, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I did ſay I had not been lame with the Gout ſo long, no more I have not. I was troubled with the Sciatica many Years, but 'tis above eight or nine Years ſince that; and I took ſo much Opium, that that, and my going to the Bath, cured me. I have often come lame to the Houſe out of Wearineſs and old Age; but if ever I put my Foot upon a Stool for the Gout, or was ever ſo lame as to put my Foot upon a Cuſhion to eaſe it, I will admit what he ſpeaks to, I'll acknowledge thus much to ſave time.

Sir Will. Jones. Seeing my Lord is pleaſed to go off from it, I'll call no Witneſſes to it.

L. Staff. I go off from nothing, I was lame three or four Years when the King came in: I went to the Bath, and afterwards into Germany; and what with Opium and the Bath I was cured, and have not been lame theſe eight or nine Years. I have not had the Gout in my Foot for theſe many Years, and I never was ſo lame to put my Foot on a Stool, to my remembrance.

Sir Will. Jones. I do not think we ſhall need to trouble your Lordſhips more with this matter; that my Lord was lame ſome time, he is pleaſed to confeſs. One Witneſs ſays, That he put his Foot upon a Cuſhion; my Lord doth not acknowledge that.

L. Staff. I was never lame at Paris.

Sir Will. Jones. That a Man that is lame does ſometimes eaſe his Foot, is no hard Conſequence, I think.

L. Staff. I deny I was lame then; I walked about the Streets of Paris, I deſire I may not be miſunderſtood.

Sir Will. Jones. I muſt then deſire, under his Lordſhip's favour, if he will not acknowledge it to be within ſeven Years, that we may prove it, and falſify his Witneſs, the Page.

L. Staff. I have gone with a Stick to the Houſe, I acknowledge it, and been lame with Wearineſs.

Sir Fran. Winnington. The Objection went to the Credit of our Witneſs, and therefore we deſire to anſwer it: My Lord was not lame, as he ſays, for ſo many Years; but if we prove that within leſs time my Lord hath been lame, it will take off that Objection from our Witneſs. And we deſire a Noble Lord or two of this Houſe may teſtify what they know. And firſt the Earl of Stamford; (who was ſworn.)

Earl of Stamford. My Lords, I think I have not had the Honour to ſit in this Houſe much above ſeven Years, but long ſince that time I have ſeen my Lord Stafford come lame into the Houſe of Peers, and that is all I can ſay.

L. Staff. I have come lame with a Stick to the Houſe, I ſay.

Sir Fran. Winnington. My Lords, we deſire that Noble Lord, my Lord Lovelace, may be ſworn; (which was done.)

Lord Lovelace. My Lords, the Account that I can give your Lordſhips, is this; I cannot aſcertain any time, but I am ſure, and I do declare it upon my Honour, and the Oath I have taken, that I have ſeen my Lord Stafford lame in the Houſe of Lords within leſs than theſe ſeven Years.

L. Staff. If he goes home to the Tower he may ſee me lame, but never put my Foot upon a Stool.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to remember, we did call a Witneſs, one Thomas Launder, and the Account we had of him was, he was gone ſick from the Bar, he was very ſick indeed; but being juſt now brought, we deſire he may be heard, tho it be out of time: we call him to the Reputation of Holt.

(Thomas Launder was ſworn.)

Sir John Trevor. Do you declare to my Lords, whether you know Samuel Holt.

Launder. Yes, My Lords, I do.

L. H. S. What do you know of him?

Launder. He is a Smith, my Lords.

L. H. S. What Reputation is he of?

Launder. Indifferent, My Lords.

Sir Will. Jones. What do you mean by that, good or bad? ſpeak plainly.

Launder. A Drunken Sot, a Man that will drink, and rant and tear the Ground, and ſing two or three Days or a Week together, and loſe his time.

Sir Fr. Win. I would ask this Man, whether he was ſummon'd as a Witneſs upon any Tryal in relation to the Plot?

L. H. S. Were you ever ſummon'd as a Witneſs about the Plot?

Launder. My Lords, I was ſummon'd concerning my Lord Aſton's Tryal, and I came up with my Lord Aſton's People as an Evidence.

Sir Will. Jones. Had you any Offer of Money, and what Sum?

Launder. Yes, my Lords.

Sir Fr. Win. Acquaint my Lords with it.

L. H. S. Who offered it you? and when? and for what?

Sir Will. Jones. For what was that Money offered you?

Launder. The Money was not abſolutely offered me, but I was to have an Horſe to ride on, and Money in my Pocket, if I could take off James Anſell, Dugdale's Evidence.

L. H. S. Who came and offered it to you?

Launder. I was ſent for by Mr. Fox to Tixal-Hall, and there was my old Lord's Brother for one, and Mr. Thomas Aſton, that is, this young Lord's Brother, and Mr. Francis Aſton, who is my Lord's eldeſt Son, were in a Room together, and this Thomas Sawyer that was here, and more were in the Room when they promiſed all theſe things.

L. H. S. If you would do what?

Launder. If I would take my Oath, that this James Anſell was a perjured Rogue.

L. H. S. Did all they make you this Promiſe?

Launder. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Foley. It was a Conſult together about taking off the Evidence.

Sir. Will. Jones. My Lords, we have done with our Witneſſes; if my Lord Stafford pleaſe to conclude, we are ready to do ſo too.

L. Staf. What ſhould I conclude? about thoſe Witneſſes you have now brought in?

Sir Will. Jones. Your Lordſhip may pleaſe to conclude your Evidence, we are ready to conclude on our part.

L. Staf. Theſe new Witneſſes, muſt I ſay what I can ſay againſt them preſently? I cannot do it, I know very few of them.

L. H. S. Have you any Witneſſes here, my Lord?

L. Staf. I cannot poſſibly have any; for I did not know, nor gueſs theſe People would be brought againſt me: They are Perſons I know nothing of. Anſell I have ſeen four or five times, I may have ſeen the reſt, but I do not know them to be able to give an account of them.

L. H. S. If you have any Witneſſes here to ſupport the Credit of your own Witneſſes that have been impeached, you may call them.

L. Staf. I have none, my Lords.

L. H. S. Will your Lordſhip recapitulate the material Parts of your Defence, that the Proceſs may be cloſed?

L. Staf. I am very unready for it, my Lords. Let me ask Mr. Whitby a Queſtion, if I muſt have no more time.

(Mr. Whitby ſtood up.)

L. H. S. There he is; What would your Lordſhip have with him?

L. Staf. I do not know the Gentleman.

Mr. Whitby. Nor I your Lordſhip.

L. Staff. I ask him upon the Oath he hath taken, I know he will ſpeak truth, Whether he did not ſome Years ago tell my Lord Aſton that is dead, this Lord's Father, That Dugdale was a Knave, and perſuaded him to turn him away, (I ſay not it is true, but I have heard ſo) and deſired him to tell his Son ſo, that he might quit himſelf of him?

L. H. S. What ſay you, Mr. Whitby?

Mr. Whitby. My Lords, about three or four Years ago my Lord Aſton that is dead (I believe it may be two Years laſt April) ſent for me to dine with him; and when I came thither, he told me, ſays he, Mr. Whitby, I have ſent to you to acquaint you with a thing, but I do not believe it before I tell it you. What is it, ſaid I? Said he, Stephen Dugdale hath acquainted me, that you have employed Perſons upon the Water to deſtroy my Water; ſaid I, my Lord, I never endeavoured it. He ſaid, he did believe me. Then I told my Lord; ſaid I, Mr. Dugdale is a Diſhonour to the Family, upon this account, becauſe many times People come for Money, and he will not let them have it, but puts them off, and makes them complain. Says my Lord, my Son is now at Standall, but I will tell him as ſoon as he comes home; and if you will bring the Perſons that have waited ſo long for their Money, and made ſo many Journeys, you ſhall hear what he will ſay to it. Within a while my Lord Aſton that now is, came down, and I went thither to ſee what became of it. And I went to the Bowling-Green where my Lord and his Son were; but my old Lord ſaid nothing to me of it, nor his Son neither. Within a few Days my old Lord Aſton's Gentleman came down to my Houſe, (one Mr. Aſhley) ſaid I, I wonder whether my Lord Aſton hath acquainted his Son with what I told him. Says he, he hath, but it ſignifies nothing; for he will hear nothing againſt Mr. Dugdale. This I ſpeak upon my Oath, 'tis true.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip ſees what this Gentleman's Opinion was of Dugdale then, he would hear nothing againſt him. Will your Lordſhip conclude?

L. Staff. My Lords, I am mighty unready, and know not which way to turn my ſelf, upon thoſe new things they have brought; for I knew nothing of it, nor expected any ſuch thing. But will you be be pleaſed that I may call Simon Wright again?

(Who ſtood up.)

L. H. S. What would your Lordſhip have with him?

L. Staff. I have nothing to ſay to him, but to deſire him to ſee this Letter, whether it be of his own Writing or no.

L. H. S. Look upon that Paper, ſhew it him: (which was done.)

L. H. S. Is it your Hand?

Wright. This is my Hand. 'Tis part of that I was hired to do. There is another of a great deal more Conſequence than that.

L. H. S. Deliver it in, and read it.

Sir, June the 14th, 1680.

Clerk. I Can, I bleſs God, with a ſafe Conſcience declare upon Oath that Mr. Dugdale hath been unkind to me in taking his opportunity of my Poverty, by reaſon of a private Meeting of us two by his appointment, he did that time proffer if I would ſwear againſt You, and Mr. Gerard, he would protect me as one of the King's Evidence, and I ſhould not want Mony; and in the Hall at Weſtminſter he ſaid, if I did diſcover it that Day at Mrs. Price's Tryal, he would ſet me in the Pillory. This I have owned to his Face, and ſhall not go back from this and more, neither for Fear nor Favour. So I reſt as you ſhall find by your Servant,

Sim. Wright.

L. H. S. Is this your Hand?

Wright. Yes, my Lords; this I was adviſed word for word to write.

L. H. S. Who penn'd this for you? Did you pen it yourſelf?

Wright. No, my Lords, they penn'd it, and a great while I would not ſet my Hand to it; but Jermin Drayton ſaid I need not fear, I was not to ſwear againſt the King.

L. H. S. Who is that?

Wright. He is Butler to Mr. Heveningham.

L. Staff. See what you have under his Hand, I have no more to ſay to him.

Wright. But by their perſuaſion at laſt I did write it, and a great deal more than that.

Sir Will. Jones. I deſire to ask Mr. Wright whether they would have had him ſwore this?

L. H. S. Were you deſired to ſwear this?

Wright. No, my Lords, they never put me to ſwear it; for they told me I was not to ſwear againſt the King: but if I would be ſo kind to make an Affidavit before a Juſtice of Peace, I might then go where I would into the Country, and I ſhould have Money to bear my Charges.

Sir Will. Jones. Who would have had you ſwear it before a Juſtice of Peace?

Wright. Jermin Drayton, and Mr. Longmore; where he is I can't tell, but he told me that Sir James Symons was better able to perform than Dugdale was to promiſe.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. The ſame thing that was done by Redding, he was convicted for it, and ſtood in the Pillory.

Sir Will. Jones. We deſire to know, whether he was ever with Sir James Symons himſelf, and what he offered?

Wright. I was once with him at the King's-Bench, I dined there: after I had written the Paper that was read, he gave me 20 s. and ſaid, he hoped I would not go off from what I had ſaid, and he hoped I was ſenſible his Gratuity would not be wanting, and was ſorry he had not occaſion to uſe me.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we have done with him; I only obſerve, that my Lord Stafford was pleaſed to produce this Paper; he was Maſter of it, and had it in his keeping.

Sir Fran. Win. Wright ſays, there is another Paper of more Conſequence; I wiſh his Lordſhip would produce that alſo.

L. Staf. I did not know of this till juſt now it was delivered into my Hands. Did you ſee Mr. Longmore before this Letter was writ?

Wright. Both before and after, to the beſt of my remembrance, and at the time when Sir James's Tryal ſhould have been, at the Sign of the Crown in King-ſtreet in Bloomsbury.

L. H. S. My Lord, will you conclude?

L. Staf. My Lords, I deſire your Lordſhips Pardon; I do not know how really to go about it to-night. I will obey your Commands, though I fall down at the Bar. I proteſt before God, I was all Night ſo ill of the Cramp, that I had no Repoſe. If you will have me go on, I will, if you will give me but a little time to recollect my ſelf.

L. H. S. God forbid, when your Lordſhip is to ſpeak upon ſo great a Concern, and a matter of that importance as this is to you, you ſhould be put at the end of the Day, and in the midſt of all your Thoughts, to ſum up your Evidence. I do believe, if you do deſire time till to-morrow, my Lords will give it you: And if you would have me move my Lords in it, I will.

L. Staff. One word, I beſeech your Lordſhips——

Sir Will. Jones. We do not oppoſe it.

L. Staff. My Lords, I deſire one thing, I am very ignorant in this Matter, and do not underſtand it; I would deſire your Lordſhips Directions to know in what Method I muſt proceed.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip is to proceed thus if you pleaſe: Your Lordſhip is to recollect and recapitulate all the Proofs you have made; and you are to enforce them as well as you can, and make ſuch Obſervations upon them as are for your own Advantage; and this your Lordſhip muſt do for the Fact. If there remain a Doubt in Law which you may have occaſion to move, Counſel may be demanded; and if it be conſiderable and worthy of Debate, you may have Counſel heard to ſpeak to it. But the Proceſs is cloſed, no more Witneſſes are to be heard: There remains only Obſervations upon the Fact or Law to be made.

L. Staff. Are no more Witneſſes to be heard?

L. H. S. No, I think not: 'tis agreed on both ſides all is done: But my Lord, I would not have your Lordſhip to underſtand me ſo, that if ſo be you have yet any material Evidence, that you think it does concern you to produce, and you have it ready to-morrow, before you ſum up the Evidence; I believe then, if you move my Lords, they will let it be heard: Otherwiſe I think here is an end of Witneſſes.

L. Staff. I deſire the Paper I gave in, may be returned me.

L. H. S. But in order to this, my Lord, if your Lordſhip does think you ſhall uſe or produce any other Witneſſes, it would be of Importance that you would name them now.

L. Staff. Truly, my Lords, I will go hunt for none; and I think I ſhall have none: only one thing I muſt beg your Pardon in; which is the only thing I muſt have Witneſſes to, to anſwer what they have ſaid, that my Lord Aſton would not not come to Accompt. My Witneſſes are very near me, Mr. Lieutenant, ſome in the Tower, and one Mr. Birch.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, bring thoſe to-morrow that you name to-night.

L. Staff. If you pleaſe that I may have that Paper, Wright's Letter.

E. of Shaftesbury. My Lord Steward, I deſire that Letter may be kept.

L. Staff. It is a Paper that was given me, and I would return it: if you won't allow me it, I can't help it.

L. H. S. 'Tis deſired it may remain where it is: But your Lordſhip may have a Copy if you pleaſe, atteſted by the Clerk. Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure to adjourn?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. This Houſe is adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber.

Then the Lords withdrew in their Order, and the Committee of Commons returned to their Houſe, where Mr. Speaker reſumed the Chair.

A Meſſage was ſent from the Lords by Sir Timothy Baldwyn and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker,

The Lords have ſent us to acquaint this Houſe, That they have Ordered William Viſcount Stafford to be brought again to his Tryal at the Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall, to-morrow Morning at Ten of the Clock.

The Commons adjourned to Eight of the Clock the next Morning.

The Fifth Day.

Saturday, December 4. 1680.

ABOUT the Hour of Ten in the Morning, the Lords adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall, going thither in their former Order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair, the Commons were ſeated as before.

The Court being ſat, Proclamation for ſilence was made, and the Lieutenant of the Tower commanded to bring his Priſoner to the Bar; which being done, the Lord High Steward began as followeth.

L. H. S. What ſays your Lordſhip, my Lord Stafford? My Lords are prepared to hear what your Lordſhip can ſay in the ſumming up of your Defence.

L. Staff. My Lords, I muſt needs ſay to your Lordſhips, That you have given me Favour and Time all that I could demand. But I am a very unfortunate Man in many Things, unfortunate in being brought hither upon this Account; and truly, my Lords, I am very unfortunate, that I had not yeſterday, before I went away, the Names of ſome very material Witneſſes, and ſome that I did not know of, till within this half quarter of an Hour: I humbly offer this to your Lordſhips Conſideration as the State of my Caſe. 'Tis true, my Lords, I acknowledge I was bound up yeſterday to Mr. Lieutenant, and ſome others that I named; but I humbly tell your Lordſhips this, That I am informed of ſome material Witneſſes more this Morning.

L. H. S. Are the Witneſſes you ſpeak of, any of the Witneſſes you named laſt Night?

L. Staff. No, my Lords; 'tis one of my Lords, a Peer of this Houſe.

L. H. S. How many more have you?

L. Staff. Five or ſix.

L. H. S. To what Point?

L. Staff. To diſcredit the Witneſſes that have been brought againſt me, both ſome of thoſe that have diſcredited mine, and ſome that have ſworn againſt me particularly.

L. H. S. There is no end of this Way of Proceeding.

L. Staff. My Lords, I profeſs to your Lordſhips, in the preſence of God, I do it not for delay, nor did I know of them then.

L. H. S. What ſay you to it, Gentlemen?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I am afraid this Proceeding at this rate will never have an end. If his Lordſhip have any Witneſſes to any material part of his Defence, tho he hath bound himſelf up, I ſhould not be againſt hearing of them. But if his new Witneſſes are only to the Reputation of our Witneſſes, then perhaps we muſt have ſome other Witneſſes brought to diſcredit his; and we not knowing who theſe new Witneſſes of his would be, may need perhaps another Day to bring Teſtimony againſt them, ſo that I know not when the matter can have an end. Your Lordſhips know, there is a Rule in the Civil Law, In teſtem, teſtes, & in hos, ſed non datur ultra: And I hope beyond that you will not go. Truly, for my own part, I did not expect any other Witneſſes, but thoſe he was pleaſed to name laſt Night, in relation to the matters of Account; if he pleaſe to call them, we ſhall hear them: but for any other, conſidering it would prolong the Tryal to another Day, and this Cauſe hath had four Days already for Hearing, we hope they ſhall not be admitted.

L. Staff. My Lords, I profeſs to your Lordſhips, if I were alone concerned in it, I ſhould not have moved it; but when I conſider my Wife and Family are concerned, I hold my ſelf bound by the Duty I owe to God and them, to propoſe this to your Lordſhips: I am preſſed to it by my Wife juſt now, ſince the Houſe came in. I proteſt before God, for my ſelf, I can look Death in the Face without being afraid; but when I conſider in what condition I ſhall leave my Wife and Family, it moves me.

(Then he wept.)

I am not concerned at it for my own part, for I know I am innocent, but I cannot forbear Tears when I conſider them; 'tis not for my ſelf, I take God Almighty to witneſs that I weep, I could be content to ſpeak a few words to your Lordſhips, and ſubmit to your Judgment, and take my Death, if you decree me to it, and not defer it till Monday: But I cannot forbear ſhewing my Grief when I conſider my Wife and Children.

L. H. S. Pray, Gentlemen, conſider, Whether it be not a ſaving of time to let my Lord examine his Witneſſes, elſe my Lords muſt withdraw to conſider of his Deſire. 'Tis true, in the practice of Chancery we do examine to the Credit of Witneſſes, and to their Credit, but no further; but what my Lords will do in this Caſe, I know not till they are withdrawn.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we have that Opinion of our own Proofs, and are ſo deſirous of an End of theſe Proceedings, that rather than we will give your Lordſhips the trouble to withdraw, if my Lord will pleaſe now to tell us the Number and Names of his Witneſſes, we ſhall not oppoſe their being heard.

Sir Fr. Win. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, one word further: We know well of what Concern this is to my Lord, and no body deſires to have him crampt in his Evidence. The Objection did lie fair on our ſide, it looking like a deſigned Delay; and yet we are willing to comply with this Reſervation, that if there ſhould be any ſuch Witneſſes produced now, as may require an Anſwer, that we may not be foreclоſed of adviſing with one another about it.

L. H. S. No, by no means. My Lord Stafford, your Deſire is conſented unto upon theſe Terms, That your Lordſhip will now name the Perſons and Number of the Witneſſes you will call.

Mr. Hampden. And the Points to which you will call them.

L. Staff. I humbly thank your Lordſhips for the Favour, but it is an impoſſibility for me to do it: If your Lordſhips will give me a quarter of an Hour's time, I will name them, I cannot name ſome of them; one is my Lord Ferrers, another is one Dr. Taylor, Dr. Watſon, Dr. Elliot, and one William Dale.

L. H. S. Now to what Points will your Lordſhip call theſe Witneſſes?

L. Staf. My Lord Ferrers is to ſpeak his Knowledg of Southall the Coroner, and that is as to Dugdale; my Lord knows that Perſon Dr. Watſon, and they are to invalidate the Teſtimony of Dr. Oates: and there is another Man's Name, I forget what it is.

Sir Will. Jones. To what Point is he to be a Witneſs?

L. Staf. 'Tis to Dr. Oates, and the Evidence againſt me.

Mr. Serjeant Maynard. So there will be pretences made every moment of ſome new Witneſs to put off this Cauſe.

L. Staf. Under your Lordſhips Favour, I ſcorn to make any delay. If you think this may not be material, or not fit to be done, I will quit it.

L. H. S. Go on, my Lord.

L. Staf. Will your Lordſhips be pleaſed to begin with my Lord Ferrers? (who ſtood up in his place.)

L. H. S. My Lord Ferrers, your Lordſhip is called upon by my Lord Stafford, and you being a Witneſs for the Priſoner, and againſt the King, your Lordſhip is not to be ſworn.

Lord Ferrers. My Lords, What I have to ſay concerning that Perſon my Lord named, Southall, is only upon Hear-ſay, and upon the Reputation he hath in the Country; for I have no Acquaintance with him, nor do know him at all: But the Reputation that hath been given me of him in the Country, is, That he hath been a very active Man in the late Times againſt the King, and is counted to be a very pernicious Man againſt the Government.

L. Staf. Call Dr. Taylor.

Servant. I know not where he is, he can't be found at preſent.

L. Staf. Then call William Dale in the mean time. My Lords, This ſame Southall I never heard of; the other Man that drew up the Affidavit, that is Feake, I know, he was named by Southall to join with him in the Examination; I can tell what he was, I can prove that he is an Attorney, that he was Mayor of Stafford, and proclaimed the King Traytor.

L. H. S. Who was that?

L. Staf. One that drew up the Affidavit of Dugdale, Feake mentioned by Southall.

L. H. S. Who is your next Witneſs, my Lord?

L. Staf. One William Dale: (who being called, appeared.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witneſs. William Dale.

L. H. S. What do you ſay?

L. Staf. About Dugdale, my Lords, what he knows about his offering him any Money.

Sir Will. Jones. We deſire to know where he lives.

Dale. Dugdale never offered me any Money.

L. H. S. Where do you live?

Dale. At Owſely-Bridge.

L. Staff. Pray ask him whether Dugdale perſuaded him to ſwear againſt my Lord Aſton ſomething he knew not.

L. H. S. Did Dugdale ever hire you to ſwear againſt my Lord Aſton?

Dale. No, he never hired me.

L. H. S. Do you know that he ever hired any body elſe to ſwear falſe?

Dale. I do not, my Lords.

L. Staf. My Lords, I moſt humbly thank your Lordſhips for your Favour in giving me the Liberty of examining theſe other Witneſſes, I ſhall trouble you no further, nor give no more Evidence; only one Witneſs, my Lords, I ſhall trouble you no further, and that is Mr. Lieutenant of the Tower, to this Point, whether my Lord Aſton did refuſe to come to account with Dugdale.

L. H. S. Come, Mr. Lieutenant, do you know any thing about Accompts between my Lord Aſton and Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Lieutenant. My Lords, laſt Summer was Twelve-month Dugdale came to the Tower, but my Lord Aſton would not ſpeak with him, unleſs I were by; ſo they brought him to my Lodging, and he ſhewed me the Books of Accompts: I told them I did not underſtand Accompts, but if they would have me be by, I would get ſomebody to be preſent that did, and have them adjuſted. Mr. Dugdale ſaid he would come another time, but from that time to this I never heard of him.

L. Staf. My Lords, I ſhall not trouble you with any more Witneſſes. My Lords, I have now done my Evidence. I ſhall, as well as my weak Memory and old Age will give me leave, ſum it up, ſomething (as well as I can) of the Evidence given againſt me, and for me. Truly, my Lords, I am able to do it very imperfectly for want of Underſtanding, and truly for want of Sleep; but I do not doubt, but that according to the Law, as I am informed it is, ſince I can have no Counſel in Matter of Fact, or to adviſe me in any thing of that nature, yet I am alſo informed by the Law, your Lordſhips who are my Judges, are my Counſel. And I do not doubt but your Lordſhips, when you take it into Conſideration, will ſupply any Defects which I ſhall commit, which I believe will be many. I ſhall ſpend your Lordſhips time as little as I can; tho theſe Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons believe I deſire to protract it, yet I profeſs before God I do not. And I declare before them all, and your Lordſhips, I am ſo ſatisfied of my own Innocency, that I would never beg a moment's time of delay; and I know your Lordſhips will take care of the Life of the meaneſt Subject: and tho I have had the honour to ſit among your Lordſhips as a Peer, yet I ask not for your Favour, but with your Juſtice too; I ſhall therefore ſum up my Defence as well as I can. For the firſt Witneſs, Dugdale, he ſwore I was at a Conſult at Tixall in the end of Auguſt or the beginning of September; I have ſufficiently proved that in all Auguſt I was not there, nor till the 12th of September. I have proved that his firſt Oath was, I was there in

Auguſt,

Auguſt, and a Man that will ſwear falſe in one thing, is not to be credited in any. I have made it appear to your Lordſhips, that upon the 20th of Septemb. when he ſays he was in my Chamber and I ſent the Page to call him, that that is falſe; it was only he deſired he might come to me to get leave that he might go to the Race, my Lord Aſton being angry with him for it. This I conceive is proved ſufficiently by two Witneſſes, my Man and my Boy, and this I think I have proved as poſitively as can be done. My Lords, 'tis true, 'tis objected againſt me, That I had ſaid Dugdale was never ſeen alone with me in my Life, 'tis true; and 'tis true Anſell ſwears he brought a Footman to me, but he ſwears it was in the Morning, when it was at Supper, and does not ſay that he was alone with me. My Lords, Dugdale ſwore that he told Mr. Philips and Mr. Sambidge of the death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey on the Monday, ſome ſwore he ſaid it was on the Tueſday, but they deny that ever he told it them; and ſo he is forſworn in that. And, my Lords, whether he be a Man of any great Credit, I think I have proved enough to your Lordſhips. 'Tis proved by two Witneſſes, Holt and Morrall, that he offered them Money to ſwear, as likewiſe he did to another, one Robinſon; whom I do believe, by the Information that was given of him, to be a wicked ill Man, and not to be credited; but being ſo, my Lords, he was the fitter for Dugdale's turn. And yet he had ſo much Conſcience, tho he was a poor and needy Fellow, he would not ſwear a Man's Life away for Money. The other two are without Exception, the one they ſay is an idle Fellow, and t'other a Man but of an indifferent Reputation; how far that will move with your Lordſhips, I ſubmit it to you. I ſuppoſe 'tis alſo clear by my Witneſſes, that Dugdale is a Man of no Reputation, having forſworn himſelf in ſeveral Particulars; and I ſumbit the Credit of all he ſays to your Lordſhips upon that.

The next Witneſs, my Lords, is Mr. Oates, whether he be a Doctor or no, I know it not, he would not own it here; he, my Lords, ſwears that he ſaw a Commiſſion delivered to me to be Pay-maſter of an Army to be raiſed, God knows when, I never heard when, or where, I ſuppoſe it was in the Clouds, for I never knew where elſe. Mr. Oates all along before ſwore only that he believed I was in the Plot, now he ſwears I was in it, at Mr. Fenwick's Chamber, a Man I never ſaw in my Life, nor heard of till this Diſcovery. And that he ſaw Letters ſubſcribed by my Name; but that, my Lords, I conceive is no Evidence at all, for he never ſaw me write, nor does know my Hand, nor does he pretend to know me then: and when he had told your Lordſhips he had a Letter of mine, he pretended to look for it, and then ſaid he had loſt it, that is, never had it. But beſides, my Lords, his Evidence now does not agree with his former: for I do appeal to your Lordſhips that were in the Houſe then, that he ſwore the firſt time, He only ſaw my Name to Letters; afterwards he ſwore (that is, ſome days after he had ended all his Evidence, and knew no more than he had put down then, afterwards he remembers what he knew not before and ſwears) a Commiſſion he ſaw delivered to me: So his Memory increaſes as he hath time to invent, and perhaps by another time it might be much more. But, my Lords, I think that one particular, his ſwearing before your Lordſhips, as 'tis entred in your Journal, that he had no more to ſay againſt any body, and afterwards naming the Queen, and now me to have a Commiſſion, I conceive, is perfect Perjury. My Lords, Mr. Oates told your Lordſhips, That he had never been a Papiſt in his Heart, but ever feigned it; truly, my Lords, I cannot poſſibly give over that Point, That a Man that feigns himſelf to be a Papiſt, or any thing that in the Opinion of Proteſtants is ſo wicked a thing as that, is fit to be believed, if he ſhall not heartily repent himſelf, and own it to God and Man as an ill thing to diſſemble ſo. But yeſterday he with a ſmiling Countenance, and as it were in Deriſion, owns that which muſt be a very great offence to God Almighty, to pretend to be of an Idolatrous Church. I appeal to your Lordſhips whether he be a fit Witneſs, I conceive he cannot be thought a Chriſtian, nor to believe in God. I know many wicked and infamous Perſons have done many wicked things and yet have been Witneſſes; but never did any wicked Man own a wicked thing, that he might have concealed, with boaſting of it, that ever was credited in any thing: for if he had ſaid I do acknowledge I did diſſemble with God and my own Conſcience, but I ask God forgiveneſs, it was for a good End, and a good Intention, it had been ſomething (tho that could not have atoned for ſo ill a thing) but ſhewing no Repentance, but rather an impudent affronting of God Almighty, I think he is not a fit Witneſs, I appeal to your Lordſhips and the whole Chriſtian World if he be. I cannot believe your Lordſhips will condemn me for an Opinion which I will go to my Death with, and it ſtands upon me ſo to do.

The laſt Witneſs, my Lords, is Turberville, and he ſays, in the Year (75) he often diſcourſed alone with me for a Fortnight together at Paris. My Servants he owns he never ſaw them, and how he could come for a Fortnight together, and not ſee my Servants, I refer it to your Lordſhips Conſideration whether it be poſſible. For I'll tell your Lordſhips, when I had been a few days at Paris, my Landlord came one day to me, and ſaid, You do not do well to ſuffer any body to come to you without your Man be by; for there came yeſterday a Frenchman to ſpeak with you, and I do not know him, and he went ſtrait up to your Chamber without any body with him; 'tis a dangerous thing, ſaid he, for I know that Frenchmen and People have come up and been alone with Perſons, and put a Piſtol to them and made them deliver their Money for fear of their Lives: therefore pray, ſaid he, do it no more. From that time, which was a few days after, I came to Paris the latter end of October, or the beginning of November, no Chriſtian Soul was permitted to come to me without my Servants; how then could he come to me for a Fortnight together, and none of my Servants ſee him? My Lords, this Gentleman very civilly the next day after he had made an Affidavit againſt me, would needs mend it; and Sir William Poultney did acknowledge that he made Affidavit one day, that he came to my Lord Powis's in the Year (73) and the next Day amended it to (72.) Now I humbly conceive, my Lords, a Man that ſwears one thing to-day, which he forſwears to-morow, is not to be believed: And the truth of it is, as his Brothers prove to your Lordſhips, he came to my Lord Powis's in the Year (71) and ſo he forſwears himſelf in every thing, and is in no wiſe to be believed. He ſwears to your Lordſhips I writ a Letter to him to acquaint him that I would go by Calais, and not by Diep; but I have proved I went by Diep, and I aſſure your Lordſhips I have not been at Calais, I think, theſe twelve or fourteen Years.

I

I conceive theſe things are very manifeſt and clear Proofs againſt him that he hath not ſwore one true word. He ſwears that my Lord Powis, my Lady Powis, and his Friends, perſuaded him to go to Doway to be a Fryar, but not liking it, he came over again and was in danger of his Life by them; but the Evidence is ſufficiently ſtrong in Proof that he afterwards was at my Lord Powis's, and was well received, that he lay in the Houſe, and was not in the leaſt injured by them. And for his other Relations, his Brother proves he was not ill uſed by them. They gave him ſeven Pound to be gone and trouble them no more. He ſays, I ſaid, he was a Coward; and I'll tell you why I ſaid ſo, becauſe a Captain, that is now out of England, told his Siſter ſo, who told me, but that is not very material. My Lords, there is one Witneſs more, John Porter, that ſwears to your Lordſhips this one thing, That this Turberville ſwore to him at ſuch an Ale-houſe, he knew nothing of the Plot. And then my Lords, there is Mr. Yalden, and he is a Gentleman of Reputation, he ſaid in his Company, there was no Trade good but that of a Diſcoverer, God damn the Duke of York, Monmouth, Plot and all, for I know nothing of it. Truly, my Lords, whether he got Money by it or no, is known ſince he hath been a Diſcoverer, telling what he knew not ſo many Months ago; and therefore I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips what he is.

My Lords, theſe People that ſwear againſt me, there is not one of them a Perſon of any Quality or Condition; and whether they have not rather ſworn for Money than the Truth, by things that are known, and need no Proof, I ſhall obſerve when I come to it to argue that Point in Law, Whether a Man that ſwears for Gain is a credible Witneſs, or no?

My Lords, I have as well as I can ſummed up that little Evidence that was given againſt me, I cannot better do it in ſo ſhort a time; for indeed I had but a very ſhort time laſt night, and I have not ſlept, I had the Cramp ſo much in extremity, that my next Neighbour heard me roaring out. My Lords, I ſubmit my ſelf to your Lordſhips, and doubt not but that the Matters charged upon me will appear to your Lordſhips ſufficiently anſwer'd. And I beſeech your Lordſhips well to conſider that one thing againſt Dr. Oates, his diſſembling with God Almighty, and his impudent owning of it. This I do inſiſt upon; and I proteſt before God Almighty, if I were a Judge, I would not hang a Dog upon ſuch Evidence. My Lords, I have many Points in Law to offer to your Lordſhips, and when you pleaſe I ſhould do it, I'll name them to you.

L. H. S. Name them, my Lord; if you have any Doubts in Law, propound them.

Lord Lovelace. My Lords, I would not interrupt my Lord, but I think indeed it is no Interruption, ſince his Lordſhip broke off, and was going on to another Point. But I think I ſee one of the impudenteſt things that ever was done in a Court of Juſtice; whilſt we are trying a Perſon here for a Popiſh Plot, I do ſee a profeſſed Papiſt ſtanding in the Body of your Houſe, and that is Sir Bernard Gaſcoyn.

(Who thereupon went out of the Court.)

L. Staf. My Lords, I do conceive I have cleared myſelf to your Lordſhips of what I am accuſed of. My Lords, the Courſe of my whole Life hath been otherwiſe; I defy any Creature in the world to ſay, that I ever uſed one diſobedient or diſloyal Word of the King, or did any ſuch Act. I waited on the King that now is, in the unhappy War that is paſſed, when I was in a low Condition enough as to Fortune, and my Wife and Family were thereby reduced to great Straits, for my Wife and Children lived ſome five or ſix Years upon ſome Plate and Jewels that we had; whereas if I would have come, and been at London, and joined with that Party, I could have ſaved my Eſtate, and lived quietly as others did. But my Conſcience told me, I ought to wait upon the King, and offer him my perſonal Service, when I could do him no other. I have ſhewn how the Witneſſes have forſworn themſelves; I ſhall now, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, deſire your Opinion in ſome Points of Law. And though perhaps I may name to your Lordſhips many things that are impertinent, or not to the purpoſe, I beg your Lordſhips pardon, 'tis out of the Weakneſs of my Underſtanding; and I hope you will not think ill, neither your Lordſhips, nor the Houſe of Commons, if I ſhould, through Ignorance, move things impertinent. The firſt Point of Law is this:

Firſt, I conceive there is no Example or Precedent for it, that Proceedings Criminal ever did continue from Parliament to Parliament, and this is continued to three.

L. H. S. Speak out my Lord, and go on.

L. Staf. Secondly, my Lords, I do not queſtion the Power of the Houſe of Commons in the leaſt; but, my Lord, I know they impeach when they find Grounds for it without diſpute: but I queſtion whether any Man, by the known Laws of this Kingdom, in Capital Caſes, can be proceeded on, but by Indictment firſt found by the Grand Jury, and not by Impeachment by any Perſon, or other Body of Men.

L. H. S. Say on, my Lord.

L. Staf. Thirdly, my Lords, I conceive there are many Defects in the Indictment or the Impeachment, (Indictment there is none.) There is no Overt-Act alledged in the Indictment or Impeachment, I know not well what it is called. And, my Lords, by the Act of Parliament in 1 H. 4. c. 10. nothing from thenceforth is to be Treaſon, but according to the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. which includes an Overt-Act.

Fourthly, My Lords, I deſire that I may prove that by Law they are not competent Witneſſes, for they ſwear for Mony. But, my Lords, I forgot one thing to ſay to your Lordſhips as to the Evidence, that theſe Gentlemen did endeavour to prove (I do not ſpeak whether they did or not) a general Plot of the Papiſts; whether they did not, I am not concerned in it, for I ſay they have not proved me a Papiſt, which I ſubmit to your Lordſhips: and though any Man may know me ſo in his private Knowledge, yet they having not given any proof of it, 'tis not to affect me.

Fifthly, There is one Point of Law more, That no Man can be condemned for Treaſon, as I conceive, by one Witneſs; and there are not two Witneſſes to any one Point. Theſe are the Points of Law, I humbly beg your Lordſhips pardon for the trouble, and deſire your Opinion in them.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, before we make anſwer to what my Lord hath ſaid, I do humbly deſire, That for the Objection which he hath made againſt Mr. Southall, proved by a Noble Lord of this Houſe (tho I muſt obſerve it was not of his own Knowledge, but by Hear-ſay, and that Matter of Hear-ſay contrary to the Act of Oblivion) to the end there may no doubt remain of Mr. Southall's Credit, that a Noble Lord of this Houſe, and a Gentleman

Gentleman of the Houſe of Commons (who both know Mr. Southall) may be heard to his Reputation.

Sir F. Win. My Lord Ferrers knew him not himſelf, but my Lord Brook and Mr. Gower will give a better account of him.

(Then the Lord Brook was ſworn.)

Lord Brook. My Lords, what I have to ſay concerning this Mr. Southall is, That he hath been often employ'd both by my Brother and my Mother; and they have ſo good an Opinion of him, that they employ him ſtill; and therefore we take him for an honeſt Man, and an able Man, or he would not be ſo much truſted and employed: and I take him to be a very good Churchman; for if he was not, I would not employ him.

L. H. S. An honeſt Man, an able, and a good Churchman, your Lordſhip ſays?

Ld Brooke. He receives the Sacrament four times a Year.

Sir W. Jones. Then ſwear Mr. William Leveſon Gower, a Member of the Houſe of Commons; (which was done in his Place.)

Mr. L. Gower. My Lords, I have been near ſeven Years of Staffordſhire, but did not know Mr. Southall till this Popiſh Plot was diſcovered. After that I came acquainted with him (being a Juſtice of the Peace in that County) in Court, where I found him to be the moſt zealous Proſecutor of the Papiſts in that Country, no Man like him. I likewiſe found ſeveral Popiſh Prieſts had by his means been apprehended and impriſon'd, and one of them ſince convicted, who by the way ſtill remains unexecuted in Stafford-Goal. What Opinion ſome may have heard or had of him formerly, I cannot tell; but this I know, that he hath more than once come to deſire my Aſſiſtance, that he might proſecute the Papiſts the moſt effectual way upon the Statutes made for that purpoſe, and that he did complain to me that he had not met with good Uſage elſewhere.

My Lords, I take Opinion to be grounded upon Principles; and I do obſerve that thoſe of this Country who do believe this Popiſh Plot, and know Mr. Southall, and are principled for the Preſervation of the King, the Proteſtant Religion, and the Government, do at this time ſpeak well of him, and thoſe who are not ſo principled ſpeak otherwiſe.

My Lords, I was ſurprized when I heard my Name mention'd upon this occaſion: I have told your Lordſhips all the Matter of Fact that upon the ſudden occurs to me, (with my own Opinion, which I offer with all ſubmiſſion;) and had I had notice, I might poſſibly have recollected more, which I would freely have declared to your Lordſhips, but this is all that I can now ſay.

L. Staf. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I would ſay one word, if you will give me leave; I am very ignorant, and beg your Lordſhips pardon for troubling of you: I humbly deſire to know, Whether after the Points of Law are argued, I may ſpeak ſomething, not concerning the Evidence of the Plot, but concerning myſelf.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, we ſhall not oppoſe the ſaying any thing he can for himſelf; but we muſt conclude, and have the laſt word.

L. H. S. My Lord, the Gentlemen that are for the Houſe of Commons muſt conclude. My Lords will give you all the Favour they can, but they muſt have the laſt word.

L. Staf. I do not oppoſe it.

L. H. S. Therefore you will do well to ſay all you have to ſay together. For the Points of Law, my Lords will give no Judgment till the Commons have anſwered them, and they I ſuppoſe will firſt ſum up the whole Proofs; then you may ſay what you have to ſay, for they muſt make an end. Gentlemen, will you ſpeak firſt to the Law?

Sir W. Jones. No, my Lords, firſt to the Fact.

L. H. S. Go on then.

Then Sir William Jones, one of the Committee appointed to manage the Evidence, began to ſum up the ſame as followeth.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,

WE have now done our Evidence as to Matter of Fact; and that which I have in charge at this time, is to remind your Lordſhips of our Proofs, to anſwer the Objections that have been made againſt them, and to make ſome Obſervations upon the whole.

My Lords, The Members of the Houſe of Commons that were appointed for the Service of the Management of this Tryal, thoſe of them I mean who began the firſt day, made a Diviſion of our Evidence into two parts; the one that which concerned the Plot in general, and the other what related to this Lord in particular.

My Lords, as to the Plot in general, we did call ſix Witneſſes; I know ſome of your Lordſhips have taken Notes, and you have their Names: they were Smith, Dugdale, Prance, Oates, Dennis and Jeniſon.

My Lords, becauſe I will ſave as much of your time as I can, I will not take upon me to repeat what each Witneſs ſaid as to the Plot in general; but when I come to the Evidence which immediately concerns my Lord, I muſt beg your Favour that I may be more particular. I will ſay thus much for the Proofs of the Plot in general, that there was by thoſe Witneſſes ſo much fully proved, that made it moſt apparent that there was a general Deſign amongſt the Roman Catholicks to introduce their falſe Religion into this Kingdom, that the Jeſuits had ſeveral Meetings to that end, that they endeavoured to do it by ſeveral ways, by raiſing of Arms, by collecting of Monies, and by deſigning againſt the King's Life; nay, they had ſo far advanced their Deſigns, and were in ſo much readineſs, as they thought it time to appoint Officers not only for their Army, but for the Civil Government, as if the Work were already accompliſhed.

Your Lordſhips were told by one of the Witneſſes of a Lord Chancellor, and of a Lord Treaſurer, (Lords now in the Tower yet to be tried;) and you were told alſo of Officers for the military Part, a General, a Lieutenant-General, and this Lord at the Bar to be Pay-Maſter of the Army.

I ſhall, my Lords, deſire to take notice to your Lordſhips, that this Deſign, though it was to be finally acted by other hands, yet was it firſt contrived, and afterwards carried on by the Prieſts and Jeſuits. You will find them preparing for it, by making Sermons to juſtify that Doctrine (which I confeſs this Noble Lord denies) of the Lawfulneſs of killing Kings. You will find the Prieſts and Jeſuits, in their Diſcourſes, as well as Sermons, urging and encouraging their Diſciples and Votaries, to go on with their Deſign of killing our King, and giving that common Reaſon for it, That he was a Heretick, and it were meritorious to take him out of the way.

My Lords, I take notice of theſe Particulars in the general Plot, becauſe it may give great light to, and add much to the Confirmation of the particular Evidence. And, my Lords, (I think) I may take leave to ſay, That the Plot in general hath been now ſufficiently proved. And if we conſider what hath been proved at former Tryals (upon which many of the Offenders and Traytors have been executed) what hath been publiſhed in Print; and above all, Coleman's Letters, written with his own Hand, and for that reaſon impoſſible to be falſified; we may juſtly conclude, that there is not a Man in England, of any Underſtanding, but muſt be fully convinced of the Truth of the Plot in general. I ſhall ſpare to mention the Reſolutions and Declarations of two Parliaments, and of both Houſes in thoſe two Parliaments, without (as I remember) one diſſenting Voice, expreſſing their full Satisfaction of the Reality of the Plot: ſo that I think now none remain that do pretend not to believe it, but two ſorts of Perſons; the one, thoſe that were Conſpirators in it; and the other, thoſe that wiſh'd it had ſucceeded, and deſire it may ſo ſtill.

to,

But, my Lords, I will be the ſhorter on this part; for perhaps it will be objected, You have offered a fair Proof of a general Plot, here are Records, Votes of both Houſes, Papers and Evidences printed, and Witneſſes viva voce to prove it; but what is all this to my Lord Stafford? My Lords, it goes a great way to him; I do not ſay to be a convincing Evidence, but to make the particular Evidence againſt him highly credible.

Your Lordſhips cannot imagine, that there are ſuch a ſtore of Lords and great Men amongſt that Party (though there be too many) that they ſhould have great Choice for great Offices. Your Lordſhips hear how the other great Offices were diſpoſed of, and truly I think the Merit of this Lord amongſt that Party might very well intitle him to an Office as great as this of Treaſurer of War, or Pay-Maſter to the Army. But what is the Evidence of the general Plot (may ſome ſtill ſay) to my Lord Stafford? What do you mention the raiſing an Army? What do you mention the collecting of Money? What do you mention the providing of Arms for? Yes, my Lords, they are very uſeful, for they give a fair Introduction to prove againſt this Lord, that he was to have this Office. If it be proved by other Witneſſes than thoſe who ſware directly againſt this Lord, That there were Arms provided, that there was an Army to be raiſed, and the reſt; it proves at leaſt, that there was Occaſion for ſuch an Officer as the particular Witneſs proves my Lord was to be.

My Lords, for the other matter that relates to the Conſultations of the Prieſts and Jeſuits, and their Sermons and Diſcourſes, I deſire your Lordſhips to obſerve that alſo; which if you do, your Lordſhips will eaſily perceive what a great Influence even that matter hath upon the particular Evidence, and how credible it renders the Teſtimony of the particular Witneſſes. Your Lordſhips will find, when my Lord was at Tixall (as Dugdale gives you an Account) there was Evers the Jeſuit, and other Prieſts ſtill at my Lord's Elbow, and egging him on to this buſineſs. Your Lordſhips will find where Oates ſpeaks of him, it is at Fenwick's Chamber, who was a Jeſuit, giving him Ghoſtly Counſel. Your Lordſhips will find, That at Paris, where Mr. Turberville ſpeaks of him, there were Father Sherborne, Father Nelſon, and Father Anthony Turberville. Still the Prieſts are about my Lord; and when my Lord is among them, or but newly come from them, then he utters the Treaſon of killing the King. And doubtleſs this traitorous Purpoſe of his did ariſe from their Counſels: So that though our Witneſſes ſpeak of my Lord's Diſcourſes at ſeveral times about killing the King, yet they make them flow from one and the ſame Fountain, the Inſtigation of the Prieſts and Jeſuits.

But now, my Lords, to come to the particular Evidence, I think I may ſay, if ever Evidence was convincing, this is ſo. We have brought three Witneſſes which ſpeak each of them that which is ſufficient to prove my Lord guilty; and they ſpeak of Overt-Acts too, as I ſhall obſerve anon.

His Lordſhip was pleaſed at the beginning of our Evidence to deſire that the Witneſſes might look him in the face; and for that he cited two Statutes, I ſuppoſe he intended the Statutes of 1 & 5 of Edw. 6. which Statutes, or at leaſt one of them, do ſay, That there ſhall be in caſe of High Treaſon, two Witneſſes to accuſe, and thoſe two Witneſſes brought face to face at the time of Tryal: And my Lord hath had the Benefit of thoſe Laws; he hath had two, nay three Witneſſes to prove him guilty, brought face to face before your Lordſhips; and if theſe three, or any two of them deſerve to be credited, my Lord in this Caſe is guilty of High Treaſon. My Lords, I muſt beg the favour of looking upon my Paper of Notes; for the truth is, the Witneſſes are ſo many, and the Proceeding hath held ſo long, that it is impoſſible for my weak Memory to retain all that was ſaid.

My Lords, the firſt Witneſs we began withal was Dugdale; and I know your Lordſhips did take notice what he ſwore: but it will be my Duty to remind your Lordſhips, that he tells you, That he had heard of a general Deſign of making Preparations to be ready againſt the King's Death, and this for ſeveral Years paſt. But as to the matter of haſtening the Death of the King, that was but a late Counſel. He tells you, I think, that about the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September, 1678. Evers and other Jeſuits were at Tixall, that there was a Conſult then about the King's Death; and that (by the means of Evers, who was a very great Man among them, but ſince fled, and is mentioned in the Impeachment) he was admitted to that Conſult, and heard particularly what every Man ſaid; and he does take upon him to ſay, That at that time the matter of taking away the King's Life was propounded, and that my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, did conſent to it.

My Lords, he tells you further, That upon a Sunday-Morning my Lord came from Stafford to Tixall to Maſs: my Lord was pleaſed to obſerve, that we do not prove him a Papiſt; but we prove my Lord came to Maſs, and that, I think, is one good Proof of his being a Papiſt. Beſides, Dugdale ſwears my Lord did then complain, That they had not the free Exerciſe of their Religion; that they could not ſay their Prayers openly: What were they? Not the Prayers of Proteſtants, not thoſe contained in the Liturgy of our Church. He could not complain of any Reſtraint as to them; but complain he did, that they had not the free Exerciſe of their Religion, but he did hope, if things ſucceeded well, in a ſhort time it would be otherwiſe. This is particularly ſworn by Dugdale.

My Lords, his Lordſhip was very much unſatisfied, that Dugdale was not particular in point of time; he did talk of ſome matters to be in Auguſt or September, but could not fix to any Day. But your Lordſhips will remember, that as to one Particular, and which mainly concerns his Lordſhip to anſwer, he comes to a Day, or within a Day; for he ſwears poſitively, That upon the 20th or 21ſt of September he was ſent for to my Lord's Chamber, the Servants were put out; that there my Lord did propoſe to him, in expreſs Terms, the matter of killing of the King: He would have him be an Actor in it, and he offered him a Reward of 500*l.* to perform it. For this which is the moſt material part of his particular Evidence againſt my Lord, he is certain 'twas either on the 20th or 21ſt of September; and he tells your Lordſhips how he comes to remember the time, by a good Token, by the Foot-Race that was then to be run; and I do not perceive that my Lord does deny, but rather acknowledge that Dugdale was in his Chamber at that time. 'Tis true, he does deny ſome other Circumſtances which I ſhall anſwer anon. And here I do think Dugdale undertakes to ſwear to that which will amount to an Overt Act, and a damnable one too, that is, the offering 500*l.* to kill the King.

But Dugdale (it ſeems) was not willing to depend upon the Promiſes of my Lord for ſo much Money, his Lordſhip had not that Credit with him; he repairs to Evers, and deſires to be ſatisfied from him, whether he might rely upon my Lord for ſo much Money? Evers told him he might be ſure to have the Money; and that there was enough in Harcourt's and other Mens hands for the carrying on that bleſſed Deſign; and that he ſhould have it thence. I might, my Lords, remember to your Lordſhips how Dugdale does particularly ſwear concerning another Diſcourſe he had afterwards with my Lord; That my Lord complained of the great Loſſes that had been ſuſtained by him and his Friends for the King; how, in particular, my Lord Aſton's Father had loſt 30000*l.* and what Reſentments my Lord had of it. He ſaid, That Places of Profit were rather beſtowed upon thoſe that deſerted the King, and were Rebels and Traytors, than on thoſe that did him faithful Service: And what does he conclude from thence? He is very angry with the King, and does ſay, that next to the Cauſe of Religion (which was the ſtrongeſt Motive with him to take away the King's Life) the King's Ingratitude to his loyal Subjects, was that which did moſt offend him.

I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with other particular Matters which were to ſerve as Incouragements to the Deſign, as that there was to be a Pardon from the Pope; That my Lord did write a Letter to Evers, which was ſhewn to Dugdale, wherein he ſays, That things did ſucceed very well abroad, and he hoped they would do ſo at home. I ſhall only obſerve, that Dugdale's Evidence, as to my Lord's damnable Deſign of killing the King, is poſitive and full. And if this be to be believed (as I hope we ſhall ſhew there is no Reaſon but it ſhould be) then here ſurely is one ſufficient Witneſs to prove my Lord guilty of the Higheſt Treaſon.

My Lords, the next Witneſs we called for againſt my Lord, was Dr. Oates; and I think Dr. Oates is not only poſitive, but he is poſitive in that which moſt certainly will amount to an Overt Act; nay, I think to more Overt Acts than one. The Doctor tells your Lordſhips, That having been at St. Omers and in Spain, he ſaw ſeveral Letters that were ſubſcribed Stafford; he did not then know my Lord's Hand, but he ſaw the Letters, and he tells you the effect of thoſe Letters. And I remember in one of them there is this Expreſſion, That my Lord (the Priſoner at the Bar) does give aſſurance to the Fathers, that he is very zealous and ready to do them ſervice.

Dr. Oates tells you, my Lords, That afterwards coming into England, my Lord Stafford did write a Letter, I think it was to his Son; but ſure I am, the Doctor ſaid, he had the Carriage of it to the Poſt-houſe; That he ſaw my Lord write it; he read the Superſcription, and he ſwears, that the Hand which writ that Letter, was the Hand which ſubſcribed to all the former. And ſo then joining the one to the other, it amounts to as good an Evidence as if he had known my Lord's Hand from the beginning.

But that which comes home to my Lord, is that which Doctor Oates ſaw, and that which Doctor Oates heard; and they are theſe Particulars which I now mention.

Firſt, He ſaw a Commiſſion directed to my Lord to be Pay-maſter of the Army, he ſaw it delivered to my Lord's own Hand, and my Lord accepted it. Doctor Oates read the Commiſſion, and he tells you by whom it was ſigned, Joannes Paulus Oliva, a Perſon ſubſtituted by the Pope to iſſue out Commiſſions: He tells you the Contents of it, and of this he ſwears he was an ocular Witneſs.

He tells you of another Matter he heard my Lord ſay, as conſiderable as the other, That when my Lord had received the Commiſſion, my Lord declared, that he was to go down into Staffordſhire and Lancaſhire, where he was to put things in readineſs. What were thoſe things? He had now a Commiſſion, by virtue of which, in Lancaſhire and the other Places, he was to prepare and gather Monies for that Army which he was to pay. So much Doctor Oates doth ſwear he heard from my Lord's own Mouth.

But there is one thing further, which I had almoſt forgot. He doth ſwear, that my Lord was privy to, and approved of, the Matter of killing the King: For he doth ſwear he did hear my Lord ſay at that time, He hoped before he returned, Honeſt William (who was Grove that was executed for this Attempt) would have done the buſineſs. And what that Buſineſs was, every Man who hath heard of Grove's Treaſon, muſt needs underſtand.

There is but one thing more that I remember of Doctor Oates's Teſtimony. Your Lordſhips that have a better Advantage to write than we, who are crowded together, may have taken Notes of more; but this one thing I do obſerve: Doctor Oates doth expreſly ſwear, That my Lord bore a very ill mind towards his Majeſty; for my Lord did in his hearing complain, That the King had deceived them a great while, and that they would bear with him no longer, he ſhould deceive them no more.

My Lords, our third Witneſs was Mr. Turberville, who doth give you an account, That he being firſt ſent to Doway, and intended to be entred there in one of the Societies, (he was ſent by my Lord Powis and my Lady Powis, and ſome of his Relations of that Religion, for that purpoſe) he did not like the Company, he was not pleaſed with the Exerciſes of that Religion, and that with much difficulty he eſcaped thence and came for England. But finding he was not well looked upon here, nor well received by his Relations, he went over to France: That being at Paris, he came into the Company of the three Fathers I named before, Father Sherborne, Father Nelſon, and Father Turberville; the laſt whereof, he tells you, was his own Brother: That by the means of theſe Prieſts he was brought acquainted with my Lord Stafford; and doubtleſs they were able to make him intimately acquainted with my Lord. And it did prove ſo, for he tells you, after ſome time, that in a lower Room of my Lord's Lodging, my Lord propoſed to him the buſineſs of killing the King. That he did not at all like it, was very unwilling to undertake it, but my Lord bid him conſider of it, and that he ſhould give him his anſwer at Diep, having enjoined him Secrecy; but my Lord after ſent him word he would go by Calais: and the Witneſs afterwards went into England, and from thence into the French Army. And this is the ſubſtance of what Turberville depoſeth.

And, my Lords, I think it will not be doubted by any Man that will conſider theſe three Mens Teſtimonies, but that here are two Witneſſes, if not more, to prove my Lord guilty of Treaſon.

But my Lord has been pleaſed againſt them to make ſeveral Objections; ſome have been by Witneſſes which he hath produced to encounter the Proofs that we have offered; and ſome of them have been by Obſervations that he hath made upon what hath been ſaid by our Witneſſes and his. I will keep to Order as much as I can, and not confound the Order and Method of his Defence.

The Witneſſes he firſt brought were againſt Dugdale, and of them his Lordſhip was pleas'd to begin with his Daughter, the Lady Marchioneſs of Wincheſter, and his Niece Mrs. Howard. Your Lordſhips, I preſume, are pleaſed to obſerve what they were called to. They did teſtify, that being at Wakeman's Tryal, they did hear Dugdale ſwear (ſays my Lady Marchioneſs of Wincheſter) that my Lord Stafford was to come down into Staffordſhire in June or July, and Mr. Dugdale was then to receive Orders from my Lord; and he ſwore (as ſhe was pleaſed to ſay) that there was a Conſult in Auguſt at Tixall, and my Lord Stafford was there preſent. Mrs. Howard (for I put them together) was pleaſed to ſay that ſhe was preſent at that Tryal, and there Dugdale ſwore that my Lord Stafford did come down in June or July, and that my Lord was at the Conſult in Auguſt.

My Lords, I will not make Objections neither to the Religion of theſe Ladies, nor to their Relation to my Lord, though thoſe be matters that are to be conſidered. But that which I ſhall obſerve to your Lordſhips, is this, That they do not agree one with another: For my Lady Wincheſter ſays Dugdale did ſwear that my Lord was to come down in June or July, and Mrs. Howard ſays, that he ſwore he did come down then. Now there is a great difference betwixt ſwearing an Intention that a Man was to come down, and ſwearing the very Act that he did come down at that time. By which your Lordſhips may obſerve how hard a matter it is for Witneſſes that are preſent at a Tryal (eſpecially at a Tryal which did not directly, though it might in conſequence concern another Perſon of their Relation) to take notice exactly of things.

And truly, my Lords, theſe Ladies being of that Religion, might have ſo much concern upon them for Sir George Wakeman the Popiſh Phyſician, and in him for other their Friends of that Party, that they might not have ſo much Liberty of Thought, as to obſerve exactly all Circumſtances ſworn to by the Witneſſes; and therefore it is no great matter if they are miſtaken in them. But I believe if any one do conſult the Print (though it be no Evidence, nor offer'd as ſuch) he will find no ſuch thing was at that time ſworn; for it is not ſo printed, and thoſe that took Notes did not underſtand it ſo.

My Lords, The next Witneſs my Lord is pleaſed to bring, is his Servant Furneſe; and what is it that he teſtifieth? He ſaith, that he was with my Lord the whole time that Dugdale was in my Lord's Chamber, and he doth not remember that ever Dugdale was there but once, and he doth not remember that ever my Lord bid him go out of the Room.

My Lords, It is a very hard matter for a Man to come thus in the Negative, to remember how often Dugdale was there, eſpecially there being no more occaſion to take notice of it then, than here appears to be, and that after ſo long a time. And it is a very hard matter for a Servant to gain Credit, by ſaying his Maſter never bid him go out of the Room in his Life. Theſe things may be done or ſaid, and yet eſcape the Memory of a Servant of more Age, and of leſs Inclination to favour his Maſter than this Perſon appears to be of and to have. Therefore I think there will be but a very ſmall matter made of what he ſaid, no force at all in it, and I believe your Lordſhips will give very little regard to it; but rather believe thoſe Witneſſes that ſwear poſitively, that they have ſeen him with my Lord, and ſpeak to a Familiarity at that time between them. This young Man, Furneſe, was my Lord's Servant, and of his Religion; and it is conſiderable, whether we have not reaſon to be afraid that more than ordinary Practice has been uſed to prepare Evidence on my Lord's behalf, which I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak to when I come to the other Witneſſes.

His next Witneſs, my Lords, was his Boy George Leigh, who is 15 Years of Age now, and was eight Years old when he came to my Lord ſeven Years ago. And he atteſts the ſame thing, and to the ſame purpoſe with the other. And I think I may leave him with the ſame Anſwer, for we are nothing more concerned with him than we were with the other. Only one thing I would obſerve, to ſhew that his Memory was imperfect; he doth not remember that Dugdale was with my Lord at all that Day, which my Lord himſelf doth acknowledge he was, and the other Witneſs agrees: So that there cannot be any great weight laid upon what he ſaith.

My Lord's next Witneſs was Thomas Sawyer, and he is one of my Lord Aſton's Servants, that I deſire to obſerve of him firſt. And what does he ſay? He ſaith, That Dugdale went away for Debt. The contrary to which was apparently proved, for we, by our Witneſſes, made it manifeſt, that Dugdale went away for the Matter of the Plot; the fear and dread he was in upon that ſcore: and the Circumſtance of his being apprehended by the Watch at Night in his Flight, and how he was put to take the Oaths, do manifeſtly prove this. But he ſays another thing, which I deſire may have no weight with your Lordſhips, that Dugdale ſhould threaten, that becauſe my Lord Aſton would not own him for his Servant, he would be revenged of him. Truly, if my Lord Aſton were here to be tried, it would have ſome weight. But to think, if it were true, that he had ſo ſworn, that therefore he would be ſo wicked as to do miſchief to another Man, that he would be revenged of every Man of that Religion, or of every Man that came to my Lord Aſton's Houſe; that cannot be imagined. So I cannot ſee what great ſtreſs, my Lords, the Priſoner can lay upon it, as to the preſent Tryal, which concerns my Lord Stafford.

But, my Lords, I deſire to obſerve, that he ſays further, That when Dugdale went away there was a Diſcourſe of a Plot; (this he helps out Dugdale in:) and that there was a Diſcourſe of the killing of a Juſtice of Peace. So that certainly it does ſhew, that Dugdale was apprehenſive of the Plot. And as to that which he is pleaſed to ſay, That Dugdale ſhould deny his knowledge of the Plot, and take Drink, and with Execrations forſwear it; it will be no manner of Objection at all. For I ſhall have occaſion to ſhew hereafter, that Dugdale at that time was very far from revealing the Plot, he had been ſo long ingaged in; he was in apprehenſion of the danger of his own Life, and Southall tells you how and when he revealed it, and by what inducements he was prevailed upon to do it.

The next Witneſs my Lord called, was Philips, the Miniſter of Tixhall; and truly all that I can accuſe him of, is want of Memory, and that is no fault in a Man, that perhaps is very ſtudious and careful in his Imployment, as I hope he is. He tells you, that whereas Dugdale ſwore at a former Tryal, that he acquainted Mr. Philips with the Death of a Juſtice of Peace of Weſtminſter on the Monday, that he did not acquaint him with it; that is, he does not remember it, for no Man that ſwears a Negative, can ſwear more. But whether Mr. Philips's Evidence be of any conſequence to us, we ſubmit to your Lordſhips Conſideration; when we oppoſe to his want of Memory, two Witneſſes that ſwear he was by when this News was told: and we are told likewiſe, as a Confirmation of that, by two Gentlemen of Quality, that the Report of ſuch a thing was ſpread abroad all over that Country, before it was poſſible for it to come by the way of ordinary Intelligence. Whether therefore what Mr. Philips teſtifies, proceeds from any other Cauſe, than want of Memory in Mr. Philips, I muſt leave to your Lordſhips Conſideration.

But this I would obſerve to your Lordſhips, that when Mr. Philips was asked by my Lord, whether or no Dugdale were a Perſon likely to perjure himſelf, he could not ſay ſo: Nay, being asked of what Reputation he was of, he ſaid, by ſome he was very well ſpoken of, by ſome but indifferently; but I do not remember, that he ſaid, he was ill ſpoken of by any. So I think Mr. Philips has rather advanced than prejudiced Mr. Dugdale's Reputation and Credit.

My Lords, I think I may lightly paſs over the three Juſtices of Peace that were brought to give an Account of Dugdale's Behaviour before them, and not mention them diſtinctly, becauſe they ſwear all to the ſame purpoſe, That Mr. Dugdale was apprehended upon ſuſpicion of the Plot, that he took the Oaths, that he was invited and urged by them to make a diſcovery of the Plot, which he then denied to have any knowledge of: For all this will be anſwered, when we come to remind your Lordſhips of Mr. Southall's Teſtimony.

His Lordſhip was pleaſed in the next place, to offer to prove Dugdale an ill Man, by endeavouring to ſuborn Witneſſes: And in the firſt place he called Robinſon, who teſtified a very unlikely thing, that Mr. Dugdale ſhould call him in the Street, and bring him to an Houſe, and offer him Money, to ſwear againſt my Lord Stafford; which Money he had in an Handkerchief, but did not tell him what Particulars he ſhould ſwear to: Nay, and this after he had told him he could ſwear nothing. And it does not appear, that Dugdale had any manner of knowledge of him, or that this Gentleman, Robinſon, had any knowledge of my Lord Stafford: So that it was a very raſh and preſumptuous thing, that Dugdale ſhould attempt a Man that he knew not; and a very imprudent thing, that he ſhould ſuborn a Witneſs, to ſwear againſt a Man that the Witneſs to be ſuborned did not know. But I ſhall ſay no more of him, becauſe I think upon the Account that has been given of him by a Noble Earl of this Houſe, and an Honourable Member of the Houſe of Commons, if he had ſaid things in themſelves probable, he deſerves not in the leaſt to be believed.

My Lord's next Witneſs upon the ſame Head of Subornation was one Murral, a poor Barber; and what ſays he? He teſtifies that Mr. Dugdale did offer him 50 l. to ſwear againſt Sir James Symons and ſome others. My Lords, Whether this be probable or no, we muſt leave to your Lordſhips. We have called Witneſſes that prove him a Man of no Reputation, one that runs up and down the Country, a kind of Vagabond, and I think (upon the Endeavours that have been proved to have been uſed as to others) it is no very hard matter to bring a Man of his Condition to ſay as much as he hath done.

The next Witneſs is Samuel Holt the Blackſmith; and he tells ſuch a Story, that if it were true, would be ſome Diſparagement to Dugdale: and what is that? He ſays, That Dugdale ſent a Man and a Horſe for him, to bring him to the Star in Stafford; and there offer'd him 40 l. to ſwear that one Moore carried away Evers. My Lords, How this Story comes in, I cannot imagine; why Mr. Dugdale ſhould bear any Ill-Will to Moore, or what ſhould induce him to intice this Man to ſwear againſt Moore, or what elſe was in it, it doth not appear. But no matter what it is for; we prove againſt this Man by two Witneſſes, Rawlins and Lander; by the firſt, that he is a Man of ill Reputation, very zealous to ſupport the Plot, and cry down Mr. Dugdale, ſaying, that he was a Rogue, and all they were Rogues that took part with him. And by the other Witneſs Lander, that Holt did make an Aſſault upon him, and would have killed him for being ready to appear againſt my Lord Aſton at his intended Tryal. So that he is a Man that has more Zeal than Honeſty: Zeal in no good matter, namely to hinder the Truth from coming out againſt my Lord Aſton; and therefore we have little reaſon to wonder: Nay, all the reaſon in the World to believe, that he ſays that which is untrue about Mr. Dugdale.

My Lords, There was another Witneſs, Mr. Lydcott, that ſaid, he was a Fellow of King's-College in Cambridge. He has offer'd no Proofs that he was ſo; and truly it is very improbable he ſhould be ſo: For I hope Fellowſhips in the Univerſity, eſpecially in one of the chief Colleges (as this is) are beſtowed upon more deſerving, and leſs ſuſpicious Perſons than he appears to be: A Man that owns himſelf the continual Companion and Secretary of one ſo famous in the Popiſh Party as my Lord Caſtlemain is: A Man that pretends he was never out of his Company; and a Man that owns, that two Years ſince, he was taking of Notes at a Tryal for this Plot, not only for his own Curioſity, but for the Service of his Lord, who was concerned in the Accuſation. That this Man ſhould be a Fellow of King's-College, ſeems ſtrange, and till it be better proved, will hardly be believed; nor will he deſerve any Credit. It is true, he doth acknowledge himſelf a Proteſtant, and to be of the Church of England, and educated, as he ſays, a

Preſ-

Presbyterian; but when he was asked, when he received the Sacrament laſt, I do not remember, that he gave your Lordſhips any Anſwer.

This Witneſs ſays, That he was at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits; and there Dugdale did ſwear, that he gave notice to Mr. Philips and Mr. Sambidge of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Death: And this they would make to be a great Fault in Dugdale, becauſe neither Philips nor Sambidge remember it. Now whether Dugdale ſwore true in that or no, does not depend upon Dugdale's own Credit alone; but you have heard other Witneſſes have made it appear, that he did ſwear true: So that we need not ſay any thing more to this Witneſs, nor to Gifford, who teſtifies to the ſame purpoſe; becauſe that point, as to the Report of the Death of the Juſtice of Peace, is by other Witneſſes clearly proved.

And as for Mr. Sambidge, I do not wonder much, that he ſhould ſay, he did not hear it, becauſe he could hardly hear what was ſaid to him by the Court, or any of the Officers ſet near him on purpoſe. But, my Lords, I deſire your Lordſhips to take notice that he was a very angry Witneſs; he ſaid, he had formerly had a Controverſy with Dugdale, that Dugdale had cited him into Litchfield Court, and had there a Suit againſt him for Defamation; and he ſaid that againſt Dugdale, which, unleſs better proved, muſt needs make Sambidge much ſuſpected: He ſaid, that Dugdale was the wickedeſt Man on Earth; but what Proof he offer'd of that, or whether he did inſtance in any one Particular, I leave it to your Lordſhips Memories.

My Lords, There is another Proof relating to Mr. Dugdale, not out of the Mouth of a Witneſs, but out of a Paper, which I deſire to give an Anſwer to. It was an Objection the Priſoner at the Bar was pleaſed to make to Dugdale's Information, taken the 24th of December, 1678. before the Juſtices in the Country, wherein he had ſaid to this purpoſe; Preſently after one Howard, Almoner to the Queen, went over, he was told by George Hobſon, that there was a Deſign, &c. This, ſaith my Lord, is moſt impoſſible to be true: For you ſay, that immediately after the Almoner was gone away, Hobſon told you this, whereas Hobſon went away with the Almoner; and he came not to live with my Lord Aſton till many Years afterwards.

This my Lord is pleaſed to offer as a Falſification of Dugdale's Teſtimony; but, my Lords, I do deſire to obſerve that this is an Information taken before two Juſtices of Peace in the Country; and if you look upon it, you will ſee it was written by a Country Clerk, and not very skilfully done. 'Tis rather ſhort Notes of an Examination, than a compleat Examination. And your Lordſhips will pleaſe likewiſe to obſerve, that this is not really an Expreſſion that is clear one way or the other, but capable of two Senſes; that is to ſay, either it may import Hobſon told him there was a Deſign ever ſince the Almoner Howard went away; or it may import, Hobſon told him preſently after the Almoner went away, that there was a Deſign. Read but the words with a different Comma, and it makes the Senſe one way or t'other. Now it is plain, Dugdale could not intend that Hobſon told him ſo as ſoon as the Almoner went away, becauſe Hobſon went away with the Almoner. And it was better to his purpoſe, that Hobſon ſhould tell him ſo after his return than before, for that ſhews the Deſign had been long a carrying on.

Therefore it being a doubtful Expreſſion that may refer either to the Time he told it him, or to the Matter he told him of; and being taken in the latter Senſe, the Objection faileth: I think this Matter can have no weight at all in it to falſify a poſitive Teſtimony.

My Lords, The next Witneſs we did call, and which was objected againſt by my Lord, was Dr. Oates; and truly I muſt obſerve, that his Lordſhip was not pleaſed to call any one Witneſs materially to falſify Dr. Oates's Teſtimony: and I muſt likewiſe obſerve, that Dr. Oates is in the material part of his Evidence ſupported by other Evidence.

When Dr. Oates gave Evidence at former Tryals, it was the common Diſcourſe of the Men of that Religion, that Dr. Oates had never been in Spain, nor had ever any Credit with the Prieſts or Jeſuits, but was a mean contemptible Perſon, and that all he ſaid was improbable. But now your Lordſhips have heard that Dr. Oates, even by the Teſtimony of Dennis a Popiſh Prieſt (that is ſo to this day) was in Spain, was, according to what he ſaith, brought up in the College of the Jeſuits; that he was in ſuch eſteem there, that the Archbiſhop of Tuam commended him very much in the preſence of Dennis, and ſpoke of what Expectation there was of him. So that Dennis the Prieſt doth ſupport Dr. Oates in ſome parts of his Evidence. I do not ſpeak of that part of it which concerns this particular Lord, but of his Teſtimony touching the general Plot.

There is another thing wherein Dr. Oates is ſupported by another Witneſs, and that is the Eſteem and Intimacy he had with the Jeſuits. For Mr. Jeniſon ſwears, that Dr. Oates was a Man in eſteem among them, that he was at Ireland's Chamber, and had diſcourſe with Ireland, and did appear to be frequently imployed by them. And I take theſe two Witneſſes to be a great ſupport to Dr. Oates, as to the general Matters which he evidenceth of the Plot.

What now doth my Lord object againſt Dr. Oates? He call'd no Witneſſes againſt him, but only an Honourable Earl of this Houſe, I think I may name him, the Earl of Berkley: And that which his Lordſhip was pleaſed to teſtify againſt him, was;

Obj. That being examined at the Houſe of Lords after he had given a long Evidence againſt many Perſons, he was asked this Queſtion, Whether there were any more Perſons of Quality he could ſpeak againſt, or could accuſe; and he ſaid no.

Anſw. Firſt, your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to obſerve, that this was after he had accuſed my Lord Stafford; my Lord was ſecured in the Tower long before that, upon Dr. Oates's Teſtimony, and ſo he could not exclude this Lord. But that which it is brought for (I ſuppoſe) is to make him a Perſon of no Credit; for after he had ſaid this, he proceeded to an Accuſation of the Queen. My Lords, I humbly conceive this may receive a very fair Anſwer. For,

Firſt, My Lords, I appeal to your Lordſhips Memories (for, I think, the matter was before you all, or at leaſtwiſe before ſome of your Lordſhips) that the Accuſation which Dr. Oates made of the Queen was not poſitive, nor of his own certain Knowledge; but words which he heard ſpoken in a Room in which he was not himſelf, but coming in afterwards, he ſaw the Queen was there. So it was not poſitive, but circumſtantial Proof, and queſtionable whether what he teſtified would amount to the proof of one Witneſs.

And

And I muſt obſerve in the ſecond place, it might not be ſo clear to Dr. Oates, whether the Queen were a Perſon capable of an Accuſation, ſo as to be proceeded criminally againſt; the King and the Queen are to ſome purpoſes but one Perſon in Law. 'Tis true, ſome Queens have been tried for Treaſon; but whether Dr. Oates underſtood that ſhe might be brought to a Tryal, may be a Queſtion.

But, that which I rely upon as an Anſwer, and which I deſire may be conſidered, is, that Dr. Oates had given an Account of a great many Perſons, and a great many Things he had ſworn againſt ſeveral Perſons, ſome of which were executed, ſome to be tried; and his Narrative againſt them, and of the whole Plot, conſiſted of a great number of Particulars. Here is a Queſtion comes to the Doctor on a ſudden, Have you any more to ſay, or can you ſpeak againſt any other? 'Tis poſſible a Man that had ſaid ſo much, and of ſo many, might not upon an inſtant recollect whether he had ſaid all, or againſt all that he could ſay: Nay, 'tis eaſily to be imagined he could not on a ſudden comprehend all he had ſaid or could ſay. Therefore that the Anſwer of a Man to ſuch a Queſtion, put ſuddenly to him, having ſo much in his Mind, and having ſaid ſo much, ſhould be taken ſo very ſtrictly, and to hold him as perjured, becauſe he did not at that inſtant time remember this Particular of the Queen, I think is a ſevere Conſtruction.

His Lordſhip is pleaſed further to object againſt Dr. Oates, that he is of no Credit: Why? Becauſe he went to be of the Romiſh Religion, and ſo was of that Religion which is Idolatry: I ſuppoſe his Lordſhip will not call that Religion Idolatry another time, and in another place; but it ſerves his Lordſhip upon this particular Occaſion, to call it ſo. But ſuppoſe Dr. Oates did, out of Levity, or for want of being well grounded in his own, turn to another Religion, he is not the firſt Man that hath done ſo: There have been Men of great Fame in our Church, and of great Learning too, that have changed their Religion more than once. I think he that knew that famous Man Mr. Chillingworth, could not but know he was firſt a Proteſtant, and afterwards a Papiſt, and afterwards a Proteſtant again: So that unleſs my Lord could accuſe the Doctor of ſome great Crime, or Immorality, it will be hard, that the matter of changing his Religion ſhould hurt his Teſtimony. I am ſure, it was happy for us he did change; without that, we had not had the firſt knowledge of the Plot, nor of many Particulars which he could not come to know but by occaſion of that Change.

My Lord was pleaſed to object, that the Doctor was a Man ſubject to Paſſion; and he brought in the Lieutenant of the Tower, to ſpeak of ſome hot Words that paſſed between them. My Lords, I will allow the Doctor to be a Man of Paſſion; nay, if my Lord pleaſe, a Man that is not of the deepeſt Reach: but your Lordſhips will obſerve, that paſſionate Men are not often malicious; and that a Man who is not of a deep Judgment, could never have contrived and invented a Narrative conſiſting of ſo many Particulars, and they ſo coherent, if they were falſe: And if his Narrative be not true, he muſt be indued with more Subtilty and wicked Policy, than upon Tryal we can find in him. So that what my Lord hath objected as to his Infirmities, is no Diminution to the Truth of what he ſays, but rather a Confirmation of it.

My Lords, The laſt Witneſs whom my Lord endeavoured to impeach, is Mr. Turberville; and againſt him my Lord thinks he hath a great Advantage: But, my Lords, by that time I have reminded your Lordſhips of what hath been already ſaid, and what was before proved in anſwer to my Lord's Objections againſt him, Mr. Turberville will ſtand as clear in this Court, as any of the former Witneſſes.

Your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to take notice, That Mr. Turberville was at the beginning, when he came to the Houſe of Commons, a little uncertain, as to matter of Time: For when he had made in his Affidavit, the times to be (73) and (76) he craved leave to alter it to (72) and (75.) Surely, my Lords, this will be far from being any Imputation to Mr. Turberville; becauſe, Firſt, he gives the Reaſon, how he came afterwards to underſtand the Time better, by viewing his Papers and Letters; he likewiſe gives you an account, and ſo did Sir William Poultney, when he did this, the next Morning, before any Man in the World had queſtioned him upon it. So that it ſhews the Man's Care and Conſcience both, when he is ſo careful, even in matters of the ſmalleſt moment, to ſet things right.

There is no Man that knows the Practice of the Court of Chancery, but knows, that for a Man to mend his Anſwer after it is ſworn in a Point of Time, or other Circumſtance, is no diſparagement to him: Nay, to do it, before the other Party did except or take notice of it, is no Objection, but rather a Reputation to him: And your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to take notice, that one of the times rectified, is of 7 or 8 Years, the other of 4 Years ſtanding. And I do not think the worſe of a Witneſs that is not poſitive in a time, when that time is ſo far elapſed.

The next matter is, That this Man was never with my Lord; how was that proved, for 'tis a Negative? Why, my Lord is pleaſed to call his own Servants, Furneſe, and the Boy Leigh; and what ſay they? they never ſaw any ſuch Man. My Lords, I deſire your Lordſhips to obſerve, That Mr. Turberville was introduced by greater Confidents than either of theſe Servants. Mr. Turberville came in the Company of the Prieſts, and you hear the Boy deny that he knew Anthony Turberville, but not that he knew Father Turberville; nor doth my Lord himſelf deny it, nor doth either Maſter or Man deny my Lord's Correſpondency with the other two Fathers. And it might be very eaſy for Mr. Turberville to come in the Company of the Prieſts, and the Boy not take particular notice of him. And 'tis as little an Objection what my Lord ſays, that Turberville himſelf ſaid he did not know the Boy: How many are there that come to the Houſes of another, and unleſs they lodge there or dine there often, do not remember the Servants of the Houſe? And 'tis no greater an Objection, to ſay, the Servants did not know him: The Prieſts they knew him; they were his Guides; they were the likelieſt to gain him admittance, not only into my Lord's Houſe, but into my Lord's Heart.

My Lords, Your Lordſhips will be pleaſed likewiſe to obſerve, They have alſo gone about in very little matters to diſprove Mr. Turberville; as that whereas he ſays, he was not well uſed by my Lord Powis and his Lady, when he returned from Doway, that he was very well uſed: and as one Witneſs (I think Minehead) ſays, he was permitted to lie in a Room near my Lord's Chamber. My Lords, Mr. Turberville does not pretend to ſay, that my Lord Powis ſhut him out of doors; but what Reproaches proaches or unkind Words might paſs between them in private, Minhead might not hear: So that to ſay, that he lay in my Lord's Houſe, is no anſwer to this Matter. And for the other Witneſs (his Brother) that ſpeaks of his Kindreds being kind to him, that, under favour, does not at all diſprove him; for, what was the Kindneſs? His Brother and Siſter were ſo kind as to give him 7 l. never to ſee him more; a great matter when a younger Brother lies upon a Family, that the trouble of his ſtay there is redeemed at the price of 7 l. This was a very great Kindneſs, a Kindneſs indeed that one would ſcarce deny to a Stranger, if in Poverty. I mention the leaſt matters I can remember, becauſe I would have nothing ſtick with your Lordſhips.

Then Secretary Lydcott (the Fellow of King's-College) was called again; but indeed, my Lords, he was ſo out in his Arithmetick, ſo miſtaken in the Year, and uſed the New Stile (the Romiſh) ſo much more than ours, that it makes me ſuſpect he is not ſo great a Proteſtant, as he pretends to be. He promiſed us his Book, which he was not then prepared to produce; but becauſe we do not hear of him, nor of his Book ſince, we ſay no more of him.

My Lords, John Porter, my Lord Powis's Butler, comes next, and what does he tell your Lordſhips? Why, that Mr. Turberville came not to Powis's Houſe (it ſeems he did not appear there) but that he came to a Victualling-Houſe hard by; and he telling Turberville he muſt know ſomething of the Plot, he denied that he knew any thing. To the ſame purpoſe, or rather to leſs, and more improbably, does Yalden (the Gentleman of Grays-Inn, as he calls himſelf) teſtify, who ſays, that walking in Grays-Inn Walks, he had a Diſcourſe with Turberville; and that he then ſwore, there was no Trade good now but that of a Diſcoverer; and damned himſelf becauſe he could make no Diſcovery. Truly, my Lords, this looks in it ſelf to be ſomething prepared for the purpoſe: It is not probable, that a Man that ſhould uſe thoſe horrid Oaths, and ſhould have ſuch a mind to be a Diſcoverer, ſhould diſable himſelf ever to be ſo by ſwearing he knew nothing.

But I will not only anſwer that matter, with ſaying 'tis improbable; but I ſhall deſire your Lordſhips to remember, that Mr. Powel, a Gentleman of the ſame Houſe, and of good Reputation, does ſwear, that Turberville did acquaint him, that he could diſcover a conſiderable matter; and this was above a Year ſince. And Mr. Arnold, a Member of the Houſe of Commons, does confirm it, that he did ſeveral times acquaint him, that he could make an important Diſcovery; and gave him ſeveral Reaſons, why he thought not fit to do it at that time, becauſe of the Dangers which might ariſe from ſome Great Men; and therefore till he had a more convenient Opportunity, he would not diſcover. But as ſoon as the Parliament ſat, very early he did begin to diſcover: So that I ſhall oppoſe the Teſtimony of Mr. Powel and Mr. Arnold, to the Teſtimony of my Lord Powis's Butler, and Mr. Yalden; the latter of whom ſpeaks ſo improbably, and of a Diſcourſe half a Year ago; whereas Mr. Powel ſpeaks of what Mr. Turberville ſaid above a Year ſince, and Mr. Arnold of a longer time.

My Lords, It hath been ſometimes objected, that Mr. Turberville was a ſtranger to my Lord; and it was too great a Truſt to commit to a Stranger, too great a Secret for a Stranger to be acquainted with: My Lord's deſign of the King's Death was too great a matter to lodge with one, with whom my Lord had more Acquaintance than he had with Turberville.

Your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to obſerve who they were that did introduce him, and who probably gave the beſt Character of him; they were the three Prieſts: And I do not wonder when theſe Prieſts had brought my Lord up to ſuch a purpoſe, that they ſhould prevail with his Lordſhip to give credit to, and deal with a Man that was not very unlike in his Circumſtances to attempt ſuch a Buſineſs: For your Lordſhips will obſerve, he was a Man that was very ſtout; for againſt my Lord's Reflection upon him as to Cowardice in deſerting the Army, Mr. Turberville hath produced the Certificate of his Diſmiſſion, which gives him a very good Character. Beſides, he was a Man indigent; and therefore I think there could not be a fitter Man choſen for the purpoſe, if he had been ſo void of all Grace as to undertake it; and that Prieſts having gotten a Man ſo qualified, as they thought him, were not likely to let ſlip ſuch an Opportunity.

But, my Lords, to come to that which is the Sum of the Buſineſs, and which my Lord lays more weight on than all the reſt; and that is the Affidavit which Mr. Turberville ſwore before the Juſtices of the Peace (which was, in effect, what he informed the Houſe of Commons) and in that Affidavit, beſides his Alteration of Times (which I have ſpoken to already) it is objected, that he does ſay that which is manifeſtly untrue: For he ſays my Lord came by the way of Calais, with Count Gramont, neither of which my Lord did do.

My Lords, I will not mention the Maſter of the Yacht, nor the Witneſſes from the Admiralty, which make out, that my Lord came from Diep, and not from Calais. Nor do I deny that my Lord came by himſelf, and not with Count Gramont; and therefore 'tis moſt certainly true, that what Turberville ſwore, as to thoſe two Particulars, was not true. Yet if your Lordſhips pleaſe to obſerve the Circumſtances, tho what he ſwore herein was not true, it will appear a very innocent Miſtake.

For in Turberville's Affidavit he tells your Lordſhips, That he came away without my Lord to Diep, and came from Diep to England before my Lord Stafford left Paris. Mr. Turberville tells you, afterwards my Lord came from Calais with Count Gramont: Mr. Turberville could not poſſibly be thought to ſpeak this of his own knowledge, becauſe he does in the ſame Affidavit tell you too, that he came away before my Lord, and had not his Paſſage with him. So that, my Lords, I deſire you would obſerve, it could be no Deſign of his to affirm this of his own Knowledge: For if it were, he took a very ill courſe to diſcloſe in the ſame Affidavit that he was abſent, and ſo could not ſpeak of his own Knowledge. And, my Lords, ſuppoſe a Man did ſwear ſuch a Man and he were in ſuch Company, and that he came home and left the Man there, and that afterwards the Man ſaid ſuch and ſuch things in that Company; what ſhould I ſay of this Oath? I might well ſay the Words of his Oath were not proper, or that he was unwary in expreſſing himſelf; but I could not ſay, nor would any Man juſtly be able to ſay, he had a Deſign to make the World believe he heard him ſay ſo, becauſe he ſwears in the ſame Breath, he came away before the Words were ſpoken. If Mr.

Turberville

Turberville had underſtood how ſtrict and nice a Man ought to be in expreſſing himſelf in an Affidavit, he would have ſaid (as he had been told) my Lord came to Calais; and that Count Gramont came with him, as he underſtood. 'Tis true, he hath not put in thoſe Words; but, I beſeech you, when the Matter it ſelf will bear it, nay, when 'tis moſt apparent, that Mr. Turberville could have no other meaning than to relate what he was informed by others, and what he could not know himſelf; what Corruption, what Obliquity can there be in this Oath? All that can be ſaid, is, it was not cautiouſly worded; but it does certainly diſcloſe ſo much in it ſelf, that every one that hears it muſt ſay, That he did not take upon himſelf to ſwear it as of his own Knowledge, becauſe he tells you he was not there; ſo that it was rather want of knowledge how to expreſs himſelf properly, than any Corruption in his Oath, or forſwearing himſelf.

But, ſays my Lord, how ſhould he come to know this? Why Mr. Turberville ſaid, he had a Letter whereby he knew my Lord would come by the way of Calais: but where is that Letter? Is it neceſſary to keep, or does any Man almoſt keep Letters of no greater Concernment than this, that my Lord writ him word how he would go by the way of Calais, and this after five Years, and after he was in the Wars, and where I have heard he was taken Priſoner? To be ſure he was much tumbled up and down from place to place. And under all theſe Circumſtances might not ſuch a Letter be loſt? But, my Lords, I beſeech you, are there not ſome Proofs that look much this way, made out by another Witneſs? Does not Mr. Mort tell you ſomething of this nature? Firſt, He agrees as to the matter of an Engliſh Lord lying about ſuch a Street in Paris, he tells you he was with Mr. Turberville, and that he himſelf walked about Luxemburgh-Houſe whilſt Mr. Turberville went to ſpeak with that Engliſh Lord: He does ſay, He believes his Name was my Lord Stafford, but he is not poſitive; and the Times which he ſpeaks of do agree with what Mr. Turberville depoſeth. And there is one thing, which, though I ſhould not mention upon any other occaſion, becauſe it was but a fooliſh Joke, yet I ſhall crave leave to ſpeak of it now. He tells you, That one Day, while they were at Diep in expectation of my Lord's coming, and hearing that he went another way, they had this piece of minute Wit upon it, Curſed is he that relies upon a broken Staff: Whereby, he thinks, was meant the Name of Stafford. So then, I beſeech you, if Mort ſay true, are not here Footſteps, and a Foundation whereon to ground a Belief, that there was a Correſpondence between Turberville and my Lord; and that Mr. Turberville had an Information, that my Lord would come by the way of Calais? And one thing more Mort ſays, That Turberville told him, if he would make haſte to Calais, he might go over with my Lord. And here I would obſerve, how ſhould Mr. Turberville come to know that my Lord went that way? and how ſhould he tell Mort that he might go over with my Lord from Calais, unleſs he had received ſome ſuch Information? Therefore, my Lords, taking into Conſideration what is confirmed by Mort, and taking into Conſideration the whole Scope of the Affidavit, I cannot ſee that there can be any material Objection againſt Mr. Turberville for ſaying that my Lord came by Calais in the Company of Count Gramont.

My Lords, I have done now with the Witneſſes, and I told you as I went along (becauſe I would not trouble you with a double Repetition) what Evidence we have given in contradiction to thoſe Witneſſes which my Lord hath brought in order to defame our Witneſſes.

But, my Lords, I am to acquaint you, That beſides theſe particular Anſwers, your Lordſhips have had Men of very great Credit brought to teſtify the Reputation of Mr. Dugdale and Mr. Turberville. As to Mr. Dugdale, we have brought Men that have known him a great while; one hath ſworn what Opinion even my Lord Aſton himſelf had of him: for it ſeems he lived with ſo much Credit there, that he would not believe any Ill of him. You have heard from other Witneſſes how he did behave himſelf. It was objected ſometimes, Tradeſmen were not paid; but what then, can a Man pay without Money? I believe there are ſome Lords here, whoſe Stewards are very honeſt Men, and yet the Tradeſmen ſuch Lords deal with, are not always readily paid.

He was, as you obſerve, believed to be in the Plot, and my Lord's Servants ſay he ſeemed much troubled about it; he went away upon that account, and was ſo much concerned, that he burnt his Papers, which I make uſe of for two Purpoſes, The one to ſhew that he did apprehend he was in great danger; the other to ſhew what was the Reaſon why the Letters and Papers he ſpeaks of are not now produced, becauſe he looked upon himſelf, and them who were then his Friends, to be in ſuch danger by them, that he burnt them.

My Lords, I know your Lordſhips will take notice that there hath been a very good Account given you, how it was that Dugdale came to be prevailed upon to make a diſcovery of the Plot, it was with great difficulty; there were indeed perſuaſions uſed by ſome of his Friends to bring him to it. The Juſtices, as they themſelves have ſworn, endeavoured the ſame thing, but all without Succeſs. Then the Coroner Mr. Southall (who tho he was no great, yet ſeems to be a very underſtanding Man) takes him in hand, and he had the good Fortune to ſucceed. I call it Good, not only for Mr. Dugdale, but for the Nation. I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with the Particulars of the Arguments Mr. Southall uſed to him, but 'tis plain (if you believe Mr. Southall, whoſe Credit is now ſupported by an Honourable Lord, and by a Member of the Houſe of Commons) that Dugdale did at the firſt time that he did make a Diſcovery, depoſe as much in ſubſtance againſt this Lord, as now he does. And from thence I deſire to make one Obſervation, and that is this;

'Twas impoſſible it could be a Contrivance among the Witneſſes themſelves to depoſe the ſame Crimes againſt this Lord; for Dr. Oates never knew Mr. Dugdale till Dugdale was brought up, which was long after Dr. Oates's Accuſation of this Lord; nor could Dugdale know what Evidence Oates had given here, for Dugdale was a cloſe Priſoner in Stafford-Goal before Oates accuſed this Lord, and long after. And yet the firſt Evidence Dugdale gives againſt this Lord, doth in ſubſtance concur with that given by Dr. Oates. So that ſince there could be no Intercourſe nor Conference between them, but as much diſtance as from the Priſon-Doors in Stafford to London, there could be no Contrivance between them for both of them to accuſe this Lord of the ſame Matters. And this I deſire may be looked upon by your Lordſhips as a matter of great Weight to ſupport the Credit of the whole Evidence. And Dugdale does ſeem to be a Perſon of an unqueſtionable Credit, and every one that hears him, muſt obſerve he does give his Evidence with great Modeſty, and all probability of Truth.

There is another thing, my Lords, that I would pray your Lordſhips to obſerve: Theſe Witneſſes, Mr. Dugdale and Dr. Oates, do give ſuch an Evidence as is impoſſible to be given, unleſs it were true; for other Witneſſes when they are put out of the Road, and asked Queſtions they did not expect, are commonly to ſeek, and muſt pump for an Anſwer, and then anſwer with great difficulty and wareneſs. But theſe two Witneſſes do not only anſwer with readineſs when you ask them any Queſtions, but what is contained in every new Anſwer doth add a further Probability and Confirmation to what they ſaid before. And I muſt needs ſay of them, I think it were impoſſible for any Men in the World to contrive a Story of ſo many Particulars, and ſo conſiſtent in every part of it, and yet the ſame ſhould be falſe; and which is more, after ſo many Tryals, not one material Circumſtance of what they ſay contradicted by any ſolid Proof.

My Lords, There may be other Particulars which I may have forgotten, I know not whether I obſerved that my Lord objected that we do not prove him a Papiſt: I hinted ſomething before about his coming to Maſs to my Lord Aſton's at Tixall, which is one ſort of Proof of his being of the Romiſh Religion. Beſides his perpetual Converſation with that Party, and his Endeavours to promote their Religion and Deſigns, all which have been fully prov'd: I think alſo my Lord deſerted the Houſe of Peers, for that he would not take the Teſt appointed by the late Act; your Lordſhips beſt know whether he did ſo or no. But, my Lords, let him if he will be a Proteſtant for this time; let that be ſuppos'd: If he were a Proteſtant, and ſhould be guilty of the Offences proved upon him, he would not deſerve more Favour from your Lordſhips.

My Lord hath been likewiſe pleas'd in further Proof of his Innocency to alledge, that after the Plot was diſcovered, he had ſeven Poſts time to have eſcaped, and yet never fled. My Lords, 'Tis true he might have fled, ſo might Coleman too; that Coleman that left ſo fatal an Evidence againſt himſelf and all his Party under his own Hand, and for that had reaſon to believe himſelf very guilty: and ſo might the Jeſuits have eſcap'd too, but that they had hopes the Oath of Secrecy, and the Means they had uſed to conceal their damnable Deſigns, would have been a ſufficient Security againſt revealing it. They had that opinion of their Prieſts, and of the Fidelity and Conſtancy of thoſe that had been ſeduc'd by them, and recommended by them, that they apprehended nothing leſs than a Diſcovery. And thoſe other Perſons that were executed, did all ſtay about the Town after the Plot was diſcovered, as well as this Lord ſtay'd in the Country.

My Lord did very much complain, that our Witneſſes were not poſitive in point of Time; I think Dugdale was poſitive enough as to the time of the Offer of 500 l. but for other Matters, he would not confine himſelf to a Month: he talk'd of the latter end of one Month, and the beginning of another, I think he is the more to be believed; for I conceive unleſs a Witneſs hath ſome notorious Circumſtance in his Memory to ſatisfy him about the Certainty of the Time, (ſuch as was that of the Foot-Race, as to the time of the Offer of 500 l.) it is rather a Mark of Preſumption than of Sincerity for a Witneſs to be too poſitive as to the Time. And is there ſo great a Diſtance between the latter end of one Month, and the beginning of another, that a Witneſs need to be poſitive as to the very Day? But ſays my Lord, You talk of the beginning; it was the 12th of September e'er I came thither. Does not every Man count that till the middle of a Month 'tis the beginning of a Month? ſure in common Speech it is ſo. Therefore I look upon that as a Matter ſcarce worth the mentioning, I am ſure not worth the ſerious Anſwering.

But, my Lords, I muſt obſerve thus much, That what my Lord complains of as a Fault in our Witneſſes, his own Witneſſes are guilty of. For I appeal to your Lordſhips, when they came to ſpeak of times, whether they did not talk at a diſtance of a Month or Months, and ſometimes of Years, and were leſs certain in point of time than ours.

But, ſays my Lord, (for I am ſtill anſwering his Objections, and you muſt take them as I find them) here is mention made by Dr. Oates of Letters, of many Letters, ſhew me ſome of thoſe Letters: Shew me the Letter you carried to the Poſt-houſe. My Lords, were thoſe Letters written to Dr. Oates? Did they belong to him? Or is it poſſible that my Lord's Letter delivered by the Doctor to the Poſt-houſe, ſhould now be ſhewn by the Doctor, or that the Letters writ to the Superior of the Society of the Jeſuits ſhould be produced by one that was a Novice of that Society? Does Dr. Oates talk of one Letter written to himſelf? You will then, I ſuppoſe, ſee no reaſon to expect thoſe Letters ſhould be produced by him that were not written to him, and the Cuſtody whereof belonged to others.

My Lords, I muſt obſerve to you, that there have been great Endeavours us'd to invalidate our Teſtimony; we have had Witneſſes called againſt Witneſſes, and my Lord hath had that Advantage to do it, which perhaps was never given in any Caſe before, and which I hope will never be again. The Evidence hath been printed and publiſhed to the World, before it hath been given. I ſay not that it was not neceſſary in this Caſe, which was a National Cauſe, and the Cauſe of our Religion; but I do ſay it would not be fit to be done in other Caſes; for the notifying of the Evidence is the way to have it falſify'd and corrupted.

But notwithſtanding all theſe Advantages, my Lords, I appeal to your Lordſhips Memories what conſiderable Contradiction hath been given. It is true, ſome Witneſſes to that end have been brought before your Lordſhips, but thoſe Witneſſes have been rendred incredible by more credible Perſons; and I would deſire your Lordſhips to obſerve, that tho my Lord hath fail'd of proving any Subornation in our Witneſſes, yet we have prov'd much Subornation endeavoured by his Agents.

Your Lordſhips have the Record againſt Reading before you; and what Reference that hath to the Lords in the Tower, every one does remember, and my Lord is mentioned in that Record. And I might likewiſe mention the Buſineſs of Celier, and what therein related to the Lords in the Tower. And I'll name but two Witneſſes more, that have been attempted upon in this nature: There was Wright the Barber; all the Applications were made to him that could be, Money given, Letters writ, Inſinuations that he was not to ſwear, he was but to write, and that was eaſily done: or if he would be ſo kind to ſwear it, he ſhould never come into open Court, only go before a Juſtice of Peace: So that your Lordſhips will obſerve by what Steps and Degrees Men were endeavoured to be ſuborned. And then Launder tells you what was offer'd to him to perjure himſelf, how he was brought to Tixall, and what Endeavours were uſed to make him ſwear againſt our Witneſſes.

Theſe things are plain both by Records and particular Proofs upon Oath. But, my Lords, leſt we ſhould want Proof of all, this very Lord (I pity him for it) hath been ſo unfortunate as to bring that Paper out of his Pocket, which Wright ſays he had Money to frame, and was to ſwear to. It ſeems my Lord had the Command of it, it ſeems to have been prepared for ſuch a good time as this; and the producing of this Paper is as full a Confirmation of this Point, as can in reaſon be expected.

My Lords, I have been, I fear, too long already, and yet, I fear, I have omitted as many Particulars as I have mentioned.

My Lords, the Evidence is ſo ſtrong, that I think it admits of no doubt; and the Offences prov'd againſt my Lord and the reſt of his Party are ſo foul, that they need no Aggravation. The Offences are againſt the King, againſt his ſacred Life, againſt the Proteſtant Religion, nay againſt all Proteſtants; for it was for the Extirpation of all Proteſtants out of theſe three Nations. I mean not of every one that is now ſo, but of every one that would have continued ſo, every one amongſt us (if theſe Deſigns had been accompliſhed) muſt either have turned his Religion, or turned out of his Country, or have been burned in it.

'Tis a Deſign that appears with ſo dreadful a Countenance to your Lordſhips, to this great Aſſembly, and to the whole Nation, that it needs not any Words I can uſe to make you apprehend it. If the Matter be fully proved (as I ſee no reaſon to doubt but that it is) I am ſure your Lordſhips will do that Juſtice to your King and Country as to give Judgment againſt theſe Offenders, which will not only be a Security to us againſt them, but a Terror to all others againſt committing the like Offences.

L. Staff. I beg of your Lordſhips to know whether you will give me leave to ſpeak a Word: And my Lords, I ſhall not ſpeak any thing but as to a Miſtake Sir William Jones hath made in two or three things. Pray, my Lords, may I put you in mind of them?

Sir W. Jones. If there be any Miſtake, pray tell us what it is.

L. Staff. Firſt, my Lords, he did omit telling you that Mr. Turberville's Brother did ſay he came in 71 to my Lord Powis's. Secondly, he ſays, I have proved myſelf a Papiſt, becauſe I have not taken the Teſt: My Lords, the Teſt was ſince I was in the Tower, and whether I will take it or not, I do not yet know, till it be offer'd me. The Third is this, that this Letter was in my Pocket, which I produc'd to you: My Lords, I knew nothing what was in it, it was given into my Hand as I ſtood here at the Bar. Fourthly, he ſaid Hobſon did go out of England with the Almoner; he did not ſo. Another thing he ſays, that I ſaid Oates was an infamous Perſon becauſe he went to a Church that I ſaid was Idolatrous; I only ſaid, it was ſo adjudged by Act of Parliament. I find, my Lords, theſe things he is miſtaken in; and that, my Lords, made me very willing to put you in mind of them.

L. H. S. Gentlemen, I would ask you whether you take any notice of the Points in Law?

Sir Fr. Win. After the Fact is ſtated, my Lords, we ſhall.

Then Mr. Powle, alſo one of the Committee appointed to manage the Evidence, proceeded further in ſumming up the ſame.

Mr. Powle. My Lords, the learned Perſon that ſpake laſt hath left very little for me to ſay in the ſumming up of this Evidence: But becauſe this noble Lord hath been pleas'd to alledge ſeveral Reaſons, from whence he would infer at leaſt a great Improbability that he ſhould be guilty of the Treaſons whereof he ſtands accuſed, I ſhall crave your Lordſhips Patience, that I may give three or four Words in anſwer to thoſe Particulars.

My Lords, in the firſt place this noble Lord was pleaſed to begin, and afterwards to continue his Defence with making Proteſtations of his own Innocency: We very well know your Lordſhips ſit now in the Seat of Juſtice, and whatſoever Credit or Regard your Lordſhips pleaſe to give to the Proteſtations of a Peer in another Caſe, your Lordſhips will proceed here only according to your Proofs, and your Evidence (ſecundum Allegata & Probata) and therefore all we ſhall ſay to this, is, that we hope our Proofs are ſo clear and evident, as will leave no room to your Lordſhips to believe this noble Lord's Proteſtations.

In the next place, my Lord is pleaſed to alledge, and withal to lay ſome weight upon it, the voluntary ſurrendring of himſelf to Juſtice; and he laid it down as a Rule, that as Flight is an Argument of Guilt, ſo the ſurrendring of a Man's ſelf to the Tryal of the Law, is an Argument of Innocency.

My Lords, We admit the Rule generally to be true: but in ſome particular Caſes it may be otherwiſe; for a Man that is not very confident of his own Innocency, may yet be very confident of the Strength of his Party; and whether the Conſideration of the Circumſtances of Affairs, as they then ſtood, and the Power and Prevalency of the Popiſh Party at that time, might not reaſonably create ſuch a Confidence in this noble Lord, we muſt leave to your Lordſhips Judgment.

My Lords, we do conceive that thoſe Perſons who contrived Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Murder, had ſo great Confidence in the Favour and Protection of ſome of their Party, that they thought themſelves able to outface Juſtice.

And we verily believe they intended it as an Example, to deter all Men from meddling ſo much as with the taking an Examination concerning this horrid Plot.

My Lords, I deſire to be underſtood aright in this; I lay nothing of the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey to the Charge of this noble Lord; I only uſe it as an Argument of the Preſumption of the Popiſh Party at that time.

My Lords, in the next place, my Lord Stafford did obſerve from my Lord Coke, that in the Tryals of Treaſons we ought very much to guide our Judgments by the Nature and Circumſtances of the Fact (the Concomitants and Subſequents, as he term'd them) with reference to the Perſon accus'd, whether they were likely to induce or deter him from ſuch an Attempt; and here he was pleaſed to raiſe ſome Arguments from the whole Courſe of his Life, and did deſire your Lordſhips to conſider ſider thoſe Circumſtances therein, that might make it improbable or impoſſible that he ſhould commit a Treaſon of this nature.

He deſired alſo your Lordſhips to remember, that he was deſcended from an honourable Family, and that his Anceſtors were very worthy and very deſerving Perſons, and ſuch as had often ventur'd their Lives in defence of their Country: And here he did likewiſe mention his own Services to the laſt King, and our preſent Sovereign in the late Wars.

It is not my part, nor will I derogate any thing from the Merits of this noble Lord, much leſs from the Honour of his Family: But in anſwer to this, we ſhall deſire your Lordſhips to conſider, that this noble Lord (however he is pleas'd to diſown it at preſent) is notoriouſly known to be a Roman Catholick (as they call themſelves) and ſuch we conceive we have ſufficiently prov'd him to be, in the Courſe of our Evidence: And as there is nothing in the World, ſo much as a miſguided Conſcience, that can engage the beſt of Men into the worſt of Actions; ſo we think the Principles of that Religion are ſuch, as are more likely to pervert Men from their Duty and Allegiance, than any other Religion or Perſuaſion whatſoever.

And if the Zeal of this noble Lord did engage him to endeavour the Eſtabliſhment of that Religion in this Kingdom, we may eaſily believe that his Reaſon did ſuggeſt to him the Means by which it muſt be effected, which could be no other but Blood and Confuſion.

My Lords, The laſt thing I ſhall take notice of, is, what my Lord Stafford was pleaſed to ſay in general as to the Doctrine of killing and depoſing Princes, which his Lordſhip was pleaſed to call a private Opinion, and not the Doctrine of the Church of Rome.

But by the way, my Lords, give me leave to obſerve, that this noble Lord did upon this occaſion fully own (and I much commend his Ingenuity in it) the Reality of the Gun-Powder Treaſon, ſince we know how much that Party have endeavoured to render it incredible: and as length of time hath ſo fully manifeſted the Particulars of that execrable Deſign, that it hath brought ſuch as are of that Perſuaſion to confeſs the Truth of it; ſo, we hope, this day's Tryal will convince both the Age we live in, and all Poſterity, of the Truth and Reality of this preſent Conſpiracy. But to go on with that Point from which I did digreſs: I am not, I confeſs, much verſed in the Canons and Councils of the Church of Rome; but, my Lords, this I know, the moſt famous and celebrated Writers of that Church, eſpecially of the Society of the Jeſuits, have publickly avowed and maintained this Doctrine. And we know in all times, when there hath been occaſion to put it in practice, it hath never failed to have been attempted; and we likewiſe know that the Church of Rome and the Pope have always avowed the Acts when they have been done. From all which we might very reaſonably conclude, that it is the Doctrine of that Church ſo to do.

But my Lord is pleaſed to ſay, and I admit it for Truth, That a great many private Writers do hold the contrary; I believe it to be ſo, but I do alſo believe, that it is the Policy and Artifice of the Church of Rome, to leave this Point of Doctrine in ſome meaſure undetermined, that ſo they may make uſe of it as the occaſion ſerves: for if it ſucceeds, then it is owned and juſtified; if it miſcarry, then the Doctrine is but a private Opinion, and the Plot but the Practice of particular Perſons that are either deſperate or diſcontented. And I am fully of opinion, that this horrid Conſpiracy which is brought this Day in Judgment before your Lordſhips, wants nothing but Succeſs to canonize it.

My Lords, As to what concerns the Evidence, it hath been ſo fully ſtated to you, and the Objections that were raiſed to invalidate it, ſo well anſwered, that I will not trouble your Lordſhips with any Repetition of what hath been ſaid already: All we have further to deſire, is, That your Lordſhips will pleaſe to take our Evidence into your Conſideration, and to do thereupon what ſhall be agreeable to Juſtice.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lords, As to the Matter of Fact I ſhall ſay nothing but only this, (and I wiſh it may be ſpoken with Gratitude to Almighty God) that the Diſcovery of this Plot is rather the Work of God than Man. It was firſt his Act, in prevailing upon Oates to make the Diſcovery; and when he ſtood ſingle almoſt, what came to ſupport his Credit but the Letters of Coleman? which were like a Tally to what Oates had ſaid, for what Oates informs is in a great part made good by his Letters. Then when Godfrey was murder'd, how came that Diſcovery out, but by the voluntary Confeſſion of one engaged in the whole Plot, I mean Bedloe? So that tho theſe Men had engaged themſelves by wicked Oaths, yet their own Conſciences witneſſing againſt them in themſelves, they could not forbear coming in to teſtify againſt themſelves. I ſhall ſay no more, than that we ought to acknowledge the Hand of God in the Diſcovery with great Thankfulneſs; for it is he, and he alone, that out of his own Grace and Goodneſs hath done it, and thereby preſerved the Life of our Prince to us, and in Him us too.

But as to the Matter in Law:

My Lord has been pleaſed to mention firſt this, That there is no Overt-Act. I wonder that my Lord ſhould be ſo much miſtaken. When it is charged in the Articles, and proved to his Face he received a Commiſſion, is not that an Overt-Act? He is charged in the Articles of Impeachment with contriving the Death of the King, and being at ſeveral Meetings and Conſults about the King's Death, and hiring Perſons to kill the King; and are theſe no Overt-Acts? Therefore as to that, my Lord is miſtaken.

My Lords, Another Exception that is taken, is, That there is no Indictment. I conceive that an Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons is more than an Indictment. And there cannot be any doubt of that, the Impeachments of the Houſe of Commons having always been received and proceeded on by your Lordſhips.

But that which is moſt inſiſted upon, is, That this Charge that is made againſt this Lord, was preſented in another Parliament. It is true; but under favour, what is once upon Record in Parliament, may at any time afterwards be proceeded upon. It is a ſudden Objection, but I conceive it hath been done: However, in a Caſe of this nature, when the Life of the King, when our own Lives, and our Nation, and our Religion lies at ſtake, if there were not a Precedent, I hope you would make a Precedent. But under favour, Reaſon is for it, the Charge is before you, the Proof is made, and we pray you will judge according as the Evidence hath been.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, as to theſe Matters of Law, I think they are of ſo little difficulty, that my Lord will not deſire to have Counſel aſſigned him; I am ſure his Counſel will not deſire to ſpeak to them.

For this laſt Matter which Mr. Serjeant ſpoke of, and which was firſt named by the Priſoner, I deſire your Lordſhips to conſider what it is. Says my Lord the Priſoner, there was an Impeachment begun in the Long Parliament, and this is now the third Parliament in which I am brought to my Tryal. It is very true, there was a general Impeachment in the Long Parliament, the particular one was in the laſt, and this Lord was pleaſed to plead in the laſt. It may be he was not ſo well adviſed then as he is now.

But, my Lords, How can this be a doubt, when your Lordſhips have reſolv'd, and have ſent it down to the Commons, and it is there enter'd in their Book, as the Law and Conſtitution of Parliaments, that not only Impeachments, but all judicial Proceedings continue from Parliament to Parliament, in the ſame ſtate that they were in at the riſing of the laſt Parliament.

This is now become the Law of your Houſe, and it is under favour, being ſo, the Law of the Kingdom; and you having thus declared it, and ſent it to the Commons, I hope the Commons had very good reaſon to proceed upon this Impeachment at this time.

The next Matter is concerning the Overt-Acts; I think there are ſufficient Overt-Acts in Proof, and ſufficient in the Impeachment. Will any Man deny that the receiving a Commiſſion to be Paymaſter of an Army is an Overt-Act? Will any deny, that the ſending for the Witneſs and offering him Money in order to hire him to kill the King is an Overt-Act? And (which anſwers to all) will any Man deny, that the meeting and conſulting of ſeveral Men together, about killing the King, and changing the Government, is an Overt-Act?

My Lords, Theſe are all Overt-Acts; and I cannot but think it was without advice of my Lord's Counſel that he made theſe Objections: for indeed theſe ſeveral Overt-Acts are laid in the Impeachment as fully as they are made out in Proof.

My Lords, There is another Objection that my Lord is pleaſed to make, and that is, that there is but one Witneſs to a particular Fact.

L. H. S. Ay, what ſay you to that?

Sir W. Jones. That, my Lords, is of little weight, with ſubmiſſion; for our Impeachments, and our Proofs run to this, That my Lord had a Deſign and Intention to deſtroy the King: this was to be done by Force, and this was to be done by ſecret Aſſaſſination. Now if ſeveral Witneſſes come and prove each a diſtinct Act, under this Head of killing the King, it is ſo many Proofs or Witneſſes to the Treaſon.

For, my Lords, if a Man ſhall intend to kill the King, and ſhall buy a Knife in one County at one time, and ſend for a Man out of another County at another time, whom he ſhall hire to kill the King, and theſe diſtinct Acts are proved by ſeveral Witneſſes; if they concur to the ſame general Treaſon, they are all but Parts of that, and ſo are ſo many Witneſſes to the whole. And ſo I am ſure it was reſolved in the Caſe of others of the Conſpirators in the Old Bayley, and before that in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane. But,

My Lords, in this Caſe here is firſt a Proof that he accepted a Commiſſion, which I do not uſe as an Act for the levying of War only, but as a Deſign to change the Government, and deſtroy the King. Here is meeting and conſulting how to do this wicked Work, I mean to kill the King; that is another Overt-Act. Here is offering Money to one of the Witneſſes for that end; that is a third Overt-Act. And there is attempting another of them, tho not with Money, yet with Promiſes of Reward in general; that is another Overt-Act: all which are to this end, the killing of the King. And I am ſure of it, your Lordſhips cannot but receive Satisfaction from my Lords the Judges, that it hath always been ſo held, that tho there need two Witneſſes to prove Treaſon, yet there needs no more than one to one Act, and another to another, if the ſeveral Acts fall under the ſame Head of Treaſon.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I crave your Patience but for a Word or two, and this Noble Lord will have little reaſon to ſay his Objections in point of Law are of any weight. I confeſs he had ſaid a great thing, if it were true, that the Articles of Impeachment did not alledge an Overt-Act; for then indeed they had been apparently defective: but, under his pardon, that is not a Point of Law, but a Point of Fact. Let us therefore reſort to the Articles themſelves: In the ſecond Article it is alledged that he with the reſt, did moſt wickedly and traitorouſly agree, conſpire and reſolve to impriſon, depoſe and murder his ſacred Majeſty, and to deprive him of his Regal State and Government. And then the ſame Article alledges farther, that they did contrive and conſult to effect the Murder of the King by Shooting, by Poiſoning, and by Stabbing. All theſe Particulars are expreſſed; ſo that when my Lord ſaid the Articles were therein defective, all we can ſay, is, that he was miſinformed.

My Lords, There was another Exception taken, That this is the Impeachment of another Parliament. I muſt not now repeat how this Point was agreed by both Houſes at a Conference: but it was then declared, upon ſearch of Precedents in all Ages, That it was the Law of Parliaments, which is the Law of the Land, that if once an Impeachment by the Houſe of Commons were lodg'd in the Houſe of Lords, tho that Parliament were diſſolved, the Impeachment remained in the ſame ſtate. It was the Cauſe of the Commons of England, who only change their Repreſentatives in a new Parliament.

It has been alſo objected, that this Proſecution ought to have been upon an Indictment: As if an Accuſation of the Houſe of Commons, who are the Grand Inqueſt of the Nation, were not as effectual to bring Offenders to Juſtice, as the finding of a particular Jury.

My Lords, I ſhould wonder to hear this Objection made, were not my Lord to be eaſily excuſed for his knowing the Law no better. None who know any thing in the Law, would have urged ſuch a thing; his Counſel, I dare ſay, did not ſuggeſt this Matter to him.

It is true, my Lords, when a Peer comes to be tried by way of Commiſſion, or in Parliament when it is not at the Proſecution of the Commons, there an Indictment is firſt found in the proper County, and brought up before the Peers by Certiorari, and upon that they proceed; but whether the Party be Peer or Commoner, if he be impeach'd for any Crimes, ſurely no one can deny, but that by the conſtant Uſage of Parliaments, the Lords have proceeded to Tryal, and have given Judgment thereupon without an Indictment found:

So

So that this Exception will be of no force at all.

As for the remaining Objection, That there are not two Witneſſes to prove any one Overt-Act, the King's Perſon would be in no manner of Safety, if that Doctrine ſhould be once allow'd. Conſpiring to kill the King is the Treaſon laid in the Impeachment, and the ſeveral Overt-Acts are ſo many ſeveral Evidences of that Treaſon. Words themſelves, if they ſignify an Intention to do an Act, and expreſs ſomething to be done in futuro, are a ſufficient Overt-Act, and a legal Evidence of Treaſon. Then we prove by another Witneſs, not Words of Encouragement only, but Offers of Money, and they are both to the ſame kind of Treaſon, though not to the ſame Act, and at the ſame time. And if there muſt be two Witneſſes to every ſingle Act, the King of England is not only in a far worſe Condition than any other Prince, but than any one of his own Subjects. Treaſons may be committed every day with Impunity, and unleſs the Traitors be as great Fools as Villains, he ſhall never be ſafe from them, nor capable of puniſhing them.

I muſt ſay it, and I ſay it with Commiſeration to the Condition of this noble Lord, that his Exceptions in Law are as weak as the Anſwers he has given to our Evidence. We hope no doubt in Law remains with you, and that we have given your Lordſhips full ſatisfaction of the Reality of the Plot, and a convincing Evidence of the great ſhare which my Lord Stafford had in it; and we humbly pray your Lordſhip's Juſtice.

L. H. S. You do not take notice of one thing that my Lord Stafford ſaid this Morning; that is, that the Witneſſes are not competent Witneſſes, becauſe they ſwore for Money, and that is fit to be ſpoken unto; not for the Weight of the Objection, ſo much as for the Satisfaction of the Auditory.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I had taken a Note of that, but forgot to mention it. If my Lord at the Bar will ſay they have taken Money to ſwear, that is purely a Matter of Fact, which he ought to prove; and that which is ſaid, and not proved, ought to go for nothing: let him prove his Caſe to be ſo, and then we will give him an Anſwer.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, if your Lordſhip can prove that they have had Money to ſwear, your Lordſhip urges that which will be material; but if it were only Money to maintain them, that ſure will amount to no Objection.

L. Staff. My Lords, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, whether Dr. Oates and the reſt have not had great Sums of Money, beſides their Charges, 10 l. a-week a-piece. But I deſire your Lordſhips to conſider, and I appeal to many of your Lordſhips, whether it has not been ſaid that it was a Defect in Coleman's and Langhorn's Tryals, that they did not plead that; and if they had pleaded it, they muſt have been acquitted: I will name no body, but I appeal to your Lordſhips whether ſome of you have not ſaid ſo. But I deſire your Lordſhips to admit me to plead by my Counſel; if not, I ſubmit it to you. I confeſs here is a Piece of Law that I never heard of before, that the Houſe of Commons, and your Lordſhips at a Conference, have adjudged it to be the Law of Parliaments, That Impeachments ſhall continue from Parliament to Parliament. If you will pleaſe to hear my Counſel for me, ſo; if not, I ſubmit.

L. H. S. What would you, or can you prove?

L. Staff. My Lords, thoſe things that I have given in to your Lordſhips, I deſire my Counſel may be heard to.

L. H. S. Gentlemen, what can you object why he ſhould not have Counſel to argue his Objections in Law?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I do think under favour, if a Priſoner in a Capital Cauſe do deſire Counſel, he muſt not only alledge Matter of Law to introduce that Deſire; but that which he doth alledge muſt be alſo a Matter of ſome Doubt to the Court: for if he do alledge Matter which in itſelf is not diſputable, he ſhall have no Counſel allowed him. If your Lordſhips are not ſatisfy'd that it is the Law of your Houſe, that Proceedings upon Impeachments do continue from Parliament to Parliament, we cannot anſwer that, it lies in your Lordſhips Breaſts; it is not what we are to argue, becauſe it is a Matter that concerns the Law and Rules of Parliaments. Is there, my Lords, any doubt of any other Point that is urg'd? Is there any doubt of this thing, whether if one Witneſs ſpeak to one point of Fact, and another to another, upon the ſame ſort of Treaſon, but that theſe be two ſuch Witneſſes as the Law requires? I pray then, my Lords, conſider the Conſequence of that Doubt: A Man ſhall talk with twenty Perſons about a Deſign to kill the King in one and the ſame Room, one after another, by taking them into a Corner ſingly; and if ten, or all twenty come to prove it, here is but one Witneſs to each Diſcourſe. This would be a Matter of dangerous Conſequence, but I hope will remain no manner of doubt with you, nor is it fit to be argued.

As to the Hiring of Witneſſes to ſwear, I think that can be no Point of Law till it be ſo prov'd in Fact. Doth his Lordſhip think, that when his Majeſty out of his Grace and Bounty allows a Maintenance to his Witneſſes, that that is an Objection to their Teſtimony. Doth not every Man allow his Witneſſes a Maintenance, and yet it never was thought a thing to take away their Evidence. It may be every one doth not give ſo large an Allowance as the King, becauſe his Dignity is not ſo great. But can it be an Objection to the Houſe of Commons? Have we that are the Proſecutors maintain'd them? If his Majeſty have been bountiful to his Witneſſes, what is that to this Cauſe of the Commons? If my Lord can prove any thing of Bribery in us, as he has prov'd for us againſt himſelf, it may be an Objection. But till that Fact be proved, I hope there is no ground for a Queſtion in Law; and if there be no Doubt in Law, I hope there will be no need of Counſel.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, What are the Points you would have Counſel to?

L. Staff. To all of them, my Lords.

L. H. S. Would you have Counſel to the firſt Point, to argue what the Law of Parliaments is concerning the Continuance of Impeachments from Parliament to Parliament.

L. Staff. My Lords, if you will declare the Law to be as theſe Gentlemen ſay, I muſt acquieſce.

L. H. S. Pardon me, my Lord, I do not declare the Law, but ask you whether you would have Counſel to argue that Point.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do ſay there is no Example of it; I know there have been Impeachments, but no Examples of Impeachments continued from Parliament to Parliament.

L. H. S. Then in the next place, for I ſhall propoſe your Objections to their Lordſhips by and by, and deſire their Judgment in them, do you deſire to argue by your Counſel, that every Overt-Act ought to be prov'd by two Witneſſes?

L. Staf.

L. Staff. I do, my Lords, I deſire my Counſel may be heard to all the Points I mention'd to your Lordſhips.

L. H. S. Have you Counſel ready to ſpeak to theſe Points now?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Are they prepar'd to ſpeak to them now?

L. Staff. They are, my Lords.

L. H. S. If they be ſo, what hurt will there be in hearing of them?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, whether you will hear an Argument from Counſel about the Law of Parliaments, I hope you will pleaſe well to conſider.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, We in the Houſe of Commons do never ſuffer any Counſel to tell us what is the Courſe of our Houſe, and the Law of Parliaments: if your Lordſhips think fit to allow it, 'tis in your own power; but we who are intruſted with the Management of this Cauſe by the Houſe of Commons, have no direction to conſent to ſuch a thing.

L. H. S. We will hear Counſel, to ſave time, upon that Point, whether in Proof of a Treaſon for killing the King, every Overt-Act ought to be proved by two Witneſſes.

Sir W. Jones. If your Lordſhips make a Doubt of it.

Sir F. Win. And if the Priſoner deſire it.

Mr. S. Mayn. My Lords, we ſhall not oppoſe it; but I ſhall wonder if any Counſel do maintain it.

L. H. S. Are your Counſel ready to ſpeak to that Point?

L. Staff. Here they are, my Lords.

[Mr. Wallop of the Middle Temple, Mr. Saunders of the ſame Society, and Mr. Hunt of Grays-Inn appeared by the Priſoner at the Bar as his Counſel.]

Mr. Wallop. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, we are here commanded by your Lordſhips to attend, that if any Matter of Law do ariſe upon a Caſe proved, agreed, and judged by your Lordſhips debateable, then in due time we are to conform our ſelves to your Lordſhips Command, and argue thoſe Points for my Lord the Priſoner at the Bar. But if your Lordſhips do think that the Points urged by my Lord are not debateable in Law, I have ſo high an Opinion of your Lordſhips Judgment, and ſuch a mean Opinion of my own Talent, that I ſhall not undertake to argue extempore in this great Aſſembly, in a Cauſe of ſo high a nature.

L. H. S. Look you, Sir, you are of my Lord's Counſel.

Mr. Wallop. I am, my Lords; and by the Order of your Lordſhips do attend here.

L. H. S. If you think it an arguable Point, you will have the Judgment of my Lords afterwards. Will you argue it now?

Mr. Wallop. My Lords, I always thought if a Point be ſtirred in any Court, and thought diſputable, it ſhould be ſtated and agreed before it be argued.

L. H. S. You are to argue for my Lord, and to know the Judgment of the Court afterwards: Would you know our Opinions before-hand.

Mr. Wallop. We would know what it is we are to argue, if your Lordſhips pleaſe.

L. H. S. Why, if you are provided for it, you are to maintain, that by Law every Overt-Act ought to be proved by two Witneſſes; if you are prepared, ſpeak to it, and my Lords will hear you.

Mr. Wallop. It is true, my Lords, there have been ſome publick Reſolutions concerning that Point, therefore I ſhall be the warier what I ſay in that: But, my Lords, it is a Matter that has been thought of great Import one way or other; but I do profeſs at this time I am not able to undertake a ſolemn Argument upon that Point.

L. Staf. My Lords, I am ſo far from delaying this Cauſe, that I deſire it may be argued now.

L. H. S. Then you are not ready to ſpeak to it?

Mr. Wallop. No, my Lords, I am not for my own part at preſent; for it is impoſſible we ſhould foreſee what would be the Point: and to apply ourſelves to ſtudy an unforeſeen Caſe before it be agreed, ſtated, and judg'd worthy of Argument, cannot be expected from us. I have always obſerved it in the King's-Bench, if the Priſoner urge any thing, and the Court think it debateable, they firſt agree and ſtate the Caſe, then aſſign Counſel, whom they do not urge to deliver an Opinion preſently, but give them time to prepare for it.

L. H. S. Mr. Wallop, it is not believed that this Point is moved, but by your Advice that are of my Lord's Counſel, and you ſhould be ready to maintain the Advice you give; therefore if you are ſo, ſpeak. You have the Protection of the Court for the Counſel you give in Matter of Law, and whatever Advice you give, you ſhould maintain by the Law.

Mr. Wallop. Truly, my Lords, it is a Point that has, as I ſaid before, received ſome Settlement; but whether ever in this Court, or no, I cannot tell. Therefore I did diſcharge my Thoughts of providing any Argument, till your Lordſhips ſhould have determined whether you will take the Point upon the Reſolution in the Courts below to be finally ſettled and determined.

Sir W. Jones. So then it is agreed to be ſettled in the ordinary Courts.

L. Staf. I deſire alſo it may be argued, whether Words are an Overt-Act.

Sir F. Win. It ſeems the Law is with us in caſe of a Commoner; but whether it be ſo for a Lord, is the Queſtion.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, how comes it to paſs that your Lordſhip came prepared with Objections, but not with Counſel ready to argue them.

L. Staf. Mr. Wallop has given you an Anſwer, I muſt ſtand by that.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure that we adjourn?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. This Houſe is adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber.

Then the Lords returned to their Houſe in their Order, and the Committee of Commons ſtaid in their Places to attend their Reſolutions.

In an Hour's time the Lords returned, and my Lord High Steward being ſeated upon the Woolpack, Silence was proclaimed.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, My Lords, ſince they have been withdrawn, have conſidered of one Point, of that Point chiefly which your Lordſhip did move, touching the Neceſſity of two Witneſſes to every Overt-Act as Evidence of High-Treaſon, that is the Point you have deſired Counſel to ſpeak to, and that is the Point your Counſel ſel deſired to know whether it was a doubtful or debateable Point before they would argue it; and hereupon my Lords did withdraw to conſider it. And my Lords have directed, that all the Judges that aſſiſt them, and are here in your Lordſhip's Preſence and Hearing, ſhould deliver their Opinions, whether it be doubtful and diſputable or no.

[Then all the Judges conſulted privately together, and afterwards gave their Opinions ſeriatim, beginning with the Lord-Chief-Juſtice North, the Lord-Chief-Juſtice Scroggs being abſent.]

L. C. J. North. My Lords, I do here deliver my Opinion, and am clear in it, That if there be ſeveral Overt-Acts or Facts which are Evidences of the ſame Treaſon, if there be one Witneſs to prove one ſuch Overt-Act at one time, and another Witneſs to prove another Overt-Act at another time, both the Acts being Evidences of the ſame Treaſon, theſe are two ſufficient Witneſſes of that Treaſon, and will maintain an Indictment or an Impeachment of Treaſon. I never knew any doubt made of it in any inferior Court of Juſtice, and I have known it often reſolved.

L. C. B. Montague. My Lords, where-ever Treaſon is to be proved to every Overt-Act, two Witneſſes, as I conceive, are not requir'd. If ſo be there are two Witneſſes to ſeveral Overt-Acts conducing to a proof of the ſame Treaſon, I think they are Witneſſes in the Judgment of the Law, ſuch as the Statute requires.

Mr. Juſt. Windham. I am of the ſame Opinion with my Lord Chief Juſtice North, and my Lord Chief Baron, That if there be ſeveral Overt-Acts done at ſeveral times tending to the ſame Treaſon, theſe ſeveral Acts being ſeverally proved by ſeveral credible Witneſſes, tho but by one Witneſs at each time to each Act, the ſaid ſeveral Acts being Evidences of the ſame Treaſon, theſe are ſufficient Witneſſes of that Treaſon ſo proved, and will maintain an Indictment, or (as I conceive) an Impeachment.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. My Lords, if ſeveral Witneſſes ſpeak to the ſame kind of Treaſon, altho they ſpeak to ſeveral Overt-Acts, and give Evidence of ſeveral times, the one of them ſpeaking to one time, and the other to another time, yet keeping ſtill to the ſame kind of Treaſon, they are ſuch two Witneſſes as are required by the Statute of Edward III. and this I take to be the conſtant Opinion of the Courts below.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion, and I know it hath been many times ſo reſolved; I have been preſent when Sentence hath paſſed upon Perſons by whom the ſame Caſe hath been urged, and it hath been ſo reſolved. And it hath been moved in Weſtminſter-Hall, and that was the conſtant Opinion of the Judges there; particularly in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane. It was upon ſolemn Debate reſolv'd, and divers times it hath been held, That the ſame Treaſon may be prov'd by two Witneſſes to ſeveral Overt-Acts, tho one ſpeak of Words or Actions that were ſpoken or done at one time and in one place, and another ſpeak of Words or Actions at another time and in another place, theſe are two good Witneſſes in Treaſon within the intent of the Law: and if the Law were otherwiſe, 'twere ſcarce poſſible to convict any Man of Treaſon, and therefore I take it to be very clear.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. I am of the ſame Opinion, That where ſeveral Circumſtances are brought to prove the ſame Treaſon, one Witneſs to each of the ſeveral Circumſtances is ſufficient; and this, I conceive, hath been always the Opinion of the Judges.

Mr. Baron Atkins. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion. That there muſt be two Witneſſes in the Caſe of Treaſon, is a Matter without queſtion; but there are ſeveral Overt-Acts that may contribute to the effecting of that Treaſon. If a Man deſigns to kill the King, and buys Powder at one place at one time, and a Piſtol at another place at another time, and promiſes a Reward to one to aſſiſt him to do the thing at a third place and a third time; theſe are ſeveral Overt-Acts: but if the Law requires that each be prov'd by two Witneſſes, I do not well ſee how any Man can be convicted of Treaſon. In the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane, and others, this very Queſtion was ſtarted, but was not thought worthy of Debate: if it ſhould be otherwiſe, it would touch the Judgments which have been given upon this kind of Proof; and what would the Conſequence of that be, but that thoſe Perſons who were executed upon thoſe Judgments have ſuffer'd illegally? And therefore I am of Opinion, that it is not requiſite there ſhould be two Witneſſes to every Overt-Act.

Mr. Baron Gregory. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion, it is Treaſon to conſpire the Death of the King: Now each of the Witneſſes is a Witneſs to prove that Treaſon; the one ſays, he offer'd him ſuch a Reward, in ſuch a Place; that is one Witneſs to prove that he conſpir'd the Death of the King: and another ſays, that he offer'd him ſuch a Reward in another place; that is another Witneſs that he conſpir'd the Death of the King. For the Party is not indicted upon one particular Overt-Act, but he is indicted for Treaſon, in conſpiring the Death of the King; and each of the Witneſſes being to prove that, tho they ſpeak to ſeveral Acts, they are good Witneſſes according to the Law.

Mr. Baron Weſton. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion with my Reverend Brethren who have ſpoke before me.

Mr. Juſt. Charlton. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion; and I think truly it would be the eaſieſt matter for a Man to commit Treaſon, and eſcape without queſtioning, if it ſhould be otherwiſe. But this is the firſt time that I have heard it hath been made a Queſtion, that to the ſame Treaſon there muſt be two Witneſſes to every Overt-Act. It hath been adjudged always according to the Law, that to prove Treaſon there muſt be two Witneſſes, but to an Overt-Act there needs but one.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, by the uniform Opinion of all my Lords the Judges, there is no colour to doubt the Law in that Point which you deſire to argue; ſo that as to that Point you muſt reſt ſatisfied, you are not to have Counſel to ſpeak to it: For the reſt, I have no Commiſſion yet from my Lords to ſay any thing.

L. Staff. Will your Lordſhips give me leave to ſay one thing to what I have heard? I would anſwer, if I might only, to one Judge, I think they call him Judge Atkins.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip may ſay what you pleaſe.

L. Staff. My Lords, I hear a ſtrange Poſition, I never heard the like before in my Life; and 'tis what he ſaid: if I am in the wrong, I beg your Lordſhips pardon, and his too. He told your your Lordſhips the reaſon why the Law ſhould be ſo, was, becauſe elſe a great many of thoſe Perſons that have already been executed, muſt have been acknowledg'd unjuſtly cut off and put to death, that is an Argument I hope will not weigh with your Lordſhips or any body; for 'tis better that a thouſand Perſons that are guilty ſhould eſcape, than that one innocent Perſon ſhould die: much more then, that it ſhould not be declar'd, that ſuch a Judgment was not well given.

L. H. S. Look you my Lord, where many Reaſons are given, 'tis eaſy to make a Reply to one of the leaſt among many, that was one Reaſon given; but the true Reaſon is this: If the Law were otherwiſe, there would be great Safety in conſpiring the Death of the King.

L. Stafford. My Lords, I ſay nothing farther as to the reſt, but this ſtuck with me. I am ſorry to hear a Judge ſhould ſay any ſuch thing; and tho I am in ſuch a weak and diſturbed Condition, I aſſure your Lordſhips my Blood riſes at it.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure that we ſhould adjourn?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. Then this Houſe is adjourn'd into the Parliament-Chamber.

[The Lords withdrew in their order, and the Committee of Commons went back to their Houſe.]

Mr. Speaker reſum'd the Chair.

A Meſſage was ſent from the Lords by Sir Timothy Baldwyn and Sir Samuel Clarke.

Mr. Speaker, The Lords have ſent us to acquaint this Houſe, that they have order'd William Viſcount Stafford to be brought again to the Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Monday Morning next at Ten of the clock.

After which, the Houſe of Commons adjourn'd to Eight of the clock on Monday Morning.

The Sixth Day.

Monday, December 6th, 1680.

ABout the Hour of Eleven in the Morning, the Lords being adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall, going thither in their former order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair, the Committee of Commons were ſeated as before.

The Court being ſat, Proclamation for Silence was made, and the Lieutenant commanded to bring his Priſoner to the Bar; which being done, the Lord High Steward began.

L. H. S. Read my Lord Stafford's Petition.

To the Right Honourable the Lords in Parliament aſſembled, the humble Petition of William Viſcount of Stafford,

Humbly ſhewing unto your Lordſhips,

THat he hath ſome things to offer unto your Lordſhips in order to clear himſelf, which he hopeth to do.

Your Petitioner doth therefore with all Humility, moſt humbly beſeech your Lordſhips to give him leave to offer ſome things unto your Lordſhips Conſideration. And your Petitioner ſhall ever pray, &c.

STAFFORD.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, my Lords have been willing, upon your Petition, to come and hear what that is that your Lordſhip hath to offer: And they would know whether it be Matter of Fact, or Matter of Law. For your Lordſhip muſt know, that as to Witneſſes the Proceſs is cloſed.

L. Stafford. I do not pretend any more Witneſſes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Then, my Lord, what is it that you would ſay?

L. Stafford. My Lords, I did yeſterday receive an Order from your Lordſhips; and upon that and ſome other things that I have to trouble your Lordſhips with, I did petition for this Favour, which I humbly thank your Lordſhips for granting. If I be impertinent, I ſhall beg your Lordſhips pardon, and I hope you will be pleaſed to conſider my Weakneſs at all times, eſpecially in this Condition I now am in; but I hope by your Lordſhips Favour to be in an happier one quickly. For the Matters of Proof, I ſhall offer not a tittle; but, my Lords, this Order which I receiv'd does ſay, That the Lords aſſembled in Parliament have order'd, that my Counſel ſhall not be heard touching the Continuance of Impeachments from Parliament to Parliament: but I hope, my Lords, you will pleaſe, without offence, to let me offer to your Lordſhips my own Conceptions about it, which I ſhall do as briefly as I can.

My Lords, I do not conceive by this Order, that your Lordſhips ſay it does or does not continue: you have given no Judgment, as I know of, in it; when you have, I ſhall acquieſce: but I hope your Lordſhips will reſolve that it does not. And, my Lords, my Reaſons for it are two: The firſt is, Becauſe one of the Managers for the Houſe of Commons, as I take it Sir Will. Jones, ſaid theſe Words, and your Lordſhips may remember them, That if there were no ſuch Precedent, your Lordſhips would make a Precedent: Whether you will or no, that I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips; but then there is none yet. The next thing is, my Lords, this, Whether an Impeachment be to be proſecuted in Parliament without an Indictment: This, my Lords, I humbly hope your Lordſhips are reſolved it ought not. For I ſee not how truly, my Lords, it can be; by the little Reading which I have had in the Law, I never found any Man proſecuted in a legal way but by an Indictment. I may be miſtaken, and I beg your Lordſhips Pardon for troubling you with my Miſtakes; but I never read of any that were proſecuted upon an Impeachment: ſo then the legal uſual Word being Indictment, I hope your Lordſhips will not alter the Form; for I hope you will keep that great Maxim of your noble Anceſtors, Nolumus Leges Angliæ mutare: and whether this be a Change of the Law or no, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips.

A third thing is this; Your Lordſhips do not think fit that my Counſel ſhall plead to that Point, whether Words do amount to an Overt-Act; for hearing my Counſel to that likewiſe, I do not pretend: but I hope your Lordſhips will give me leave to ſay this, I never heard that Words did amount to an Overt-Act; if your Lordſhips judge otherwiſe, I ſubmit; but till then, I hope it ſhall not conclude me.

There are ſome other Points which I did offer to your Lordſhips, and I humbly beſeech you to know, whether my Counſel ſhall be heard to them. 'Tis true, one of them, which was, whether two Witneſſes in ſeveral places did amount to a legal Teſtimony or no, your Lordſhips did not declare one way or another: If you ſay you acquieſce in the Opinion of the Judges, I muſt ſubmit; but till Judgment is given, I beſeech your Lordſhips to give me leave to tell you my weak Thoughts thoughts about it. I did not hear what the Judges ſaid all of them, but as I apprehend they were all of one Opinion: 'Tis true, one of them that ſpoke laſt, I think it was Judge Atkins, did ſay it did amount to a legal Teſtimony, becauſe elſe thoſe Juries that have found ſome guilty upon the ſame ſort of Evidence ſhould be perjur'd; but if this were not ſo, then upon the ſame Grounds, under your Lordſhips Favour, thoſe Juries that acquitted ſome upon ſuch Teſtimony were perjur'd: but I muſt believe it to be otherwiſe till your Lordſhips have declared it as your Opinion, for that reaſon will not hold, for the ſame reaſon will be for the Perjuring the one, as for the Perjuring the other. And the ſame Juries for the moſt part tryed thoſe that were found guilty, and thoſe that were acquitted.

L. H. S. Is this all your Lordſhip will pleaſe to ſay?

L. Staf. No, my Lords, if you would give me leave I would trouble you a little farther, if it were an Offence I would not ſay a Word. My Lords, I do conceive I am not concerned in the general Plot of the Papiſts; for I am not proved to be ſo, and whatſoever I may be in my ſelf as I conceive, or whatſoever there is of hearſay, I hope your Lordſhips will not go upon that, but upon what is proved Secundum allegata & probata, and that common Fame will condemn no Man; if it do, then no Man is ſafe, but I muſt ſay there is not one Word of Proof offer'd that I am a Papiſt.

I hope, my Lords, I have clear'd my ſelf to your Lordſhips, and made my Innocency appear, by making appear the Perjury of the Witneſſes, and the Falſhood of thoſe Things they ſaid againſt me. Againſt Dugdale I have proved it by two of his own Witneſſes, the one was Eld the Woman that ſwore for him, That he took up a Glaſs of Syder and wiſh'd that it might be his Poiſon if he knew any thing of the Plot; the other was Whitby, who ſays, he had given my Lord Aſton's Father warning long ago what a Knave he was. So 'tis clear: for Dr. Oates I hope from his Contradictions againſt himſelf as well as Dugdale, who does contradict himſelf, at one time Auguſt, at another time the latter end of Auguſt or the beginning of September: And I hope your Lordſhips will give no Credit to Oates's Teſtimony, for he ſaid before your Lordſhips he had declared all he knew, ('tis true I was then accuſed, but not for having a Commiſſion as he now ſwears) and afterwards he accuſed the Queen, ſo here is Oates againſt Oates, and Dugdale againſt Dugdale; and for Turberville, I have proved by his Affidavit, firſt he ſwears one thing and then another, and the truth of it is, his Brother proved him falſe in his laſt Oath, that it was (71.) and not (72.)

My Lords, 'Tis not my Part to make any Queſtion, nor do I, whether a Plot or no Plot; for I am not concerned in it: If what I ſhall ſay now be impertinent, I humbly beg your Lordſhips pardon. My Lords, I have been by the moſt of my Friends, at leaſt every one that came to me, particularly by my Wife and Daughter that is near me, perſuaded to tell all that I knew, and I do here in the Preſence of Almighty God declare what I know to be true.

L. H. S. What ſays my Lord? Speak out.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do believe ſince the Reformation from the Church of Rome, to (what it is now eſtabliſh'd) the Church of England, thoſe of that Religion have had ſeveral wicked and ill Deſigns and Plots: I do believe they had a Deſign in Queen Elizabeth's Time, Babbington's Plot, (that is a long time ago) how far it was to take away the Queen's Life I can't tell, but a Plot it was: and I do believe there was another in her time, called Earl of Weſtmoreland's Plot, wherein there was a Rebellion in the North, for which ſome fled and ſome were executed, that was a very ill Deſign: As for thoſe Poiſonings of her Saddle and the like, I take them to be but Stories.

In King James's time, in the firſt Year of his Reign, there was a wicked Plot compoſed by Actors, ſome of one Religion, ſome of another; there was my Lord Grey, my Lord Cobham, my Lord Brooke, and others ſuch, they were condemned all of them, ſome fled, as Markham and Bainham; thoſe Lords and Sir Walter Raleigh were reprieved and kept long in the Tower. But Sir Walter Raleigh was afterwards upon that ſame Judgment beheaded, and the Lords dyed in the Tower.

My Lords, Next to that was the execrable Treaſon that I ſpoke of at firſt, the Gun-powder-Treaſon: And I proteſt before Almighty God, I did from my Infancy deteſt and abhor thoſe Men that were ingaged in it; and I do think and always did think, the Wit of Man nor the Devil's Malice can't invent an Excuſe for it. For the Men concerned, they all acknowledged it, confeſſed it, and begg'd pardon of the King and God, and all good Men for it; that is all I ſhall ſay to that now.

My Lords, Since his Majeſty's happy Reſtauration I do conceive, and I think I may ſafely ſay it, (for you all know it) he was gracious and good to all Diſſenters, particularly to them of the Romiſh Church, they had Connivance and Indulgence in their private Houſes; and I declare to your Lordſhips, I did then ſay to ſome that were too open in their Worſhip, that they did play foul in taking more Liberty upon them than was fitting for them to do, and that brought the Misfortune upon me which I will not name.

My Lords, It was not long ago that your Lordſhips at your own Bar did allow all the Diſſenters from the Church of England to give ſome Reaſons to your Lordſhips why thoſe Laws that were againſt them ſhould be repealed, as well Proteſtant Diſſenters as thoſe of the Church of Rome, and why they ſhould have ſome kind of Toleration; among whom you did permit thoſe of the Romiſh Religion to appear too, I forget their Names. And I remember particularly one of the ſorts of them, an Anabaptiſt I think, did urge for a Reaſon, that which is a great Truth, That they held Rebellion to be the Sin of Witchcraft, I believe it is as bad as any Sin can be.

My Lords, that came to nothing at that time; but, my Lords, I believe that after that all of all Religions had Meetings among themſelves to endeavour to get that Toleration which they propoſed humbly to your Lordſhips; there I will never deny, my Lords, that my Opinion was, and is, that this Kingdom can never be happy till an Act of Parliament paſs to this effect; it was my Opinion then, and I did endeavour it all I could, that the Diſſenting Proteſtants might have a Comprehenſion, and the other a Toleration: I acknowledge it to be my Intention, and I think it was no ill one; for if that be a true Copy of the Commons Votes which is in Print, there is ſome ſuch thing deſigning there as a Comprehenſion; and I was of opinion, that it were ſufficient that ſuch as were of the Church of Rome might by Act of Parliament ſerve God in their own Houſes, and privately in their own Way, not in publick, and that for it they ſhould pay ſomething to the King out of their Eſtates, but truly not much; that they ſhould be ſeverely puniſhed if they or any of them did endeavour to perſuade any Subject to their Opinion, or did come to Court, or enjoy any Office whatſoever, though it were but that of a Scavenger, but that they ſhould pay their Proportion to all chargeable Offices: That I profeſs, my Lords, was my Opinion, and I confeſs to your Lordſhips 'tis ſo ſtill. I was in ſome hopes that it would have been done in that Seſſions, becauſe I was afraid it was unlikely to be done at any time elſe. I confeſs to your Lordſhips I was heartily and cordially againſt the Teſt, becauſe it hinder'd thoſe juſt and honeſt things that were for the Good of the Kingdom.

My Lords, there was the firſt or the ſecond Day brought into your Lordſhips Houſe, the Record of Mr. Coleman's Tryal; and for the Letters in it, I do, my Lords, declare to your Lordſhips, I never read one of them before, but I have often read them ſince they have been in Print; and when I read them firſt curſorily over, my Opinion was, and is, That Coleman's endeavouring by Money out of France, and keeping off the Parliament, to get a Toleration, was that which he could not juſtify by Law; how far it was criminal, that I do not know, I am not ſo skilled in the Law, I think it was not juſtifiable, but he hath paid for it ſeverely ſince.

My Lords, I do declare that ever ſince I had the Honour to ſit among your Lordſhips, which is now 40 Years, (for in the Year 1640. I was by his Majeſty's Favour call'd up a Peer) I have valu'd my ſelf upon the Honour of ſitting with you; and I do declare when I have ſat in this Houſe, when your Lordſhips have deſir'd the King when it was hot Weather and unſeaſonable, to put off the ſitting of the Parliament, I was never glad of it, but ſorry when they were prorogued but for a ſhort time. This I profeſs is true, and I hope I am no Criminal in it; for I do value the Parliament's ſitting to be the only Means to keep this Kingdom quiet.

My Lords, 'Tis very true by Coleman's Letters, and what I have ſeen in Print ſince, I do believe there have been ſome Conſultations for a Toleration; and if I had known as much then as I have ſince I have been in the Tower, I had perhaps prevented many things: for, my Lords, I hold England to be a great and an happy Body; but it is as other great Bodies are, it may be now, as you know before it was, over-grown or ſick; it was then, and I pray God it be not now, but I hold nothing can cure it but that old Engliſh Phyſician, the King, your Lordſhips, and the Commons in Parliament aſſembled. But if I had known any ſuch Deſign, as Coleman's Letters do hint, I would not have continued in England.

My Lords, For that damnable Opinion of King-killing, if I were of any Church whatſoever, and found that to be its Principle, I would leave it. My Lords, this is as true as I can ſpeak any thing in the World; I beg your Lordſhips Pardon for troubling you with my Impertinencies, and hope you pardon it to my Weakneſs. My Lords, I do profeſs before Almighty God, and before your Lordſhips my Judges, I know no one tittle nor point of the Plot; and if I did, I hold my ſelf bound to declare it. For the preſent I ſhall ſay little more, unleſs the Managers give me occaſion; if they will reply, and make any Objections, I deſire I may anſwer them. I know the great Diſadvantages I am under, when theſe Gentlemen, who are great Scholars and learned Men, reply upon me, who have thoſe great Helps of Memory, Parts, and Underſtanding in the Law, all which I want. And therefore I hope your Lordſhips will not conclude me upon what they or I have ſaid, but will be pleaſed to debate the Matter among your ſelves, and be as well my Counſel as my Judges.

My Lords, when I offer to your Lordſhips Matter of Law, I did in no wiſe admit the Matter of Fact.——

L. H. S. My Lord, I cannot hear you.

L. Staf. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, this Paper may be read.

L. H. S. Deliver your Paper in, my Lords cannot hear.

L. Staf. I cannot deny to your Lordſhips, that what happened to me on Saturday-night, diſturbed me very much. Every day ſince I came hither, there hath been ſuch ſhouting and houting by a company of barbarous Rabble, as never was heard the like, I believe; but it was at a diſtance moſt of the time, and ſo it did not much concern me. But Saturday-night it was ſo near and ſo great, that really it hath diſturbed me ever ſince; it was great to-day, but at a diſtance; if it were not thus, I ſhould not offer a Paper to be read: I ſcarce know what I do or ſay, conſidering the Circumſtances I am in.

L. H. S. Take my Lord's Paper, and read it.

Sir Tho. Lee. My Lords, I deſire you will pleaſe to conſider whether this may not introduce a new Cuſtom by reading of this Paper. As to what my Lord is pleaſed to ſay, I am ſorry for the Occaſion that any diſturbance ſhould ariſe to my Lord from the Rabble, or any one elſe; I hope his Lordſhip believes we cannot help, nor do we contribute to that diſturbance. But we deſire your Lordſhips to conſider whether this Practice of having things written down for the Clerk to read, may not introduce a Cuſtom, which may in time grow inconvenient for future Example. I ſee no great Danger in the particular Inſtance before your Lordſhips now, but it is dangerous in ſuch Caſes to do any thing that is new in this Court.

L. H. S. All the Matter is, whether it be read by my Lord, who cannot be heard, or read by the Clerk.

Sir Tho. Lee. We only oppoſe it out of fear of making a Precedent, which may be of ill Conſequence.

L. H. S. Read it my Lord, and raiſe your Voice, for it concerns you to ſpeak out.

L. Staf. (Reading out of his Paper.) My Lords, when I offer'd Matter of Law to your Lordſhips, on Saturday laſt, I did in no wiſe admit the Matter of Fact to be true that was alledged againſt me, and ſo I deſire to be underſtood. And I hope your Lordſhips will not lay the leſs weight upon the Teſtimony of my Witneſſes, becauſe they are not ſworn; for the Law does not ſuffer them to be ſworn, which is no fault of mine, nor ought not to turn to my Prejudice.

I muſt appeal to your Lordſhips Judgments in point of Fact, how far the King's Witneſſes are to be believed againſt me, conſidering the whole Matter, and my Counter-Proof.

Next I ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgments this Point, That the Impeachment being founded upon the Common Law, and the Statute of 25th

Edw.

Edw. 3. and not upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, two of the Witneſſes, Dugdale and Turberville, do only ſwear treaſonable Words ſpoken by me, and not my Overt-Act; for they ſwear only that I promiſed them Money and Rewards to kill the King. Now I humbly pray your Lordſhips Judgment, whether bare ſpeaking of Words be an Overt-Act, and Treaſon at the Common Law, or upon that Statute; and whether there be more than ſpeaking of Words in a Conſult, or otherwiſe proved by Dugdale and Turberville, I appeal to you. Then the other Witneſs, Oates, is but a ſingle Witneſs, who ſpeaks of the receiving of a Commiſſion. This is that I offer to your Lordſhips now for your Judgments, and then I deſire I may have your Opinion in other things.

L. H. S. Is this all your Lordſhip hath to ſay?

L. Staf. For the preſent, my Lords.

L. H. S. You muſt ſay all you have to ſay now.

L. Staf. Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure to hear Counſel to nothing at all? I did likewiſe alledge to your Lordſhips th'other day, that People that ſwear for Money are not competent credible Witneſſes; how far that was proved, or I may prove by my Counſel, I ſubmit to your Lordſhips.

L. H. S. Look you, my Lord, you have ſo far receiv'd already the Pleaſure of the Houſe: You have raiſed ſeveral Queſtions of Law, whether every Overt-Act require two Witneſſes to prove it. You have had the Opinion of the Judges, and there is no more to be ſaid in it. As to that, whether Impeachments continue from Parliament to Parliament, and the other thing, whether Proceedings may be upon an Impeachment without an Indictment; theſe are Matters of the Courſe and Conſtitutions of Parliaments, my Lords will conſider of them by themſelves, and will permit no Counſel to argue them. For the other Point, That Words are no Overt-Act, that reſts for their Opinion in another Caſe, when it ſhall come, for they have now no ſuch Caſe before them.

L. Staf. I humbly conceive there is.

L. H. S. There is a great difference between bare Words being an Overt-Act, and Perſuaſion by Promiſes of Money and Rewards to kill the King, which is a very great Overt-Act.

L. Staf. Is it poſſible to do an Act by Words? If it be ſo, I never heard it before.

L. H. S. Otherwiſe Men may promiſe Rewards to twenty ſeveral Perſons to kill the King, and then ſay 'tis all but Words.

L. Staf. I ſay it not, but I humbly conceive the Law ſays it.

L. H. S. What ſay you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons?

L. Staf. My Lords, I have ſomething to ſay, which I deſire to ſpeak firſt: My Lords, I hope I have cleared to your Lordſhips, that all the Witneſſes have ſwore falſe againſt me, and this I have made out by Proofs; I ſay not much to that.——(My Lord was ſearching for his Papers.) Truly, my Lords, I am confounded with the Noiſe and other Circumſtances; but my Lords, I ſhall, if your Lordſhips pleaſe to give me leave, humbly repreſent my Caſe to you, how I take it to be in Matter of Fact, (as to my own Condition not any thing, but) how I am now before your Lordſhips.

I was, my Lords, committed by my Lord Chief Juſtice's Warrant, on the 20th, or 21ſt of October, (78.) Friday, 25th of October, I was brought to your Lordſhips Bar; I was impeached, I do not remember the Day, my Lords, the beginning of December; in one Parliament Articles exhibited againſt me, in another Parliament I was brought upon theſe Articles exhibited, and being call'd to your Lordſhips Bar, the Articles were read to me, and I gave in my Anſwer, that was ſome time in May (79.) and in the end of May, the 27th, (if I miſtake not, if I do, I deſire it may be rectify'd by your Books) I, with the other Lords, were brought to this Place in order to our Tryal. We ſtaid ſome time there, and then were remanded by your Order to the Tower, where I continu'd till November twelve Months after, without having heard any thing concerning it. So that I was firſt impeached in one Parliament, Articles brought againſt me and pleaded to in a ſecond, and now brought to my Tryal in a third; and what your Lordſhips will ſay upon this, I ſubmit to you, and whether theſe be Proceedings according to Law, your Lordſhips will judge.

My Lords, I humbly conceive that Magna Charta ſays, That Juſtice ſhall be deny'd nor delay'd to no Man: whether it hath not been delay'd to me, let your Lordſhips judge. If you ſay the Prorogation of the Parliament is the Cauſe of that Delay, I hope your Lordſhips will give me leave to ſay, That from the 5th of December to the 30th, when the firſt Parliament was prorogued, or during the Seſſion of the other Parliament, there was time enough ſure wherein I might have been brought to my Tryal; and if theſe Proceedings be lawful and juſt, there is no Man living, but may be kept off from time to time, till ſome Accidents happen that their ends may be gained. I leave it to your Judgment, whether it may be only my Caſe now, or of ſome of your Lordſhips in future Ages, to be accuſed of things that you never heard of before, and not brought to juſtify your ſelves, but kept in Priſon.

My Lords, There is a Statute, I have forgot where it is, (but ſuch a one I have read) that tho the King by his Great Seal, or little Seal, command that Juſtice ſhould be delay'd or deny'd, yet however the Judges ſhall not obey it, but proceed. So I hope there is no pretence of delay on my part, and the Benefit of that Statute ſhall not be deny'd me. And that Statute of the Great Charter, which coſt ſo many of your Anceſtors their Lives to maintain, I hope you will never go from. Now, your Lordſhips noble Anceſtors, amongſt other things, took great care that Juſtice ſhould be deny'd or delay'd to none; and this I deſire you to take into Conſideration.

I am in your Lordſhips Judgment either to be acquitted or condemned. I hope your Lordſhips will, and I know you will lay your Hands upon your Hearts, conſult your Conſciences and your Honours; and then you will do what is Juſt and Equitable, I doubt not.

My Lords, Mr. Oates ſaid I came by the name of Mr. Howard of Effingham, but that I did to my Letters ſign Stafford; ſurely, my Lords, if I was aſhamed to own my Perſon, I ſhould have been as much aſhamed to have owned my Name. He ſays, he ſaw me take a Commiſſion, and whether that be an Overt-Act, your Lordſhips are to determine. Upon the whole Matter, I conceive, there is nothing proved againſt me, but Words, nor pretended to, but only by Oates. And whether you will credit a Man that ſo diſſembles with God, as I have told you, I appeal to your Lordſhips, and beg you to conſider of it.

That theſe Witneſſes have ſworn for Money, if you ſend to the Exchequer-Office, and ſee what Money they have receiv'd, you will find by the great Sums that 'tis ſo; and then I hope you will not allow them to be heard, nor credit any that ſwear for Gain. I had a Suit in Weſtminſter-Hall, that had like to have gone expreſly againſt me, only becauſe one of my Witneſſes was to gain 8 l. if the Suit went for me. But, pray conſider how much theſe Men have had. And for the Point that there are not two Witneſſes, I beſeech your Lordſhips, give me leave to put you in mind, That not many Years ago, you paſſed an Act againſt Frauds and Perjuries, wherein you were ſo careful to preſerve Mens Eſtates, that you required three Witneſſes to prove a Will of Goods or Lands above 100 l. and will you allow but one Witneſs to take away a Man's Life for Words? Though your Lordſhips will never commit Treaſon, yet no Man can preſerve himſelf from the Misfortune that happens to me, of being falſly accuſed.

'Tis true, my Lords, the Managers have given an Anſwer to the Buſineſs of the Money, by ſaying, The King may give as liberally as he pleaſes; but to give ſo great Sums, whereby Men poor before, are now become rich, I think will be an Objection againſt their Credit.

My Lords, I have ſaid what I do think convenient, though I think much more might be ſaid by an abler Man to your Lordſhips, for the clearing of himſelf. I hope I have done it, nay, I am confident I have; and this I have done for the Memory of that Great and Bleſſed King, who firſt made me a Peer, that it may not be ſaid he did me the Honour forty Years ago to call me up to this Dignity, and I ſhould fly in the Face of his Son in ſo horrible a manner as theſe Men would make me. I do owe it to the Honour of my Father and Mother, who, I think, I may ſafely ſay, were both Honourable and Worthy Perſons: My Father was a learned Man, and a wiſe Man, as I may appeal to ſome of your Lordſhips who knew him well; I ſay, I owe it to their Memory, and to the Honour of the Family from whence I ſprang, which all the World knows what it is. And I ſhould be an infamous Man to diſhonour them ſo much, as to bear their Name, and commit Treaſon. My Lords, I owe it to my Wife, who hath been a very kind Wife to me as ever Man had; ſhe is Heireſs at Law to the great Eſtate of that great and unfortunate Man Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, who was cut off in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, and all his Eſtate, if it were not for that Attainder, would have come to her.

I may be impertinent in telling your Lordſhips what it was, but I do not over-ſay it, when I reckon it would have been at this Day 200000 l. a Year, for it was 17000 l. a Year in thoſe Days Penny Rent, beſides other Emoluments. This is an extravagant Thing to ſay, but 'tis true; ſomething thereof does remain to her, which I now enjoy. I owe it to all my Children, eſpecially to my Eldeſt Son, who is a Young Man, and I may ſay of far better Parts and Hopes than his Father, and whom, I hope, will ſerve his Country. I owe it to all my Friends and Relations, for I would not have it ſaid after my Death, my Wife was the Widow of a Traytor. I owe it to all theſe, but above all, I owe it to God Almighty; that when I come to be judged by Him, I may give a good Account of what he hath intruſted me with, that I may not appear as an infamous Man who knows he hath a Body, but not his own, and yet ſhould throw it and his Soul away together. And if I ſhould have committed this execrable Treaſon, I ſhould have been guilty of my own Murder: Firſt, In the committing a Crime worthy of Death; and then in not confeſſing, to ſave my Life. I hold Murder an extraordinary Crime, the worſt next to Treaſon: And I know, if I ſhould not prevent my Death by confeſſing all I knew, I ſhould have been guilty of Self-Murder, the worſt of Murders. I know your Lordſhips will lay to heart, what an execrable thing Murder is and the Blood of Innocents; and I hope there is none of the Houſe of Commons, but after this Evidence, will clear me. I am ſure none of them would have me puniſhed for that I am not guilty of. I do not blame theſe Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons for Proſecuting, nor the firſt for Impeaching; for they had without all doubt, Reaſons great enough for it upon what Evidence they had before them, before they knew what the Witneſſes were. I know your Lordſhips will not in the leaſt Point vary from Juſtice, or the Law of the Land, and I deſire you to lay the whole Matter to your Hearts; I have not the leaſt Suſpicion of the Partiality of any Man in the Houſe, nay, I profeſs, if I had an Enemy and he were not here, I would beg of you that he might come. I have cleared my ſelf before your Lordſhips, and I hope I ſhall not be run down by the wicked Rabble; which, where it will end, God knows. It began in the late times againſt my Lord of Strafford, and ſo continu'd till it ended in that moſt execrable Fact, one of them, that ever was done. A wicked Beginning it was, and it had a wicked End. For ſince our Saviour's Death and Murder by the Jews, never was ſo execrable a Murder in the World; and whoever had an hand in it, without an extraordinary Repentance, can have no thoughts of Salvation. I never could ſerve the King, 'tis true, but in my Deſires; and I never deſerted him in Thought, Word, or Deed, to my knowledge in my Life, much leſs did I ever contrive or conſent to his Death. I do in the Preſence of God, Angels, your Lordſhips, and all Men, declare, I do know no more of the Plot, or any ſuch thing, than any one here does. That thoſe of the Romiſh Religion had Meetings, I believe, to obtain thoſe Ends that I ſpake of before: Coleman went too far, how far he was criminal in it, I can't tell. Meetings, I ſay, there were, but I was never at one of them, nor do I know what was done there. I do leave it to your Lordſhips to do Juſtice, as I know you will, and with all Submiſſion I reſign my ſelf up to you.

L. H. S. Have you done, my Lord?

L. Staf. If your Lordſhips will not allow me Counſel to argue thoſe Points, I have done.

L. H. S. What ſay you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lords, ſomething that my Lord hath ſpoken, hath been reſolved againſt him, that is, about two Witneſſes to each Overt-Act; ſome things are not to be diſputed about the Law and Courſe of Parliaments; ſome things were not to be ſaid now, becauſe he had ſaid them before. My Lords, we had concluded our Evidence, and he is pleaſed to take up the time with repeating what was ſaid before.

For the other Matters that my Lord is pleaſed to diſcourſe of, all he ſays is but his Obligations, and how unreaſonable it were for him to do it; the Queſtion is, Whether he hath done it or no? If he hath, his Obligations are an Aggravation of his Crime, not an Excuſe. His Relations, his Family, mily, and other things are nothing before your Lordſhips now in point of Judgment, nor is there any thing new ſaid to-day, that was not ſaid before.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I ſhould not add one word farther, were it not that this Noble Lord is pleaſed, upon his Memory, or rather without, to ſay ſomething of me; and that was, That ſpeaking of the Continuance of Proceedings, I ſhould ſay, If your Lordſhips had no Precedent, I hope you would make one. My Lords, I do appeal to your Lordſhips Memory, whether I ſaid any thing like it; I utterly deny it, nor was there any occaſion for it. For there was no need of urging Precedents, when your Lordſhips, upon a Conference with the Commons, did declare it to be the Law of Proceedings in Parliament, and did then fortify it with many Arguments. I know, my Lord's Memory is not very good; I'm ſure in this he is very much miſtaken.

My Lord hath been pleaſed to complain he hath received much Diſturbance, and that the Noiſe and Shouts have been ſo great, that they have occaſioned ſome Diſtraction in him. My Lords, I am ſure his Lordſhip cannot mean us; for I appeal to your Lordſhips, and all that have heard this Tryal, whether he hath received the leaſt Diſturbance or Interruption from us, or whether we have not treated him with that Reſpect that becomes his Dignity, and the Diſcretion that ought to be in the Managers of the Houſe of Commons. But I muſt needs ſay, that his Lordſhip hath received Diſtraction from thoſe Friends or Counſel of his that put thoſe many Papers into his hand; for he hath read one after another that do contain the ſame Matter over and over again. Theſe, I confeſs, were ſufficient to diſtract him, or any other that ſhould make uſe of them. His Lordſhip hath been pleaſed to go off from the Matter of Law, to the Matter of Fact; and backward and forward, ſo that it is impoſſible to follow him: And as to the Matter of Fact, we ſhall decline to follow him; for tho we have not given his Lordſhip any Diſturbance, yet we ſubmit to your Judgment, whether it be regular, or according to the courſe of Proceedings, when his Lordſhip hath ſumm'd up his Evidence, and we that are the Proſecutors have concluded ours, he ſhould begin that Work again; which if it ſhould be admitted, we were to reply, and he might rejoin upon us, and ſo there would be no end of Proceedings.

And, my Lords, I hope, tho this Lord hath had the Favour to do it, yet it ſhall not for the future be brought into Example, for it will make Tryals endleſs.

My Lords, for the Matter of Law, there is nothing that deſerves an Anſwer; for tho the Law does admit the Priſoner Counſel in Matters of Law, yet it muſt be in things doubtful: and if there be any thing of that in our Caſe, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips. I am ſure, I have heard nothing new but what hath been over-ruled already, unleſs it be a Matter of Law which riſes upon a Matter of Fact, and that not proved, to wit, the Corruption of Witneſſes. The laſt day, all was ſaid by his Lordſhip he could ſay, and all ſaid by us that we thought fit to ſay; and now to begin the ſame Matter again, I think ought not to be admitted. We ſhall not follow his Lordſhip in that way of Proceedings, and hope it ſhall never fall into Example.

Sir Fr. Win. My Lords, I have only one Word to ſay to your Lordſhips, and that is in relation to the Proceedings of the Commons in this Cauſe; for if the Cauſe had not been of an extraordinary nature, we ſhould have ſtood upon it, that the Priſoner ought not after the Proſecutors had concluded, to have taken a liberty of reading and repeating what he had ſaid over and over again. We know, my Lords, there are a ſort of Men in the World, who are willing to lay hold of any Pretences to cavil at our Proceedings; and therefore we have let my Lord take all this liberty, that ſo his Party might have no colour of Complaint. His Lordſhip was pleaſed to ſay the laſt day, that he had not a Witneſs more to produce, nor a Reaſon to give, as I underſtood him; and therefore he muſt own that we have been very tender to him in all our Proceedings. One thing my Lord inſinuates to-day, which I cannot forbear taking notice of, as if we had delayed him: which is without cauſe; we had uſed all Diligence in preparing ourſelves, and were ſoon ready when the King was pleaſed to let the Parliament ſit, and therefore it can be no Imputation on us: and truly, if my Lord conſiders the weight of the Evidence, I fear he will think his Tryal comes ſoon enough now.

L. Stafford. My Lords, I deſire to be rightly underſtood in one thing, and 'tis only this; I did not ſay the Houſe of Commons ſhouted at me, but the Rabble.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure to adjourn?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. Then this Houſe is adjourn'd to the Parliament-Chamber.

[Then the Lords withdrew in their former Order, and the Committee of Commons went back to their Houſe.]

Mr. Speaker reſum'd the Chair, and a Meſſage was ſent from the Lords by Sir Timothy Baldwyn and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker,

The Lords have commanded us to acquaint this Houſe, that they have appointed William Viſcount Stafford to be brought to the Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall to-morrow Morning at Ten of the Clock, to receive Judgment,

[The Commons adjourn'd to Eight of the Clock the next Morning.]

The Seventh Day.

Tueſday, December the 7th, 1680.

ABout the Hour of Eleven, the Lords adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall, going thither in their former order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair, the Committee of Commons were ſeated as before.

The Lords being ſat, Proclamation was made for Silence; and the Lord-High-Steward being ſeated on the Woolpack with Garter Principal King of Arms, the Uſher of the Black Rod, nine Maces attending him, with all the reſt of the Solemnity, as was at firſt expreſſed, took the Votes of the Peers upon the Evidence beginning at the Puiſne Baron, and ſo upwards, in this order; the Lord Stafford being (as the Law requires) abſent.

L. H. S. My Lords, I am an humble Suitor to your Lordſhips, That you will give me leave leave to collect your Votes as I ſit, for I am not able to ſtand. Which being granted, the Lord-High-Steward proceeded.

L. H. S. My Lords, upon telling your Votes, I find there are Thirty-one of my Lords that think the Priſoner Not Guilty, and Fifty-five that have found him Guilty. Serjeant, make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring his Priſoner to the Bar.

[Which was done, and his Lordſhip came to the Bar].

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, I have but heavy Tidings for you; your Lordſhip hath been impeached of High-Treaſon, you have pleaded Not Guilty, my Lords have heard your Defence, and have conſidered of the Evidence; and their Lordſhips do find you Guilty of the Treaſon whereof you are impeached.

Lord Stafford. God's Holy Name be praiſed, my Lords, for it.

L. H. S. What can your Lordſhip ſay for your ſelf, why Judgment of Death ſhould not be given upon you according to the Law?

Lord Stafford. My Lords, I have but very little to ſay; I confeſs, I am ſurpriz'd at it, for I did not expect it; but God's Will be done, and your Lordſhips, I will not murmur at it: God forgive thoſe that have ſworn falſly againſt me. My Lords, I conceive I have ſomething to ſay for reſpite of Judgment; I have been at many Tryals in my Life, but I never ſaw any Tryal where the Party tried did not hold up his Hand, which I was never ask'd to do: I thought it had been a very material Point in the Law, that by the holding up of the Hand he might be known to be the Perſon. I have read, lately, ſince I had the Misfortune to be thus accuſed, Sir Edward Coke upon the Pleas of the Crown; and he ſays, That Miſnomer, the not giving a Man his right Name, or Addition, is likewiſe a juſt cauſe to arreſt the Judgment. There is likewiſe another Queſtion, how far it may be valued I know not, I ſubmit it, as I do all, to your Lordſhips. Tho I am tried upon the Act of the 25th of Edw. 3. yet there is nothing more in that Act, than what is included in the Act of the 13th of this King: and I humbly conceive, my Lords, by that Act, and the laſt Proviſo in it, a Peer that is accuſed and found guilty of the Crimes therein mentioned, is to loſe his Seat in Parliament; thoſe are the words, and ſince 'tis ſo put down in the Act, it is ſo to be underſtood, and that is all the Puniſhment. And I humbly demand your Lordſhips Judgment upon theſe points, whether it be ſo or no?

L. H. S. Has your Lordſhip any more to ſay?

L. Staff. No, my Lords, I ſubmit to your Lordſhips, and deſire your Judgment in theſe points.

Then the Lords adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber, and the Committee of Commons returned to their own Houſe; and their Speaker having reſumed the Chair, the whole Body of the Houſe went with their Speaker to the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, to demand Judgment of High Treaſon againſt William Viſcount Stafford, upon the Impeachment of the Commons of England in Parliament, in the name of the Commons in Parliament, and of all the Commons of England.

The Commons, with their Speaker, went back to their Houſe.

Then the Lords took into conſideration what Judgment was to be given upon William Viſcount Staffrad, and it was moved that he might be beheaded. After ſome debate, the Judges were asked, whether if any other Judgment than the uſual Judgment for High Treaſon were given upon him, it would attaint his Blood? The Judges were of opinion, that the Judgment for High Treaſon appointed by Law, is to be drawn, hanged, and quartered; and in the Courts and Proceedings below, they can take no notice of any Judgment for High Treaſon, but that.

Then Sir Creſwell Levinz, the King's Attorney-General, deſired to be heard on his Majeſty's behalf, which the Houſe gave leave for him to be; who ſaid, he knew no other Judgment by Law for High Treaſon, but drawing, hanging, and quartering; if any other Judgment were given, it would be prejudicial to his Majeſty, and be a Queſtion in the inferior Courts as to his Attainder of High Treaſon.
